[595] powerful man usually has a larger family. Not only may he have several wives, but his aged relatives, and those of his wife,
[602] look to him for support and assistance. Such are usually welcome to live in his house; they lend what aid they can in collecting food, and it gratifies a man's pride and sense of power to be closely surrounded by a large family. The Bella
[888] Coola are, on the whole, considerate to their aged relatives.[19]

[19]This is not true of the present. During the winter of 1923-4 a feeble old man, living alone, was often in actual want of food. Disliked and degraded, of a mean disposition himself, none of his surviving relatives, of whom the nearest were nephews, would take him into their houses. Commenting on this man's fate, several informants pointed out how, in the old days, such a one could have found [178]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

TERM	DIRECT ADDRESS	INDIRECT ADDRESS
Father (continued)....	mēn	mēn
	Term used, rarely, by an adult of either sex; ātāo is more common. Mēn is often used by an adult when speaking to any old man as a courtesy title.	Used by an adult.
Mother's husband....	ātāo	āsā
	Terms used by small children.
	mēn	mēndimat
	Used by adult; more commonly ātāo.	Used by adult.
Mother.....	mēmao	mēmā
	Used by baby.	Used by baby.
	pēmao	pēmā
	Used by small child.	Used by small child.
	sēn	sēn
	Used by adults of either sex with same limitations as mēn.
Father's wife.....	mēmao or pēmao	mēmā or pēmā
	Used by small children.
	sēn	sēndimat
	Used by adults, more commonly pēmao.	Used by adults.
	The application to step-parents of the terms usually limited to the real parents is merely a mark of endearment, without social significance.
Parent of either sex...	ālpmalaiyuly	a'matsiayāt
	These terms are used for a parent of either sex when old and feeble. Their use is a mark of courtesy and implies respect for those with wide knowledge of family history.
Father's brother.....	sisai, or by name, or ālpmalaiyuly	sisi
Mother's brother.....	" " "	"
Father's sister.....	sukaw " "	sukaw
Mother's sister.....	" " "	"
	If the family contains more distant relatives of the generation preceding that of the speaker, for example, a father's father's brother's son, or a mother's mother's brother's daughter, the terms sisi and sukaw may be applied in courtesy to these individuals.
Father's father.....	halpai, or more commonly, ātāo	halpi
Mother's father.....	" " " "	"
Father's mother.....	hilpaw " "	hilpa
Mother's mother.....	" " " pēmao	"
	Especially when living together, children usually address their grandparents by the terms properly applied to parents.

601
195
[888]

[595]

[888]

601

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

601

TERM	DIRECT ADDRESS	INDIRECT ADDRESS
Husband	Usually by name, or di hamamy lai, "my husband," or cmili, "man."	di hamamy lai, or by name.
Co-husband, in a polyandrous household WOMAN'S
Wife	Usually by name, or ni pwa lnaie, "my pwa," woman.	By name, or ni pwa lnaie.
Co-wife, in a polygamous household
	ñaki	ñaki
Wife's brother and the reciprocal,	By name, or gulnaie	gulnaie
Sister's husband (man speaking)	" "	"
Wife's sister and the reciprocal,	ntskas, or by name.	ntskas
Sister's husband (woman speaking)	" "	"
Brother's wife (man speaking) and the reciprocal,	" "	"
Husband's brother	" "	"
Brother's wife (woman speaking) and the reciprocal,	" "	"
Husband's sister	" "	"
Wife's father or	ptsai	ptsi
Wife's mother and the reciprocal,	"	"
Daughter's husband	" or by name.	"
Husband's father or	"	"
Husband's mother and the reciprocal,	"	"
Son's wife	" or by name.	"
Father's brother's wife	ntsa, ntsadlaut, or (as a term of affection without social significance) ntskas.	ntsadlaut or ni pwa di ntili, "Wife of my ntsi."
Mother's brother's wife	Same as father's brother's wife.
Father's sister's husband	ntsa, ntsadlaut, or (as a term of affection without social significance) ntsai.	ntsadlaut or di hamamy di ntskas, "Husband of my ntskas."

1:44:Howaith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE4 Bellacoola NE4

to a guest was regarded as amusing. In recent years, however, 837
some husbands have made a practice of renting their wives to [48]
white men. This is not considered creditable, but the Bella [548]
Coola do not strongly condemn breaches of the moral code, [183] which are regarded as the affair of the husband alone. There is said to be a Bella Bella custom by which a wife takes as recognized paramour one of the friends of her husband who is thought not only to know of this but to receive the presents which the lover gives his wife. The two continue to be friends and often hunt together; in fact, their mutual interest in the woman is a bond between them. No trace of this practice [171] could be found in Bella Coola.

POLYGAMY

It has thus far been assumed that the Bella Coola are 595
monogamous, an assumption correct only since the period of 556 white dominance. Previous to that time it was quite common [177] for wealthy men to have three, four, or more wives. Potlas, the important chief so often mentioned, had nine, ten, or eleven, the exact number is not known. A man wishing to take a second wife could do so in the manner already described, although the period of engagement was usually much shorter, and working for his parents-in-law was not expected. The reason for this was obvious to the Bella Coola. None but a chief of importance could afford more than a single wife, and such an one could not be expected to demean himself by working for anyone else. Besides, parents were glad to have their daughters married to a great chief, so willingly omitted the customary period of servitude. Few attained the distinction of having several wives. As far as could be learnt, [162]
the number of the sexes seems always to have been about equal, in itself a check to polygyny in a community where practically every adult had a wife. A number of males were always slain in war, and it is to be assumed that polygyny was made possible only through the surplus of women thus caused. The great majority of men had a single wife, some chiefs had

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

595 two, but only one of great importance could hope to aspire to 556 more, while the case of Pothes was considered to be unique and highly desirable.

595 A chief's wives always lived in the same house, and it is 578 said that disputes were frequent. Pothes endeavoured to prevent jealousy by providing each woman with a special bedroom and sleeping for a single night with each in order. One informant had two wives when a young man, and he found that the only way to avoid constant bickering was by sleeping in one bed, between them. The evidence seems clear that plurality of wives was usually the cause of considerable friction, though this never deterred a man from taking a second wife if he could. The only special rule of incest in [835] this regard was that two sisters could not be married at the [582] same time.

595 In answer to questions about polyandry, two men told of 183 a licentious woman who had two feeble-minded husbands 626 between whom she used to sleep. The whole affair was considered disgusting, but public opinion did not ostracize the offenders since a person's marital affairs were considered to concern the individual only. It was accordingly assumed that 595 the institution of true polyandry did not exist, when, unex-
556 pectedly, information was volunteered about its occurrence in the families of influential men. A very powerful chief, if his only child was a daughter, quite frequently married her simultaneously to the sons of other chiefs. She was thus considered most fortunate, since only a wealthy man could provide for a daughter in this way, and expend the large quantities of goods necessary to ensure her proper marriage in each case. The husbands were never brothers, and seldom related, since the ambitious parent wished to ally his daughter with different ancestral families for the benefit of any resultant children. The joint wife was accustomed to live for a number of months in the home of one of her husbands, with her other husbands forming part of his household. She would then move to the house of another, who assumed the leadership of the group, with the others, including the one who had just been leader, as followers. It is said that there was rarely friction among the joint husbands, since each realized that his turn would come as head of the household, and meanwhile the wife endeavoured to share her favours indiscriminately. The children were considered equally the offspring of each husband, thus automatically acquiring membership in several ancestral families. Such were regarded as indeed fortunate, provided with every potential means of assistance in the struggle of life. 595 556 [851]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Recognizing its importance, every effort was made to verify this information. Further questioning elicited the statement that the informant had never seen a case of this, though he asserted that when a young man he had often heard of it and that the custom had then only recently died out. Another old man and an elderly woman confirmed the above statement almost word for word, and each added that it was well known when they were young, though they had never actually seen it in practice. One man believed that the custom had formerly prevailed in several parts of the coast, and said that he had heard of its occurrence among the "Kwatcino" people near Newitte. Considering the reliability of his informants, the writer gives as his personal belief that the institution of polyandry among the daughters of chiefs occurred in Bella Coola not many years ago. Knowledge of the term of address for co-husband, already given, is strong evidence in support of this view. 128 595 556

DISCREDITABLE MARRIAGES

Since it has been assumed that Y is the daughter of a chief, properly married with due formality, it is necessary to digress still further from the account of her relations with X to describe connections of a less creditable nature. The most common of these was with slaves. Though frowned upon by all Bella Coola ethics, such alliances, of a permanent nature, do not appear to have been rare. In some cases it was a man who thus demeaned himself, in some a woman. Since no slave could provide the goods necessary for an elaborate wedding, the 567 588

McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

588 it, although it is customary for the parents of a wife to exhibit 556 their wealth on several occasions.

What are the advantages of such an agreement to the two parties? The husband receives considerable assistance, both in actual goods and in ceremonial prerogatives. Moreover, his vanity is gratified by the desire shown by others to have him as husband of their daughters. The advantages to the wife are more difficult to describe. Financially, her relatives always lose, yet they consider that the prestige gained by their daughter as wife of a mighty chief fully compensates for their monetary loss. Accordingly, they take pains to have a daughter married several times before puberty, either simultaneously or [595] in succession. Thus there is a form of ceremonial polyandry existing in Bella Coola at the present day. No ceremonial marriage takes place after puberty. In later years, when the [554] wife grows up, marries, and has children of her own, their status is increased materially by the pre-puberty marriages of their mother. They address her fictitious husband as "father," and his children as brother or sister, although there are no incest prohibitions with regard to them. A chief sometimes arranges the bestowal of names or other prerogatives on the children of a fictitious ex-wife, but such favours are too uncertain to provide a motive for the prevalence of the rite. Its value rests on the esteem attached to a woman whose relatives have shown their wealth and prowess by marrying her several times. When her children quarrel with their playfellows, it is common to hear one boast:

"I have three fathers. How many have you?"

[558] Occasionally the relatives of a fictitious bride are unable to provide the goods to repurchase her from her husband and the girl remains disgraced for life. In no circumstances has her husband any claims to marital rights with her, and in due course she can marry someone else; but it is never forgotten that she was not rebought from her husband. In 1916 a girl about four years of age was married to a man of sixty, who at the time gave her relatives $80 and a motor boat. She had

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

 192*

qaxta, "Bed Covering": Term applied to the presents given as such to the party of a bridegroom when they enter the bride's house on a wedding day. [585]

qāmdjut, "A Shaking of the Fingers": Rhetorical allusion to presents regarded as "Dust." [431]

qpānliktmm: To revolve sunwise. [195]

Qpānpānliktmmlaix, "The One Who Revolves Sunwise to Give Strength": One of Tlitcāplitn·a's names and hence a designation given to shamans.

Qāqalxs: Place of petrified power near Kwatna. [778]

Qxwan: Village on the Skeena River.

qaiuit: Supernatural creature resembling a diminutive human being. [825] qabat: Salmon liver.

qaks: Co-wife in a polygynous household. [595]

qalnas, vocative, qalnais: Wife's brother, or sister's husband, man speaking.

qalxwaix: Gathering of the supernatural beings for the performance of dances in the land above. [601]

qama: Unidentified salt water fish, said to be called "Lard-fish" by white men. [825]

Qanqamm ul di dā Sqem, "The Unlooser of Light": One of Raven's names as chief.

qapstānm: 1—The ability of a chief to sit down ceremonially in virtue of the goods distributed for his seat, the ground over which he walks, and other requirements.
2—The initial establishment of a youth as chief.

qapatālets: Stone axe. [412]

qas: Period of engagement.

Qasbila: Qamqo·ts man.

Qasi·lils: 1—One of Raven's names as chief.
2—Kusiut name of a Bella Coola man.

Qasistamlaix: Stsax man mentioned in an ancient story.

Qasiwsān·i: Shaman's name of a Stsax woman.

Qasiwas, "Begrimed": Name of a copper often cast into fire.

qasla: Unidentified (and probably mythical) type of lizard, allegedly about four feet long, found near Dean Channel. [825]

qaskm, vocative, qaslam; plural, alqaslam: Eldest brother or sister. [601]

Qas'kms: Name, in the Bella Bella language, given to a wooden woman made by one of the first settlers in the beginning of time.

qaslik: Gull. [825]

qasl'ma'ks, "Eldest": Term of respectful address to Porcupine as senior of all animals.

Qasl·mahlim, "The Mover": Name given to their house by one of the first groups of settlers at Tāl·ia in the beginning of time.

Qatna: Term from which the Anglicized "Kwatna" is derived: Generic name for the villages at Kwatna Harbour, Burke Channel. [103]*

Qamans'ks: Chief living on the upper Tsomat in the beginning of time.

qanā·xsta: Large box used for boiling olachen. [415]

Qaqa: Village south-west of the head of South Bentinck Arm.

Qaqasi: Place on Schooner Pass.

Qaqasila: Sisaak name of a Bella Coola man.

qastwham: Marks made to commemorate an event, such as carvings at chiefs' meeting-place, virtually a memorial. [211]

qastwasam: Figure representing crest.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

124 whom I was working. Before I left, this medley contained so much Bella Coola that it was unintelligible to white people who knew Chinook alone.

Activities in the canneries would have interfered seriously with my work during the summer of 1922 if two men had not [115] been confined to the village, Captain Schooner owing to an injured wrist, and Jim Pollard by the illness of his wife. These two men were willing to work half a day apiece without jealousy. Each was intensely proud of the traditions of his people and, realizing that their culture was passing away, was glad to assist in making it permanent in writing. An intimacy sprang 123 up between Captain Schooner (see Plate 3) and myself culmin- [597] ating in my adoption, a circumstance which established and improved my position in the community. In this way I was enabled to collect a large amount of material before July when it was necessary for me to leave for the east.

In September, 1923, when I returned to Bella Coola, I found that Captain Schooner had died a few months before, respected alike by white men and Indians. With the aid of others with whom I had made contact it was possible to obtain much new information, as well as to clear up many obscure points. The previous summer I had been so overwhelmed with material that I had no time to collate it in the field and the gaps only became apparent after a year's study. The men were so busy hunting and laying in stocks of fire-wood, however, that I found it difficult to arrange regular hours of work, but this was a trifle compared with the initial difficulties of my first trip. In October, when the Bella Coola began to prepare for 123 the winter dances, they had to appoint a successor to Captain 796 Schooner, who had played a leading part in their production. 887 Having been adopted by him, it was suggested that I take his place, a proposition which I readily accepted. This admitted me to the ranks of the old men, and I imagine that my interest encouraged them to hold more ceremonials than they had done for several years. In former times, a number of the older men used to devote much time and thought to the composing, re-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The married sons of a chief usually live in his house, and if he is very powerful the husbands of his daughters may also reside with him. Such a man is at the zenith of power, surrounded by a close group, formed of elderly relatives, of children and grandchildren. Connections by marriage are also added to the family group. At the present time, for example, one Bella Coola man is looking after his brother's widow, and it is felt that she is a member of his family. 592 556 622 602

Another way in which a rich man can increase the size of his family is by adoption. Parents who have lost an infant may adopt the child of some member of the ancestral family of either father or mother. The matter is usually arranged soon after birth, and the transfer takes place immediately after weaning. The real parents are willing since they know that the adopting parents will be able to validate valuable prerogatives and names for the child, which they themselves are unable to do. This desire for their child's welfare overrules parental love. In such cases the real father or mother can likewise bestow names and other prerogatives on the child, who really becomes a member of two families. This is often done by an old couple whose own children have married and moved away, and who thus find themselves lonely. It is considered disgraceful for parents to allow their children to be adopted by anyone not a member of their ancestral family, since that would be an admission of inability to bring up a child in the path of his ancestors. 556 597 614 [888]

"Your father was not strong," could be said to such a child as a reproach.

In the case of an orphan some wealthy relative is almost always ready to adopt him. Consequently, as he grows up, he receives his full share of the ancestral origin myth, and the names embodied therein, so that the loss of his own parents is of little consequence in the course of life. Occasionally a child is not adopted by relatives, and then his fate is indeed hard. 736 597 shelter in the house of any chief, and shared in the food which was being distributed at the almost continuous ceremonial feasts. Now, each family lives alone and no one feels any responsibility for this old man. [178]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

597 736 Ignorant of his ancestral names, and lacking the means to validate them even if someone should tell them to him, owning no hunting-grounds, the unfortunate infant is little better than a slave. This is almost unthinkable except in the extremely rare contingency of a child being left without relatives.

Although public opinion does not impel kindly treatment to orphans left without kindred, yet many Bella Coola have charitable dispositions and it is not unknown for a family to adopt and tend an infant wthout reason or hope of reward. One old man mentioned how his mother and a Chilkotin child had been born on the same day when a party of the latter had been encamped near Nusqalt. A few days later they left for the interior, abandoning the infant. The grandfather of the old man chanced to pass their camp while the ashes of their fire were still warm and found the baby, whom he brought back, to be a brother to his own daughter. His wife suckled the two, giving each a breast, and treating the foundling as her own. When the boy grew into manhood, he went back to his own people, but never forgot his adopted parents. Forty years later he visited Bella Coola, bringing with him his own wife and family. The old man who related this incident recalled the manner in which the Chikotin had instructed his children to regard him as their brother.

597 [768] Children are not the only persons to be adopted. On the death of an adult his relatives may "adopt to replace" someone who has a striking facial resemblance to the deceased. Thus, some time after the death of his sister, a certain man was in Bella Bella and saw a Bella Bella woman who closely resembled her. He desired to adopt her, and since he was a man of importance, his wish was granted. To legalize the transaction [431] he distributed valuable presents among the Bella Bella. A person so adopted does not usually change his abode, nor does [601] he lose membership in his own family; instead, he becomes a [835] member of two, with full rights to names and prerogatives in both, is addressed with the same kinship terms as if related by blood, and is likewise considered a member of the family as far as incest rules are concerned.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

as far as incest rules are concerned. In this particular instance the woman did not show any interest in her new relatives, failed to visit them, or to take part in their ceremonies, so that the adoption, though still legal, has practically lapsed. When this man dies his children will not consider the claims of their father's "sister" to inherit any of his possessions, as they would have done if she had showed herself appreciative of her adoption. 597 [428]

It will thus be seen that the size and composition of the family vary according to the wealth and influence of the father. The duties of the members are difficult to define since they concern almost entirely the routine of life. The father, head of the family, directs the gathering of firewood, repair of the house, obtaining of food supplies, and other matters of the same sort. If he gives a potlatch his children must help him, which they do willingly since they gain from the ceremony. If a father is too autocratic, his older, especially his married children, simply move away. Nor is his power over his younger children unbounded, since their mother's relatives take great interest in their welfare and would resent any ill-treatment. 592 [431] [602]

If a person is killed or wounded, revenge is the affair of his family. Just how many individuals are involved depends on the composition of the family. In the case of the killing of a child, living with his parents alone, none but the father would feel it incumbent to retaliate. If an adult person is murdered, his or her brothers feel and avenge the insult. But should an important member of the community be slain, an old man surrounded by a numerous family, it is the affair of all. Every effort is made to slay the murderer, but if he should escape from the country, the injured group is satisfied by killing one of his family. Here again the same inexact composition is found. A man's son, brother, or father are the only persons strictly liable, and even here the common sense of the Bella Coola outweighs their theoretical laws. A murderer's brother, living in another village, would not be held liable; but more distant relatives living with the offender and considered as his family are liable. 593 627 682 [671]

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

601

TERM	DIRECT ADDRESS	INDIRECT ADDRESS
Mother's sister's husband	Same as father's sister's husband.
Brother's son's wife or Sister's son's wife	Same as son's wife. " "	Same as son's wife, or tci gmes di emts, "Wife of my emts."
Brother's daughter's husband or Sister's daughter's husband	Same as daughter's husband. " " "	Same as daughter's husband, or di kwamsts di emts, "Husband of my emts."

[597] In case of adoption, the same kinship terms are used as if the adopted person were a member of the family by birth. A more complicated situation arises when a child who is regarded as the reincarnation (I, p. 616) of a recently deceased elderly relative, is given the latter's name. In such a case the child is addressed by the kinship terms applicable to his namesake. In recent years, at any rate, this application is without social significance, and, as far as could be learned, this has always been the case. Bella Coola sentiment is that it is fitting for a child to receive the name of one of its ancestors. When a parent sees the child, and thinks of his name, he thinks of the late deceased, hence it is natural to use kinship terms accordingly. This is more obvious when the child is regarded as a reincarnation, though even in such a case he does not receive any of the marks of respect paid to his namesake; the reincarnation is physical, not social. In course of time this is forgotten and the child takes his place among others of his own generation, though it may be remembered in rhetorical speeches on ceremonial occasions.

601 553 775

601 The kinship terminology of the Bella Coola combines features of the family and classificatory systems. The reciprocal terms for parents- and children-in-law, brothers- and sisters-in-law, lack of sex differentiation for brothers and sisters, and the importance of age in the designations applied to persons of the same generation, are all features of the classificatory system. On the other hand, bilateralism, failure to the writer was in Bella Coola, a non-ceremonial entertainment was given one evening at which several men sang and performed. The writer was asked to sing a Bella Coola song, which he did in the belief that it was not one that was incorporated in the ancestral myth of anyone. Unfortunately, his teacher had erred, and as soon as the song was completed an old woman arose and stated that it belonged to her ancestral family. She avoided the difficulty of its singing by immediately announcing that the singer was her "son." Thus the writer was adopted into a Bella Coola family, a circumstance which aided him considerably in collecting information. This did not alter the fact that a ceremonial song had been sung. Accordingly, the woman gave presents to the guests, thereby legalizing the adoption, and saving herself from the disgrace of having one of her songs used as if it were a matter of no consequence, free to anyone. 123 533 556* 424 [597]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

SEATING

Presents are also a means of obtaining seats. Every Bella Coola has at least one name embodied in an ancient myth. A man who wishes to become a chief can do so only by giving lavish presents to make his designation "strong," "firm," or "bright," to use Bella Coola expressions. Such gifts increase the importance of the owner's name, and they obtain for him the right to a seat, more or less definitely located, in the house. Since all Bella Coola habitations are built on similar lines, a man can occupy his wonted position when summoned to a ceremony in any house. The validating of ancestral names and the acquisition of seats are among the important features which occur at potlatches. 554 556* [622] [424] [553]

In the beginning of time, when the first people were sent down to populate the earth, it is assumed that each who established a village, consisting of a single house, seated himself in the best spot within the dwelling, namely the central position behind the fire; his younger relatives ranged either beside him [773]

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

581 Confidently believing that he has descended from ancestors
[858] who came to this earth in the beginning of time, a Bella Coola wishes to have his children firmly established in the path of his forbears. This can be accomplished only with the aid of a suitable mother. It follows that marriage is not primarily a matter of affection, but of the ancestral eligibility of the contracting parties.

CHOICE OF MATE

584 Since the initiative for marriage is taken by the man in 581 almost all cases, it will be convenient and proper to describe the factors which enter into the search for a wife, remembering that the converse govern the decision of the woman and her relatives. The choice of the woman who is to be the mother of the children who will carry on the traditions of the ancestral family is a matter of too great importance to be entrusted to any young person. Accordingly, while their son is yet a child, his parents often discuss who would be a suitable wife for him. They view the matter from a strictly business standpoint.
581 Proud of their own ancient lineage, they would not demean themselves by allowing their son to marry a girl who could not trace her ancestry back to the first people, or with one whose forbears had disgraced themselves by marriage with slaves. Instead, it is a matter of pride for parents to have as daughter-in-law the child of a powerful chief. Nor can they choose a 582 woman too closely related to their son. Marriage with a sister, an aunt, a niece, or any first cousin is strictly prohibited. No reason for these laws could be obtained; the Bella Coola consider that it would be "indecent" or unclean so to marry, but have theorized no further about the matter. An adopted child [597] is regarded in the same light as an own child. The Bella Coola [829] know, and are amused by, the regulation of marriage according [171] to crests among the northern tribes, but practise nothing of the same nature themselves. In fact, marriages usually take place among those who are descended from one ancestor and who have, accordingly, the same crest, though the significance

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*192

Ăłkə: ʌstāmɣ village.

Ălkə·sɣł, "He of the Tied-up Penis": Name given to a lad whose sex was disguised in infancy.

[426] ălkstmaxdut: Refusal to lend to an outsider a family prerogative such as the employment of marriage dancers.

[574] ălkuqulosnam: Meal served when a chief's fellow villagers are called in, preparatory to an announcement of his coming potlatch.

Ăłkusiyustem: Name of a female shaman.

Ălkwi, "The Opening of the Sky":
1—One of the first men to settle at Kimsquit in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Stuur in the beginning of time.
3—Name of a Snuite·tl chief.

Ăłlibalāxlaix: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola man.

Ălihmnālosaix: One of the first men to settle at Slskiul in the beginning of time.

[575] ăllimusnam: Sisaok having the ability to enter the back-room and treat initiates concealed there. The function probably antedates the employment of hai·shakila.

Ăłlipaios: Holders, supernatural beings who restrain supernatural Cannibals.

[583] ăłlixānm: Frenzied beating of sticks.

Ălmanmnām: Wife of Twalalit, the supernatural hunter.

Ălmanskitlnm: Supernatural calendrical experts.

Ălmoqltaikila: Husband of Ano'liktwalsaix; he is known only in Kimsquit.

[575] ălmutsāmk: Kusiut dance of mystery.

[574] ălnaixwotsmm: Visit paid to a sick person, especially the coming of foreign guests to a mourning ceremony.

ălnaixwotsmmap: Call used by heralds when summoning to a mourning ceremony.

[425] [583] ălnāxamlaix: The "Dragging Across" of a name, crest, or other intangible prerogative from wife to husband either at marriage or later at a repurchasing of the wife.

[262] ălnānm: To drag a heavy burden.

ălnaxlaw·ax: Cranberries mixed with olachen grease.

[821] ălnusxim: Visit to his repository by a kusiut initiate.

Ălnansdimut, "Facing Both Ways": Second moon after the winter solstice.

ălolipsmmy, "The Actionless Time": Hushed assemblage of the kukusiut after departure of a Cannibal.

[597] ălpnkiokm: Adoption of a person resembling the deceased to replace the latter.

Ălpălpalslaix: 1—Supernatural being who revives mortals.
2—Name received by a shaman from this being.

ălps: Food.

[425] ălpsmm, "Food Supplies": The term applied to the giving of the use of land at marriage.

Ălpălsl, "Stockaded": Village in the lower Bella Coola valley.

[756] ălpānts: Shaman's collar of dyed and undyed cedar-bark, arranged in alternate strands.

[882] ălpoik: Guarded, term applied to a girl secluded at adolescence.

[825] Ălqaxaiyu·a: Supernatural name of olachen, applied to those brought by the first people in the beginning of time.

Ălqaqi'djut, "A Glance Downwards": Name given to an Ălpălsl man in the beginning of time.

*776 According to the general Bella Coola belief the supernatural ones may be classified as anthropomorphic beings, zoomorphic beings, and supernatural members of the vegetable and mineral kingdoms.

ANTHROPOMORPHIC BEINGS

The Bella Coola agree that the most important of their supernatural beings is Ālquntām, the supreme deity, maker of men and animals. He is most commonly known by this name but he has other appellations with reference to his various functions. The word Ālquntām is said to be derived from ıxquntām, "foreman," or "chief." He is chief of the supernatural beings. Other names by which he is known are as follows:

Sınxälotla, a word derived from sınx, the Sun. This term is used almost as commonly as Ālquntām.

*776 538 Smaiaikila, "The Story Man," because Ālquntām created the ancestral myths at the same time that he created mankind. The supreme deity is called Smaiaikila with reference to his membership in the kusiut society of the supernatural beings.

Smaialotla, "From Whom Come, and To Whom Belong, All Myths." As creator of the highly valued myths, the supreme deity is owner of them.

*776 Snusılkäls, "The Wise One," "The Thoughtful," or "The One with Great Mental Ability."

[601] Mınakais, a word supposedly derived from mān, "Father," with the suffix kais as a term of endearment. This is used in praying to Ālquntām.

[601] [782] Tätä, "Father," the term for father used by a child; this, like the last, is used in prayer.

Ixulqotläm.

Nonodjonostem, "The Adviser."

Silhmstä.

Nuxukmälsaix, "The Light Giver."

O·hok di Stälhmg, "The Moon Chief."

These names are not meaningless synonyms; all, or at any

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

lies in public opinion which expresses contempt for a lazy man who is constantly begging. 226 626

To anyone familiar with the definite social groupings of a tribe divided into clans or land-owning families, the ancestral family of the Bella Coola must appear as a vague and unreal unit, only distinguished by its intangibility. So it was found when investigating in the field. When information began to accumulate, it seemed as if there must be some definite obligations incumbent upon all members of the ancestral family, but none could be found. Without asking a direct question, the point was raised whether, if a man were killed, the members of his ancestral family would unite to avenge him. Conversely, were they liable for the deeds of any member? In each case the reply was in the negative; these matters concern only the immediate family. In regulating marriage the ancestral family is important, since it is wise for a man or woman to seek his mate within the members of that group, though it is not compulsory. Theoretically, the terms of kinship applied to members of the immediate family may be extended to members of the ancestral family, but in practice this is rarely the case, and, if so, is functionless. It might be argued that this somewhat wide application of kinship terms, verging on the classificatory usage, is a relic of an earlier, and now broken-down, clan system. It is impossible to prove or to deny such a contention. When trying to discover whether the members of an ancestral family ever contributed to a potlatch whereby one of their fellows established himself as a chief, the following interesting comment was received. The previous winter the informant had been in Bella Bella, and there the point was raised by a Bella Bella chief whom he quoted as follows:

614 [627] [582] [601] [178] 614 622 431 171

"We laugh at you Bella Coola because each of you is always trying to be chief. Our system is much better; we all help our chiefs."

The man agreed with the Bella Bella man that there was an important difference between the practices of the two tribes.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

597 736 Ignorant of his ancestral names, and lacking the means to validate them even if someone should tell them to him, owning no hunting-grounds, the unfortunate infant is little better than a slave. This is almost unthinkable except in the extremely rare contingency of a child being left without relatives.

Although public opinion does not impel kindly treatment to orphans left without kindred, yet many Bella Coola have charitable dispositions and it is not unknown for a family to adopt and tend an infant without reason or hope of reward. One old man mentioned how his mother and a Chilkotin child had been born on the same day when a party of the latter had been encamped near Nuxalst. A few days later they left for the interior, abandoning the infant. The grandfather of the old man chanced to pass their camp while the ashes of their fire were still warm and found the baby, whom he brought back, to be a brother to his own daughter. His wife suckled the two, giving each a breast, and treating the foundling as her own. When the boy grew into manhood, he went back to his own people, but never forgot his adopted parents. Forty years later he visited Bella Coola, bringing with him his own wife and family. The old man who related this incident recalled the manner in which the Chilkotin had instructed his children to regard him as their brother.

597 [768] Children are not the only persons to be adopted. On the death of an adult his relatives may "adopt to replace" someone who has a striking facial resemblance to the deceased. Thus, some time after the death of his sister, a certain man was in Bella Bella and saw a Bella Bella woman who closely resembled her. He desired to adopt her, and since he was a man of importance, his wish was granted. To legalize the transaction [431] he distributed valuable presents among the Bella Bella. A person so adopted does not usually change his abode, nor does [601] he lose membership in his own family; instead, he becomes a [835] member of two, with full rights to names and prerogatives in both, is addressed with the same kinship terms as if related by blood, and is likewise considered a member of the family as far as incest rules are concerned.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

593 on the value of the goods distributed in connection with them, 614 usually revert to the ancestral family and can be revived by 553 any member of it. It seems needless to publish lengthy pedi-
428 grees, illustrating the transmission of ancestral names; it will suffice to say that such sometimes pass from father to son, from a man to his brother's son, his sister's son, his sister, his daughter, or to other relatives belonging to the immediate family. On the other hand, with equal frequency, names pass from a man to distant relatives of the same ancestral family.

59 Thus the Bella Coola family, important though it is in the life of the individual, cannot be defined with exactitude either as regards composition or functions; it varies according to the importance of its head, and tends to merge in the ancestral families of the parents.

Kinship Terms

601 In Bella Coola, as in so many parts of the world, kinship terms mirror the social life of the community. The Bella Coola system of nomenclature is not as clear-cut in its application as in other regions, and requires considerable explanation concerning the uses of many of the terms. It will be seen that the system, although fundamentally founded on the family, presents many classificatory features. Whether or not these are to be ascribed to an ancient clan system is most doubtful; a short discussion of that point will be found at the end of this section.

The terms are arranged in the following order: first, an individual's relatives of the preceding generation, then those of the next preceding, with their parents, then those of the present generation, followed by terms for kin of the generations following. Finally come relations by marriage.

Term	Direct Address	Indirect Address
Father.....	Alee This term is properly used only by a small child, though often continued by an adult as a term of endearment.	Ase Term used only by a small child.

[195]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

TERM	DIRECT ADDRESS	INDIRECT ADDRESS
Father (continued)....	mǎn	mǎn
	Term used, rarely, by an adult of either sex; sisso is more common. Mǎn is often used by an adult when speaking to any old man as a courtesy title.	Used by an adult.
Mother's husband....	sisso	sisi
	Terms used by small children.
	mǎn	mǎndimut
	Used by adult; more commonly sisso.	Used by adult.
Mother.....	mǎmas	mǎmá
	Used by baby.	Used by baby.
	ǫimas	ǫimá
	Used by small child.	Used by small child.
	sisa	sisa
	Used by adults of either sex with same limitations as mǎn.
Father's wife.....	mǎmas or ǫimas	mǎmá or ǫimá
	Used by small children.
	sisa	sisadimut
	Used by adults, more commonly ǫimas.	Used by adults.
	The application to step-parents of the terms usually limited to the real parents is merely a mark of endearment, without social significance.
Parent of either sex...	sispuliaiyuly	ɔ-matskayki
	These terms are used for a parent of either sex when old and feeble. Their use is a mark of courtesy and implies respect for those with wide knowledge of family history.
Father's brother.....	sisai, or by name, or sispuliaiyuly	sisi
Mother's brother.....	" " "	"
Father's sister.....	sukwa " "	sukwa
Mother's sister.....	" " "	"
	If the family contains more distant relatives of the generation preceding that of the speaker, for example, a father's father's brother's son, or a mother's mother's brother's daughter, the terms sisi and sukwa may be applied in courtesy to these individuals.
Father's father.....	kakpai, or more commonly, sisso	kakpi
Mother's father.....	" " " "	"
Father's mother.....	kiiaas " " ǫimas	kiia
Mother's mother.....	" " " "	"
	Especially when living together, children usually address their grandparents by the terms properly applied to parents.

601
195
[888]
[595]
[888]
601

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

601

TERM	DIRECT ADDRESS	INDIRECT ADDRESS
Brother or sister of a grandparent.....	Addressed as the grandparent, especially when living in the same family. The terms are further widely applied to elderly members of the same matrilineal family.	[illegible] Seldom used term; more commonly spoken of by name, or as grandparents.
Great grandparents...	As grandparents.	As grandparents.
Elderly male relatives spoken of collectively.....	.....	[illegible]
Elderly female relatives spoken of collectively.....	.....	[illegible] These two terms are used with respect to a man's "power" through the possession of many elderly relatives.
Eldest brother or sister	By name, or ipaulem.	ipaulem
Second eldest brother or sister.....	By name.	ta-lha-ol, or alhite ol di ipaulem
Third eldest brother or sister.....	" "	alhit
Fourth eldest brother or sister.....	" "	qwaowaa
Youngest brother or sister.....	" " or sapinem.	sapi

[178]

At the present time the intermediate terms are rarely, if ever, used. Ipaulem and sapi are continually employed, the former for a brother or sister older than the speaker, the latter for a brother or sister younger than the speaker. When necessary sex is usually indicated by giving the person's name, or by the use of sex-denoting particles.

Only brother with several sisters.....	.....	[illegible]
Only sister with several brothers.....	.....	[illegible]
Stepbrother or sister, same father, different mother.....	By name, or ipaulem, or sapinem, according to relative age.	[illegible]
Stepbrother or sister, same mother, different father.....	By name, or ipaulem, or sapinem, according to relative age.	[illegible]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

601

TERM	DIRECT ADDRESS	INDIRECT ADDRESS
Father's brother's child, or Father's sister's child, or Mother's brother's child, or Mother's sister's child.	No distinction is made, either in direct or indirect address, between ortho- and cross-cousins. By name, or ḡwalim, or sapinas. These terms, though properly reserved for brother and sister, are usually used for all cousins in direct address when an individual's name is not employed. The choice between ḡwalim and sapinas depends on the relative ages of the parents, not on the ages of the speakers. Theoretically, this should be traced back to the first settlement of the earth, so that, for example, an old man claiming descent from the younger of two brothers who first came to this earth, addresses a young girl descended from the elder, as ḡwalim. In consequence, there is often a choice in terminology. Thus a man calls his mother's father's elder brother's son either ḡwalim or sinl.	By name, or ḡwalim, or sapi, or, rarely, the intermediate terms as used for brother or sister.
Members of the maternal family, considered the same generation but more distantly related than first cousins.	When male addresses male or female addresses female— nemenas	When male speaks of male or female speaks of female— nemas
	When male addresses female, or female addresses male— spulyaw	When male speaks of female, or female speaks of male— spulyaw

601
614

These terms are seldom used except on ceremonial occasions when the bond of ancient relationship is invoked, especially if assistance is needed in danger. They are also applicable to first cousins.

The term most commonly employed for these relatives is the one for "friend," or "partner," which does not necessarily imply relationship. It is—

sinlel sister

Sister are usually of the same rank and inhabitants of the same village.

Male relatives of the same maternal family and generation as the speaker. . . . . sinlelas

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

601

TERM	DIRECT ADDRESS	INDIRECT ADDRESS
[614] Female relatives of the same ancestral family and generation as the speaker	.....	gwudzits
Child	mimo	mimo
Son, until twelve or thirteen years old	Tsi, a term of endearment used for any small child, or by name. Use of the personal name becomes more frequent with increasing age.	smamilki
[551] Son, when adult	By name, or djatzhkzi.	By name or smalk (man).
Daughter, until twelve or thirteen years of age	Tsi, a term of endearment used for any small girl, or by name. Use of the personal name becomes more frequent with increasing age.	gunguts-i
Daughter, when adult	By name; infantile term of endearment is also sometimes used.	By name.
Stepchild	Same as for own child.
Brother's child or Sister's child	Usually by same terms as own children, merely as a mark of endearment; also emts. Corresponding to the use of gualim where sisai is strictly applicable, sapinas is used in some cases instead of emts.	emts. Depending on the composition of the family, this term is in many cases applied to the children of an emts if they form part of the family group.
Son's child or Daughter's child	Usually as for own child, or by name, or skwutsakals. This last is merely the term for indirect address, with the endearing suffix, kals.	skwuts
Descendants	.....	lamidjat or skamidjat. Terms used rhetorically to describe a man with many descendants. The latter term means "manyness."
[614] Family	.....	mamamts; the ancestral family, those who claim descent from one group of ancestors, even though their exact relationship has been forgotten.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

601

TERM	DIRECT ADDRESS	INDIRECT ADDRESS
Husband	Usually by name, or di kutamsts lai, "my husband," or tsulk, "man."	di kulamsts lai, or by name.
Co-husband, in a polyandrous household	wazzai-s	[595]
Wife	Usually by name, or tci gwes lasis, "my gwes," woman.	By name, or tci gwes lasis.
Co-wife, in a polygamous household	ḳuks	ḳuks [595]
Wife's brother and the reciprocal,	By name, or ḳulsais	ḳulsas
Sister's husband (man speaking)	" "	"
Wife's sister and the reciprocal,	stskas, or by name.	stskas
Sister's husband (woman speaking)	" "	"
Brother's wife (man speaking) and the reciprocal,	" "	"
Husband's brother	" "	"
Brother's wife (woman speaking) and the reciprocal,	" "	"
Husband's sister	" "	"
Wife's father or	ḳsai	ḳsi
Wife's mother and the reciprocal,	"	"
Daughter's husband	" or by name.	"
Husband's father or	"	"
Husband's mother and the reciprocal,	"	"
Son's wife	" or by name.	"
Father's brother's wife	stin, stindimat, or (as a term of affection without social significance) sutsem.	stindimat or tci gwes di sisi, "Wife of my sisi."
Mother's brother's wife	Same as father's brother's wife.
Father's sister's husband	stin, stindimat, or (as a term of affection without social significance) sisai.	stindimat or di kulamsts di sutsem, "Husband of my sutsem."

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

601

TERM	DIRECT ADDRESS	INDIRECT ADDRESS
Mother's sister's husband.....	Same as father's sister's husband.
Brother's son's wife... or Sister's son's wife.....	Same as son's wife. " "	Same as son's wife, or tci gnes di emts, "Wife of my emts."
Brother's daughter's husband..... or Sister's daughter's husband.....	Same as daughter's husband. " " "	Same as daughter's husband, or di kwa-mstsdi emts, "Husband of my emts."

[597] In case of adoption, the same kinship terms are used as if the adopted person were a member of the family by birth. A more complicated situation arises when a child who is regarded as the reincarnation (I, p. 616) of a recently deceased elderly relative, is given the latter's name. In such a case the child is addressed by the kinship terms applicable to his namesake. In recent years, at any rate, this application is without social significance, and, as far as could be learned, this has always been the case. Bella Coola sentiment is that it is fitting for a child to receive the name of one of its ancestors. When a parent sees the child, and thinks of his name, he thinks of the late deceased, hence it is natural to use kinship terms accordingly. This is more obvious when the child is regarded as a reincarnation, though even in such a case he does not receive any of the marks of respect paid to his namesake; the reincarnation is physical, not social. In course of time this is forgotten and the child takes his place among others of his own generation, though it may be remembered in rhetorical speeches on ceremonial occasions.

601 553 775

601 The kinship terminology of the Bella Coola combines features of the family and classificatory systems. The reciprocal terms for parents- and children-in-law, brothers- and sisters-in-law, lack of sex differentiation for brothers and sisters, and the importance of age in the designations applied to persons of the same generation, are all features of the classificatory system. On the other hand, bilateralism, failure to differentiate between cross- and ortho-cousins, and the unsystematic groupings of nephews and nieces show "family," as opposed to classificatory, principles. Finally, rhetorical terms for the ancestral family, for many ancestors, and many descendants, correspond to the importance of a large number of relatives in Bella Coola thought.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

In many parts of the world the classificatory system of relationship occurs where the community is divided into clans. The occurrence of some of these features among the Bella Coola raises the question of whether or not they should be regarded as survivals from an earlier clan form of social organization. The Bella Coola may once have had clans, but their relationship system does not furnish any real evidence to this effect. The reciprocal terms really have the significance, "Relation by marriage of the same generation," or "of a generation once removed," a form of address which does not require explanation in any ancient form of social organization. Moreover, the importance of the eldest child, as potential transmitter of the glories of the ancestral family, is sufficient reason for differentiating brothers and sisters in terms of their relative ages. This feature suggests that in former times this was more important than it has been in the recent past. It is not implied that the Bella Coola never had a clan system, as such may have been the case many generations ago, but their kinship terminology can be explained without that hypothesis. The somewhat wide application to cousins of terms which are properly limited to brothers and sisters may easily have been derived from a process of copying. The Bella Coola are well acquainted with the clan system of the northern coastal tribes, so that it is by no means impossible, or unlikely, that they should have adopted the principle of applying the same kinship term to many individuals, and hence to members of their own ancestral families. Finally, the somewhat vague and unsystematic application of terms to relatives according to whether or not they are members of the immediate family, is a feature not at all surprising in view of the essential fluidity of Bella

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

601 Coola social organization, and of the absence of standardized obligations based upon specific relationships.

Slaves

567 Since a slave was[11] without status in the Bella Coola community, it is perhaps incorrect to include a description of [554] slavery in a chapter on social organization; but as slaves lived in the Bella Coola villages, it seems reasonable to include them when dealing with the different units of the tribe. It was 162 impossible to obtain an accurate estimate of their number in 567 Bella Coola; slavery has been so long abandoned that the present natives could only hazard vague guesses. Judging from conversational remarks by elderly men, it seems probable that in the old days there was a considerable slave population in every Bella Coola village, comprising at times as much as thirty to forty per cent of the total population.

567 When a party raided a village most of the inhabitants were 727 slain, but some, especially children, young adults, or famous chiefs were captured. As far as could be learned, once a captive had reached Bella Coola he was in little danger, since torture or systematic slaying after the heat of battle had subsided was not a Bella Coola characteristic. The leader of the expedition retained many of the captives as his own slaves, and distributed others among his followers. Anyone, chief [422] or commoner, could own slaves in the same way that he could own any other type of goods.

567 Like any other commodity, slaves were bought and sold. 437 The Bella Coola were usually so well provided with salmon that they were able to exchange these fish with the members [622] of other tribes for slaves. Lack of strong chieftainship among [726] the Bella Coola hindered their success in war, so that most of [431] their slaves were obtained by trade. To the same category [773] belong those obtained as presents at potlatches. If, however, a member of one of the tribes on the lower Fraser River was [648] [11]One of the first effects of the white man's establishment in British Columbia was the freeing of all slaves. Consequently the past tense is used in this section.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

scribed, in spite of some repetition entailed thereby, both to record customs surviving the decay of Bella Coola ritual, and as a means of illustrating the sentiments of the participants. To avoid native terminology, white man's names will be used throughout. It will be necessary to understand the relationships of those taking part in the ceremony, as shown in the following pedigrees:

764 [114] 601 764

PEDIGREE I*

PEDIGREE II

Samuel King was a widower with one daughter at the time of his marriage to Jessie, by whom he had no children. His

764 159

*No attempt has been made to record the complete pedigrees; only those who took part in the ceremony are indicated.

APPENDIX D

ālqim: Something long sought-for on account of its especial desirability, such as well-grained wood.

ālqim was mnas: Child whose parents were long engaged and who is accordingly regarded as being well prepared for. [554] ālqlus: Sisook initiate concealed within the back-room.

Ālqualils: One of the first men to settle in Kimsquit in the beginning of time.

ālqo: Guests at a potlatch.

Ālqonnkam, "The Shelterer": Name assumed by Smasan in the beginning of time.

ālkpmālmis, "What Has Been Shaken Off": Term applied to presents distributed when a corpse has been carried through the roof. The implication is that they are dust shaken from the fingers of the deceased. [431] [764]

Ālquntām: 1—The supreme god.
2—One of the first men to settle on the upper Bella Coola in the beginning of time.
3—One of the first men to settle on the upper Kimsquit in the beginning of time.
4—Tail of a Stulx repository.

Ālquntāmāāks: 1—Mountain on the north side of the lower Bella Coola.
2—Name assumed by one of the first settlers at Snuhli in the beginning of time.

ālkwallaiyals: Old people, especially parents; this is a polite term for direct address. [601]

Ālkwalintutl: Supernatural artisans who made mankind in the beginning of time. [576]

ālq"il: Presents given to validate the initiation of a kusiut.

Ālqwutimut: Ancestral name of a Bella Coola woman. [431] ālāmnuskwanāhmx: Professional mourner.

ālāmnuyaiyutl: Professional droner at marriages. [463]

ālāmyaanx: Professional hunter.

ālāmyalit: Professional warrior.

Ālnakān·i: Kimsquit fisherman living in the last century.

ālp'xu: Olachen net.

Ālsiax: Celebrated hunter mentioned in an ancient story.

ālsikt ol di kwakm: Second oldest sibling. [601]

Ālsmas: Repository of a Kimsquit Cannibal where cures are effected.

ālsutumlk: Professional warrior.

ālsutuxwiāxm: Professional river guard. [463]

Ālwolsqāmus: Mountain near mouth of the Kimsquit River.

ālwuale: Shaman.

ālulixwstmm: 1—Meeting of those who have given potlatches. [753]
2—Unidentified disease said to attack only chiefs.

ālulimut: Marriage associates, i.e. those who, not being relatives, wish to associate themselves with the bride's family in the financial transactions of a marriage.

Ālunpkāmtmm: Name applied to the supernatural artisans with reference to their construction of everything used by mankind.

Ālusklwasam, "Cloud-Covered": Name applied to the supernatural being Noākpmm with reference to his frequent invisibility.

Ālusklmāx-aix, "The Highest of All Chiefs' Sons:" Name of Smasan's son in the beginning of time.

Ālus-limāx, "Falling Star-Fish": Name acquired by a Kimsquit man long ago.

Ālusqax, "The Roof-Maker": Name acquired by a Kimsquit man long ago.

ālwālāk: One who has received a commission for carpentry work in preparation for a potlatch. [465]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*192 Ăłximăx-a, "Left Foot": Stax repository named from part of a supernatural creature.

Ăłximlaix: Kimsquit hunter living in the last century.

[825] ałymutł: Dentalium-shell.

ałymałʼax, "Not Finished": Said concerning a kusiut who dies between initiation and his first complete dance.

[292] [881] ałxwam: Skull cap of grass and dentalium-shells worn by adolescent girls during seclusion.

ałxwola: Guest, especially from afar, to a kusiut dance.

Ałxwolămum: 1—Supernatural herald.
2—Assemblage of the people for ceremonies of different kinds, especially shamans' dances and guessing competitions in connection with the Mystery dance.
3—Kimsquit term for the first night of a kusiut dance.

ałxwpaix, "A Surpassing": Said of cases where a wife's relatives have given more presents to the husband's than they have received in return.

[576] ămăł: Place of concealment of a Mystery dancer's power.

[601] ămăstałąkł: Old people, especially parents; this is a polite term for indirect address.

ămăłux: Rightful location, especially the validated position of a chief in a house.

[415] ămăłuts: Dishes carved with ancestral crest.

ămkłł: 1—Mouse.
2—Daughter of the first settlers at Sałłia.

[825] ămł: Spring salmon.

ămłia: Spring salmon house.

Ămłtkłł: Professional name of a kusiut marshal.

Ămtkłł: Supernatural being resident at the mouth of the Bella Coola River.

ămłămkum: 1—The allotment of work to kukusiut in the manufacture of masks and other requirements.
2—Hence, the time when such tasks are assigned, the second evening of a kusiut dance.

Ănăhsułłănămłaix, "The Resident Maker": Name given to the daughter of the first settlers at Snułoli.

[575] ănănusks or sănusks: That which serves as pattern, picture, or model for a kusiut ritual.

ănăsłutł: Second night of a potlatch.

[226] ănăwołałł: Artificial, pier-like structure built into a river for use in hand-net fishing.

Ănłxsaix, "Where People Go": A reflecting pool created by Raven at Kimsquit.

Ąnołkwłałł: Cave near Dean Channel.

Ąnołpmdimut, "The Dancer Whose Only Noise-Making Instrument Is His Body": One of Thłcąplitn-a's names and hence a designation given to shamans.

Ąnʼłłkwołxaix: Supernatural woman who guards repositories.

Ąnołłkłmots: 1—"The Open-Mouthed" (in the sense of open to suck forth sickness): One of Thłcąplitn-a's names and hence a designation given to shamans.
2—Name of a shaman whose powers are said to have been derived from ghosts.

[756] [823] ąnąsum: Swift running water.

ąnłhmsnąnąm: 1—Ranks of ordinary inidviduals; this term is used to distinguish those who are being initiated into the nusek society.
2—Something supernatural seen when awake.

Anulklx: Village near mouth of the Dean River.
Anulnklam: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Ănutsqwa·xstl, "Labretted": Village in the lower Bella Coola valley.
Ănuxemlaix: Name obtained by an Älqälxl man in the beginning of time.
Ănuqulmmut, "Quivering To and Fro": One of Tlitcaplilăn·a's names and hence a designation given to shamans.
Ănuximälos: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola man.
Ănuximăn·a: 1—Kusiut name of a Bella Coola woman.
2—"Left Hand": Stmx repository named from part of a supernatural creature.
[431] [426] ănuxop': Term applied to the giving of a copper, indicating that 100 per cent interest is expected in return.
Ănuximmdmut: One of the names of Great Blue Heron as chief.
[463] ănuxwitcekm·aix: Kusiut profession, at Kimsquit only, of throwing masks on the fire.
Ănuxwolsekmals, "The Moving House": One of the names of the supreme god's dwelling.
ănuyax: 1—Owner of a puppet-patron.
2—Synonym for usămămmtmm, q.v.
Ănuyulikailaix: Supernatural being who robs kukusiut of their thoughts at the Mystery dance.
Ao·sti: 1—Name created for himself by one of the first settlers at Älqälxl in the beginning of time.
2—Bella Bella chief.
ăpi: Excreta.
Äpstul·a, "The Privy One": Name taken by a chief for himself in virtue of the remarks made about his habits.
Aqalais: Sisook name of a Kimsquit man.
[825] aqam: Herring eggs.
[824] aqmexlp: Cottonwood.
aqna: Type of sea-going canoe.
[825] aqwa: Harlequin duck.
Aqaikaiyutsmaxmm, "The Constant Eater": Term used by hunters to Eagle.
Ăsăn·ăn·i, "Concave Town": Village in the middle Bella Coola valley.
ăq·awanăx: Canoes lashed together.
Ăs·ăx: Locality on south side of North Bentinck Arm, about one-quarter mile from its head, including the area beneath the surface of the water.
[601] ăs·iko·tl: 1—Second oldest sibling.
2—Second part of song.
[775] asiutănum: 1—"They Who Have Become Supernatural": Title preferred by ghosts.
2—Woman living in the moon.
Ăs·ixwamy: Inhabitants of the village of *Ăs·ux*ʷ.
[424] ăs·umsmaius: Person with good memory commissioned to remember family prerogatives.
*Ăs·ux*ʷ, "At the Head": Village southwest of the head of South Bentinck Arm.
ăskaistl: Totem-pole, literally, "Outside Post." [756] ăskankots: Shaman with power derived from ghosts.
ăqalusam: Ceremonial bathing at dawn.
[515] Ăskluseilaix: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola woman.
Ăskmkk: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola man.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

Askla: Village at Salmon House, on the upper Dean River.
ăskma: Position between two fires.
ăs-latl: 1—Raised bed behind the fire used by a person seeking power, or by one who has been in contact with the supernatural.
2—Waterfall.[1] [823]
ăs·maius: To teach.
ăs·maiustamkil': Hereditary lore handed down secretly in a family. [424] Asqtmks: One of Raven's Crow sisters.
ăsqwxwa: Sisaok song in slow time. [533]
ăstakan: 1—Box, archaic; hence, seat.
2—One of the nights of a potlatch, probably that on which a representation of the deceased appears.
ăstas: Rocky Mountain jay. [825] ăsuxwatl: Carved house post.
Ăstsalnexkl: Wife of Swaks; both were changed to stone in the beginning of time.
ăsutcăxunk: That part of a house between fire and doorway.
Aswinwinaiuts: Expedition of the supernatural being Winwina against berries and fish.
Ăs·ganam: Smaoan's fish-dam in the beginning of time; the name has since been used by his descendants, ăsgmsăxta: Only sister in a family of several brothers. [601]
ăsg": Seals. [825]
ăsxwaltom: Steeping in medicinal smoke as a curative measure.
ăltaqwlp: Fir. [755] Ăltat·iaistl: Evil male supernatural being.
ă·lma: 1—Death, not anthropomorphized. [824]
2—Dead.
ălmăk": Kingfisher. [825]
ălsi: Fish-hook.
Ălskam, "They of the Huge Jaws": Supernatural beings resident in the land above. [227] ătskmas: Kusiut spy.
ătsqtutl: plural, ănătsqtutl; vocative plural, ănătsqtaotl:
1—Person who has not given a potlatch, a commoner.
2—Ancestral name of a Kimsquit woman.
Ăltlk: ustămy village.
Ăpă: Stuux man mentioned in an ancient story.
ăpa·hendjut, "He Urinates Over Himself." The implication is that this is an indication of misfortune, hence the word really means omen. It is the Kimsquit variant of ă·xendjut. [787] ă·xendjut: Omen of death.
Ăpat·l, "Occupied Mound": 1—Village at Kwatna.
2—Artificial mound at Tăl·ia.
3—Village on the Kimsquit River.
4—Island near Ocean Falls.
Ăpat·l nas Wawalsuks, "Place of Dogs": Locality near Ocean Falls where the dogs came to earth in the beginning of time.
ăpuxon·l: Varied thrush. [825]

[1]The latter is a favourite place for obtaining power, the probable reason for the identity of the two terms.

*192 Äxyätl: Locality near Stuax where berries are plentiful.
A'yooḷ: Chief living at Tälʼio in the beginning of time.

A

am'kl·a: One of the a'alk dances.
ans: I, first person singular.
[262] 'art: Herring eggs when brought into house ready for preparation as food.[1] bähnk': Supernatural animal.

B

Bälak[w]: One of the first women sent down west of Kwatna in the beginning of time.
bä·pka: To guess, as done by the uninitiated at a Mystery dance.
Bäxbäxqwaiwa or Bäxbäxqwanälociwa: Kwakiutl supernatural being.
[825] bilikt': Lamprey.
Bilkwt: Kusiut name of a Sätlia man.
bixän·i: Abalone-shell.
Bixwakaks: Influential Kwatna woman who died about 1870.
[292] biḷotl: Ball-topped hat worn by chiefs.
[622] Blo·qwas: A Kimsquit composer.
Bo'ostom: Stuax man mentioned in an ancient story.
boḷs: Supernatural, man-like creature.

D

[821] [772] dä sonx[w]'dä or sonx[w]: The sky, regarded as the lower side of a land inhabited by supernatural beings.
Dakdak·älaix: 1—"The Comer," synonym for Noäkymm.
2—The kusiut prerogative of seeing Noäkymm.
Dakdakän, "The Ever-Comer": Synonym for Noäkymm.
Dakdakänmem: Supernatural being who awaits Noäkymm.
Dakdakänus: Supernatural dog salmon resident in the land above.
[601] di kwiamsts di emts: Niece's husband.
di kwiamsts tci sisksom: Aunt's husband.
Diqom'notl: One of the first men to settle at Äiqälaxi in the beginning of time.
drtia: Archaic term for kusiut Breaker.[2] [824] dxdik: Frayed cedar-wood, as used for tinder.
[372] djatsluksi, plural, djaldjaloksm: Son; term used in direct address for an adult.
[601] Djishp: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Dji Sisnäxitl, "The Slave Owner": Designation of the supernatural woman Kämai·ts.
[101] Djoldäuux: Collective term applied to the Kwakiutl-speaking peoples of the mainland.
Djusdju·sa: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Dodosonx[w]: Chief of abalone-shell people on the lower Fraser in the beginning of time.
Dudusonx[w]: One of the first men to settle at Stuax in the beginning of time.
Duduspux: One of the first women to settle at Tälʼio in the beginning of time.

[1]This word was recorded from a man with the individual usage of an r sound.
[2]This word was recorded from a man with the individual usage of an r sound.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

E

eaxsa or eaxsāl·i: Medicine; generic term for all remedies of a magical or medicinal nature. [278]
e·m: Coitus, term in common usage.
emts: Nephew or niece. [601]

ē

ēlmāls: Ancestral name of a Snuile·tl man.
'ēnlālān·a: Daughter of the first settlers at Green Bay in the beginning of time.
ēnlātlaikila: Moon, semi-anthropomorphized.

H

hai·shkila: 1—Bella Bella term, commonly used in Bella Coola, for sisaok official 2—Kusiut name of a Bella Coola man.
haidāl: Type of sea-going canoe used by the Haida; the word may be a corruption from English.
Hai·k·kela: Man who descended to the upper Bella Coola in the beginning of time.
Hān·o: One of the first women to settle at Schooner Pass in the beginning of time.
hoohoo: Mythical, supernatural bird. [825]
Hamcu: 1—One of the first men to settle at Nuxwlst in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Qwiyai in the beginning of time.
hōli: Penis.
hoip: Call used by members of the kāsiut society to strengthen their fellow-members.

I

ikw': Pounded cedar-bark, undyed. [824]
ilaix: Zigzag course up or down a mountain slope.
Ilaixāl: Twalaklit's dog.
Ililmai·s: One of the first women sent down west of Kwatna in the beginning of time.
ildustas dia sxim: Bandage of undyed cedar-bark placed around an infant's head to produce cranial deformation. [856] ildutsam, Bandages: Term applied to presents distributed as validation for the bitings of a self-Cannibal. [431]
ilk: One of the fritillariae.
imaltundjutqulsan: Abbreviated rite of Nēakymm dance.
imānts: Nest.
I'mātsilak: Sisaok name of a Kimsquit man.
Imimāhnaix, "The Moorer": Male supernatural child who fastens Nēakymm's craft.
ipāmp; "Hold Him Down": Cry used in Cannibal dances.
ipāsellai, "Accept": Said to spring salmon during the ritual connected with the first taking of these fish. [226] ipkusatmm: Alleged singing of a sisaok initiate's song by the supernatural being, Mātlakila.
ipo'le·sman: Reduction of the value of an investment-present by immediate return of part of it. [426]
i·pīs: Moss. [824] isnahusāmhdim: Polyandry.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*192 istutsmap, "Come and eat": Invitation to the kukusiut to assemble in a performer's house.

isulta: House beams.

isut·sta: Messenger bearing invitation to a potlatch.

[752] itcliktsa: Massage.

[585] itskalemsk: 1—Presents, regarded as clothing, etc., given by the groom's relatives to the bride's kinsmen when the latter visit his house on the wedding day.

[431] 2—Other presents given by the husband's relatives to the wife's kinsmen prior to her repurchase.

[583] ilxwaudjut, "The Throwing Off of a Heavy Burden from the Shoulders": Said of the repayment by a wife's relatives of presents received from her husband's kinsmen.

itxwolhsta: 1—Battering-ram.
2—The destruction of the house of a chief who is about to give a potlatch.

Ixulqotlam: One of the names of the supreme god.

[201] iqdhmastom: Notification, by pressure on the foot, to a chief to go to the meeting-place.

[533] inlxanm: The employment of frenzied stick-beating.

Ixpk·mm: Hot Springs on South Bentinck Arm.

ixstrokpamas, "The Hearing": Synonym for alastam, q.v.; this is a Kimsquit term only.

i·gtimut: Kusiutem rite in which the performer appears to be burnt to death.

i·gwatmam: The casting of kusiut masks on the fire.

Iguank, "Far from the River": Village on the upper Kimsquit River.

[847] ixwotl: Abortion.

i·xwsila, "Disappointed": said of the supernatural beings called by a ul·á dancer who arrive too late for the potlatch.

ulhas: Slave from the lower Fraser owned in Kimsquit during the last century.

[101] ulqulanmy: Bella Coola term for the Bella Bella.

ulqulsholostmax: Half-brother or half-sister.

●[601] umlk: 1—Man.
2—Son; term used by old person in direct address to adult.
3—Husband.

[614] umlkasta: Male relative of same ancestral family.

umlkiwa: Woman who performs man's work.

[601] umlkpasta: Single brother in a family with several sisters.

[431] ummlki, plural, ummlhekti: Small boy, especially son; term used in indirect address.

[584] ulalik, "Working Clothes": Presents given by the relatives of the future bride to the kinsmen of the future bridegroom at the first announcement of the engagement. The implication is that they will have to labour industriously to obtain the wealth necessary for the marriage.

[821] uminawul: Cold wind of the mornings, semi-anthropomorphized.

usaity: Bella Bella term for the usamy.

[563] usamy: Bella Coola term for the people of mixed Bella Bella-Kimsquit stock who inhabited the shores of Dean Channel.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

kätsän: Tail. 192*
katskitl: Ants. [825]
kax: Black hawthorn. [824]
Kalän·i: Kusiut name of a Kimsquit man.
Kamilkän: Ancestral name of the wife of Swaky who was changed to stone in the beginning of time.
kanki: Region.
Kapsälopst: Kitlobe chief living in the beginning of time.
kasälx: 1—Marriage, properly arranged and legalized. [585]
2—The actual wedding day.
Kaxwlän·i: Kusiut name of a Kimsquit woman.[1] kolai: Bark bucket for holding liquids. [415] kolämkodjut: The seeking of assistance from a man who owns a curing repository.
kolämkusnäm: Investment-present, i.e., one for which a return is expected. [426] kolusta: Back-room in which tsaok initiates and others are concealed.
kolän: Woman during catamenia. [431] kolelta, "What Was Sent Down": Intangible possession, such as a myth or a prerogative, inherited from the distant past, usually from the coming to earth of the first settlers in the beginning of time. [424] komapsta: Wooden tongs such as are used for lifting hot stones. [412] kolsämkdjot ola kwanqsta: Kusiotem rite in which the performer appears to be drowned.
kel·aix or kel·äil, "The Gainer": One who has been initiated as a member of the kusiut society but has not yet danced, especially one admitted through unauthorized knowledge or through successful participation in either a kusiotem or a Mystery dance. [575] kelels, "Rendered Incapable of Returning": Said of an uninitiated person who is alleged to have stumbled on a repository.
Keldcap: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
kestcao: The dormant waiting for power by a shaman who, having had one visitation, awaits further manifestations before displaying his ability. [756]
kiqa, vocative, kiqaas: Grandmother. [601]
kiks·tsam·um·i: Ceremonial marriage of a female child to an adult man.
Ki'laielast: Name given to their canoe by the first settlers at Stuix in the beginning of time.
Kilalxamuxus, "The Wise One": One of Raven's names as chief.
Kimilkän: One of the first women to settle at Alqalxi in the beginning of time.
Kina'o·: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
kinaxu: 1—Crab. [825]
2—Enormous crab-like creature, alleged to be found far in the forest. [824] Kipäks: Name of a shaman who received his power from ghosts.
kipl: Red elderberry. [413]
kipla: Wooden tweezers used in the pounding of cedar-bark. [252] kis: Unidentified plant.
kisäm: To toast dried salmon.
kisiamsotla: Supported, in the sense of held in place by physical assistance.
Kislqmal: Locality on Dean Channel, west of Suxwlk.
Kit·ea: Place on south side of North Bentinck Arm, about one-quarter mile from its head.

[1]This name appears to be an entirely different word from Kalän·i.

Kitlmnitamem: The chasm that keeps a foolish man from success as a chief; the concept is semi-anthropomorphized.
kitsân: First catamenial discharge.
Kldr·t: ustimx village.
kłxta: Supernatural creature dwelling in the ocean.
[756] Kłyekâmut: Shaman who received power from ghosts.
Kumsłxwałxtsta: Bella Coola hunter.
Kimgkwt, "Canyon": Bella Bella designation for the Dean River, whence the anglicized Kimsquit has been derived.
Kundust: Nass River.
Kmłknł: Kimsquit man mentioned in an ancient story.
[825] łnts: 1—Whale.
2—Ancestral name of a Tał·is woman; this is said to be an exclusively feminine designation.
Kłak"âmot: 1—Name acquired by a Bella Bella man in the beginning of time.
2—Influential Qomqo·ts chief, who died about 1910.
[825] k'łax"': Muskrat.
kłp: White fir (?).
[824] łmân·i: Herring.
łmxdjut: Prerogative of biting oneself.
łnum: Dried salmon.
łnumdjut: Synonym for âhnkła: one of the days of a potlatch, probably that following the appearance of masked representations of the deceased. The word is derived from łnum.
[825] kokolikm: Porpoise.
Kokoikm: Supernatural being who behaves in an erratic manner.
[845] ko'la: Twin whose birth is attributed to salmon.
[824] Ko'laiânts: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
koluloxo: Unidentified berry (strawberry?).
Kolxeta: Supernatural female shaman who guided W'inwina.
Kol·iaiyuhmg: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola Cannibal. kolku"âmg, "Earthy Ones": Ghosts.
koluhmg: Land, region, earth.
[533] kolulo·s: First part of song.
Kotnk': Treeless mountain about forty miles up the Bella Coola valley.
[825] Kpapstustusailaix, "The One Who Makes Us Fat": Supernatural name of cohoe salmon.
[765] kpustmm: Goods distributed to validate songs used at a mourning ceremony when no representation of the deceased has been employed.
[578] kqosnâm: Insult offered to foreigners at potlatches concerning their manners or food.
[609] krâmkusaix or krâmkusnâm: Synonym for kstâmkusnâm, investment-present.[1] [426] Ksmasmmâmut: Woman mentioned in an ancient story.
kukpi, vocative, kukpai: Grandfather.
[601] kukusiutsk: Kusiut ceremonial at which foreigners are present.
łukn: The construction of salmon-weirs.

[1] This was the pronunciation of the word by the individual with an idiosyncratic r sound.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*792

Łułułimut: Kusiut name of a Nuxalkt man.
Łułul'nimut: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola man.
[824] łuqal: Inner bark of cedar.
łutàlemsk, "A Stripping Off": The giving, on demand, by a marriage dancer of his clothing to a herald.
'Łuxuaqsàlaix: Supernatural name of Raven.
[828] łxwaix, "Frenzied": Term applied to Cannibals and other destructive łukusiut when in a state of madness.
łyuum: Occasional exclusion of all but the singers from a house where a shaman is performing.
Łxwumxwumłaix: Kimsquit man mentioned in an ancient story.
Łxwuntnum: Kusiut name, probably of Kwakiutl origin.

M

Ma'cilsa: Female dancer mentioned in a Raven story.
Màłàsiut: Kusiut name of a Łemqo·ts man.
[601] mama, vocativ, mamas: Mother, term used by children.
Mamaiyu: Celebrated Xusais hunter.
[825] mam·aiyu: Butterfly.
mam·atka: Measuring worm.
[824] mam·a: Fly, insect.
ma'manka: Swamp gooseberry.
[601] man: 1—Father, common term in indirect address.
2—Occasional designation for the supreme deity.
mandimut: Stepfather.
[614] manmanuks: Elderly male relatives of same ancestral family.
Masonq'': 1—One of the first men to settle at Nuhlax in the beginning of time.
2—Form of the name Dudusonq'' when used by a male child.
Masonq''an·a: Form of the name Dudusonq'' when used by a female child.
Maslebàliuuk: One of the supernatural Carpenters.
Mallaperuuk: One of the supernatural Carpenters.
[804] ma·łqi: Measure of distance equal to the breadth of one thumb plus one finger.
[825] mà·tsq': Toad.
màtsqus: Supernatural giant toad.
malsa: Salmon eggs.
ma·uaqe: Old male sea-lion.
[825] ma·ustakka: Water ousel.
Maqunts: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
[601] Mazzilian, "Long Neck": One of the supernatural names of Great Blue Heron.
mazzai·s: Co-husband in a polyandrous household.
[824] ma'zual·i: One of the parsleys.
mequal: Berry, black in colour.
Mezmazàlema: Generic term for the four supernatural Carpenters.
mezmikelp: Spruce.
Miał'sila: One of the first men to settle at Sàtla in the beginning of time.
Miskuma: Land of salmon.
[224] Mł'ab: Mountain in the upper Bella Coola valley.
mł·a: Stick carried by hunters when penetrating into the mountains.
[824] mlla'': Red bearberry.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

mimiskulp: Leaf of salalberry.
mis-madjat: 1—Omen of misfortune, such as preceded the outbreak of smallpox, hence, [824]
2—Smallpox. [787]
mitka: Type of sea-going canoe with raised prow and small stern.
mna, mnatin, mnaa: Child. [601] Mnaksis: Supreme god when addressed in prayer.
mnt': Excreta.
mnmnt, mnatin, mnmnatin-i: Ancestral family, practically equivalent to children when used by an old person. [614]
mnskhnmnsts: The commemoration of a chief's potlatches and other major ceremonies by means of plain posts erected near his grave. [211]
Mnslato-snm, Tide-Measurer: A supernatural being. [764] Mnsles: Man mentioned in a song.
Mslskila: Supernatural being who gives potency to nsnsk rites.
mslstsn: Grandiloquent expression used by the kukusiut with reference to the way in which supernatural beings govern the length of human lives. [776]*
mslshosm: 1—The condition of being within range of speech and vision. The term is used to describe relations formerly existing between the dead and the living. [775]
2—To visit, term used with reference to the coming of a masked representation of a dead person; the significance is similar to that expressed in the first meaning.
mst': Pounded, dyed cedar-bark used to decorate ceremonial objects.
mstunks: Head-ring of cedar-bark worn by kusiut initiates in the upper Bella Coola valley.
mspk: Lice. [825]
mspnila: Adolescent youth.
msnmsnk': Blue grouse.
msnmsnkhtnds: Dentalium-shell ear-rings worn by adolescent girls during seclusion. [301]
mu: Hand net for catching olachen. [227]
mukstmbkstn: Yellow cedar stave decorated with swan feathers such as is carried by a Mystery dancer.
mustsmn: Wrestling.
Mstsw-a: Rivers Inlet man living in the last century.

N

Nsin'ktwn: One of the first men to settle at Smith Inlet in the beginning of time.
Ns'mu: Bella Bella village; the Anglicized form is Namu.
nsw: Grizzly bear. [825]
Nsntstlis: Name received from Grizzly Bear by a Kimsquit man in the beginning of time.
Nsntsk: Kusiut name of a Nsqhslt man.
Nsntshni: One of the first men to settle at Stuxs in the beginning of time.
Nsnshtsnik: One of the names of Mount Nsqhslt as chief.
nsw-lmnt: Non-ceremonial weeping, usually individual, and always with real feeling. [827]
Nsss: Indeterminate locality in the distant east. [152]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

numan, tuxatiw, numastas: Member of same sex and same ancestral family as speaker. [601]

Numéiam: Supernatural being who comes with Nułkynm to bring a call to the latter's protégé. [614]

Numolkmut: One of the names of Great Blue Heron as chief.

numit: 1—A passage, especially the digestive tract. [826]
2—Laudatory adjective applied to chiefs, referring to goods distributed.

numomukts: Toilet-hole.

nunlutnum: Recompense, virtually pay, given to carpenters and other craftsmen at a mourning ceremony. [465] nunsilmmum: Exchange marriage. [583] nunpkhitnum: Passenger.

Nu-mis: Place near Nulkwa.

Nunzmółsis: Kuxiut name created by xyuyuyut at Kimsquit in the beginning of time.

nunnusi di mínas: Half-brother or sister with different mother from speaker. [601]

nunnusi ti ninas: Half-brother or sister with different father from speaker.

Nununa'as, "The Inhospitable One": Name taken by a wife in consequence of slights received from her husband's relatives.

Nunukmuxsi: One of the four supernatural eagle-like creatures.

Nunudjipum: Supernatural being who created repositories in the beginning of time.

Nunulunuk: One of the four supernatural eagle-like creatures.

Nunulpxum: House occupied by the first settlers at Nutsymsit in the beginning of time.

nunu-l'ximut: The use of potent medicines after seeing a giant toad.

nunulwuitnum or nunulwuitimut: 1—The giving of hemlock-bark and dyed cedar-bark to Thinxpilitz-a. [782]
2—The making of offerings to ghosts by the casting of food on a fire. [775]

Nununa-uk: One of the four supernatural eagle-like creatures.

Nunuuisikhimut: Male supernatural being who travels with Nułkynm, takes charge of the singers who also accompany him, and sometimes dances happily.

Nunuxka: Mother Nature.

nunyp: Fisherman with inherited right to use of a salmon-weir or of a place for catching eulachon. [424]

nunqumumulp, "A Calling Back", or "A Seizing": Term applied to the death of a chief in the belief that it is due to the supernatural artisans having come down to carry him off. The word is often added to their designation. [226] [761]

Nunqimuis, "Where Water Entered": House of one of the first groups of settlers at Kimsquit in the beginning of time.

Nunqmulsis: Kuxiut name of a Bella Coola man.

Nunqmhhlsipu-a: Professional name of a female dancer.

Nunqsistmum: Supernatural being; this is probably a synonym for one of the Carpenters.

Nunuhmut: Kuxiut name of a Bella Coola man.

Nunumunk: One of the four supernatural eagle-like creatures.

Nunuxumulsk: Kimsquit hunter mentioned in an ancient story.

Nunuthumum, "The One that Penetrates to the Head of the Rivers": Supernatural name of sockeye salmon. [825]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

omitsalaix: Goods obtained by a man's own exertions and forming the nucleus of his wealth for a potlatch. [556] omitsuts, plural, ãomitsuts: Kusiut patron.

O'miat: Kimsquit man mentioned in an ancient story.

O'miaku: One of the first women to settle at Sisaa in the beginning of time.

O'miatmai: Son of Raven in the beginning of time.

Omqumhikka: 1—One of the nine supernatural siblings.
2—One of the first men to settle at Sisikiul in the beginning of time.
3—One of the first men to settle on the Kimsquit River in the beginning of time.
4—Tsimsit woman who died about 1915.

'Omlum: Lattimy village.

Omqt: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola kusiutem dancer.

Onikul: 1—Ancestral name of a Snuladi man.
2—Celebrated Kimsquit hunter.

'onikmal: Any non-sacred rite, especially an o'alk dance held subsequent to the kusiut season.

Oniomakua: Kusiut name of a Kimsquit kusiutem dancer.

Onqmak: Man mentioned in an ancient story.

onostiptamm: The taking of food to another tribe for ceremonious bestowal.

Onstcioma: Supernatural being who sleeps perpetually, literally, "The Sleepy One."

Ojmikmy: 1—Village in the middle Bella Coola valley.
2—Celebrated Bella Coola warrior.

o'gol: Skunk cabbage. [824]

Ojalikts: Supernatural being, herald of Ãipustiw.

ojjit: The steeping of nasat novices in smoke, this being the final rite of initiation.

Ojmai: 1—One of the first men to settle at Nusqulz in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Sisikiul in the beginning of time.

ojla: Temporary fish-dam of interlocked branches. [226]

Ojmw-i: Small mountain on south side of the Bella Coola valley behind Qmqwtu.

O-ojui-: Place near Sisaa.

'Ojmilkkamm: One of the first men to settle at Qwiyai in the beginning of time.

ojmlamt': The leading across of a bride to a groom during a wedding. [585] ombulam: Hereditary tendency.

ombulu: One made sick by salmon, especially a woman who suffers from this cause through disregard of adolescence taboos. [827]

oipaa: Variety of dog salmon found at Bella Bella. [784]

o-omstiphumsix: Conferring of ancestral names at a potlatch. [825] ondemmsix: The performance of a kusiut dance with supernatural dog salmon as patron.

Oosqlqamq, "Treeless Place": Village in the lower Bella Coola valley.

oqulim: Distribution of strips of mountain goat skin at marriage. [585] ostmuiks: "Where are you going?"

Ostulliq', "Lake-Swallower": A mythical monster.

ownulliaix: First night of a potlatch.

ulsit: Third oldest brother or sister. [601]

Ulsqaa: Name of Mink as chief.

O-lhit ã Sinhamq: One of the names of the supreme god.

Ulsum: Celebrated Wuyal-a warrior.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

ałkłm: Omen of death, generic term.
ałłm: One of the berries, probably raspberry. [787]
ałmł, ałmłm, ałmm: Mother, term used by child.
Ałmałłm: Celebrated Carrier chief. [824]
Ałmm: 1—Village on west bank of the Nechacowmay, about three-quarters of a mile from the sea. [601]
2—Mountain behind the village.
Ąmąpamłm: ąm'łłs name of a Kwanąsit man.
ąmmłmłs, mmłłm, ąmmmłłm: 1—Term used for spring salmon during the ritual following the first taking of the fish. [825]
2—Term used by mmąq to human beings, who are like salmon to them.
3—Salmon, in the language of supernatural beings.
ąmmłm, "Bear Fastenings," i.e., something binding: The function of the "Bad Counting" and other preparations given with a wife which bind her to her husband. [198] [515]
ąm łłs: Unidentified species of duck. [431]
Ąmmłmłs: Kwakiutl term for "The Weaver," a female supernatural being. [825] Ąmmłm: Kwakiutl name of a Ełmo man.
Ąp ąmmł: mmq chief living soon after the beginning of time.
Ąpął'łł: Herald who came with the first settlers to the Dean River in the beginning of time.
Ąpłm: Carrier pronunciation of Tmąłm, one of the first men to settle on the upper Dean in the beginning of time.
ąłłmm: Kwakiutl with ability to produce a puppet-person, cf. mmąyamm.
ąmłłm: Sweat-bath. [315]
Ąłłmm: Raven mentioned in an ancient story.
ąmy': Star-fish. [825]
ąm: Rabbit.
ął ą: Salmon-berry. [824]
Ąmłmmłs: One of the first men to settle at Schooner Pass in the beginning of time.
ąłmmm: Unidentified plant. [825]
ąmłm: Black cod.
ąm, "A Wiping of the Feet upon the Ground of Chiefs": Term applied to a deadly insult offered to persons of importance. [578]
ąmm: Wooden scoop. [914]
Ąmłłłs: 1—Village on east side of South Bentinck Arm.
2—Island off Rivers Inlet.
3—Island.
Ąmą mmłłs: One of the names of Raven as chief.
Ąłł: 1—One of the first men to settle at Ełłłłł in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Ełmo in the beginning of time. ąłłm: Unidentified migratory bird, black in colour. [825] Ąłłłłł: Seventh River, near Bella Bella.
ął'mm: One of the ełłł dances.
Łłłm, "Heal": Ełmo respiratory instrument from part of a supernatural creature. [578]
*łłłłł

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

APPENDIX D

192*

[585]
[491]
[195]

[778]

[825]

[595]

[601]

[825]

[412]

[825]

[601]

[825]

[415]

[211]

[illegible]: Term applied to the presents given as such to the party of a bridegroom when they enter the bride's house on a wedding day.

[illegible], "A Sticking of the Fingers": Rhetorical allusion to presents regarded as "Dues."

[illegible]: To receive souvenir.

[illegible], "The One Who Revolves Sparrow to Give Strength": One of Pitlopillow's names and hence a designation given to shamans.

[illegible]: Place of petrified power near Kwatna.

[illegible]: Village on the Skeena River.

[illegible]: Supernatural creature resembling a diminutive human being.

[illegible]: Salmon Inn.

[illegible]: Co-wife in a polygynous household.

[illegible], [illegible], [illegible]: Wife's brother, or sister's husband, man speaking.

[illegible]: Gathering of the supernatural beings for the performance of dances in the land above.

[illegible]: Unidentified salt water fish, said to be called "Lord-fish" by white men.

[illegible] of [illegible], "The Universe of Light": One of Raven's names as chief.

[illegible]: 1—The ability of a chief to sit down ceremonially in virtue of the goods distributed for his seat, the ground over which he walks, and other requirements.

2—The initial establishment of a youth as chief.

[illegible]: Stone axe.

[illegible]: Period of engagement.

[illegible]: Ranger to man.

[illegible]: 1—One of Raven's names as chief.

2—Kwakiutl name of a Bella Coola man.

[illegible]: Slave man mentioned in an ancient story.

[illegible]: Shaman's name of a Slave woman.

[illegible], "Beginning": Name of a copper when cast into fire.

[illegible]: Unidentified (and probably mythical) type of lizard, allegedly about four feet long, found near Dean Channel.

[illegible], [illegible], [illegible], [illegible], [illegible]: Elder brother or sister.

[illegible]: Name, in the Bella Bella language, given to a wooden woman made by one of the first settlers in the beginning of time.

[illegible]: God.

[illegible], "Elder": Term of respectful address to Porcupine on assize of all animals.

[illegible], "The Moved": Name given to their house by one of the first groups of settlers at Tsi'is in the beginning of time.

[illegible]: Term from which the Anglicized "Kwatna" is derived. Generic name for the villages at Kwatna Harbour, Burke Channel.

[illegible]: Chief living on the upper Tsimsi in the beginning of time.

[illegible]: Large box used for boiling chicken.

[illegible]: Village south-west of the head of South Bentinck Arm.

[illegible]: Place on Schooner Pass.

[illegible]: Secret name of a Bella Coola man.

[illegible]: Marks made to commemorate an event, such as carvings on chiefs' sitting-place, virtually a memorial.

[illegible]: Figure representing crest.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[192]
[773]
[777] [825]
[601]
[825]
[431]
[825]
[589]
[154]
[581]
[195]

ʼsuʼtsuʼtu: 1—Tally post, one of the supernatural elements possessed by all human beings.
2—Invisible supernatural element which constantly moves before the face.
ʼsuʼtsuʼtu; sutsitu, ʼsuʼtsutsu, (rarely, ʼsuʼtsuʼtsu): Crest.
ʼsuqa: Raven.
ʼsuse: Big old male mountain goat.
ʼsuscila: ʼSuqa-ti man living in the last century.
ʼsuqʼtlaklu: Celebrated Kwakiutl chief.
ʼsuqqwiu-sumun: Name of a shaman who received his power from Raven.
ʼsusumu: One of the first men to settle at Ituna in the beginning of time.
ʼsusumun: Fourth oldest, or youngest, brother or sister.
ʼsuʼtsuʼtu: Stellar's jay.
ʼsuskut: Kitamaat women.
ʼsusu: Women's pubic hair.
ʼsusu: Sea-lion cub.
ʼsutu: Those who are present and receive gifts when an announcement of a marriage is first made.
ʼsutu: Kwakiut name of a Bella Coola man.
ʼsutu-ʼsun: A revelation, such as the sight of a supernatural being or object usually concealed.
ʼsutlu: Yearling seal.
ʼsutsup: Word used in inviting to a marriage announcement.
ʼsutsun: Kitamaat man mentioned in an ancient story.
ʼsutsunsun: Kwakiutl supernatural being, said to be identical with ʼsqawtsu.
ʼsutsitsiʼ: Nootka name of a Kitamaat man.
ʼsutyu: Bella Bella village west of Nemo.
ʼsuu: Hot Springs on Labouchere Channel.
ʼsuʼtsiya: Professional female marriage dancer who came down to Kitamaat in the beginning of time.
ʼsuʼtsutsu: One of the nine supernatural siblings.
ʼsuʼtuti, "Place of Harbage": Village in the upper Bella Coola valley.
ʼsuwu: Inspiration, in the sense of the source of a kwaiut dancer's power of thought.
ʼsuwulk: Village-site of Kwatna, settled in the beginning of time.
ʼsuwlaqʼtsu: Actual goods used for the repurchase of a wife.
ʼsuyuwilitsu: Ancestral name of a Kitamaat chief.
ʼsuʼtsi: Cradle.
ʼsuʼtsiʼ: Kwakiut name of a Bella Coola woman.
ʼsuwa: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
ʼsulu: The noble and rightful sentiments engendered in both families by an elaborate marriage, either real or fictitious. The word embodies the concepts of financial interdependence and of consequent mutual strength.
ʼsuulim: The transference of activities to a new sphere; the term is used, characteristically, when referring to the death of a skilled craftsman.

S

sala: 1—Shakman.
2—Kitamaat man mentioned in an ancient story.
Salmon-sam: Kwakiut name of a Bella Coola man.
sal-sin ʼsulu: The constant blinking of the eyes.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Saiad: Thunder, anthropomorphized. 192*
Saiyuts: Kusiut name of a Kimsquit man. [821] sakhal: Historical account; the term does not include ancestral myths or other personal property. [173]
sa-thikhamm: 1—Food distributed by the donor of a kusiut dance; the term is also applied to presents given instead of food. [431] 2—Food stored up for this purpose, or even for a meal.
sa-thote: Cannibalistic insulton. [25] sa-thumm: Presents given as "Food" by a bridegroom and his relatives to the bride's kinsmen when the latter come to his house on the wedding day. [585] sathkhalimut: Profession of kusiut executioner. [431] sathtunda: Object obtained by a shaman from a supernatural being and displayed by him. [463]
saual: Sockeye salmon. [825]
Sauilpamulsh: Sipanow: One of the sons of the supreme god.
Sauntsumulsh: Supernatural being who has the prerogative of scratching in the land above.
Sauthkm or Sauthkmulmut: One of the names of Mount Nuqhalt as chief.
Sauxumtsum, "The Light Bringer": 1—One of Raven's names as chief.
2—Ancestral name of a Sisaa man.
3—A celebrated Bella Coola hunter and chief.
sawa; vocative, sáwi; vocative plural, sáwwa ts: Comrade, especially one engaged in an enterprise with the speaker.
sa-tha: Spoon-shaped river canoe.
Satla: Village at point between North and South Bentinck Arms.
Sat'yuuts: River flowing into the middle Bella Coola from the north.
Sa-tma: Death, anthropomorphized. [761] saula: Whetstone, archaic.
Sa-ual': 1—Kimsquit River. [412]
2—Village near the mouth of the river.
Sa-ualamp: Inhabitants of the Kimsquit River valley. [101] sauhwa'a: Raft.
Sa-shamanwi: Shaman's name acquired from Death.
sawa: Pillow. [573]
sawaijut, "Pillowsun": Kusiut ceremonial at which no call is present.
sapi, vocative, sapisam: Brother or sister younger than speaker, especially the youngest of a family. [601] Sapisam: Proper name of a youngest brother mentioned in an ancient story. [824] sasdum: Bracken.
sawanu: Tide flats. [829]
sahjhalt: Heart.
Sahsahsum: That part of Sway' which did not fall in the crash at the beginning of time.
Sawhalt: Village on Rivers Inlet.
Sawinlatta: Part of a peculiar repository.
sawumthlimut, "Like Salmon": The so-called "Winter Salmon," probably steelhead salmon, obtained by Raven in the beginning of time.
sa'nimi, "Resting Place": Limit of the sun's course. The word for December is connected with this. [805] sashwalaiw: Leader of musicians. [821]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Sinaqsal: One of the first men to settle in the Dean River valley in the beginning of time.

Sinaxinaxl: 1—"Right Hand": Name of a Stunx repository derived from a supernatural creature.
2—Kusiut name of a Bella Coola woman.

sis'mata: Intangible kusiut prerogative of imitating coitus. [424]

sisilyalaxuts: Song sung by a kusiotem dancer on recovery from apparent death. [861]

sisiim: Regular beatings given to a male child.

Siqalyam, "Time for Gathering Fern Root": Fourth moon after the summer solstice. [805]

Siqakaxtm: Rain after storm, anthropomorphized. This presumably refers to rain that comes after violent thunder. [821]

Siqalxmais di Siut, "The Gathering of the Supernatural Beings": Fifth moon after the summer solstice. [805]

siqmaldjut: Term of opprobrium applied to one who will not allow his children to perform ceremonial dances. [626]

siqmuk: Outright bestowal of a prerogative at marriage. [425]

siqnata: Departure to a new locality.

siul, tecatlu, siaut: Father's brother or mother's brother. [601]

siuta: Puddle.

siutata: Dangerous power such as is present at various petrified places. [501]

Siklanata: One of the names of the supreme god.

Siklling': Ancestral name of a Bella Coola woman. [778] siut, tecatlu, siaut: 1—Any supernatural being, the significance being, "Learned."

2—Supernatural power of any kind.
3—Synonym for qomo·ts, the large sisaok whistle.
4—Killer whale. [825]
5—Song.
6—Kusiut name of one of the first men to settle at Kimsquit in the beginning of time.

Siutaw·i: Part of a peculiar repository.

Siutawhila: Celebrated Bella Coola warrior.

siutaxlu: Wordless chorus. [533]

Siuul·ax, "Where Canoes Are Left": Village on the upper Kimsquit River.

Siuld: Celebrated Djaldamx chief living in the last century.

siuldiam: 1—Expedition without definite objective, made by a despondent person. [828]
2—Individual making such a journey. [484]

Siqmas·a: 1—Daughter of the supreme god.
2—Kusiut name of a Bella Coola woman.

siuxta·tmatna: Place where healing power is petrified.

Siuxlaqatmam: Synonym for Mulakila, the supernatural being connected with masked rites.

siwaiwaqs: Kusiut dance or object used in the land above which serves as pattern or model, dadauxts, for the user's protégé on earth.

siwaqkatamk: Actual goods used for the "Opening," the first public announcement of a forthcoming marriage. [584]

siwaul: Unmarried mother. [848]

siyaxlu: To perform the services of a herald to a master, especially the proper direction of all chiefly rites. The word siuxla may be connected with this.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*192
siya: Supernatural good luck.
[821] sknoás: Fog.
[825] skn': Pack-rat.
slk: Mind or mentality.
[828] sklían: Place of lucky finds, such as a point where whales drift ashore.
slxotlaltwa: Cannibal recently returned from the land above.
Sllslan·i: One of the first women to settle at Sátlia in the beginning of time.
smd: Mountain.
[825] smlk or smlkás: Salmon, generic form.
smqmnikdas: (Probably) viscera of an animal, archaic.
Smsiutaáks: One of the first women to settle at Green Bay in the beginning of time.
[173] smsma: Story, i.e., a legend which, lacking sociological significance, can be related by anyone.
Smtus: Woman mentioned in an ancient story.
[822] Smk'lusm: Bella Coola chief.
[828] Smqlominit: Darkness, anthropomorphized. smqwa: Anger.
smx: Sun.
Smxakila: 1—One of the first men to settle at Green Bay in the beginning of time.
2—Name received by one of the first settlers at Alqalaxl in the beginning of time.
Smxalotla: 1—"The Light Maker": Name of the supreme god with reference to his control of the sun.
2—Ancestral name of a Bella Coola man.
3—A'alk name of a Kimsquit man.
4—Sisook name of a Kimsquit man.
Smxan·a: 1—Daughter of the supreme god.
2—Bella Coola woman.
[827] smxki: Mucus.
Smxl, "Sunny": Village in the lower Bella Coola valley.
sqwlaiak: Game played with miniature spears.
[575] sisook: 1—Society intimately connected with chiefs.
2—Member of the society.
sisuk: Supernatural creature somewhat resembling a double-headed salmon.
Sisuxakila: Shaman's name of a Smxl woman.
sskiek': Present, invisible to all but the owner, given by Thitaplilan·a to the one favoured.
[601] sskum: Father's sister or mother's sister (in either direct or indirect address).
[583] ssmmuks: The ceremonial strength acquired by a child through the repurchase of its mother.
[431] ssqo·si: Presents given as "Food" by a bridegroom and his relatives to the bride's kinsmen when the latter come to his house on the wedding day.
[585] sspunk': Western dock (plant).
[824] sisxwawalip: Snowberry.
sxwqalisu: Distribution of carpentry tasks prior to a potlatch.
[825] sxmmsta, "Food Supply": Synonym for sel'sham, ancestral hunting-ground.
skalk': Porcupine.
[824] skal·ats: Black huckleberry.
[821] skalutslaix: Eye-lashes of the supreme god, i.e., sunbeams.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

shalk': Devil's-club.
shälnämxdits: To lament ceremonially, the term used to describe the reason for a memorial potlatch. [824] Shäml, "Ashes": Ancestral name created for a Snuhli chief about 1910. [765] shämtsk: Supernatural creature dwelling in water.
shäy: Anus.
shänm: Splinters projecting upwards from the bole of a broken tree-trunk. [824]
Shamelsymän·a: One of the first women to settle at Snuhli in the beginning of time.
Shatpts: Chief of the spring salmon.
shatsämkm: Narrow strips of goat skin with wool attached, distributed at marriage. [585]
shelists: Merganser. [825] shekwadjut, "The Opening": Ceremony when the first public presents are given to the family of a future wife, following the announcement of betrothal. [584]
shi: To cure, especially with the aid of a frenzied beating of sticks. [431] Shimutcitl: Stnux man mentioned in an ancient story.
shimp, "Cure Ye!": Call of invitation to a kusiut dance in the upper Bella Coola valley.
shiwäs: Cloud. [825]
shme: Thick hide, either of moose or caribou. [412]
shme: Semi-circular knife used by women for cutting salmon.
shmaix, shmanl, or shmdjut: 1—Frenzied beating of sticks for curing purposes, especially when the patient is a member of a secret society. [755]
2—Final kusiut rite at end of the ceremonial season.
shimim: To cure by means of the frenzied pounding of sticks.
Shml, "The Charred Portion of a Half-Consumed Log": a'alk name obtained in the beginning of time.
Shmnäul: House used by a group of first settlers near Stnux in the beginning of time.
Shmnulän·a: Daughter of the first settlers at Nusqalst in the beginning of time.
sha'tcalx: Fungus. [824]
shalsmelanta: 1—Box made of strands of cedar-bark. [415]
2—Ancient name of nsook head-dress.
shq: Ceremonial designs executed on the exterior front wall of a house.
shshk': Rose.
Shslikman·a: Kusiut name of a Kimsquit man. [825] shsl: Wasp.
Shslsmmasta: Rock on shore of North Bentinck Arm where war trophies were washed. [727]
Shymthal: Name of house brought down by first settlers at Slskiut in the beginning of time; the term was also applied by them to one of their female relatives.
shsi, sscatse, shssi: Parent-in-law or child-in-law. [601] shläq: Suitable place in the river for setting olachen nets.
shlsa: Game played with throwing stones.
shsniut: Synonym for yuxmax, the tangible or intangible prerogative possessed by some hukusiut in addition to a dance rite. [424]
shwalsia: River sculpin. [825]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[765] skwanāt: 1—Memorial potlatch.
2—Mourning song.
3—The wailing of mourners at a grave.

[763] Skwanāt·ān·ā, "The Weeper": Female supernatural being whose appearance indicates the death of a chief.

skwanātānkusaix: Professional kusiut prerogative consisting of the right to sing of Snitsmān·a during kusiotem dances.

skwatsta: Name.

Skwo·ts: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola woman.

[824] Sla·kl: Whitewater River, the southern fork of the Bella Coola.

slaos: Long grass suitable for pasturage.

[252] slāqk'i: Smoked spring salmon with the bone removed.

slāxkt: Many, adjective.

[554] slāxmidjut, "The One with Many Descendants": Term used to describe an elderly man with many children and grandchildren.

Sla·: Man mentioned in an ancient story.

[601] sleli: Game, resembling a tug-of-war, played with wooden loops and spears.

slemts, vocative, slemtsakais: Grandchild; the vocative indicates endearment.

[578] slexmenix: The deposition of eagle down on the heads of those quarrelling to pacify them.

slī·s: Gall bladder.

sloptsta: 1—Breathing.
2—Sound of a nsaok whistle, referred to as the breathing of Mislakila.

sluk': Olachen grease.

Sluxlekwailx: 1—Ancient village in the upper Bella Coola valley.
2—Place of petrified power at site of ancient village.

[778] 3—Semi-anthropomorphized being responsible for power in this locality.

Slihm: Supernatural being resident at the mouth of every river.

slkumsta: The voice.

[824] slkumi: Dried elderberries.

slukwala: 1—Shaman-like power, as brought by the first people in the beginning of time.
2—Bella Coola woman.

[821] sluqum: Eclipse.

slwosamlikw': 1—One who keeps in touch with a concealed Cannibal.

[424] 2—One who has the inherited right to assist kusiut or nsaok dancers; this prerogative occurs in Kimsquit only.

Smaiaikila: One of the names of the supreme god.

Smaialotla: One of the names of the supreme god.

Smaien·a: 1—Synonym for Slexlekwailx, q.v.
2—Ancestral name of a Bella Coola woman.

[424] smaiusta: A possession, such as a myth or a prerogative, inherited from the distant past, usually from the coming to earth of the first people in the beginning of time.

smāmāisnuelp: Debris from cones eaten by squirrels.

Smaoan, "The First": One of the first men to settle on the Kimsquit River in the beginning of time.

Smaoarek: Man mentioned in an origin myth of a southern locality.

smāi·amy, vocative, smāi·amy: Friends.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[824] sqedilp: Cedar roots.
sqeil: Sling.
[578] sqeilqathm: To use a sling.
sqili: Term of opprobrium applied to a woman, signifying slave ancestry.
[821] sqimauas: Fleecy cloud.
sqiolz: Muzzle-like power which binds the mouth of a Cannibal against ordinary food.
[412] sqma: Wooden comb.
S'qs't: Land of Ashes, alternative term for Sqaml.
sqo: Umbilical hernia.
[601] sqolxnas: Distant relative of female sex, when referred to by man.
sqolkisdjat: Long phallus.
Sqomell: Village in the lower Bella Coola valley.
sqosa: Unconsumed portion of share of food carried away by guests from a meal.
sqosalx: Food distributed for carrying away as sqosa.
[415] sqols: Large, flat, soft basket of broad strips of bark.
sqpmeax: Presents given by guests to the donor of a memorial potlatch.
[431] sqsefp: Maple.
[824] squm: Sudden start that expels the spirit.
squpaitl: Outer plank of cedar, convex and bark-covered on one side.
squal: Love song or other non-ceremonial composition.
squalem: Fern, probably one of the genus Aspidium.
[533] squalxwalam: 1—Theme of a song dealing with current events, especially allusions to the faults of someone present.
2—Singers who use this type of composition.
[825] squal-ähn: Large, unidentified bird.
[374] Squläkua: Heat: A supernatural being.
Squli: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola man.
[825] sqwo'nn: Loon.
stai-tl: Mountain goat marrow, a food which is said to have remarkable powers of preventing hunger.
[262] Stalqalosum, "The Increase of the Sun's Heat through the Addition of Fire Sticks": A'alk name obtained in the beginning of time.
stälhmg; plural, stätälhmg; vocative plural, stätälhämg:
1—Chief.
2—One of the first men to settle at Äläläxl in the beginning of time.
3—One of the first men to settle at Sinxl in the beginning of time.
4—Name created by Smaaas for a grandson.
5—Sisook name of a Kimsquit man.
[601] stan: Mother, term commonly used by an adult in indirect address.
[825] ständabilam: Bat.
ständimut: Step-mother; the term is also applied to other women of the generation older than the speaker and related to him by marriage.
[601] stanänamts: Elderly female relatives of the same ancestral family as the speaker.
[614] steelt: Whetstone.
Steets: Man mentioned in a story.
[412] Step': Mountain near Tälio.
stajam, "What Is Hidden": The correct solution of the Mystery dance.
stämmts: Archaic term for chiefs, now used only rhetorically.
[824] skls: Cranberry.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

 192*

sxqalikw': Goods collected by the relatives of a man when working on his commission as carpenter or other artisan in preparation for a potlatch.
Sxē·tsxem: A short-legged person who tries to cross a river; name of a string figure.
sxuq": That part of a house on either side of the central fire.
Sxitoma: 1—Sleep, a supernatural being. [513]
2—Sleep, intangible kusiut prerogative.
sxiusnăm: Presents given to the one who leads a bride to her husband during a wedding. [585] Sxqwastlustkwi, "Dark-Shade": A supernatural being. [431] sx-pil: Shadow.
sxsqwmas: Hammer, archaic. [412]
sxhao: Brother-in-law or sister-in-law.
shiatmalks: Shaman's stick with power of life at one end and death at the other. [601] sxiha: Bloody grease that rises to the surface of the water when a seal is cooked.
sxip: That on which a chief sits, that is, his ceremonial prestige gained by the distribution of much wealth. [283]
shlks: 1—Caribou hide. [825]
2—Thong made of caribou hide.
shxem: Chequer-work cedar-bark matting. [285] sxuxdr: Caribou.
shms: Love charm consisting of hair of the one desired mixed with other ingredients. [832] Sihmsila: Supernatural being who causes nightmares. [828] sihmstā or sihmstănălos: Mortals, in contradistinction to supernatural beings.
sihmstaliktsta: Body.
sihmstănălosăm: Assumption of human characteristics by mankind in the beginning of time.
Sikwarwakimăn-a: Professional name of a female berry-picker.
Sikwarwakanam: Professional female berry-picker. [825] siska: Mountain goat grease. [824] siskalaya: Castor.
Siskiui, "What Has Been Divided": Village in the lower Bella Coola valley.
Slskls: Son of the first settlers at Green Bay in the beginning of time.
slmăs: Octopus. [825]
Slsoaklas: One of Raven's female Crow relatives.
slsqwasma: Red rock paint. [386]
slsla: Singer's baton. slsulk: Text.
sllio-pass: Part of a river where there are rapids and projecting stones. [823]
stulu: 1—Memorial-post, decorated with crest, erected near grave. [211]
2—Plain posts erected near grave to indicate major ceremonies performed by the deceased. [764] Stuax: 1—Village in the upper Bella Coola valley.
2—Famous hunter mentioned in an ancient story. [262] stutum: Dried dog salmon soaked in water.
sutusalks: Masked representation of a dead person in crest form.
Sly', "Rainwater-Dripping-through-the-Roof": A supernatural being.
sukwhl: Black raspberry. [824] sulow: Ocean.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Sqnqnesāxs: Supernatural children guarded by the hermaphrodite in the land above.
Sqsutl: Name taken by a Stuax man in the beginning of time.
sxtsugmutl: Place in stream or river where a salmon has just jumped.
sxwanāt·a: Name created upon earth. [825] sxwapānitl: Deer.
sxwat: Water-tight receptacle made from the internal organs of a mountain goat. [415] Sxwokmqnam, "What Sweeps Away the Food": First moon after the winter solstice. [805] sywomaqs, "Tears": Preliminary presents given to guests at a memorial potlatch. [431] sxw'ilāmkis, "Short-lived": Rhetorical term used with reference to the death of a young chief. [195] syerwi: An adolescent girl, not yet subject to the full taboos of womanhood.

T

labālst: Cave.
lai: 1—Son, in direct address. As a courtesy title this is often used for lads unrelated to the speaker. [601]
2—Masculine suffix.
Taiakwala: 1—One of the first men to settle at Schooner Pass in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Snuile·tl in the beginning of time.
taiāmtmak: Desertion of husband by his wife. [586] lain: Dorsal fin of a fish. [825] taitaimq: Heavy kind of copper. [628]
taitamax: Tournament between rival villages. [101]
Tal·io: 1—Village at head of South Bentinck Arm.
2—Generic name applied to all villages on South Bentinck Arm.
Tāliokān·a: Nuxqual name embodied in a Snuhsli origin myth.
Tāmtāmslo·psta, "The Breather": One of Tlitcāplilān·a's names and hence a designation given to shamans.
Tamukua: Stuax man mentioned in an ancient story.
tāpānamtmm: The issuing abroad of invitations to a memorial potlatch. [824] lāqax: Forest consisting of dense underbrush between big trees.
lāqul: Blood-stained cedar-bark pad.
tā·s: 1—Bird arrow.
2—Weapon, invisible to mortals, with which a wolf kills its prey.
Tāsā; vocative, Tāsao: 1—Designation of supreme god used in prayer. [601]
2—Father, term used by child. [824]
lālkānalp: Water-lily.
Ta·qa·xl: Land inhabited by the Kwakiutl.
Tānkwam: Leading chief of Alqālul and reputed founder of the village.
Taqqlexam: Bella Coola chief living in the last century.
lakax: Type of sea-going canoe with bow and stern identical. [825] tamkwl·i: 1—White-fronted goose. [601]
2—Type of sea-going canoe named from the bird.
lamst: Husband (di tulamstslai: My husband).
tamra': River.
Tamrmathis: Chief who came to Cape Mudge in the beginning of time and later moved to Bella Coola.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*192

Taqwalaisla: Bella Bella chief mentioned in a semi-historical account.

[825] Taxakl: Northern tribe, possibly Haida.

łęli: Dog salmon.

Tsiałlimę, "Whose Feet Are Shortened": Village on shore of North Bentinck Arm west and north of the Necleetsconnay River.

tsęnęn·i: Owl.

[601] tcai: 1—Daughter, in direct address. As a courtesy title this is often used for girls unrelated to the speaker.
2—Feminine suffix.

Tcakwaaks: 1—One of the names of Mount Nusęlst as chief.
2—Man who descended to Mount Nusęlst in the beginning of time.

Tcakwak: Supernatural name of bald eagle.

tcakwalotl: 1—Type of expansible house brought down from above by several of the first settlers in the beginning of time.
2—One of the names of the supreme god's house.

[825] tcakwliwa: White slug with black and red face.

[824] tcałtcałuksum: Pleasure walk.

tcałt^w: Cedar-bark.

[411] tcā·n: Sealing spear.

[825] tcan: Snake.

Tcaqoleks': Mountain near the Dean River.

Tcaqos: One of the first men to settle on the upper Dean River in the beginning of time.

[824] tcatstaolp: Red cedar tree.

Tcawat: Locality on mainland opposite the north end of Vancouver Island, probably Knight Inlet.

tcaxwanāt·aia: Unidentified grape-like tuber.

Tcalkwap: Man mentioned in an ancient story.

[342] tciba: Underground house with entrance and flue combined.

Tciba: Bella Coola sorcerer living in the last century.

Tciknutl: One of the first men to settle at Alqalāxl in the beginning of time.

[825] tciman·i: Large clam-shell.

Tcimlaix: Sisaok name of a Sinxl man.

Tcimtliax: Lad mentioned in an ancient story.

tcipsx: Fisher.

[601] Tcitomdęlaię, "The Sleep Giver": Name of a female shaman.

tci ęnes di emis: Nephew's wife, term of indirect address.

tci ęnes di sisi: Uncle's wife, term of indirect address.

Tcixwotl: Man mentioned in an ancient story of the upper Bella Coola valley.

Tcłusa: Celebrated Kitkatla chief living in the last century.

Tcał'laiyu, "He of the Penis": Nickname given to a lad mentioned in an ancient story.

tcmilk: Valley.

Tcmotl, "Where the River Covers the Stones": Village in the lower Bella Coola valley.

Tcmęuk: Locality on Fitzhugh Sound.

[824] Tcnisi: Mountain in the Carrier country.

tcukurwtelp: Unidentified hollow-stemmed plant.

Tcukurwtelpa·ts, "Where There Is Much tcukurwtelp": Village in the lower Bella Coola valley.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

Wat·as: Xixais woman living in the beginning of time.
wals: Dog. [825]
wawnic: Dog, archaic.
wa·xsia: Cape of yellow cedar-bark. [291]
waxwaxtsia: Brother or sister of grandparent.
Wiakai: One of the first women to settle at Snuloli in the beginning of time. [601]
Wiaqaii: 1—One of the first men to settle at Tāl·io in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Stuax in the beginning of time.
Wikwan·ukwla: Synonym for Kwla: Influential Kwakiutl woman captured in the beginning of time by a Nuxalst chief.
Wikwanuil: Kimsquit hunter mentioned in an ancient story.
wina, vocative, winas: War-party.
Winās: Slave living at Nuxalst several generations ago.
winās di qak, "War-Party of the Ocean," or winās di sā·ldjo·is, "War-Party of the Tides": Supernatural being.
Winwina: Supernatural being who captured birds and fish for the benefit of mankind.
Winwinamak: Supernatural being, perhaps identified with one of the warm winds.
winxts: Assistance rendered by the inhabitants of a town to a neighbouring settlement being attacked. [628]
Wipitpawakis: Bella Bella chief living in the beginning of time. [726] Wisamkilak: Smooan's daughter-in-law in the beginning of time.
Wi'tālas: Ancestral name of a Kimsquit man.
Wilnlks: Sisook name of a Kimsquit man.
Wixat: Man who travelled to the Skeena River in the beginning of time.
Wixon: One of the first men to settle at Schooner Pass in the beginning of time.
wl·a: Kusiut dance in which the nine supernatural siblings are summoned to earth.
Wlq: One of the first women to settle at Schooner Pass in the beginning of time.
Wlx: One of Raven's female Crow relatives.
wlq: Cripple.

X

Xaiāqalil: Ancestral name of a Tāl·io man.
Xaiqts: Stream entering the Bella Coola from the north near Nuilrax. [821] Xai·ull: Continuous North Wind, anthropomorphized.
xak'loi·: Cry raised as each of the first spring salmon is brought ashore. [226] Xālaiya: Step-daughter of Raven in the beginning of time.
xaqānts: Great blue heron.
Xāt: Designation of a tribe, probably a branch of the Carriers, dwelling far to the south-east of the Bella Coola. [825] xāraf: Canada goose.
ya·a: Root of qāymāts, an unidentified plant.
Xebalus: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola Cannibal.
Xelwotsaw·a: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Xelimai: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola woman.
xem: The successive rising of the sun from day to day. This word, which is common in derivatives, appears usually to be pronounced yem after s. [821]
Xemewa: 1—One of the nine supernatural siblings.
2—One of the first men to settle on the Dean River in the beginning of time.
3—One of the first men to settle at Swaloli in the beginning of time.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*192

Xemlaix: One of the first men to settle at Qemqe·ts in the beginning of time.
Xemtmm: Kusiut name of a Slskiut man.
Xemxemālotla: 1—One of the nine supernatural siblings.
2—Ancestral name of a Bella Coola man.
Xemxemlaix: Sisaok name brought from above in the beginning of time.
Xemxemtmm: 1—Supernatural beings who request the sun to appear.
2—One of the first men to settle at Alqālxal in the beginning of time.
[533] xe·ila: Boastful type of song used by chiefs on war expeditions and at potlatches.
Xedilkas: One of the first men to settle at Qatuslas in the beginning of time.
Xelāsu: Kusiut name of a Kimsquit woman. The designation is of Bella Bella origin.
[825] 'ewe: Marten.
[412] xilz: Stone axe.
xilxl: Party of potlatch messengers and the invitation they bear.
[203] Ximpdimut: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Ximmmlaix: A'alk man mentioned in an ancient story.
Ximmmeslaix: Celebrated female shaman.
[821] gmgmds·i, plural, gmgmdsokst: Little girl.
[517] Xmgmes: 1—"Little Girls": Group of stars in the Great Bear.
2—Picnic, especially one on which fern root is gathered.
Xnxais: Bella Coola term for the Carriers living near Ootsa Lake. This is said to be their own name for themselves.
Xnximān·a, "Right Foot": Stuix repository named from part of a supernatural creature.
Xqis: Mountain in the Carrier country.
xxmānoās: Spirit, one of the supernatural elements in the human body.
xlāxtmm: Ceremony prior to a potlatch when tasks are allotted and the donor's house destroyed.
xlānl: The entrusting, before death, of a name for the benefit of a relative.
Xlikwals: Mountain in the upper Bella Coola valley.
[586] xlokw·imut: The irrevocable desertion of her husband by a wife.
Xmaxots: Locality below Nusqalst.
[825] gmgmatsl: Minnows.
[601] gmes: Woman, or wife in indirect address (kei gmesaix: My wife).
[614] gmesāxta: Female relatives of same ancestral family, term of indirect address.
gmesdām or nugmesdām: The right by which a husband uses his wife's land, though it is not his own.
[423] Xnutli: Bella Coola sorcerer living in the last century.
xokst: The forcible washing of a Cannibal.
Xolāxwosem: Name acquired by a man mentioned in an ancient story.
[785] xoldjut: Intercourse held during ceremonial chastity; the term has a sacred significance.
[831] Xomtsla: Male professional singer who came down to the Dean River in the beginning of time.
Xomxemqa: Ancestral name of a Stuix man. The designation is said to have come from Smith Inlet.
Xmgustm: Supernatural scoop-net fisherman, servant of the supreme god.
Xqostls: Bella Coola man mentioned in an ancient story.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

594 be made more powerful by magical means or the ritual acts of 869 relatives. Although these often entail great labour and expense, parents seldom neglect their duty; in fact, care for their children is one of the strongest Bella Coola characteristics, though the methods used are so foreign to the white man that he has difficulty in realizing their meaning. The hope of both [847] parents is to have children to carry on their names; infanticide is unknown and the death of an infant is mourned almost as [586] much as that of an adult. Sterility and impotency are frequent causes for divorce.

163 At the present time there is a high birth-rate in Bella [165] Coola, although the heavy infant mortality prevents any appreciable increase in the population. In the old days, it is said, there were always large families, though much confidence cannot be placed in this statement. In families where there are 593 several children, the first-born, whether boy or girl, assumes an important position. His or her influence, as eldest, is naturally considerable, and the parents foster this through the vague feeling that it is proper for the eldest to be the most important in the family. In adult years, and after marriage, the influence of the eldest of a family continues to have considerable weight with younger brothers and sisters.

592 If a man is poor he cannot hope to have more than one wife, 556 and his family circle will be limited to their children, and per-
[595] haps to elderly parents. On the other hand, a wealthy and powerful man usually has a larger family. Not only may he have several wives, but his aged relatives, and those of his wife,
[602] look to him for support and assistance. Such are usually welcome to live in his house; they lend what aid they can in collecting food, and it gratifies a man's pride and sense of power to be closely surrounded by a large family. The Bella
[888] Coola are, on the whole, considerate to their aged relatives.[10]

[10]This is not true of the present. During the winter of 1923-4 a feeble old man, [178] living alone, was often in actual want of food. Disliked and degraded, of a mean disposition himself, none of his surviving relatives, of whom the nearest were nephews, would take him into their houses. Commenting on this man's fate, several informants pointed out how, in the old days, such a one could have found

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The married sons of a chief usually live in his house, and if he is very powerful the husbands of his daughters may also reside with him. Such a man is at the zenith of power, surrounded by a close group, formed of elderly relatives, of children and grandchildren. Connections by marriage are also added to the family group. At the present time, for example, one Bella Coola man is looking after his brother's widow, and it is felt that she is a member of his family. 592 556 622 602

Another way in which a rich man can increase the size of his family is by adoption. Parents who have lost an infant may adopt the child of some member of the ancestral family of either father or mother. The matter is usually arranged soon after birth, and the transfer takes place immediately after weaning. The real parents are willing since they know that the adopting parents will be able to validate valuable prerogatives and names for the child, which they themselves are unable to do. This desire for their child's welfare overrules parental love. In such cases the real father or mother can likewise bestow names and other prerogatives on the child, who really becomes a member of two families. This is often done by an old couple whose own children have married and moved away, and who thus find themselves lonely. It is considered disgraceful for parents to allow their children to be adopted by anyone not a member of their ancestral family, since that would be an admission of inability to bring up a child in the path of his ancestors. 556 597 614 [888]

"Your father was not strong," could be said to such a child as a reproach.

In the case of an orphan some wealthy relative is almost always ready to adopt him. Consequently, as he grows up, he receives his full share of the ancestral origin myth, and the names embodied therein, so that the loss of his own parents is of little consequence in the course of life. Occasionally a child is not adopted by relatives, and then his fate is indeed hard. 736 597

shelter in the house of any chief, and shared in the food which was being distributed at the almost continuous ceremonial feasts. Now, each family lives alone and so one feels any responsibility for this old man. [178]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

as far as incest rules are concerned. In this particular instance 597
the woman did not show any interest in her new relatives, failed to visit them, or to take part in their ceremonies, so that the adoption, though still legal, has practically lapsed. When [428]
this man dies his children will not consider the claims of their father's "sister" to inherit any of his possessions, as they would have done if she had showed herself appreciative of her adoption.

It will thus be seen that the size and composition of the 592 family vary according to the wealth and influence of the father. The duties of the members are difficult to define since they concern almost entirely the routine of life. The father, head of the family, directs the gathering of firewood, repair of the house, obtaining of food supplies, and other matters of the same sort. If he gives a potlatch his children must help him, [431] which they do willingly since they gain from the ceremony. If a father is too autocratic, his older, especially his married children, simply move away. Nor is his power over his younger [602] children unbounded, since their mother's relatives take great interest in their welfare and would resent any ill-treatment.

If a person is killed or wounded, revenge is the affair of his 593 family. Just how many individuals are involved depends on 627
the composition of the family. In the case of the killing of a 682 child, living with his parents alone, none but the father would feel it incumbent to retaliate. If an adult person is murdered, his or her brothers feel and avenge the insult. But should an important member of the community be slain, an old man surrounded by a numerous family, it is the affair of all. Every effort is made to slay the murderer, but if he should escape from the country, the injured group is satisfied by killing one of his family. Here again the same inexact composition is found. A man's son, brother, or father are the only persons [671] strictly liable, and even here the common sense of the Bella Coola outweighs their theoretical laws. A murderer's brother, living in another village, would not be held liable; but more distant relatives living with the offender and considered as his family are liable.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

differentiate between cross- and ortho-cousins, and the unsystematic groupings of nephews and nieces show "family," as opposed to classificatory, principles. Finally, rhetorical terms for the ancestral family, for many ancestors, and many descendants, correspond to the importance of a large number of relatives in Bella Coola thought. 601 [602]

In many parts of the world the classificatory system of relationship occurs where the community is divided into clans. The occurrence of some of these features among the Bella Coola raises the question of whether or not they should be regarded as survivals from an earlier clan form of social organization. The Bella Coola may once have had clans, but their relationship system does not furnish any real evidence to this effect. The reciprocal terms really have the significance, "Relation by marriage of the same generation," or "of a generation once removed," a form of address which does not require explanation in any ancient form of social organization. Moreover, the importance of the eldest child, as potential transmitter of the glories of the ancestral family, is sufficient reason for differentiating brothers and sisters in terms of their relative ages. This feature suggests that in former times this was more important than it has been in the recent past. It is not implied that the Bella Coola never had a clan system, as such may have been the case many generations ago, but their kinship terminology can be explained without that hypothesis. The somewhat wide application to cousins of terms which are properly limited to brothers and sisters may easily have been derived from a process of copying. The Bella Coola are well acquainted with the clan system of the northern coastal tribes, so that it is by no means impossible, or unlikely, that they should have adopted the principle of applying the same kinship term to many individuals, and hence to members of their own ancestral families. Finally, the somewhat vague and unsystematic application of terms to relatives according to whether or not they are members of the immediate family, is a feature not at all surprising in view of the essential fluidity of Bella

601 614 178 [561] [177] 601

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Coola say that the return of the dead "washes away grief," 556* and unquestionably it has a comforting effect on the mind of 769 the donor of the potlatch.

(3) Wealth. Unless a man has the necessary goods with 476 which to make presents he cannot invite guests, no matter how 556* important may be his ancestral myths and names. Some of 602 this wealth he may be able to amass by his own labours, but unless he is assisted by his wife's family it is virtually impossible for him to succeed. The Bella Coola believe that a man [583] cannot become a chief except through large payments made [622] by a woman's family when they "rebuy" her from her husband. In other words, no man can succeed without the support of his wife. In choosing a mate a man is guided almost entirely by [581] the ability of her family to give him financial support. In some cases an elderly couple assist a married son to give a potlatch, this custom, though considered quite proper, is not common.

(4) Supernatural assistance. To the Bella Coola this is 556* quite as important as the preceding. One man may work very 787 hard but his efforts are never crowned with success, whereas another man will prosper in every venture. This is due to the supernatural attributes given by the supreme god to the latter. By prayer, ceremonial chastity, and other means, a man may increase the powers granted to him, but if these are entirely lacking, he can never hope to rise to the position of chief.

PRELIMINARIES

In describing the potlatch, it will be convenient to refer to 556* the donor as X, and assume him to be a middle-aged member of the nsaak society, whose seat and name, though duly ratified, lack importance through his previous failure to give large presents.

For a number of years X has prospered. He has amassed quantities of skins, blankets, tools, copper ornaments, clothing, canoes, baskets, dentalium shell, slaves, and other valuables.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

855 rebuked. They grow up in the open environment of the [861] houses, absorbing more of their lore by watching and imitat-
[854] ing than by actual instruction. Their care devolves chiefly on the mother, although at any ceremony the father will be seen arriving with the baby in his arms, while his wife leads another child. Nurses are unknown and the parents take their children with them on all occasions; if it is necessary for a mother to be absent on some arduous toil, her child will be entrusted to a grandmother or other elderly relative.
606 There are no avoidances between the young people and their parents-in-law.

602 The obligation of present-giving does not stop with the 431 marriage ceremony. Whenever X gives a hasiwi dance or other ceremony, Y's relatives are expected to contribute. It is felt that the weight of the presents given them during the period of engagement and at the wedding has become too heavy, and they throw this off by lavish giving. No count is kept of the value of gifts bestowed or received, though it is known that the family of the woman loses financially in the end. The father of many daughters is regarded as an unfortunate individual, who is always poor and overworked through the necessity of [554] providing for them. By so doing, however, he increases his own prestige, and the Bella Coola have the happy sentiment that such a man manages to get along some way; perhaps necessity rouses his ambition. Likewise X's relatives contribute to any ritual carried out by Y's father. If, for example, one of his wife's relatives dies, X and his friends may wish to contribute towards the funeral expenses. In fact, any cere-
[556] monial serves as an excuse for relatives by marriage to donate goods and thus demonstrate publicly their influence, importance, and generosity.

602 The concept of mutual help between families who have 476 intermarried is one that lasts for generations. In 1922 there was in Bella Coola an old Kimsquit man who had left home some forty years earlier and had since lived in Smith Inlet where he married and had a boy. On the death of his wife, this

Lib: Dewalth E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

old man came back to Bella Coola with his son, a man about twenty-five years of age. During his absence all his relatives had died, and he was forgotten. He went to the house of a man with whom his ancestors had intermarried generations ago, explained who he was, and was welcomed. The old man and his son have since lived there, although it is doubtful if the owner of the house had ever heard of their existence, and the son cannot even speak the Bella Coola language. 602 476

X and Y themselves are not entirely overlooked in the exchange of presents between their two families. If Y's father is well pleased with his son-in-law he may show this not only publicly, which redounds to his own credit, but by the communication of secret lore such as a special number of rights for ceremonial chastity. Conversely, if Y should not be a favorite, her father-in-law often asks her father's permission to make her a member of that society. The woman's father is naturally pleased and makes no objections; so she is initiated, using a name and prerogative embodied in her husband's family. Commonly too, they give her one of their ancestral names at any convenient ceremony later than the wedding. In conformity with the rules already explained, if Y should die childless the names return to X's relatives, but if there are children they pass to them. It is said that sacred names can never be transferred in this manner. 606 494 425 [715] [575] [553] [575]

Y's father and other relatives continue to take an interest in her ceremonial welfare and in her personal comfort. If X beats or otherwise abuses her, they expostulate; and if his cruelty becomes unbearable they shelter their daughter when she runs away from her husband. If X should murder Y, she would be avenged by her family. Only one instance of this was known, when the murderer avoided his pursuers by fleeing from the country. As a rule a wife is fairly well treated, though this depends on the character of the husband, the importance of her relatives, and the amount of goods expended to validate the marriage. Among slaves and persons of no influence, it is assumed that a husband may sell his wife as a 593 [602] [627] [627] [432] [48]

556
583
578
602

A man who is giving a ceremony of any kind can offer his greatest insults to his wife's relatives than contribute to sub their assistance. The following is a good instance of such an insult:

About 1900 a man and woman were married and had three children. Then the mother died, before being repurchased from her husband. In addition, the husband had assisted his wife's father when one of his younger children had died; so that it was most fitting that the wife's relatives should contribute to any ceremony given by the husband. Four years later the husband proposed to marry once more, and to have the wedding occur at a potlatch. But on the day of ceremony, he insulted the relatives of his dead wife by failing to invite them. The cause of the feud was not disclosed, but the husband increased it by again failing to invite her family when, during the potlatch, they should have sponsored her for the benefit of his young relatives about to be initiated into the ranks of the cousil. The father of the dead woman came forward unannounced with a large pounce for such, saying in effect:

"I, too, have a right to contribute to add prestige to my daughter and her children."

In this way he defeated the wiles of his son-in-law who had hoped to shame his father-in-law by the failure of the latter to contribute to his potlatch. The son-in-law endeavoured to excuse himself by saying that his his wife's relatives had not assisted for so long that he thought they would not wish to do so. This cause further increased the father of the dead woman so that next day he and his wife publicly gave the dance of the potlatch KMS "to make clear where we sit."

This somewhat lengthy description has been necessary to explain the important part which the repurchase of wives plays in the lives of the Bella Coola; it is one of the fundamentals of society and is, therefore, worthy of attention.

DISSOLUTION OF MARRIAGE

968
[592]

Either death or divorce can terminate marriage. The decease of a wife is an unfortunate affair, quite apart from the grief which it may cause her husband. Two families have been brought into peculiarly close relations through her, and now the bond itself has snapped; delicate financial arrangements have been undertaken, and it is not easy to settle these without dishonor, particularly if the alliance was a return marriage. If no child has been born, and no repurchasing of the wife

1:McDevitt E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

this rite is neglected no more salmon will come to the river. No precautions are necessary after the food has been digested. 764 [125]

Many men prepare their coffins before death. If this has not been done, a large, wooden box is provided by a kinsman of the deceased. The body is dressed in good clothing and bound into a squatting position, head between knees, hands clasped around shins, and the haunches just above the level of the soles of the feet. In this posture it is thrust into the coffin. Particularly if the corpse has been brought from some distance and rigor mortis has set in, it may be necessary to break the back-bone and even to crush the skull before the box can be closed. A stone is placed on the back of the neck, within the coffin, to prevent the ghost from returning to haunt the survivors. A little choice food is placed beside the body of a dearly loved child for nourishment during the journey to the next world. 763 [402] [775]

From this point onwards, the funeral rites differ according to the rank of the deceased. On the death of an influential xaxal, the senior members of that society meet as soon as possible to arrange the dramatization of the coming of Mulelela. A xaxal son, brother, or other near relative is always present even if he has little importance in the affairs of the society. If the death has taken place during the night, the conference is held the following morning and the rites begin at noon. There may be delay until all have gathered, but about the middle of the first possible day two xaxal are seen up one of the mountains behind the village. They carry large, cone-shaped whistles which they blow twice. The sound is plainly audible in the village and all, whether or not members of the xaxal society, recognize that a supernatural being is drawing near. After a short interval, another whistle is blown by a xaxal concealed on the roof of the house in which the corpse is lying, and after another pause the same sound comes from within, beside the body itself. Most of the uninitiated know that this is the voice of Mulelela (also called Sisiutlpawaxa), 375 766 [776]

177 771 [181] fathers. Inherited beliefs are too deep-rooted to pass away entirely within a few generations. Even those who claim to have adopted the new faith remain convinced of the potency of magic, and of the existence of those supernatural creatures which do not actively conflict with the white man's creed. Such lack of consistency is a world-wide trait, particularly intelligible among the Bella Coola whose philosophy abounds in contradictions, dependent upon statements handed down in the origin myths of different families.

626 [181] [622] The Bella Coola are constrained not only by the omnipresence of supernatural beings; they are constantly subjected to the influence of their fellows. They are far less individualistic than white people. A chief may boast that he can do as he pleases, that he can disregard the restrictions of lesser men; he often does so, but only because public opinion recognizes that he has reached a position of eminence by giving many potlatches. The duly validated warrior is brave because he feels that everyone is aware of his valour. The man who performs some ceremony in accordance with an ancestral myth [703] [76] incorporates himself with his forbears, and is strengthened by the conviction that he has gained their support and approbation. In every phase of life, a person is profoundly affected by the approval or disapproval of his neighbours. At present 177 626 342 the construction of small houses, each occupied by a single family, makes it possible for a man to hide himself, or to do work unknown to the rest of the community. This lessens the force of public opinion, although it is even now more potent than conscience in checking anti-social acts. Formerly, in communal houses, every action was fully known, making individual freedom of thought and act virtually impossible. A man [602] is chiefly influenced by his relatives who take a great share in what the white man would consider purely family affairs. The effect of the group upon the individual must not be overlooked, nor can it be over-stressed in a study of these people.

177 626 182 561 The education and conversion of the younger men have enormously lessened their reliance upon their fellows. In former

McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[577] [124] edly until complete confidence was established, simplifying work in the field to an enormous extent. Equal trust could be placed on these men in other respects; articles of value were repeatedly left in their houses with the absolute certainty that they would be guarded with care. Some few individuals there were, however, who were neither honest nor trustworthy. [177] [62] Bella Coola religion is not concerned with ethics, but public opinion demands honour in dealing with relatives or friends. [577] [42] [602] [177] In former times, for example, debts incurred by an individual were considered a liability by his relations. If a man died after having goods on credit for a potlatch, his family were disgraced if they failed to pay his bills; now, unfortunately, nothing constrains the younger people, many of whom try to avoid settling even their own debts, much less those of dead relatives. Individual conscience has not replaced the tribal and, more specifically, family influence. [648] [177] Dishonesty in small matters is not uncommon, particularly in dealing with white people who, according to the Bella Coola, were the first to transgress. The older people bitterly lament the lack of morality of the younger and state, probably with entire justification, that they would have been prevented by the open life which prevailed when several families shared a single house. On the whole, however, the average Bella Coola is probably no less honest than the average white man.

[153] [124] Individuals vary enormously in mental ability. In making the investigation, it was necessary to interview all the older people of the tribe. Disregarding those unwilling to provide information, it was found that some absolutely lacked the ability to explain matters with which they were familiar; some did not have sufficient patience to be good teachers; some were so forgetful that they would omit necessary points in a story or account; some were downright stupid, whereas others displayed mental ability of no mean order. In reading ethnological literature, one is apt to think of the troubles experienced by the author, and to overlook the fact that natives have as

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

105 of their omnipresence; the guiding force of public opinion is 182 seen as a check on individual licence, fostered or inculcated by [626] the ties which hold together ancestral families and make it impossible for a man to lead an isolated life where others will not be affected by his actions. If the white man is willing to receive new ideas, he will learn much from the comments of the Bella Coola on his own customs. Many have been to [556] Victoria or Vancouver, and they feel that the contrasts of wealth observable in such big cities are atrocious; they ask how this is compatible with Christianity. They feel that it is [602] unnatural for a man not to receive support from his cousins of [356] all degrees; that the hoarding of wealth for the mere gratification of personal desires is selfish; that the selling of land is extraordinary; and that failure to ascribe every incident to supernatural causes is sacrilegious. These differences of viewpoint on so many matters explain the first impression of strangeness. A careful investigator comes to realize that he is among a people who fundamentally differ but slightly from his compatriots, though outwardly they have little in common. With respect to love, ambition, parental affection, sense of honour, pride, intelligence, even humour and vanity, the Bella Coola are essentially similar to ourselves. Unfortunately, these characteristics are expressed in ways unintelligible and often repellant to the casual traveller. If he will only look beneath the surface, he will find a people who are neither saints nor sinners, but essentially human, with the faults and follies as well as the elements of strength and wisdom which comprise, as Kipling puts it, "Men in a world of men."

177 The coming of the white civilization has been cataclysmic
[161] to the Bella Coola. Within two generations they have been [36] reduced to a mere handful; instead of living in scattered villages, roaming the mountains for game and fishing at will, they now dwell in a single settlement and the taking of animals and fish is subject to law; the introduction of metal tools and mechanical appliances has revolutionized their mode of life; new foods, new clothing, new furniture has altered their living conditions; fermented drink has presented a factor unknown

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

of the father or the mother. In June, 1922, a Bella Coola girl had reached the age of about six months without having received a name. There was much adverse criticism about the parsimony of her father's father and her mother's father, who were held equally to blame, but who had really been deterred by fear of the law prohibiting the potlatch. 612 614 553

As a child grows older he is helped in the performance of ceremonial rites by his parents and by their brothers and sisters. In this, too, it is considered a mark of poverty if only the parents take part. If a man's own children do not appear likely to carry on the traditions of his ancestral family, he has no hesitation in favouring the children of either a brother or sister, since, like his own, they are all members of the same ancestral family. Especially in Kimsquit[11] it is customary for a man to help his sisters' children; not that there is any lack of knowledge of the real father, but rather as a mark of respect and family feeling displayed by a man to his sister. Moreover, in both Bella Coola proper and in Kimsquit, it is most improper for a name which a man has raised to a position of dignity by the expenditure of much goods to be passed to his own son; it should go to a distant relative. When a father validates a name for his child it should be one long dormant. 593 604 852 [558] [614] [553]

One aspect of the manner in which the family merges imperceptibly into the ancestral family can be seen in the inheritance of names. When a man calls his relatives together to make his will he is guided in the choice of recipients by the characteristics of his children. An able son receives much from his father, but lazy children are slighted without hesitation. This is particularly true of names with which are bound up valuable dance prerogatives, whereas, as previously mentioned, ancestral names of which the importance depends 593 614 428 553

[11]According to an intelligent Bella Coola informant, a Bella Bella pays greater attention to the children of his brothers and sisters than to his own offspring, and the same man expressed the opinion that the Kimsquit practice was due to Bella Bella influence. Kimsquit informants denied this, though emphasizing the important part taken by an uncle in obtaining prerogatives for his sisters' children, in some cases to the detriment of his own, which is rare in Bella Coola. [184] [177]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

bear on the wall of his house, or an ancestral name. The speaker always recounts the whole myth before announcing which portion of it is transmitted to X as a prerogative. It is understood that this transference will be duly validated by presents to X when he gives his potlatch. Such are termed dzämänumtnum and signify the repurchase of a wife from her husband. Though this is known to be a fiction it has extreme social importance. Unless dzämänumtnum is paid there is an ineradicable blot upon the children; in fact, it is one of the essentials of a legal marriage. All prerogatives thus transferred on xläxtnum become the property of X and will in time pass to his children, unless recalled to the wife's family by further repurchase (dzämänumtnum) money or goods. In this fashion elements of family myths become scattered, and one of the considerations in choosing a wife is to select a woman able to bring back some missing part of the husband's myth. 556* 425 583 [581]

The usual present is an ancestral name, which X henceforth uses as potlatches as his most distinguished title, though the myth in which it is incorporated does not belong to him. As long as the name remains in X's family those who originally owned it are unable to make use of it. Such a name is said to be "dragged across" by the wife to her husband, the immense weight or importance of the designation being compared with the dragging of a heavy log. Occasionally, the father of a married woman, animated by the kindliest feelings towards his son-in-law, may give him outright a myth with all the names embodied therein. This can happen only where there are no other survivors of the family. In such a case when the myth is recounted it must always be mentioned how it has been obtained. The number and type of the prerogatives transferred depend upon the sentiments with which his wife's family regard X. If, in addition to being a worthy man, he is member of their ancestral family, or of one with which his wife's has frequently intermarried, so that in course of generations prerogatives have intermingled, there is less objection to giving him such rights than if he were an unrelated individual. [553] [551] 556* 425 606 553

553
* 556 A man may receive so many prerogatives with regard to house 425 painting that he has to continue the designs on the sides of his dwelling, or he may receive so many figures for a totem-pole [606] that he can erect one of composite pattern. X may acquire [532] prerogatives not only from his father-in-law, but from his mother-in-law, and if he is the husband of several wives, the family of each may contribute something. If, for some inexplicable reason, X is not given any prerogative from the family of his wife, he uses one of his own ancestral myths with the names belonging thereto. A man who gives many potlatches can choose to validate numerous family names for himself, or to concentrate on one alone, elevating it to a position of great importance. But any names he validates must belong to his [685] family; it is contrary to custom for a Bella Coola to steal a name to which he has no right.

*556 At this, or some other suitable time, X prays for assistance 782 in the complicated rites that are to follow. Taking four pieces of pounded and dyed cedar-bark, and four pieces of undyed bark, he places on each a small quantity of food and throws the eight into the fire. Likewise he may throw in four small pieces of any kind of goods. As he does so he appeals to the supreme god:

"Please strengthen my spirit for the many duties which are before me."

Instead of praying himself, X may ask a shaman to do so [756] for him, in the belief that the latter's supplication will be more efficacious.

* 556 The necessity for supernatural assistance lies in the fact
688 that any serious error or disaster in the performance of potlatch 628 rites calls for summary punishment, since X has allowed ceremonial susook knowledge to reach the uninitiated. In such a case the duty of meting out a penalty falls upon the members of a foreign tribe. Nothing is said at the time, but the departing guests take away with them information of what has happened. Great latitude is allowed as to who shall be the chastisers. The guests may be related to X and the members

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

211 example, there is a description of his totem-pole with a ball
*556 at the top, and beneath it an eagle's nest containing two fledg-
778 lings towards which a grizzly bear is endeavouring to climb.
532 This is the only known instance of a pole on which the different figures stand in definite relationship to one another. No explanation is offered beyond the statement that this was the form used by Ālkwi in the beginning of time. Another ancient [773] pole, used by one of the ancestral families of Sinxl, consists of a simple shaft surmounted by a sphere; this represents a mountain which enters into their ancestral myth as supporting the sky.

As with all features embodied in ancestral myths, a chief can use his own discretion in cases where he has a choice of [431] design. A totem-pole with specific figures is a common pre-[622] sent from a chief to his son-in-law, and it is a mark of respect
[606] for the latter to use and validate this at the first opportunity, in preference to one belonging to his own ancestral family. Since the pole erected at a potlatch may have no association with the ancestral name and myth of the donor, the underlying principle in all cases is that the value of the pole depends upon the quantity of gifts distributed to validate its erection. One man mentioned an instance in which he had become confused with regard to the proper design for the totem-pole connected with his ancestral myth, and had used one belonging to a second myth in association with a name from the first. Both were his property, the transaction was duly validated, and the matter passed off without question. It is possible that the [183] decay of custom which has followed the coming of the white man may have been partly responsible for this error, which was regarded as a somewhat stupid, though not improper mistake; yet it is clear that even when designs are remembered as portions of ancestral myths, they can be alienated from them and validated as isolated objects in the same manner as names and all other features of ancestral myths.

More often, the exact details of a pole are not included in the ancestral myth and a chief wishing to have one erected can

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

855 rebuked. They grow up in the open environment of the
[861] houses, absorbing more of their lore by watching and imitat-[854] ing than by actual instruction. Their care devolves chiefly on the mother, although at any ceremony the father will be seen arriving with the baby in his arms, while his wife leads another child. Nurses are unknown and the parents take their children with them on all occasions; if it is necessary for a mother to be absent on some arduous toil, her child will be entrusted to a grandmother or other elderly relative. There are no avoidances between the young people and their ●606 parents-in-law.

602 The obligation of present-giving does not stop with the 431 marriage ceremony. Whenever X gives a kusiut dance or other ceremony, Y's relatives are expected to contribute. It is felt that the weight of the presents given them during the period of engagement and at the wedding has become too heavy, and they throw this off by lavish giving. No count is kept of the value of gifts bestowed or received, though it is known that the family of the woman loses financially in the end. The father of many daughters is regarded as an unfortunate individual, who is always poor and overworked through the necessity of
[554] providing for them. By so doing, however, he increases his own prestige, and the Bella Coola have the happy sentiment that such a man manages to get along some way; perhaps necessity rouses his ambition. Likewise X's relatives contribute to any ritual carried out by Y's father. If, for example, one of his wife's relatives dies, X and his friends may wish to contribute towards the funeral expenses. In fact, any cere-
[556] monial serves as an excuse for relatives by marriage to donate goods and thus demonstrate publicly their influence, importance, and generosity.

602 The concept of mutual help between families who have 476 intermarried is one that lasts for generations. In 1922 there was in Bella Coola an old Kimsquit man who had left home some forty years earlier and had since lived in Smith Inlet where he married and had a boy. On the death of his wife, this

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

old man came back to Bella Coola with his son, a man about twenty-five years of age. During his absence all his relatives had died, and he was forgotten. He went to the house of a man with whom his ancestors had intermarried generations ago, explained who he was, and was welcomed. The old man and his son have since lived there, although it is doubtful if the owner of the house had ever heard of their existence, and the son cannot even speak the Bella Coola language. 602 476

X and Y themselves are not entirely overlooked in the exchange of presents between their two families. If Y's father is well pleased with his son-in-law he may show this not only publicly, which redounds to his own credit, but by the communication of secret lore such as a special number of nights for ceremonial chastity. Conversely, if Y should not be a kusiut, her father-in-law often asks her father's permission to make her a member of that society. The woman's father is naturally pleased and makes no objections; so she is initiated, using a name and prerogative embodied in her husband's family. Commonly too, they give her one of their ancestral names at any convenient ceremony later than the wedding. In conformity with the rules already explained, if Y should die childless the names return to X's relatives, but if there are children they pass to them. It is said that nusuk names can never be transferred in this manner. 606 431 425 [785] [575] [553] [575]

Y's father and other relatives continue to take an interest in her ceremonial welfare and in her personal comfort. If X beats or otherwise abuses her, they expostulate; and if his cruelty becomes unbearable they shelter their daughter when she runs away from her husband. If X should murder Y, she would be revenged by her family. Only one instance of this was known, when the murderer avoided his pursuers by fleeing from the country. As a rule a wife is fairly well treated, though this depends on the character of the husband, the importance of her relatives, and the amount of goods expended to validate the marriage. Among slaves and persons of no influence, it is assumed that a husband may sell his wife as a 593 [602] [627] [567] [432] [48]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

556 prerogatives he is transmitting, Y's father usually takes the 583 opportunity of stating that he wishes to hunt on X's hunting-[425] grounds, or fish in his fishing-grounds. Permission is never refused, though it is only for the period of the potlatch. Since Y's father is to assist X, it is considered fitting to grant him facilities for obtaining pelts and food.

It is on the afternoon of the second day of the potlatch that the goods are delivered. They serve six purposes, which can be described separately, although the Bella Coola usually think of them as being too closely associated for division.

(1) They increase the dignity, influence, and prestige of the donors. This theme needs no further elaboration. When X later gives these presents to his foreign guests, he announces the person from whom he has received them and in this way knowledge of the manner in which Y's relatives have upheld the dignity of the marriage is spread far and wide, to their intense gratification.

(2) They help X to rise to a position of influence in the community by the credit which comes to him from their later distribution. Though a man may acquire goods in various ways, the Bella Coola affirm that without contributions from his wife's relatives no man can become a chief.

(3) They validate the transmission of names or other prerogatives, taken by Y to her husband. Even presents given [406] directly from father-in-law to son-in-law are always said to have been taken by the daughter to her husband.

(4) Indirectly, they increase the prestige of the children, [534] either born at that time or who may appear later. None of the goods used for repurchasing their mother can actually be used for their benefit, but the whole rite gives them strength to succeed in life. A child whose mother has not been repurchased is said to be unable to walk, as if his legs were powerless; he lacks intelligence, and the ability to prosper. From the [576] petty quarrels of childhood until old age, a person is proud to recall the number of times his mother was bought, and to thrust this statement in the teeth of those unfortunate.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

551 with respect to their appearance or actions on this earth. As [553] far as could be learnt, the procedure of bestowal is identical with that just described. The following examples illustrate designations of this type:

Ānābsullānāmlaix, "The Resident Maker." In the begin-[773] ning of time the wife of Ṭaiakwala had twins so often that the village rapidly increased in population. Accordingly she took this name for herself when she rebought herself from her husband. It was transmitted for generations in the ancestral family of Ṭaiakwala's descendants until lent about one hundred years ago. The recipients claimed it as their own and passed it to a certain Omqomkilika, recently deceased, who gave it to her brother's daughter at the time of her marriage. Since this woman's husband has not yet given a potlatch the name is accordingly in a degraded condition at the present time (1923).

551 Olliyaiya, "I Am the Worthless One." The mother-in-law
578 of this woman had been in the habit of insulting her daughter-606 in-law by saying, even when strangers were present:

"We have a worthless daughter-in-law."

On rebuying herself the woman advertised the rudeness of her husband's mother by throwing her words back in her teeth.

Nalalulaki, "I Am the One Whose Eyes Are Hungry." The mother-in-law of this woman used to eat without offering food to her son's wife.

Nakakuixodjāx, "The One Whose Haunches Are Dusty." Her mother-in-law did not give her a place to sit in the house so that she was forced to stay close to the fire in the ashes.

Kwilāxlaix, "The One Who Sits Where There Is No Space." Her mother-in-law objected to this woman sitting near her husband when he took his ceremonial seat, and insulted her with the above remark.

551 Nuxaasa'as, "The Stingy One." It was said that this 578 woman restrained her husband's generosity until he gained an unpleasant reputation for parsimony. She publicly shamed

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

her husband's critics by taking this name for herself when she rebought herself from him. 551 578

Nu'aos, "The Inhospitable One." Her husband received this reputation owing to his wife's manners, so she advertised what had been said about him.

Nuphätslikän, "Heedlessly Deaf." This woman's mother-in-law claimed that she deliberately failed to hear what she was told to do, and applied the above epithet to her. The daughter-in-law confounded her by taking it as her own name. [606]

When a name of this type is assumed it is always announced when, where, and for what purpose it was first created. 553

A description has already been given of the actual ritual by which X bestows the goods acquired from the repurchase of Y, but it is necessary to enlarge on the prohibition against their use for the direct benefit of one of the children of the couple. The theory is that the goods bind the marriage contract and express in a practical and lofty form the kindly sentiments with which Y's relatives regard her husband, and the bond between the two families, hence they must be used solely for the benefit of him and his relatives. A man usually applies these goods to initiate the children of his brothers or sisters into the ranks of the nuank or kwiat. It is unthinkable for goods to be delivered without an exposition of Y's family's glories, but if this should ever take place, there would be no difficulty in applying them to the direct benefit of her children. When used, for example, to make a child of X's brother a nuank, he is a living testimony of the noble way in which Y's relatives have done that which is fitting for the family of her husband. Due to accidents in announcing and storing of presents, it sometimes happens that those obtained by the repurchasing of Y are used for the benefit of her own children. Unless this error is corrected, the child could always be shamed by having it said: 556 583 [558]

"You are a mere nobody. The goods expended in the

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

588 556 mate object. Bella Coola financiers are always seeking to arrange such undertakings; the potlatch is the culminating point, but the same principle pervades their whole life.

It is to the advantage of the intending donor of a potlatch to become the fictitious husband of as many children as possible. Accordingly he sometimes take the initial step, as is customary for the relatives of the husband in real marriage, but not in ceremonial. In such a case it is necessary for him to offer some inducement, perhaps in the form of one of the few women's names brought to earth in the beginning of time. He approaches a suitable father-in-law, suggesting that at a fictitious marriage he would be willing to give his wife a noble woman's name. If this is agreeable, the rite is carried out accordingly. The wife is in many cases a son of the person to [551] whom the proposal was made; he duly receives a woman's name, the only circumstance under which this is possible. The actual designation will probably be returned through many repurchasings, but the boy has reached an enviable position. In later years he can always silence a person with whom he is quarrelling by saying:

"I need not answer you. You cannot even approach my body, so thickly am I padded with the goods which my father used when he rebought me."

Another business transaction of a similar nature is the giving of a small infant to an old person to "hold." This appears to be uncommon, and the only instance about which information was available occurred under the following circumstances:

556 608 558

A man and a woman were married with full ceremony and the best of feelings prevailed between the two families. The wife was several times rebought until she and her relatives had fully maintained their dignity, in fact the relatives of the husband felt that they were being out-shone. Then the wife's father died. To mark their sympathy, the husband's family gave the widow one of her daughter's children to "hold." Valuable non-returnable presents were transmitted as "soft blankets" for the child. The advantages to the donors were that they had an opportunity of showing their dignity, and it would always be a mark of pride for the child to be able to boast of the way in which she had been "held." 556 608 858

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Ceremonial marriage clearly demonstrates two strong Bella Coola characteristics; namely, the desire publicly to enter into financial undertakings to demonstrate the wealth of the contracting party, and the desire to increase the prestige of children by means of this wealth expended indirectly on their behalf.

EXTRA-MARITAL RELATIONS

Although the Bella Coola do not regard marriage primarily as a means of regulating relations between the sexes, yet the connection between the two is sufficiently close to warrant description in this chapter. A man considers intercourse as one of the normal phenomena of life: by marrying he has exclusive rights to his wife, but few moral restraints deter him from anyone else to whom he can gain access without infringing the prerogatives of some other husband. Moreover, sexual intercourse is not regarded solely as a gratification of desires; it has a significance which can be described, not inaptly, as holy. As already explained, two favourite methods of obtaining success in any undertaking are by preserving lengthy continence or by observing ceremonial chastity. If a young unmarried man or widower should wish to make use of this latter means, he is compelled to have relations with a woman to whom he has no just claims. This is universally recognized, nor is there the slightest odium attached to the man. The only essential is that he neither violate another's wife, nor force a young girl against her will. 581 831 837

At the present time there is great laxity in Bella Coola, a condition which makes it difficult to judge the state of affairs in former times. Every effort was made to obtain satisfactory evidence, and the following was verified and re-verified with the older men. [128] others. This differentiated them clearly from all neighboring tribes.

A wife, properly married with full ceremony, was usually 837 839

B. Ceremonial. A member of a secret society in any of the above towns was accepted as a member in any other one. A person of another tribe, even if known to belong to a comparable society, was treated as an uninitiated person.

C. Origin and Relations. The people of Bella Coola, Talio, and Kimsquit felt themselves to be akin through acceptance of the fact that their ancestors had been created together in the beginning of time. This marked them off with great clearness from all other tribes, especially from the Carriers of the interior. This belief formed a sentimental and religious bond of great strength.

Neighboring Tribes

It is desirable to describe, briefly, the tribes with which the Bella Coola came in contact.

The Carriers

East of Bella Coola, amid the mountains of the interior, roved the Carriers. In summer they often came down to the river valley to fish or trade for salmon, and in winter they were sometimes forced by cold and starvation again to visit the Bella Coola, Bella Bella, or Rivers Inlet people. There was a good deal of intermarriage between them and the inhabitants of the upper valley, so that the wanderers were able to spend the cold months with relatives. Now the less, the Bella Coola considered these people utterly foreign in habits and beliefs, and to call a man a "Carrier" was, and still is, a deadly insult. The Carriers lacked the rich ceremonial life of the coastal peoples who, therefore, regarded them with scorn and contempt. The presence of a few of the much-despised Carriers was, however, almost necessary to the correct performance of the winter dances since they were uninitiated spectators whom it was necessary to impress and delude.

The ulki returns to the house and tells the guests that Malakhi has indeed been sent and has promised to return later on. Those who are not sound, being cowed in the belief concerning the omnipresence of supernatural beings and ignorant of the carefully concealed whistles, readily credit the tale that they have heard the voice of a deities of the land above, whose language is intelligible to the ulki. Thus is the supernatural element of the potlatch first called forth.

After a final distribution of food, the guests return to their homes.

THE [illegible] OF [illegible]

As a potlatch valuable presents are given to the foreign guests, but it is unthinkable for the donee to give to his fellow-villagers. Accordingly, if X desires to display his generosity towards them, he does so at a preliminary ceremony, when he begins the initiation, or re-initiation, into the sound society of any number of young people. After elaborate counting and re-counting of his goods, both those actually stored in his house and those promised,* X decides that he has sufficient to initiate, for example, seven neophytes. His first choice will be his own children, failing them, the sons and daughters of a brother or sister, or of his wife's relations, or, if none of these are available, those of a friend. X does not gain any pecuniary advantage from such a transaction, in fact he loses, but the prestige attached outweighs this consideration.

"Is it not the privilege of a chief to be generous?" say the Bella Coola.

The neophytes, the parents of those whom he has selected, always members of old-established families. As it is to the social advantage of a young person to be a sonth, a father usually calls X a sound name, dowered to his family, which he wishes to have conferred on his son, and how much he is willing to contribute for the purpose. In many cases, a man will

* The sale of the new sounds, whether are frequent, giving rise to heated bargaining from friends to make up the necessary amount.

[illegible]
[illegible]
Bulletin. [illegible]

Other people had come down to earth at the same time as Kisin-a, and among them a man and his wife who had landed at the mouth of Cox Bay. They had two daughters who, walking one day at the head of the bay, were surprised to find a house. They looked in and saw a woman, as usual, and laughed heartily to find her made of cotton wool. They looked over the figure and the head fell into the fire and was burnt. Then they seated themselves in the place, worked diligently at the blanket and ate a large amount of the food. Towards dusk they put the figure back in place and left themselves.

Soon Kisin-a returned. He unbarred the figure, called her a good wife, and thanked her for weaving so diligently and for having eaten so much of the food. Then he saw that the fire burnt her head, and chided her, saying that she must take better care of herself. At this the two girls who were hiding here ran laughing and showed themselves. They suggested to Kisin-a that he choose one of them for his wife. He agreed, selected the older and married her. He built a house on a hilltop where they lived and to which he called people from far and near when he gave a potlatch.

Sound Origin Myths

In already sound, many sound names are believed to have come down from above with the first Bella Coola, or to have been created by them on this earth. In such cases, the sound origin myth is the same as the personal myth. Theoretically, names of the same type can also be received through visions in which a beholder is given his new designation by some supernatural being, or taken it from the apparition. In either case, of course, it must be duly validated by the giving of presents. Only three myths were obtained which deal solely with the acquisition of a sound prerogative. We doubt this is chiefly as the neighborhood by the [illegible] sounds were [illegible] been derived from the Bella Bella.

THE CHIEF OF THE Kamik WOMEN, Tsnqamqi-ugalmat[illegible]

Almost that, a party of Kamik Indians[illegible] came the winter to Bella Coola. Early in the spring one of them broke his leg on [illegible] [illegible] to Indian Hands.

He was naturally so chosen the wife. According to the Bella Coola there are also in the Cariboo, but have adopted the use of [illegible] that he was unable to return home. A young Bella Coola woman charitably took the injured man into her house, but though she tended him with care, the injury did not heal properly, and he was crippled for life. He used to work around the house as light chores, but was unable to perform any hard work, and was virtually adopted into the family, though, belonging land to Bella Coola, he could never acquire any real status there. After remaining for more than five years the cripple became ill, and realized that he was about to die. In gratitude to the woman who had sheltered him, he asked her to use his scarlet cloak, ornamented moccasins, for one of her children, if she ever had any. Soon afterwards, the stranger died. The woman's family paid for his burial, and it was recognized that the cloak, with such scarlet, belonged to them. In later years it was duly validated with potlatch, for the benefit of her son from whom this account was obtained.

The myth is as follows:

Long, long ago, a number of the men of Alert Bay were playing on the shore of Alert Bay, not far from a village. One of them, happening to look upwards, was surprised to see falling down from a great height a canoeful of the long timbers which grow on the upper leg of an eagle. This idly wondered who would get it, and passed this together, vaguely to struggle, forcibly, for the prize, but it slipped from unprotected hands, and fell on the head of one of the boys. There, to the consternation of all, he was lifted from the ground, as if the feather had been a weapon throwing the dart. One of the friends seized the victim and tried to pull him down, but in vain; moreover, he found that he could not release his grasp. A third had grasped the foot of the would-be rescuer, but he too was lifted from the ground. One other another tried to pull down the friends, but were unable to do, until finally the last man was drawn down by the latter, each holding the legs of the one above him. Nothing was ever heard of them.

A few years later the father of the boy on whom the feather had fallen gave a potlatch, at which he used this event as a crest theme for one of his surviving children. A crest representing the sun was used to the belief that the supernatural being there would have caused such an event, and the crest appeared through intermarriage with the crest people of the Thunder Bird. That boy is still in his 50s in the north of Bella Coola, but, as no Bella Coola has ever seen them, this reliability can be placed on the statement

S/N:Swraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

body became eagle down and was wafted upwards is psycho- 575 logically of the type which might serve as basis for a rite of 766 this kind. If the descendants of the person to whom this had 424 happened had dramatized the incident at subsequent deaths, [775] a ceremony analogous to the one here described would have arisen.

DISPOSAL OF THE BODY

There is no fixed time for the disposal of a corpse. When 764 possible, it takes place on the day following death, but as many as four days may elapse if delay is necessary for the performance of the rite just described. Another reason for postponement is the absence of near relatives; if they can be summoned within four or five days, the funeral may be delayed until their arrival. There is always endless discussion concerning the exact details; all relatives and members of the deceased family take part, though the wishes of a son, brother, [796] or other near kinsman are usually followed. In this, as in so many points of Bella Coola ritual, an influential chief often [554] controls the desires even of those who are more closely related to the deceased.

Shields announce the hour chosen,[1] usually about noon, [203] and the people begin to assemble in the deceased's house, even [609] strangers being welcome. Women wail dolorously, and another indication of the occasion is the bundles containing clothing, cooking utensils, and other articles belonging to the dead person. The lid of the coffin has been left open, but when everything is ready, an elderly man is asked to strike it, once, with a cane; then the lid is closed. Planks have been removed and a sale made in one of the front corners of the house, through which the men throw out the stone. The women redouble their lamentations as an old woman, previously asked to do so, lights a bundle of dyed and undyed cedar-bark and rides through the opening carrying this. No request has been made for pall-bearers, but any strong men, especially

[1] This does at present, even after the carrying away of the "body." In former times it is mentioned when the corpse was actually buried by the canoe. [775]

McIlwraith R-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

211 stone and served as landing-place for some of the first settlers.
556 In fact, any of the dead person's crests may be used according 764 to the wishes of the chief giving the memorial potlatch. A 769 figure displayed in this way cannot be used as the guise in which the dead relative returns, but as every individual has several crests, inability to use one does not make it difficult to carry out the rite. According to one well-informed old man, when a design has once been used in a cemetery it cannot again be shown by members of the ancestral family, having itself become "dead." Other informants flatly contradicted this statement, and it seems clear that the above is true only with regard to the use of the figure in connection with the return of the deceased. The erection of the figure serves to remind all beholders, especially foreign guests summoned to the memorial potlatch, of the ancestral myth of the deceased. It is, there-[778] fore, equivalent to a totem-pole erected during a man's lifetime, in fact, one of these is sometimes moved to the cemetery to serve as a memorial-post (see Plate 11). Instead of placing a representation of the crest in the cemetery, one is sometimes painted on broad boards and placed on some conspicuous promontory where all who pass by will see it and think of the person commemorated.

The second type of memorial consists of plain poles set upright in the cemetery, one for each major ceremony given by the deceased. Potlatches, memorial potlatches, and kakaxtsa (II, p. 19) are alone indicated in this way, these being the only [Lost] ones to which foreign guests are invited. These poles suggest, in a general way, the greatness of the deceased.

The third type of memorial-post comprises representations of the goods given away by the deceased. These are usually [532] painted on boards attached to a post set up near the grave. On this are pictures of canoes, cippers, slaves, and other valuables distributed at potlatches or memorial potlatches (see Plate 12). Alternatively, there may be a series of small poles, each surmounted by a model canoe manned by miniature human figures, symbolic of a canoe and slaves given away

1:b6:Swanton E-5 (1911-1914)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

(see Plate 25). So, too, wooden representations of coppers are often affixed to an upright post. Not only men are commemorated in this way, a father often places over his daughter's grave pictures of the goods used to ransom her from her husband; wooden plaques representing coppers are commonly used for this purpose.[*] Such symbols are usually cut down after a year owing to a vague feeling that it is not proper for them to remain standing too long. The function of this type of memorial is to mark the social status of the dead person, judged by the riches given away by him, or on his behalf, during his life-time. With the introduction of writing, the Bella Coola have been quick to recognize it as an easy means for recording the wealth distributed by a chief. In consequence, signs are often painted and erected, giving in figures a statement of his financial transactions. Another recent introduction has been the tombstone. One of these is often set up with the name of the deceased carved on it to perpetuate his memory, and a representation of his crest to record his ancestral history. Such a memorial combines the functions of the first and third types.

As the carpenters labour at the memorials, other arrangements for the ceremony proceed apace. As at a potlatch, the fellow-villagers of the donor may be invited repeatedly to his house for the performance of sacred dances, but this feature is often omitted, especially if there are no neophytes to be initiated. The mask to be worn by the deceased relative must be prepared in secret; or if several are to be commemorated at the single ceremony, one must be made ready for each. As the time drawn near, envoys are dispatched to invite foreign guests if it has been decided to have strangers present. This has been customary for many years, but during the period when no features of the potlatch were allowed at a memorial potlatch, the latter was sometimes carried out in the presence of the donor's fellow-villagers alone. The actual departure of the

[*] The National Museum of Canada, at Ottawa, has specimens of these wooden coppers.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

537 viewed by the presence of welcome guests. Mention is fre-& 536 quently made of the journey taken by the dead man to the 969 scenes of his ancestral myths. In addition to being an orator, [622] the speaker must also be a sumit chief, since it is felt that none other can have the necessary assurance and poise to refer to these most sacred and important subjects. During the speech, assistants blow eagle down over the heads of all present.

Food has been prepared in advance, and as soon as the speaker has finished, the heralds call the guests to partake of it. The first course is then distributed, smoked salmon mixed [264] with oolachan grease. Speeches are sometimes delivered during this part of the meal, as well as at the second course, cranberries with more oolachan grease. If the guests have arrived during the afternoon, there is no delay between the feast and the ritual that follows, but if they have come during the morning, there is a gap until the evening. Visitors usually time their arrival for the early part of the afternoon.

537 The next event is a speech from one of the foreign chiefs, & 536 phrased in grandiloquent terms similar to those used by the 969 Bella Coola orator. He speaks of the manner in which the
● 609 supernatural Carpenters have hurried the deceased, but reminds 533 his hearers that this is because Alpentlow has decreed it, therefore all must be for the best. He refers to the dead man's crest, and to the manner in which this guise will be available to him. During the day, the singers have been careful to learn the tune of a mourning song used by the ancestral family of each foreign chief likely to speak. This they now hear one, often assisted by some of the guests, and always accompanied by their singing. No one dances to accompany the song; it is merely a careful mark of sympathy, implying that the speaker himself knows the grief occasioned by death, and, also, that he too is sufficiently important to be able to use a mourning song. If, as is usually the case, there is more than one influential chief in the party, a second rises to speak, repeating in different terms the sentiments expressed by his predecessor. Another mourning song is sung for him in the same way. Sometimes so many as five or six speeches are made, each followed by a song of the same type. In such circumstances it is impossible for the Bella Coola musicians to learn all the tunes, but if five or six chiefs are present, it implies the presence of a large delegation among whom are always a number of singers. It is they who really beat out the tunes, assisted by their Bella Coola confrères. When the last song has been sung, the guests present their hosts with gifts brought for the purpose. The donor himself receives the most valuable, but all the Bella Coola are remembered, chiefs to a greater extent than commoners. Such gifts are not to be returned; in fact, to do so specifically, especially soon after the receipt, would be insulting. After the distribution the evening concludes with the usual meal.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

This ritual is repeated at the arrival of every group of guests. It is uncertain whether or not all the mourning songs are again beaten out after the song of the final speaker of the last group. This seems to have been done occasionally, and the distribution of presents by the guests likewise postponed. Just before the gathering breaks up, the heralds call out: "Ahwinwinwinwap."

This serves as intimation that the Bella Coola rites will take place the following morning, and the guests prepare accordingly. Occasionally, when a man is poor, a memorial potlatch is held without the presence of foreign guests.* In such cases the preliminaries just described are, of course, omitted and the above call marks the commencement of the ceremony.

The next day the guests gather in the donor's house, clad in their best. The mourners are in attendance, each conspicuous with the proper mark. In many cases several of them carry miniature totem-poles, carved to represent bird or animal chiefs assumed by the donor's ancestors, and which entered through their mother. After a little further discussion, Harry took the rattle from his brother and began to sing as he walked around the hall, followed by Alexander and Nebuchadnezzar. Harry was less familiar than his brother with the proper words, but supplied this deficiency by humming. He was also less at ease, and he lacked the musical ability which had made his brother's singing so impressive. After a single circuit, he returned the rattle to Reuben, who continued to go around the hall as he sang. This time he paused at intervals, and kept glancing towards the door, his whole attitude betraying that something was interfering with the previously arranged plans. The purpose of the singing was to summon the dead woman in the form of her crest, but she did not appear. In early times those who were not xuxsk were told that the words and music penetrated to the upper regions, reminding the deceased of the grief of his relatives and persuading him to return. This belief had passed away at the time of the ceremony here described, but the fiction was continued, and it had been planned that the representation of the deceased should enter when the song was finished. It later transpired that the delay was due to a number of white people who, having gathered at the doorway, made the performer unwilling to put on his masks and disguise. Reuben continued to sing half-heartedly, and finally cried out:

*This was probably quite common during the period when all potlatch features were omitted.

Jesup Northwest Coast E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

"Perhaps I have lost my power, it does not come."

Alec Davis, who had previously left the hall, came rushing in and called out in a loud voice:

"[Sewanla (Jessie's ancestral name and the one in connection with which she had been made a chief)] is coming. She has been in the season of her ancestral myths. Her crests have taken her. She comes as Eagle, Raven, and Blackfish, bearing her grandchild."*

The speaker is a morose, rather surly individual, usually undignified and often drunk, but on this occasion his manner had changed to a remarkable degree. His eyes were bright, his

*Although we are sure dead, all hope has been abandoned for the child's recovery.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

969 these various amounts making $864 when added to the previous $410."

* 556 It was first decided to give a present to everyone as "Eagle Down Shaken Off by the Dead Woman." Captain Schooner and his assistants thought first of the bottom house in the village, remembered who lived in it, then, after a little more discussion, agreed upon the amount each should receive. This was whispered to Nebuchadnezzar, who held up a bill and called out, for example:

"$10 for so-and-so."

A number of young men had volunteered as messengers and one of them took the money to the designated recipient. After giving to all in the bottom house, they passed to the next above it, and so in succession for the whole village. Absentees were remembered and their presents received by friends or relatives. Kuriat names were used because Nebuchadnezzar was unfamiliar with the little-used ancestral designations. Contrary to ancient usage, the amounts varied; some chiefs received as much as $20, a child, $1, or 50 cents. Each recipient accepted his gift without showing whether it was more or less than he had expected. There was not sufficient change, so that five persons were often named together and a $5 bill given to the first mentioned for sharing with the other four, a transaction always carried out honestly. Many of the Carriers 609 were strangers, so they could not be rewarded in accordance with their rank, but $50 was given to one of their chiefs to share as he thought fit.

465 Not all the money was distributed in this way. Payments 969 had to be made to those who had assisted at the funeral. Gifts were bestowed upon the women who had washed and dressed $556 the corpse; to the men who had helped to make the coffin; to 964 the canoe-men who had brought the body to Bella Coola; to the pall-bearers; to the grave-diggers; to the women who had carried the fire; to the singers, especially to those who had [illegible]The [illegible] were mentioned by Samuel King and George Nelson [illegible] be known.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575 not considered necessary. With few exceptions, hereafter to 796 be noted, kwiat masks are burnt at the conclusion of each 532 ceremony, a practice which probably originated in order to [171] avoid the possibility of their being seen by the uninitiated. The Bella Coola state that this is one of the most striking differences between their rites and those of the Bella Bella.

575 Next in importance to masks are whistles (see Plate 1).[1] 796 The large, cone-shaped form used in nuxat ceremonial is re-534 placed in kwiat dances by a smaller type consisting of portions [237] of wood glued together, which can be blown with ease from beneath a concealing blanket. Another type has bellows consisting of a mountain goat bladder, which is held beneath the arm-pit so that it can be worked invisibly. During the summer the whistles are kept by one individual, usually a marshal. Specific information concerning the ownership of [422] these whistles could not be obtained; it appears that any kwiat can make one, or have one made for him by a skilled carpenter, and that their retention by one person during the summer is merely for convenience. They are freely lent to [420] anyone for use in a ceremony.

575 In some dances special objects are used in connection with 796 dramatic performances, such as bull-roarers, wooden repre-
532 sentations of animals, birds, or miniature human beings. One [534] old man described a pipe formerly used at Tal'ia, which had [124] a carved bowl as large as a tea-cup with three radiating stems. It was carved from a knotty excrescence on a bench hole. Little could be learnt of its history, except that it was supposed to have been carved by a chief with the design of his person and displayed through pride.

575 The usual guests at a performance of the type just sum-
● 609 marized are the dancer's fellow-villagers and any strangers
796 who happen to be present in the town. Great as is the desire [241] of the kwiatsin to impress their uninitiated ritbanyan, they [123] are still more eager to impress strangers, hence the presence of Carriers while piqueery to the rites. The writer believes that his presence and interest encouraged the Bella Coola to perform several ancient rites through a desire to "show off" before someone who was ignorant. In recent years there has been a tendency to concentrate on kwiat ceremonials, and to judge a man's worth by his lavishness in them, but this is only a modern development due to the prohibition of the potlatch. Nevertheless, even in former times some individuals preferred to invite foreign guests to kwiat dances and to give them valuable gifts rather than to save these for potlatches; such a ceremony is called a kulaciaud. Whenever strangers are present at a kwiat dance they receive small pieces of dyed cedar-bark as proof of the friendly intentions of the host. The general consensus of Bella Coola opinion is that it is foolish for a man to concentrate on kwiat performances, particularly if he impoverish himself to the detriment of potlatches.

[1 See category 16, p 84(B) - Analyst]

2; McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

Although foreign guests are seldom invited to kwiat rites, a dancer frequently calls in his fellows from adjacent villages. But as the ceremonial season is simultaneous in the different settlements, with almost nightly performances, it is often impossible to avoid conflict in dates. Which invitation shall have preference is decided in the following manner:

During the days of qulaw and nakaw the dancer sends a herald of powerful physique to invite guests from as many villages as he wishes. Simultaneously, a messenger may be approaching from the opposite direction with a similar invitation. Each envoy watches carefully around each bend in the path for his rival, and whichever can first call out his message is entitled to continue to give his invitation to the village of the unarrived herald. It is considered exceedingly bad taste to decline a summons, so the ceremony to which the delayed herald was bearing an invitation must be postponed. Sometimes the two messengers sight one another simultaneously, and the relative priority of their messages is then decided by a contest of strength. The rivals stand in the path, shoulder to shoulder, arms close to their sides, and shove with all their strength, the winner being the one who can force his opponent to move his feet. This last means of deciding is used exclu-

2:Mc:Dowalth E-3 (1922-1924) 1948
NEG Bellacoola NEG

[The Cannibal Dance]

forth, followed by a number of hahamat who remain constantly in attendance on him.

X enters the lowest house and sits down near the door, too heavy, with the weight of the crystals, to proceed further. He growls persistently, while the hahamat women present drone monotonously, and those who have accompanied him utter their cry of hoip. These measures at last persuade the Cannibal to move, but only to the next house, where the same procedure is repeated, and so for each in the village. The uninitiated peer curiously and fearfully from their bedrooms, but would never dream of joining in the cry of hoip. If X should be asleep or otherwise engaged when the voices are heard, some of his assistants awaken him and send him forth. The arrival of strangers also excites X. One of his followers tells him of their coming and when a canoe reaches the river, he runs down into the water and bites as many of the newcomers as he desires. The herald, watching the approach of the strangers and knowing what will happen, cries out to the uninitiated to conceal themselves prior to X's appearance. The guests proceed to the dwelling of their host, but that evening the Cannibal's father, or whoever acts for him, calls them to his house where he gives them presents to validate the biting. If foreigners have been expected, gifts are always saved for them from the previous distribution. The value of the presents depends in part on the rank of the recipient, but more upon the feeling of like or dislike with which X's father regards him. A chief naturally receives more than a person of lower rank, although these distinctions are not universal.

On the morning of the fifth day of X's retirement, some of the hahamat collect chamber-pots and towards noon he is immersed in the river in the manner previously described. Then he goes through the village four times, on each round visiting every house. The uninitiated are told that the wailing has caused his call to depart, and the whistle is heard no more.*

Towards dusk all the hahamat assemble in X's house. He

*The duration of the call at this time may not be the usual procedure.

[The Power of the Supernatural Charms] ever since. Pay for strangers is not a strong Bella Coola 75* sentiment and the audience laughs heartily at the spectacle 96* of the doddering old man in vain pursuit of a heartless woman 22] who is forever young. A considerable number of tsaxwiye 09] always accompany the procession, pushing their way out with Ana'tlemakais and Sisqawa. Several of them carry whistles 52] concealed beneath their arm-pits and the noise of these serves to maintain the dignity of the occasion.

So many masked figures are used that all cannot accompany Sisnaxwaxt into each house. Those unable to do so remain on the sidewalk outside, holding one of her boxes, a live male mountain goat. At the next house another group of the chamber's victims enters and the ceremonial just described is repeated. The same is carried out at every dwelling in the village. Sisnaxwaxt and her followers stop a few minutes in X's house before starting out on a second round, in which the same ritual is carried out. This is done twice more, so that each house is visited four times.

By this time dusk has fallen and all the tsaxwiye except those acting as escort to X have gathered in his house. Precisely the entertainers are called in. Sisnaxwaxt is coaxing on a low box behind the fire, encouraging her masked lovers to come to her, and bestowing her affections indiscriminately in a heartless manner. The crowd shows such color to and fr enthusiastically and though blows are not actually exchanged great care must be taken to prevent masks from falling to the much uncouth. The efforts of the unfortunate Sisqawa 622] much his desire are always a source of merriment. Bella Coola to need explain the significance of it all. Sometime a cradle is brought in, over which Sisnaxwaxt croons while 333] song to song, describing her as the mother of many children of whom the failures are animals. It is uncertain whether the part of the ceremony takes place before or after the dance fig or, indeed, whether it is not another type of ceremony which can use as well. The crowd concludes in the normal way wi the expulsion of the entertainers, the dancing of Ana'tlemakais

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

*533 B

Xwumwuqmu	ełkuełc	ełełłqulułułc	ełwuł-uqełc
Go within	my house,	I am giving food	to my friends.

[wuwuwu covered]

C The third part of this song has been forgotten.

[614 824 685 609]

(a) Recorded as song VII D 20b, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard. It is said that this song has been handed down for generations in an ancestral family; they now regard it as a family possession and would consider its use by others to be stealing.

(b) Many years ago a solitary Bella Bella used to paddle to Kimsquit almost every year. He was dressed like a chief and had the mien of one, so that his hosts assumed him to be a person of importance. It was later found that he was a poor man. The ridicling of foreigners is a common theme of c'ełł songs.

*533 575 578

ułc'łłc Song Used for Xwumłełc(ał)

A Nełułłłxwumqułułwu	łłxwumełłłc
He has fallen so that his buttocks are uppermost,	Hell(!)!
Xwumwułwu ułwuł	łłxwułełc
He has come to burn,	that hell(!).

[wuwuwu covered]

B and C. The second and third parts have been forgotten.

(a) Recorded as song VII D 3c, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.

(b) A seemingly disrespectful exhortation sung to c'ełł songs describing the łułwułwu.

(c) Xwumełełc was an c'ełł who is said to have sung a Coastal łułwu when the latter was supposed to be in the land above. A song was composed about the incident, and the above fragment has been remembered for many years. Xwumełełc was initiated into the łułwu society; see vol. II, p. 90[illegible].

*533 575 786 786 209

As already described, whenever a dancer is performing, the women utter a peculiar high-pitched drone and the heralds call out remarks suitable to the occasion. A phonograph record* was made of the drone, followed by a cry suitable for either nułł or c'ełł dances. The following words are virtually sung:

Łłłwułłłwu	ułłłwułełc
Do not go,	chief.

*Recorded as song VII D 20c, National Museum of Canada.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

#192

Kilmaximaw: The chosen that keeps a foolish man from success as a chief; the concept is semi-anthropomorphized.

Kimin: Fine ceremonial dancings.

Kimlo: enemy village.

Kimo: Supernatural creature dwelling in the woods.

[952] Kinkakmut: Shamans who received power from ghosts.

Kinskwaskwas: Bella Coola hunter.

Kinspisi, "Coyote": Bella Bella designation for the Dean River, whence the [1078] emigrant Kinspisi has been derived.

Kinskut: Nass River.

Kinthul: Kinspisi man mentioned in an ancient story.

[825] Kiu: 1—Whale.
2—Assumed name of a Tsi'is woman; this is said to be an exclusively feminine designation.

Kiu'mas: 1—Name acquired by a Bella Bella man in the beginning of time.
2—Influential Kwagu'ts chief, who died about 1918.

[825] Kiu'ts*: Shadows.

[824] Kiu: Where is (?).

Kiuts: Shoving.

Kiuxlar: Prerogative of being consult.

Kiuxts: Dried salmon.

Kiuxwlar: Synonym for skulla: one of the days of a potlatch, probably that following the appearance of a called representation of the deceased. The word is derived from kiuxts.

[826] Kokalkiuw: Porpoise.

[945] Kokwlem: Supernatural being who believes in an erotic woman.

Ko'ls: Twin whose birth is attributed to salmon.

[824] Ko'mmlis: Man mentioned in an ancient story.

Kokolem: Unidentified berry (strawberry?).

Kokum: Supernatural female shaman who guided Wi'mwim.

Ko'mxyaskwa: Kwakiu name of a Bella Coola Canoeist.

Kolol'lamp, "Earthy Dust": Ghosts.

Kolulmp: Land, capital, earth.

[555] Kolulu: First part of song.

Komal: Tradition concerning short hairy white ape the Bella Coola valley.

Kopyamamkulis, "The One Who Makes Us Fat": Supernatural name of white salmon.

[825] Koselmas: Goods distributed to relatives usage used at a mourning ceremony when no representation of the deceased has been employed.

[765] Koselus: Goods offered to foreigners or guests at mourning ceremony their measure or food.

[378] Koskuts: Kwakiu: Synonym for Ishkatsuts, [illegible]

[1001] Kosmamkulmut: Woman mentioned in an ancient story.

[420] Kotlat, mother, kotlat: Grandfather.

[601] Kulakuam: Kwakiu ceremonial at which foreigners are present.

Kulu: The construction of salmon weirs.

---

*This was the pronunciation of the word by the informant with an almost audible s sound.

b:bb:Dworetzky K-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

and other relatives of their mothers as to their fathers. It was taken as a matter of course that a child had full rights in the village of his mother, and from her, as from her relatives, he likewise received various prerogatives. Thus each child was a member of a bilateral social group. From actual residence in his father's village he tended to be more intimately associated with him and his brothers than with his mother's relatives, but this did not prevent him from visiting at the home of the latter, where he was received as a member of that village. Through the bestowal of prerogatives by his mother and the members of her family, his relationship with them was further emphasized. Such a child was, in fact, a full member of two groups.

When the members of the second generation married and begot children, each of these could have been a member of four groups; that of his father's father, father's mother, mother's father, and mother's mother. The Bella Coola believe that there were approximately forty-five groups of first settlers, corresponding to the forty-five towns, and it is obvious that if the system of intermarriage had continued for a few generations, a man would have been a member of each of these first groups. They assume that their first ancestors came to this earth far more than a few generations ago, and yet at the present time no one claims to be a descendant of more than eight of these first groups, and most claim descent from only two or three. In part this can be explained by forgetfulness, though a Bella Coola would regard this statement as heresy. The residence of a man in the village of his father has tended to emphasize relationship with the ancestral group that first populated that village, and there is no doubt that actual relationship, through the mother, with the members of other groups must in many cases have been forgotten in the course of generations. The term ancestral family, nemamis, is used in this monograph to designate those individuals who believe themselves to be descended from one of the first groups that populated this earth.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

614 553 The ancestral family may, therefore, be defined as those whose distinct names are embodied in the same origin myth.

[173] What is the stability of this group?

In consequence of the large number of names theoretically embodied in every myth, and of the necessity for validating the bestowal of any one of these by means of presents, it follows that there is always a large number of dormant names. The Bella Coola describe these as being, "In the burial ground." They are, in fact, dead. Any one of these may be resurrected by any member of the ancestral family. If a woman marries into a foreign tribe her relatives occasionally give her husband, outright, an ancestral name. In such a case that name is permanently alienated from the family to which it formerly belonged; this should happen only when the group is reduced to a few individuals, all of whom agree to the transaction. [583] But more often a woman takes as a wedding gift to her husband a name which it is understood cannot be transmitted to one of his relatives unless he has children. On the death of the childless husband, this designation reverts to his widow's ancestral family. If there are children, they cement the bond of friendship between the two families. The brother of a woman so married also bestows names on her children, as further mark of their incorporation into her ancestral family. [583] It is customary and proper, however, for the ancestral family into which a woman is married and bears children to reciprocate the compliment a few generations later, and by the marriage of one of their women to restore such names to the ancestral family to which they originally belonged. According to the Bella Coola, this practice of "return-marriage" has been the rule since the first exogamic marriages of the first people, with the result that names usually return to the patrilineal descendants of the first people to use them.

611 614 If a woman marries outside her ancestral family, her children will belong to at least two distinct ancestral groups. It is difficult to say how long an individual remembers the different units with which he is connected, but the following is 611 an instance of survival for several generations. Qmai-lils is an 649 orphan about ten years of age, now living in Bella Coola; he is looked upon with considerable respect as being a member of ancestral families in Bella Coola, Kimsquit, Smith Inlet, Kitkatla, and Kitlobe. His pedigree, given below, explains his powers. The symbol = marks a marriage, and the male is shown on the left in each case.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Theoretically, Qmai-lils is as much a native of Smith Inlet as he is of Bella Coola where his father made his home. If he should visit Smith Inlet and make known his pedigree, he would be received by the members of the ancestral family of his great-great-grandmother.[4] His welcome would be more assured if he were the owner of a name from their origin myth. Difficulties of communication and frequent wars made it [628] virtually impossible in the old days to keep in touch with relatives in distant tribes, except in the case of a mighty chief who was able to invite visitors from great distances to feasts. Thus names taken by women to foreign husbands were virtu- 614 ally lost to the members of her ancestral family. In the 553 course of a few generations, such designations carried afield
would be revived as if dormant by some member of the family, 178 and all recollection of the foreign marriage forgotten.

[4] As the Bella Coola are now living in a single village, it was impossible to obtain a modern instance of the ownership by one individual of rights in a number of localities within the tribal area. It appears certain, however, that the sentiments expressed with regard to Qmai-lils at Smith Inlet are identical with those formerly held for possessions in ancestral families located in different Bella Coola villages. [628]

614 553 178 173 The converse of this process of loss is the assimilation to an origin myth of names originally brought into the ancestral family by a woman from abroad. Unless intercourse and friendly relations were maintained by "return marriages," in a few generations no tradition would be remembered to account for the name, and this, if used at all, would be interwoven into the well-known ancestral myth. Hence a myth is not static with regard to the names embodied in it. These change from generation to generation; it is probable that elements of the story itself suffer like additions and alterations, even though the people do not consider this to be the case.

611 614 The Bella Coola regard the ancestral family as a social unit, not only in terms of the present, but as stretching back to the first settlement of the earth. Viewed from this angle, it is in fact, though not admitted to be so by the Bella Coola, a unilateral grouping with patrilineal descent, which may, in both the most recent and most ancient generations, be marked by matrilineal descent instead. A man frequently uses prerogatives obtained through his mother, her mother, or even her mother's mother, but it is tacitly assumed that for many previous generations such rights passed in the patrilineal line. Sometimes this succession extended back to the beginning of time; in other cases, prerogatives were transmitted matrilineally for a considerable period after the settlement of the earth, before gradually becoming patrilineal.

614 429 551 It has been thus far assumed that the only prerogative wrapped up in an ancestral name is a knowledge of the myth in which it is embodied. But there are others. For example, several of the first inhabitants of the world are said to have owned totem-poles, each of which was displayed by its owner at the gathering when he took for himself a name. Thereforth, the only person entitled to use that particular totem-pole design was the person with the legal right to the name in question. The same principle governs all dance names; each entitles its owner to perform a certain ceremonial. Thus it is possible to enlarge the previous definition by saying that:

[532] [535]

family are liable. It is very rare for a woman to be killed in a blood feud. A death is avenged by a death. If two persons should be slain for one murder the family which has suffered the double loss endeavours to kill another of their enemies. In case of wounding, no effort is made to wound the offender, but if he should be killed his family would try to avenge him. Where often, one of the offender's family takes the initiative of offering goods to the injured family, "to cure the wound." If the offer is accepted, and the goods delivered properly, the matter is up an end. If a murder is committed within the circle of the immediate family, for instance, if a brother kill a brother, revenge, if exacted, must be exacted not to the actual offender. If requested to do so, the leading chief of a village may offer his advice, but it is always considered that revenge concerns only the immediate family.

Revenge is a topic which shows clearly the essential fluidity of the family. There are no well-defined degrees of relationship within which responsibility rests. Instead, everyone knows, in the open life of the community, how many persons share the family life of the individual, and they alone are held to account, or they alone demand compensation. From in very nature, the family must be a bilateral unit which, when powerful, stretches out to absorb members of the ancestral families of both mother and father.

Not only does the family thus appear constantly to be extending to itself members of the ancestral family of other persons, but these relatives themselves are deeply interested in the affairs of the family. This is most clearly shown in the case of children who, of course, are members of the ancestral family of both their mother and father. A few days after birth some relative is expected to call together the people of the village where the child is born for the honoured and valid[illegible] of an ancestral name. It is considered an evidence of poverty if this is done by the father, as if his child were only supported by his parents, not by a larger circle of relatives. It is immaterial whether this gathering be called by a relative of the father to the mother. In June, 1911, a Bulu Code girl had reached the age of about six months without having received a name. There was much adverse criticism about the parsimony of her father's father and her mother's father, who were held equally to blame, but who had really been deterred by fear of the law prohibiting the potlatch.

As a child grows older he is helped in the performance of ceremonial rites by his parents and by their brothers and sisters. To this, too, it is considered a mark of poverty if only the parents take part. If a man's own children do not appear likely to carry on the traditions of his ancestral family, he has no hesitation in favouring the children of either a brother or sister, since, like his own, they are all members of the same ancestral family. Especially in Kimsquit[1] it is customary for a man to help his sisters' children, so that there is any lack of knowledge of the real father, but rather as a mark of respect and family feeling displayed by a man to his sister. Moreover, in both Bulu Code proper and in Kimsquit, it is more the proper for a name which a man has raised to a position of dignity by the expenditure of much goods to be passed to his own son; it should go to a distant relative. When a father validates a name for his child it should be one long dormant.

One aspect of the manner in which the family merges imperceptibly into the ancestral family can be seen in the inheritance of names. When a man calls his relatives together to make his will he is guided in the choice of recipients by the characteristics of his children. So able son receives much from his father, but lazy children are slighted without hesitation. This is particularly true of names with which are bound up valuable dance prerogatives, whereas, as previously mentioned, ancestral names of which the importance depends

[1] According to an intelligent Bulu Code informant, a Bulu Bulu may assume relatives in the children of his brothers and sisters than to his own offspring, and the same man expressed the opinion that the Kimsquit people are not a Bulu Bulu tribe[illegible]. Kimsquit informants denied this, though confirming the opinion that a man is choosing prerogatives for his sisters' children, in some cases to the detriment of his own, which is not a Bulu Code.

Lib. Smithsonian Inst. (1922-1924)948
NEA Bulletin-Ills NEA

and other relatives of their mothers as to their fathers. It was taken as a matter of course that a child had full rights in the village of his mother, and from her, or from her relatives, he likewise received various prerogatives. Thus each child was a member of a bilateral social group. From actual residence in his father's village he tended to be more intimately associated with him and his brothers than with his mother's relatives, but this did not prevent him from visiting at the home of the latter, where he was received as a member of that village. Through the bestowal of prerogatives by his mother and the members of her family, his relationship with them was further emphasized. Such a child was, in fact, a full member of two groups.

When the members of the second generation married and begot children, each of these could have been a member of four groups; that of his father's father, father's mother, mother's father, and mother's mother. The Bella Coola believe that there were approximately forty-five groups of first mothers, corresponding to the forty-five towns, and it is obvious that if the system of intermarriage had continued for a few generations, a man would have been a member of each of these four groups. They assume that their first ancestors came to this earth far more than a few generations ago, and yet at the present time no one claims to be a descendant of more than eight of these four groups, and most claim descent from only two or three. In part this can be explained by forgetfulness, though a Bella Coola would regard this statement as heresy. The residence of a man in the village of his father has tended to emphasize relationship with the ancestral group that first populated that village, and there is no doubt that actual relationship, through the mother, with the members of other groups must in many cases have been forgotten in the course of generations. The term ancestral family, moreover, is used in this monograph to designate those individuals who believe themselves to be descended from one of the first groups that populated this earth.

A man may claim descent from as many as eight of these groups, that is, he may be a member of eight ancestral families. Some restrictive means must have been employed to limit the choice of marriage partners, otherwise a man's membership in ancestral families would have been far greater than it is. The explanation lies in the high regard with which the members of an ancestral family accorded the prerogatives they have received from their fathers. With the marriage of the four women, their brothers were called upon to share their rights, both practical in regard to hunting territory, and ceremonial with regard to dance prerogatives, with their sisters' children. Bella Coola mythology contains no references to unwillingness on the part of the four men to do this; in fact, their own children benefited equally from the marriages of their fathers with other women. But, say the Bella Coola, after these four marriages, economically exigentic, men realized that it would be foolish to allow their children to marry for child and so diffuse valuable prerogatives. It was far wiser for a man to seek as future son-in-law a youth belonging to the same ancestral family as himself or his wife. Then any resultant children would come into this world provided by both parents with common relatives, so that the child would be, as they express it, "Held close and supported by a close circle of ancestors."

Bella Coola logic does not explain how marriages could have been arranged in the early generations without violating the laws of incest. The endogamic principle displayed at that time, however, has been carried out until the present day, so that a man endeavours to arrange marriages for his children with members of the same ancestral family. One of the strongest Bella Coola desires is to "make good the path" for his offspring, and this can best be done when they are born amply provided with relatives of common ancestry. There is no belief in the active participation of distant ancestors in the affairs of men, yet, though incapable of clear expression, the Bella Coola feel strongly that a child is born into the community of its deceased relatives back to the beginning of time.

This endogamic principle will be described in greater detail in vol. I, chap. xvi, but mention of it here has been necessary to explain the composition of the ancestral family.

In recent years there has been a tendency for some men to marry foreign women in order that they, or their children, might obtain new prerogatives. Thus a total towards exogamy has arisen from the same reason which is supposed to have caused endogamy. The offspring of such marriages cannot enjoy the feeling of strength and comfort that comes from the membership of both parents in the same ancestral family, but some individuals have felt that this was offset by the gain of highly desirable foreign prerogatives. It is said that this practice was initiated by a certain Pulu, father of a man about sixty years old in 1923. White influence probably had nothing to do with this radical innovation, although its wide adoption has been made more easy by the establishment of peaceful conditions on the coast.

Strong as is the belief in a common ancestor, it is unlikely that this would have sufficed to hold together the members of the ancestral family, without some definite prerogatives. These are of two kinds: names and land.

NAMES

The fundamental principle governing Bulu Coole nomenclature is that each name must have originated in connection with some event of comparative importance. It is unthinkable to apply a casual designation to a child. On a person's death his name, or names, may be transmitted to a relative, and it is proper that the owner of a name should know when, by whom, and for what reason, it was first created. Tradition affirms that, before coming to this earth, the first people were all given designations by Alpandee; these have been carefully handed down and are still in use. One name cannot be given to two individuals; instances occur of two people having the same one, but in such cases they have different origins. One person may have several names of different kinds, each carrying

The uncestral family may, therefore, be defined as those whose defined names are embodied in the same origin myth.

What is the stability of this group?

In consequence of the large number of names theoretically embodied in every myth, and of the necessity for validating the lineal of any one of them by means of primaria, it follows that there is always a large number of dormant names. The Bella Coola describe them as being, "in the burial ground." They are, in fact, dead. Any one of them may be resurrected by any member of the uncestral family. If a woman marries into a foreign tribe her relatives sometimes give her husband, outright, an uncestral name. In such a case that name is permanently alienated from the family to which it formerly belonged; this should happen only when the group is reduced to a few individuals, all of whom agree to the transaction. But more often a woman takes as a wedding gift to her husband a name which is in unlineal manner to transmitted to one of his relatives unless he has children. On the death of the children's husband, this designation reverts to his widow's uncestral family. If there are children, they remove the bond of friendship between the two families. The brother of a woman so married also bestows names on her children, as further mark of their incorporation into her uncestral family. It is customary and proper, however, for the uncestral family into which a woman is married and bears children to reciprocate the compliment a few generations later, and by the marriage of one of their women to restore such names to the uncestral family to which they originally belonged. According to the Bella Coola, this practice of "return marriage" has been the rule since the first exogamic marriages of the two people, with the result that names usually return to the patrilineal descendants of the first people to use them.

If a woman marries outside her uncestral family, her children will belong to at least two distinct uncestral groups. It is difficult to say how long an individual remembers the dif-

U.W.Ebersole G-3 [illegible]
NEA Bellevoie NEB

former units with which he is connected, but the following is an instance of survival for several generations. Qasi Ali is an orphan about ten years of age, now living in Bulla Costa; he is looked upon with considerable respect as being a member of ancestral families in Bulla Costa, Kimapoi, Smith Inlet, Kitkatla, and Kitkata. His pedigree, given below, explains his position. The symbol ∞ marks a marriage, and the male is shown on the left in each case.

Theoretically, Qasi Ali is as much a native of Smith Inlet as he is of Bulla Costa where his father made his home. If he should visit Smith Inlet and make known his pedigree, he would be received by the members of the ancestral family of his great-great-grandmother. His welcome would be more assured if he were the owner of a crest from their origin myth. Difficulties of communication not frequent were made it virtually impossible in the old days to keep in touch with relatives in distant villages, except in the case of a mighty chief who was able to invite visitors from great distances to feasts. Thus names taken by women to foreign husbands were virtually lost to the members of her ancestral family. In the course of a few generations, such designations carried, which would be carried as if dormant by some member of the family, and all recollection of the foreign marriage forgotten.

[628]

614
559
198

[628]

614 553 178 973 The success of this process of loss is the satisfaction to an origin myth of names originally brought into the ancestral family by a woman from abroad. Unless intercourse and friendly relations were maintained by "return marriages," in a few generations no tradition would be remembered to account for the name, and this, if used at all, would be interwoven into the well-known ancestral myth. Hence a myth is not static with regard to the names embodied in it. These change from generation to generation; it is probable that elements of the story itself suffer like additions and alterations, even though the people do not consider this to be the case.

611 614 The Bella Coola regard the ancestral family as a social unit, not only in terms of the present, but as extending back to the first settlement of the earth. Viewed from this angle, it is in fact, though not admitted to be so by the Bella Coola, a unilateral grouping with patrilineal descent, which may, in both the most recent and most ancient generations, be marked by matrilineal descent instead. A man frequently uses prerogatives obtained through his mother, her mother, or even his mother's mother, but it is tacitly assumed that for many previous generations such rights passed in the patrilineal line. Sometimes this succession extended back to the beginning of time; in other cases, prerogatives were transmitted matrilineally for a considerable period after the settlement of the earth, before gradually becoming patrilineal.

614 424 551 It has been thus far assumed that the only prerogative wrapped up in an ancestral name is a knowledge of the myth in which it is embedded. But there are others. For example, several of the first inhabitants of the world are said to have ancestral totem-poles, each of which was displayed by its owner at the gathering when he took for himself a name. Thenceforth, the only person entitled to use that particular totem-pole design was the person with the legal right to the name in question. The same principle governs all dance names; each entitles its owner to perform a certain ceremonial. Thus it is possible to enlarge the previous definition by saying that:

[542] [536]

The ancestral family consists of those whose ancestral names, embodying definite prerogatives, are embedded in a single origin myth.

A stranger finds it easier to understand why names are so carefully maintained within the ancestral family by thinking of them as symbols of prerogatives, but it must be emphasized that the Bella Coola preserve with equal jealousy those designations of which the only prerogative is the marking of the actual membership.

If, then, the ancestral family be regarded as a group possessing a large number of name-prerogatives, it may well be asked how these are distributed among the members. The first point to be emphasized is that the ancestral family is a unit held together without definite social mechanism. There is no accepted "head" of the family, nor are there any clearly formulated laws governing the transmission of the name-prerogatives. Before death a man usually calls together his relatives and bequeaths,[1] according to his desire, his personal property in slaves and canoes, and his transmissible property in names. Such a designation does not become the property of the new owner unless he is able to validate his ownership by a distribution of presents, whereupon the name is "dead." If, during this period, some other member of the ancestral family should desire it for a child, or for himself, he can take possession of it by the customary distribution of presents. By doing so he would wipe the legacy, but the latter cannot himself use the appellation since it is already in use. Even at the present time there are bitter quarrels over the assumption of names, and such have certainly occurred for many generations. If a man can validate fairly promptly a name willed to him, it is most unusual for anyone else to try to forestall him.

If a man dies intestate, his sons consider themselves his natural heirs, and the most respected of them validates for himself as many names as he desires or is able to assume. Disputes are not as common as might be expected since the influence of a chief is usually sufficient to settle claims as to which of his brothers shall receive which names. Even if none of them is a chief, some one of them is certain to have greater influence than the others. If a dead man has no sons, his daughters can assume his names, which they may transmit to their children. Failing both sons and daughters, a man's brothers and sisters are his heirs, as usual, the one of influence being the one who really arranges matters.[1] Since the law, it must be emphasized that if the members of the immediate family are slow to validate a dead man's names, they may be taken by any member of the ancestral family.

[1] In case of sudden death or failure to make a will, ambitious relatives assume

In former days it was customary to create a "name-bearer" to preserve the ancestral myth. The older and more influential members of the ancestral family would choose an intelligent young relative to whom to relate the myth in great detail. One informant described how her mother, the last official "nameBearer," had been instructed by her grandfather. The old man had been accustomed to take his granddaughter, a girl about twelve years of age, to bed with him, and whisper to her the myth, with his hand pressed over her mouth to prevent escape of his words. At the conclusion of the recitation he always spat in her mouth to make the words stick. The members of the ancestral family, recognizing that the "name-bearer" was the person best acquainted with the myth, were wont to consult him or her about it, and, of course, about the names embodied in it. A "nameBearer" had no authority to decree who should receive names, but appeals were often made to him, and a tactful individual was frequently able to settle disputes.

Considering the extreme fluidity of the whole system it is surprising that quarrels are not more common. These are limited by the system of wills, through which a man bequeaths his most valuable personal property, especially his intangible property in social name-perspectives (II, p. 4). Ancestral names are also sold, but since their value depends on the goods expected to validate them, there is seldom literature about their allotment. Indeed, a chief who is the legal owner of a designation which came from above in the beginning of time, will in many cases choose to abrogate his position with respect to a title of comparatively recent date. But if any person who is not a member of the ancestral family should dare to use an ancestral name, all the members rise to avenge the theft, for such they feel it to be. In recent years, however, this practice has become comparatively common. In such cases a man, eager to show to the glories of a myth and able to give a potlatch, has validated an ancestral name to which he has no right. The presence of the white man also contains the mixed ancestral family. Names are sometimes lent or hired to those who are not members of the group for definite sums; the recipient accompanies the individual. Such names are not reserved for several generations; generally speaking, the recipient claims to be the real owner and not the temporary possessor. During his tenancy of the name he is entitled to any prerogative attached to it, but he is not considered a bona fide member of the ancestral family.

[1] On the grounds that the man principally governs the disposal of house and goods on the reserve.

Instances have occurred in which an old man or woman, believing himself to be the last survivor of an ancestral family, has entrusted his names and myth to those who have befriended him, or these have been taken by those who buried him. Some individuals are constantly searching to conduct the funerals of friendless old people in the hope of so obtaining names. But as almost every case this leads to friction, since it is virtually impossible for an ancestral family to die out. Perhaps in the next generation, perhaps in the following one, some youth will claim descent from the last ancestors of the supposedly defunct family, and claim the myth and names entrusted thereto. This leads to a feud with the parents, or his descendants, who have received the names through and given to the "last" of the family.

Such instances of an ancestral family becoming practically

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

L.McDevitt R-1 (1912-1924)[illegible]
NEA Bellevue NEA

124
423
[177]
423
614
773
[361]

tions on this subject always excited them, but many effort was made to verify the following statements.

As with names, the easiest way to understand the rights of the uncontrol family in land is by first considering the mythological explanation, which mirrors conditions as they existed at the coming of white men. On reaching this earth the first people are believed to have prospected for suitable settlement sites, places where salmon and eulachon could be caught, and if possible, near side valleys where berries were abundant. There they released the animals and plants which they had brought with them, on which they thenceforth subsisted, in accordance with the supreme deity's instructions. The members of the group pre-empted these areas for themselves. Waste land, far from any village was, and still is, free to anyone. A few years after the first settlements had been made, according to the myths, the supreme god sent down to Kimsquit a certain Alquatim who allotted and marked the territory which was the property of each community; at that time a village consisted merely of a group of the first settlers. No similar myth was recounted for either Bella Coola or Tal'ts, although their concepts with regard to land are identical with those of the Kimsquit. This really gave a sacred sanction to the possession of land, an important matter to a people so religiously inclined as the Bella Coola.

423
614

The system of land tenure follows the same somewhat obscure principles that govern the possession of names in an uncontrol family. Hunting and collecting grounds appropriated by the first people, or by their immediate descendants, are the property of their offspring, the uncontrol family. The Bella Coola term for such an area is ut'kum, also called, ucumsta, which means "Food Supply."

It will thus be seen that a hunting area is not the property of any single individual, but belongs to a group of persons, most of which live in a single town. The relatives of a man who intends to give a potlatch usually give him, temporarily, exclusive rights to the hunting-ground. As with names, there is no doubt that a man needs to have these rights in property which are entirely his, if they are located at a distance. Thus several men claim that they are legally entitled to hunt at Kitlope, but from some difficulty of access neither they nor their fathers have exercised the right, and it would have been lost in the course of a few generations, even without the other decay of custom which has followed the advent of the white man. Practically, a man hunts only in the grounds of those ancestral families in whose origin myths he has names, though, theoretically, he is entitled to hunt on any hunting-ground of any ancestral family of which he is a member whether or not he holds a duly validated name from its origin myth. It is not necessary to confirm the right to property as with a name, though a validated ancestral name is the usual mark of a man's right to that area of the ancestral family to which that designation belongs. Although the ownership of land in distant regions is of little practical importance, it is, none the less, a matter of great pride to a man to feel that he has rights in many places. The efforts of an individual to make good these claims has often led to bloodshed; in fact, one intelligent old man stated that property disputes were the principal cause for war in British Columbia. A person who lacks hunting-grounds is little better than a slave, whereas one who has much land is important.

[224]
[451]

The Bella Coola regard land as almost inalienable. Though a man does not own the land of his wife's ancestral family, he can use it and his children have full rights to it. Conversely, a wife can gather berries on her husband's land, though it is not hers. A guest at a village may be allowed to use the territory of his hosts, but it does not become his. In the old days were between the central villas were common, but though slaves were taken freely, land was never seized; such is undesirable to a Bella Coola. In fact, several of the older people inquired how it had been possible, in the first world war, for the allies, whose cause they believed to be righteous, to assist territory from Germany. If the victors had killed or enslaved

[illegible] Seventh. E-5 (1922-1924)/941
NEA Bellacoola NEA

the Germans it would have been moral and proper according to Bella Coola ethics, but to take land was unheard of. 428 [921]

Since land is only valued for hunting or collecting purposes, it is not divided into small areas. Any man can build his house at will near the village. It is said that at Kitlope the crab-apple trees are the property of different ancestral families, themselves members of different tribes, but this is unknown in Bella Coola. It may be mentioned that the Bella Coola somewhat naively assume that all other coastal tribes have ancestral families similar to their own, although they recognize that some of them also have a clan system which has no counterpart in their social organization. Since the concentration of the tribe on a small reserve and the beginning of agriculture, a system of individual ownership of cultivated land has sprung up. It is realized that if a man clears and cultivates a field, the produce is his own, and he can will this land to whomsoever he pleases. Likewise a man who rings a tree to kill it for firewood is the sole owner. The Bella Coola regard uncultivated land in the reserve as being at the disposal of anyone, a concept which appears not to have been taught them by any white schoolmaster. Its origin seems rather to lie in the old belief that any unpreempted land, far removed from a village, can be used by anyone. It is recognized that the reserve cannot be considered as a cul'xhaw belonging to any ancestral group, hence it is free to all. One corner of it, however, includes the lower part of a side-valley formerly used by the people of Tsnaul. An old man, whose ancestral family lived in that village for generations, has set his bean-crops in this corner of the reserve for a number of years without interference from other hunters, who go far afield with their crops. Even within the limits of the reserve it is felt that this man has the prime right to that area for the use of himself and his family. [128] [191] [428] [614]

Theoretically an ancestral family may die out. Several instances were mentioned of old men who, believing themselves to be the sole survivors of their family, bequeathed their names 614 428 921

Lib: Howitt E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES
Bella Bella NES

BC 614 428 721

and hunting-grounds to those who had helped them in their old age. But in every case the gift turned out to be of doubtful value, since young men grew up who claimed membership in the supposedly defunct ancestral family and confirmed the right of those to whom it had been given. This always led to war.

BB BC 423 696

The following is an instance of a feud which arose from the bestowal of a hunting-area.

It is said that about 1830 the people of Tsawat (probably Butze Inlet) captured a Bella Bella woman as a slave. She escaped and fled up the Tsawat River, hoping to come in contact with the Bella Coola, who often hunted in that area. The woman was found by the mother's father of an informant who carefully looked after her while he was hunting beaver and brought her back to Bella Coola, thence sending her to Bella Bella. In gratitude her father, a Bella Bella chief, gave her owner the hunting-area known as Nalaw, near Kwatna Inlet, with the consent of the members of his ancestral family. The land so alienated should have remained permanently in possession of the Bella Coola ancestral family, but was too far removed from Bella Coola to be used regularly by the new owners. After the death of the Bella Bella chief, a number of individuals who claimed membership in his ancestral family asserted their rights to it. Many years later, after white traders had made their appearance on the coast, a Bella Coola went to Nalaw and killed a large number of beaver. As he was leaving with their pelts he was murdered by some Bella Bella, ostensibly as a trespasser. But for the restraining influence of the white man this incident would undoubtedly have led to war. The informant still feels that he is entitled to hunt at Nalaw, and did so several times when he was a young man; but his sons have never exercised the right, and it has practically lapsed.

BB [426]

BB BC 423 692

It is unfortunate that the above incident is drawn from Bella Bella, where the power of chiefs is much greater than among the Bella Coola. Consequently it is impossible to say

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5
Bella bella NE5

BB
BC
423
[622]

exactly what right the Bella Bella chief had to dispose of the land. The informant assumed that he must have been powerful enough to dictate to his followers, an unknown possibility in Bella Coola. However, the informant regards the case as typical of what would likely happen should a Bella Coola try to give away land. Out of generosity or gratitude old men have sometimes done so, but always they have forgotten someone, perhaps a mere infant, who on growing up lays claim to the xul'alam.

BC
423
614
[226]
[773]

Hunting-grounds are not the only valuable parts of the country. Even more important are stretches of river suitable for salmon-weirs. Of the same type are good places for olachen-nets, and rocks from which these fish can be caught with scoop-nets. Like hunting-grounds, these are said to have been pre-empted by the first people[1] and have passed into the ownership of the ancestral families descended from them. It is needless to repeat the gradual lapsing of rights to property of this kind in distant areas, since the principle is the same as that already described for land.

[773]
[226]

In one respect, salmon-weirs differ from hunting-areas, since the latter can be used by any number of individuals, whereas the number of salmon-traps possible at any one weir is limited. Again the mythological origin must be given to explain the customary usage. If, for example, a salmon-weir supposedly built by one of the first groups of people was fully manned in the third generation by ten individuals, it is as-

[1] Several Bella Coola myths describe how the first-comers brought with them from above some hemlocks for the construction of fish-dams, and how others were provided with miniature dams which grew larger when placed in position. Mr. H. I. Smith kindly gave the writer the following account, received from an elderly Bella Coola:

Long, long ago a certain Tsmokus lived with his father, the Sun, who decided to send his child to earth. He came down to Ituna, carrying a stone beneath his arm-pit, and accompanied by a Wolf. Tsmokus made the stone into a pile-driver with a face sculptured upon it, and with this tool drove piles to make a fish-weir. After a while a number of human beings came paddling up the Bella Coola River. In course of time the Wolf returned above, but Tsmokus remained on earth catching salmon, and teaching the people the method which was in use until the last few years.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

423 sumed that ten is the largest number of traps possible at that ●614 weir. Those who have the right to that weir are the members of the ancestral family with the names of those first users. At [773] this point the logic of the Bella Coola fails to uphold the mytho-[226] logical pattern. No salmon-weir has remained in existence since the beginning of time; when one broke, owners were sometimes infants, and those who repaired the break became regarded as the rightful possessors. The system of ownership prevailing at the time of abandoning the weirs, was that individuals, not groups, had rights to certain sections of the weir [428] which were willable like other personal property. In most [431] cases this right was transmitted with a name, marking the section of weir, which had to be duly validated by presents.
[428] In other cases, the intangible ownership was willed without any mark whatever.[8] Unless bequeathed in this way, disputes were frequent. Rights of this kind were never sold although [427] an owner often leased his section for a night, or longer period, receiving goods in return, and not forfeiting his ownership [431] thereby. This was particularly common when the renter was planning to give a potlatch. No case was heard of in which the right to a certain section of salmon-weir was given to a non-member of the ancestral family. Theoretically, this was possible, but practically it would be so inconvenient that it is most unlikely ever to have occurred, since the Bella Coola is [671] never such a slave to legal privileges that he fails to be guided by common sense.

226 Although individual ownership is thus recognized with regard to sections of salmon-weirs and suitable places for [423] olachen-nets, the owner is bound to share his haul. When he catches a large number of fish, anyone, whether related to him [577] or not, can demand some. He cannot refuse, since to do so
[626] would brand him as selfish. The effective check on this system

[128] [8]Great difficulty was experienced in learning about the distribution of rights to sections of salmon-weirs. The evidence is conflicting, and though every effort was made to verify and check the above, there may be further regulations which were not learnt.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

226
lies in public opinion which expresses contempt for a lazy man 626 who is constantly begging.

To anyone familiar with the definite social groupings of a 614
tribe divided into clans or land-owning families, the ancestral family of the Bella Coola must appear as a vague and unreal unit, only distinguished by its intangibility. So it was found when investigating in the field. When information began to accumulate, it seemed as if there must be some definite obligations incumbent upon all members of the ancestral family, but none could be found. Without asking a direct question, the point was raised whether, if a man were killed, the members of his ancestral family would unite to avenge him. Conversely, [629] were they liable for the deeds of any member? In each case the reply was in the negative; these matters concern only the immediate family. In regulating marriage the ancestral family is important, since it is wise for a man or woman to seek his [582] mate within the members of that group, though it is not compulsory. Theoretically, the terms of kinship applied to members of the immediate family may be extended to members of [601] the ancestral family, but in practice this is rarely the case, [178] and, if so, is functionless. It might be argued that this somewhat wide application of kinship terms, verging on the classificatory usage, is a relic of an earlier, and now broken-down, clan system. It is impossible to prove or to deny such a contention. When trying to discover whether the members 614
of an ancestral family ever contributed to a potlatch whereby 622
one of their fellows established himself as a chief, the following 431 interesting comment was received. The previous winter the 171 informant had been in Bella Bella, and there the point was raised by a Bella Bella chief whom he quoted as follows:

"We laugh at you Bella Coola because each of you is always trying to be chief. Our system is much better; we all help our chiefs."

The man agreed with the Bella Bella man that there was an important difference between the practices of the two tribes.

614 The recent decay of Bella Coola culture may have destroyed
[183] traces of more definite obligations with respect to the ancestral family, but all the evidence indicates that it has always been a fluid unit. Its very lack of functions makes it difficult to [128] discuss, and the above account was pieced together from scraps of information collected from many different people at various times; yet, intangible though it be, it is a very real unit to the Bella Coola and pervades their life. Each individual knows those to whom he is related. In many cases the exact kinship is lost, but it is remembered that a man from such-and-such a village married a woman from another village, and it is proved from the use by their descendants of names from the same origin myth. The concept of physical strength imparted by a cloudy skin ancestry is always present and gives a person the real "power" in the village founded by those first ancestors
614 of his. For the ancestral family is usually thought of in terms
621 of villages. A man belongs to the village where his first ancestor came to earth, though he is equally a member of other towns into which his ancestors may have married. A [559] man without ancestry, without xel'xlem, is a miserable creature; he has no home in this world, or, theoretically, in the world to come. The ancestral family is a unit essentially held together by the ties of sentiment and pride of ancestry.

614 In addition to the above social elements of the ancestral 827 family, it is felt that all its members have certain tendencies. If one of the first ancestors had a certain physical peculiarity, or met with a particular kind of fortune, either good or bad, his descendants are more likely to experience the same than any other people. These tendencies may skip many generations, and may be inherited either through the mother or the father. In fact, Bella Coola belief on this point closely agrees with modern knowledge of heredity; the term for such an inheritable tendency is xelkulém or xelkumudjat. Such characteristics are:

(1) Proficiency in using tools;
(2) Ability as a hunter;

(v) The begetting of exceptionally well-behaved children; 614
(vi) The begetting of exceptionally naughty children; 827
(vii) Disposition to steal;
(viii) Uncontrollable sexual desires;
(ix) Sudden death, that is, members of certain ancestral families are less apt than others to die of disease or old age;
(x) Death by drowning. One informant, in whose family this is a tendency, has twice been thrown into the water and barely escaped. He fully expects to meet his fate in this manner;
(xi) Insanity (not a common malady); [58]
(xii) Dribbling at the mouth with increasing age;
(xiii) Liability to contract the skin disease known as fadada. 614
With regard to the transmission of this disease the surprising 827 information was received that if a relative of a sufferer should 953 drink from the same bucket or use the same spoon as the 199 patient, he is likely to contract the disease, whereas another person can use them with impunity. This statement may be based on a knowledge of germs learnt from the white man, and warped by a belief in inheritable tendencies, although it is amazing that the theory of germs could have reached the elderly Bella Coola. Possibly this statement is a relic of an old belief in the transmissibility of disease through contact, but it is more reasonable to ascribe it to white influence.

In a later chapter an account is given of certain occupational abilities, including that of carpentry, which must be confirmed and validated by presents. The above are quite different; they are either present or absent without any action on the part of the individual. 614 827

The Village Community

The village community referred to in the preceding section consists, fundamentally, of the descendants, traced in the patrilineal line, of the reputed first settlers to occupy a site. Since a Bella Coola always describes himself as a native of such-and-such a town, it follows that the village community 614 621

[549] [551] is a more obvious social grouping than the ancestral family, though it is of the lower that a man is most proud. The member of a small, unimportant village often describes himself as a native of a neighbouring, larger one where or a distance from his home, simply as a matter of convenience.

Even before the coming of the white man, village sites were abandoned and people took up their residence with friends or relatives elsewhere. In fact, mythology contains instances of [573] such migrations at the very beginning of time. In cases of this [561] kind, memory of the earlier home has been preserved for many generations, and may perhaps be the explanation of the many villages which are described as two, and which have two names. In the early days immigrants seem always to have been welcome; they added to the numerical strength of the village, and the original inhabitants enjoyed boasting to the newcomers of their descent from the first settlers. Since any group forced to abandon their own homes naturally moved to those of relatives, there is no difficulty in understanding the process by [538] which they continued to intermarry with their new neighbours. Thus two, or even more ancestral families, inhabiting one village tended to form a closely inter-related stock. In rare instances, two unrelated ancestral families may have become inhabitants of the same village, which would unquestionably lead to intermarriage.

In most cases the endogamic tendencies already described cause the village community to be largely members of one ancestral family. In addition there are always other occupants; strangers who have fled from their homes and sought [523] refuge among the Bella Coola; the offspring of illicit intercourse [527] with slaves; guests; foreigners, especially Carriers temporarily [554] resident in Bella Coola; and finally slaves, without status in the community. The real inhabitants, those whose power is firmly planted in the village, are the reputed descendants of the first group of settlers, and accordingly a relative coming to [553] dwell in a village usually endeavours to obtain a name from the origin myth of the ancestral family occupying it, and thus

G-00-Overview-5 (922-1924)945
NEB Bellacoola NEB

621 614 553

acquaintanceship with the traditions of his new home. This is another illustration of the personal tendency of the whole organization.

Politically the village is the most important Bella Coola unit. Usually, though not always related to one another, the inhabitants are always friends. If an attack is made on a village by a hostile war-party, all the inhabitants suffer equally. On the other hand, if the residents decide to attack another settlement, there is no compulsion for anyone to share the burden. Each individual, with the exception of slaves, follows his own inclination. In the case of murder or other wrong inflicted by an individual, the responsibility rests on his immediate family, not the village. Factions within the village seem to have been unimportant; individual jealousies were common, and often led to murder, but if a family became unpopular or considered itself aggrieved, it usually moved to another village. Neighbouring settlements were generally on friendly terms and often assisted each other in war, but this was not compulsory. Indeed, cases are known in which a war-party from the outer coast, about to attack Bowd, passed within a quarter of a mile of Bowd-ai without its inhabitants even warning their threatened neighbours.

628 689 578 627 628

As far as internal organization is concerned, the village is as fluid a unit as are most Bella Coola groupings. If one individual has attained a position of eminence through the potlatch system (vol. I, chap. iv), he is "chief" of the village, and his advice is generally followed. If several men have approximately the same importance, there is no dominating figure. In any case, a chief lacks executive authority, and such obedience as he receives is due to his personal influence. Some slight deference is paid to the man who uses the name of the eldest of the first group of settlers, the first chief, but this is not sufficient to warrant the title of "chief" with the significance usually attached to the term. The important members of the village are accustomed to meet for the discussion of ceremonial mat-

622 554 536

621 623 535 796

The married sons of a chief usually live in his house, and if he is very powerful the husbands of his daughters may also reside with him. Such a man is at the zenith of power, surrounded by a close group, formed of elderly relatives, of children and grandchildren. Connections by marriage are also added to the family group. At the present time, for example, one Bella Coola man is looking after his brother's widow, and it is felt that she is a member of his family. 582 536 622 602

Another way in which a rich man can increase the size of his family is by adoption. Parents who have lost an infant may adopt the child of some member of the ancestral family of either father or mother. The matter is usually arranged soon after birth, and the transfer takes place immediately after weaning. The real parents are willing since they know that the adopting parents will be able to validate valuable prerogatives and names for the child, which they themselves are unable to do. This desire for their child's welfare overrules parental love. In such cases the real father or mother can likewise bestow names and other prerogatives on the child, who really becomes a member of two families. This is often done by an old couple whose own children have married and moved away, and who thus find themselves lonely. It is considered disgraceful for parents to allow their children to be adopted by anyone not a member of their ancestral family, since that would be an admission of inability to bring up a child in the path of his ancestors. 536 597 614 [888]

"Your father was not strong," could be said to such a child as a reproach.

In the case of an orphan some wealthy relative is almost always ready to adopt him. Consequently, as he grows up, he receives his full share of the ancestral origin myth, and the names embodied therein, so that the loss of his own parents is of little consequence in the course of life. Occasionally a child is not adopted by relatives, and then his fate is indeed hard. 736 597

shelter in the house of any chief, and shared in the food which was being distributed at the almost continuous ceremonial feasts. Now, each family lives alone and no one feels any responsibility for this old man. [178]

[illegible] family are liable. It is very rare for a woman to be killed in a blood feud. A death is avenged by a death; if two persons should be slain for one murder the family which has suffered the double loss endeavours to kill another of their enemies. In [illegible] of wounding, an effort is made to wound the offender, but if he should be killed his family would try to avenge him. More often, one of the offender's family takes the initiative of offering goods to the injured family, "to cure the wound." If the offer is accepted, and the goods delivered properly, the matter is at an end. If a murder be committed within the ranks of the immediate family, for instance, if a brother kill a brother, revenge, if exacted, must be meted out to the actual offender. If requested to do so, the leading chief of a village may offer his advice, but it is always considered that revenge concerns only the immediate family.

Revenge is a topic which shows clearly the material fluidity of the family. There are no well-defined degrees of relationship within which responsibility rests. Instead, everyone knows, in the open life of the community, how many persons share the family life of the individual, and they alone are held to account, or they alone demand compensation. From its very nature, the family must be a bilateral unit which, when powerful, stretches out to absorb members of the ancestral families of both mother and father.

Not only does the family thus appear constantly to be attracting to itself members of the ancestral family of either parent, but these relatives themselves are deeply interested in the affairs of the family. This is most clearly shown in the case of children who, of course, are members of the ancestral family of both their mother and father. A few days after birth some relative is expected to call together the people of the village where the child is born for the bestowal and validation of an ancestral name. It is considered an evidence of poverty if this is done by the father, as if his child were only supported by his parents, not by a larger circle of relatives. It is immaterial whether this gathering be called by a relative of the father or the mother. In June, 1900, a Bella Coola girl had reached the age of about six months without having received a name. There was much adverse criticism about the paucity of her father's father and her mother's father, who were held equally to blame, but who had really been deterred by fear of the law prohibiting the potlatch.

As a child grows older he is helped in the performance of ceremonial rites by his parents and by their brothers and sisters. In this, too, it is considered a mark of poverty if only the parents take part. If a man's own children do not appear likely to carry on the traditions of his ancestral family, he has no hesitation in favouring the children of either a brother or sister, since, like his own, they are all members of the same ancestral family. Especially in Kimsquit* it is customary for a man to help his sisters' children; not that there is any lack of knowledge of the real father, but rather as a mark of respect and family feeling displayed by a man to his sister. Moreover, in both Bella Coola proper and in Kimsquit, it is most improper for a name which a man has raised to a position of dignity by the expenditure of much goods to be passed to his own son; it should go to a distant relative. When a father validates a name for his child it should be one long dormant.

One aspect of the manner in which the family merges imperceptibly into the ancestral family can be seen in the inheritance of names. When a man calls his relatives together to make his will he is guided in the choice of recipients by the characteristics of his children. An able son receives much from his father, but lazy children are slighted without hesitation. This is particularly true of names with which are bound up valuable dance prerogatives, whereas, as previously mentioned, ancestral names of which the importance depends on the value of the goods distributed in connection with them, usually owner to the ancestral family and can be owned by any member of it. It seems needless to publish lengthy pedigrees, illustrating the transmission of ancestral names; it will suffice to say that such ancestors pass from father to son, from a man to his brother's son, his sister's son, his sister, his daughter, or to other relatives belonging to the immediate family. On the other hand, with equal frequency, names pass from a man to distant relatives of the same ancestral family.

*According to an intelligent Bella Coola informant, a Bella Bella pays greater attention to the children of his brothers and sisters than to his own offspring, and the same man expressed the opinion that the Kimsquit practice was due to Bella Bella influence. Kimsquit informants denied this, though emphasizing the important part taken by an uncle in obtaining prerogatives for his sisters' children, in some cases to the detriment of his own, which is rare in Bella Coola.

Thus the Bella Coola family, important though it is in the life of the individual, cannot be defined with exactitude either as regards composition or functions; it varies according to the importance of its head, and tends to merge in the ancestral families of the parents.

Kinship Terms

In Bella Coola, as in so many parts of the world, kinship terms mirror the social life of the community. The Bella Coola system of nomenclature is not so clear-cut in its application as in other regions, and requires considerable explanation concerning the uses of many of the terms. It will be seen that the system, although fundamentally founded on the family, presents many classificatory features. Whether or not these are to be ascribed to an ancient clan system is most doubtful; a short discussion of that point will be found at the end of this section.

The terms are arranged in the following order: first, an individual's relatives of the preceding generation, then those of the next preceding, with their parents, then those of the present generation, followed by terms for kin of the generations following. Finally come relations by marriage.

TERM	MEANT AMONG MEN	MEANT AMONG WOMEN
Father	This term is properly used only by a small child, though often employed by an adult as a term of endearment.	Term used only by a small child.

[195]

601

	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]

[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
601 [illegible] Female relatives of the same ancestral family and generation as the speaker	.....	[illegible]
Child	[illegible]	[illegible]
Son, until twelve or thirteen years old	Tsi, a term of endearment used for any small child, or by name. Use of the personal name becomes more frequent with increasing age.	[illegible]
[551] Son, when adult	By name, or [illegible].	By name or small (name) [illegible]
Daughter, until twelve or thirteen years of age	Tsi, a term of endearment used for any small girl, or by name. Use of the personal name becomes more frequent with increasing age.
Daughter, when adult	By name; infantile term of endearment is also sometimes used.	By name.
Stepchild	Same as for own child.
Brother's child or Sister's child	Usually by some terms as own children, merely as a mark of endearment, also own. Corresponding to the use of [illegible] where [illegible] is usually applicable, [illegible] is used in some cases instead of own.	own. Depending on the composition of the family, this term is in many cases applied to the children of an own if they form part of the family group.
Son's child or Daughter's child	Usually as for own child, or by name, or [illegible]. This last is merely the term for indirect address, with the endearing suffix, [illegible].	[illegible]
Descendants	.....	[illegible] or [illegible]. Terms used [illegible] to describe a man with many descendants. The latter term means "manyman."
[614] Family	.....	[illegible] the [illegible] family, those who claim descent from one group of ancestors, even though their exact relationship has been forgotten.

differentiate between cross- and ortho-cousins, and the unsystematic groupings of nephews and nieces show "family," as opposed to classificatory, principles. Finally, ancestral terms for the ancestral family, for many ancestors, and many descendants, correspond to the importance of a large number of relatives in Bella Coola thought.

In many parts of the world the classificatory system of relationship occurs where the community is divided into clans. The occurrence of some of these features among the Bella Coola raises the question of whether or not they should be regarded as survivals from an earlier clan form of social organization. The Bella Coola may once have had clans, but their relationship system does not furnish any real evidence to this effect. The reciprocal terms really have the significance, "Relation by marriage of the same generation," or "of a generation once removed," a form of address which does not require explanation in any ancient form of social organization. Moreover, the importance of the eldest child, as potential transmitter of the glories of the ancestral family, is sufficient reason for differentiating brothers and sisters in terms of their relative ages. This feature suggests that in former times this was more important than it has been in the recent past. It is not implied that the Bella Coola never had a clan system, as such may have been the case many generations ago, but their kinship terminology can be explained without that hypothesis. The somewhat wide application to cousins of terms which are properly limited to brothers and sisters may easily have been derived from a process of copying. The Bella Coola are well acquainted with the clan system of the northern coastal tribes, so that it is by no means impossible, or unlikely, that they should have adopted the principle of applying the same kinship term to many individuals, and hence to members of their own ancestral families. Finally, the somewhat vague and unsystematic application of terms to relatives according to whether or not they are members of the immediate family, is a feature not at all surprising in view of the essential fluidity of Bella

184 unconditional. Boys and girls helped their parents, and there 496 was no definite age at which they ceased to do so. The fluidity
* 556 of the Bella Coola system was contrary to any standardization.
The more important a chief became, the more did he receive from dependent relatives, but the more did they expect in the way of "return presents." It was advantageous to be generous, within the family circle as well as without, since life was so public that every transaction even of a "private" nature, was well known. Unquestionably, a greedy and strong-minded individual must frequently have taken advantage of help from his kinsmen, but there was no strict code of ethics to regard to this. In brief, it may be said that the acquisition of wealth was an unconditional, individual, matter; its distribution was likewise according to individual volition, although within a rigidly defined tribal pattern.

Sneed Secrecy

551 The ancestral names that chiefs desire to raise to a position
* 556 of eminence are usually embodied in myths dealing with the 575 first settlement of this earth, names which belong, as has been 614 stated, to the ancestral family. Many of these traditions [595] record other designations as well, each of which carries with it the prerogative of performing a type of dance known as sneed.
These will be spoken of, henceforth, as sneed names. The Bella Coola do not know the meaning of this term. These [553] names, like ancestral ones, are the potential property of members of the ancestral family, but can only be assumed when duly validated by presents. Such an assumption follows a 553 period of seclusion in the back-room of the house. Both men
* 556 and women are eligible. A person may be secluded in this way 575 a number of times, acquiring a new sneed name on each occa-[562] sion, but as presents must be distributed every time, it follows that only the children or relatives of wealthy chiefs can be so favoured. It is desirable to have the bestowal of a sneed name occur at a potlatch, since guests from foreign tribes are then he may now repay with one hundred and fifty blankets. The amount of the original present will be announced, so that it is made known that he is repaying with 50 per cent interest. This completes the transaction. The man who receives the additional fifty blankets is not required to repay them, though he may endeavour to do so, should he wish to add to his own fame. It is sufficient if X pays back the principal only, though in that case he does not increase his prestige. No claim is ever made for the repayment of an investment present; repayment is so obviously to the advantage of the debtor that there is no necessity for dunning. A man who did so would expose himself to the ridicule of the community; it would demonstrate that he thought in terms of goods, whereas a chief is expected to give presents as if they were a mere nothing.

On rare occasions a chief has been unable to repay his investment presents. In the autumn of 1911, a Bella Bella chief, aided by his son, prepared to give a potlatch, and the news spread far and wide. But during the summer the young man accidentally shot himself while deer-hunting. The father realized that, bereft of his son's assistance, he would be unable to repay even the principal of his indebtedness. He wept with grief. A disgrace of this kind affects the man and all who are in any way related to him, so he called upon his relatives, and they gave him sufficient money to save the situation. In such a case, nobody is compelled to contribute aid, but a feeling of compassion is at work, as well as a vague sense of family pride. One Bella Coola gave this chief $20, although all that was remembered about his relationship to the Bella Bella man was that one of his ancestors had married a woman from the village of the Bella Bella chief. Particular inquiries were made to ascertain whether or not the disgrace of failure to repay would fall on the ancestral family and whether they were legally bound to contribute. Such is decidedly not the Bella Coola concept; only feelings of pride and affection govern the contributions. Assistance of that kind is given without witnesses,

[illegible] 203 56 *

As with so many elements of culture, the Bella Coola 103 ascribe the origin of heralds to the wish of Sparrow as ex- 173 pressed to the first people in the beginning of time. Some 551 groups of these early settlers brought with them heralds whose names had been created by the supreme deity himself in his house in the land above. Such a one was Sqqa'l'l who was a member of Kimsam's (I, p. 340) party at Kimsquit, another was Qlqlmax who came with xpaqxpaq (I, p. 394). These heralds functioned in the manner of their descendants of today, others of the first chiefs appointed certain of their relatives to perform this service, and by reason of the power with which they were endowed, created names with respect to their functions. Besides his ordinary name every herald must have an ancestral appellation of some kind, as well as the probability of possessing tsaxiut ones in addition to those of a professional nature. Either by bringing with them from above, or by creation on this earth, each group of first settlers became provided with a herald, whose name is embodied in the ancentral myth describing their experiences. As each of the first heralds died, his name was passed to a successor, and this [428] practice has been carried out from generation to generation until the present. The Bella Coola state that no new names for heralds have been created since the time of the first people, and it is certain that none has been made for many years.
Consequently, the number of heralds is strictly limited in accordance with mythological beliefs, and every man who owns one of the ancient designations embodied in an origin myth knows the name of the herald associated with his first namesake.

At the death of a herald his name becomes dormant. Since 203 heralds function at all ceremonies, whether or not the donor 553 belongs to the same ancestral family as themselves, the mem- 556 *
bers of the group sustaining the loss are not deprived of their 614 ● 424

203 353 *556 614 [124] serious. None the less, one of their prized prerogatives, the visible embodiment of an element in their ancestral myth, is no longer present. In such circumstances, no member of an ancestral family would give a potlatch unless able to revive at it the dormant name in a new herald. The intending donor usually consults with the senior members of the ancestral family as to a suitable incumbent, or especially if he is an influential chief, he very simply use his own discretion. In either case, some relatively young member of the ancestral family is offered the post. If he accepts, the matter is settled; if not, another is invited in his stead. The new herald cannot function until his name and appointment have been validated by the distribution of presents at the potlatch. Such gifts are not returnable, since they are held to "have become nothing" for the name. Relatively lavish expenditure for this purpose is one of the many ways in which a chief is able to show his prowess and generosity. Thus established, a herald can carry out his duties thenceforth. He functions at every ceremonial, but especially at potlatches given by members of his own ancestral family, in whose origin myth his own name is embodied. From [627] [196] constant participation in all kinds of ceremonials, a herald becomes conversant with every type, and is appealed to as arbiter in difficult points of ritual, thus adding to his reputation.

203 *556 Although acceptance of the post of herald somewhat curtails a man's activities in other respects, instances are known of energetic ones using the gifts received to establish themselves as chiefs, passing on their herald names at the same time to other incumbents. More often, a herald uses his wealth for the benefit of a son or other relative, being satisfied with his own status in the community. He takes a prominent part in every ceremony and is a person of some standing, yet is spared the responsibility of actually giving rites himself, a position which offers many attractions to a man lacking great ambition and initiative.

1:96:Swanton E-5 (1902-1924)948
NES Bellacoola NES

Totem-Poles

A feature embodied in many ancestral myths is a description of the totem-pole[1] erected by a group of the first people, either according to a design given them by Alqantun, or in consequence of their experiences on this earth. It is the privilege of a chief descended from that group to erect such a pole, under the same restrictions as apply to the portrayal and use of other features belonging, not to him individually, but to the ancestral family as a whole. Totem-poles are also frequently erected to depict incidents connected with the ancestors of a chief, even if there is no mention of one in his ancestral myth. In either case, the setting-up is a source of pride to the chief, especially as it emphasizes the importance of his ancestors, and its display must be duly validated. Theoretically, this may be done at a gathering of less importance than a potlatch, but in practice it occurs at no other ceremony, since a chief wealthy enough to erect a pole naturally desires it to be seen by as many persons as possible.

Poverty limits the number of totem-poles, but is not sufficient to account for their relative rarity. It is a matter of pride for a chief in whose ancestral myth there is mention of a pole to erect one, but all myths do not include totem-poles. Consequently the absence of one before the door of the chief's house is not proof of the owner's poverty or lack of importance. This matter was investigated with great care, and all the older people reiterated that the number and size of their poles were never as great as among the northern tribes.

When a chief is preparing for a potlatch, he allots, among other carpentry tasks, the construction of a totem-pole, if he is sufficiently wealthy to reward the artisan and to validate the erection in the customary manner. If a special design is embodied in the ancestral myth containing the name which he is about to assume, or to make strong, he indicates that design to the carpenter. In the story of Alkwi (I, p. 312), for

[1] Ashaitl, "Outside Post."

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

the same manner the fluent speaker outlines a myth belonging 537 to the ancestral family of X's mother, again with emphasis on 585 the dancers used by her ancestors. X, as a member of both ancestral families, can combine his rights from both sides, but it is customary for him to use no more than five or six performers. Should X have no claim to this privilege from either mother or father, an almost unthinkable situation, he is able [426] to borrow the prerogative of using some from friends. The sentiment on which this oration of myths is based is the one so often mentioned; it marks the close relationship between the future children and their noble ancestors of old, a source of strength to the former.

X's father now names those whom he wishes to assist him 585 on the following day. These are the dancers, who are chosen [595] primarily for their skill in dancing, and secondarily in accordance with their rank. With them he selects a number of persons to stand near and help or "cherish" them as they perform. He also asks the services of some of the women who are professional droners; of the keeper of the marriage song of his [614] ancestral family; and, finally, of a number of men to sit near the singers and assist them with suggestions. It would be most exceptional for anyone so called upon to decline the honour. It is near morning by this time and the guests depart.

On the following morning, the actual wedding day, X's father calls to his house those selected the previous evening as dancers and their assistants. The former wear blankets decorated with small copper ornaments[1] and carry circular wooden [534] rattles provided with handles. Their clothing and rattles may be their own, but if they do not possess suitable attire, it is incumbent on X's father to provide them. Skins are piled up within the house, and some of these are said to "make soft the

[1] At the present time there is uncertainty as to the proper clothing of a marriage dancer. Several informants stated that it was a copper-decorated blanket, whereas others said that there was no special attire; one man claimed that an attempt was made to imitate the form and costume of X's first ancestor, and another that russel costume was used. Probably there was no uniformity in custom. [292] [535] [184]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

585 handles of the rattles"; symbolizing that they are pads to protect the hands, though the dancers derive no benefit from the pelts, which are stacked with others for later distribution to Y's family. A large amount of provisions has been prepared and placed in boxes, one for each member of Y's family. In many cases it is difficult to estimate how much food will be required, and if there is a surplus, it is eaten by the performers and other assistants.

When all are ready they rush forth; dancers, dancers' assistants, and young relatives of X, followed more sedately by his father. The rest of the villagers watch with interest, but do not take part in the ceremony. Choosing a position outside Y's house, the singers beat the time of the marriage [533] song used by X's ancestors; if the words are known they sing [424] them. Like the prerogative of marriage dancers, there may [426] not be a marriage song embodied in every origin myth, but if X lacks such he is usually able to borrow one.[6] The keeper of the song is stationed near the singers, ready to help them with the words or the tune, if necessary. Meanwhile the [535] dancers are performing on the sidewalk outside Y's house. Each uses whatever type of dance he chooses, kuxiat, nuaxk, a'alk, or even shaman's, but all dance simultaneously, though without paying greater attention to each other than is [533] necessary to avoid collisions. The professional droners accompany the singing with their high-pitched quaver.

Meanwhile Y's father, surrounded by his relatives and friends, waits in readiness within their house. Y herself is [6] The reputed origin of marriage songs has been described in vol. I, chap. vi. They are less strongly preserved as prerogatives than most elements of origin myths; in fact some keepers of the songs are willing to perform at any wedding, although this may be a modern development. The keeper, either man or woman, is chosen by the senior members of the ancestral family, after discussion with the singers. It is his duty to remember text and tune, and the only pecuniary advantage is from the presents made by those to whom he teaches it. Some songs have words, others only a tune. The text of a song brought down by Alpaxstan to Snalle'ai is:

"Hello, Sanalalai! We do as we have done before. Please make good the path for those who are about to marry."

Alpaxstan obtained this song from his heavenly namesake and used it at his own marriage, as his male descendants have since done.

[614]

764 while the relatives are preparing the body for disposal. For a child, these services are performed by the parents; for a married man whose parents are dead, by his brothers and other kindred; for a married woman, by her husband or the members of her own family. If she has borne no children, it is customary for her relatives to carry out the funeral rites, especially if she has been many times rebought from her husband. If such repayment has not been made, it is considered correct for a husband to bury his wife, although it is a point of honour for her relatives to reimburse him later for his expenditure. On the other hand, when children have been born and financial assistance mutually given and received several times, it is proper for the husband to perform the funeral rites, although he may receive assistance from his wife's kinsmen. There is no rigid ruling on the point, but bickerings seldom occur in connection with disposal of the dead. Members of the ancestral family are ready to assist in every case, both on account of the disgrace that would follow a niggardly funeral, and also as a means of displaying their wealth. [614] [556]

The first essential is to wash the body, a rite performed by men for a man, by women for a woman. It is immaterial who does this though some of the relatives usually volunteer. Neither husband nor wife touches a dead consort, though it is said that long ago a man would hold intercourse with a deceased wife to indicate his excessive grief. The most influential member of the immediate family takes the lead in the various necessary acts, although there is always endless discussion and advice from members of the ancestral family and others interested. A nose-ring is placed in the septum of the corpse; if this is omitted, the body will not be able to dissolve into its elements but will range the earth as a walking phantom, causing injury to anyone who observes it. If the deceased has just eaten some of the first run of spring salmon or olachen, a shaman washes out his mouth with a sponge of undyed cedar-bark which he throws into the river. The essence of the salmon is thus extracted from the body; if [839] [301] [175] [825]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Indeed, a grave is never 965 disturbed except, rarely, when it is necessary to obtain a [789] portion of a skeleton for magical purposes. In such a case, the coffin lid must be lifted up on the side away from the [961] opener, so that he looks within over its upturned edge. A person failing to obey this injunction will soon die.

968 Burning or deposition near the grave is not restricted to the actual utensils and artifacts of the deceased. There, too, must be laid dried salmon which a man has smoked for winter use, as well as pulverized berries and other foods made ready [964] by a woman; to eat food prepared by a dead person seems indescribably indecent. In recent years, the crop, if a man dies after tilling and sowing a field, is allowed to ripen, and then rot unharvested. So, too, the canoe in which a body has been brought home must be destroyed. The Bella Coola are not always able to state reasons for these actions, but it is [961] apparent that the underlying sentiment is that the taboo of [789] death lies upon any object prepared by the deceased, or that has been in contact with a corpse.

964 The rituals described above may be considered as religious in nature; almost equally important are the social require-431 ments of paying those who have assisted at a funeral. This 556 indebtedness falls on the near relatives, though all members of the ancestral family are obligated in a somewhat indefinite [614] manner. If a canoe has been destroyed that did not belong to the deceased, the owner must be recompensed. Presents must be given to the pall-bearers, to the woman who bore the flaming bark, to the grave-diggers, to those who delivered laudatory orations, and to all others who assisted in any way.
Failure to do so brands the relatives as misers with little respect for the deceased; lavish recompense shows that they have the outlook and minds of chiefs. Consequently, even poor people try to give as generous rewards as possible, both for their own sakes and out of respect to the dead person. Unfortunately, it was impossible to obtain details of the ceremony at which this takes place. The increase in wealth in recent years has made it possible to give memorial potlatches soon after death

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

969 sum being used for each name, and the bills were displayed
*556 before messengers carried them to the recipients.

Finally, Jim Pollard took the opportunity to bestow on 553 Captain Schooner the name, Snusilkāls. This designation
425 was the property of the donor's ancestral family and should [614] not have been transmitted without the consent of all its mem-[622] bers. Jim had probably informed several of them of his intention, but no objections would have been raised if he had overlooked this courtesy, since he is the only numitl chief among them, and the only one with determination and prestige. It was not an outright gift, since it was announced that it must be returned to the donor's family on Captain Schooner's death. Jim Pollard acted as his own announcer for this transaction, explaining that he gave the name in gratitude for the help which Captain Schooner had rendered at the death of his, Jim's, father about twenty years before. He promised that at the earliest opportunity he would give presents to validate the transmission.

969 During the lengthy distribution of money, the audience had
*556 shown unmistakable signs of weariness. It was now between 2.00 and 3.00 A.M., and as soon as Jim had finished speaking the guests dispersed quietly, though many of them gathered in groups in one another's houses to discuss what had taken place.

Captain Schooner slept late after the lengthy ceremony, but was proud and contented when interviewed about noon. He felt that what was fitting for his daughter had been performed, and was willing to take the consequences of having broken the law.

968 Little else of note occurred in connection with Jessie's funeral. Samuel King deposited near her grave a sewing-machine which his wife had used for only a short time and Captain Schooner decided to replace this with an older one belonging to his wife. He made this exchange on the afternoon of June 30, when Samuel, in company with a number of women, was burning the rest of Jessie's clothing and possessions. Captain Schooner explained his act by saying:

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

has gone contrary to something about which there has been universal agreement for generations. 771 754

To understand Bella Coola medicines it is, therefore, necessary to regard them as concepts deep rooted in tribal history, and made potent by the suggestibility of those who practise them. This can be most clearly illustrated with regard to those effecting death, but is equally true with regard to all medicines, whether curative or causative. 828 [784] [755]

There remain for consideration the sociological aspects of medicines. Knowledge of most remedies has been handed down for generations as the property of ancestral families. Some are acquainted with one or two "cures," some with many, and some with none at all. The name of the discoverer of a particular medicine is usually lost in antiquity, though it is often attributed to someone described in the family's myth. Like other possessions based on mythology, a remedy of this type can be practised by any member of the group to which it belongs. If it is observed that a certain individual is using one of these successfully, others will ask him to apply it for them. Payment is always expected, but the sum varies enormously, depending upon the efficacy of the remedy, the difficulty of operation, the generosity of the person benefited, and so many diverse factors that no general conclusions can be made. A patient may observe the details of the treatment, but unless he is entitled to it, he would never dream of using it himself. This is due not only to honesty, but to the conviction that only a person with the inherited right to a certain cure can perform it successfully. Rarely, such knowledge is sold or given away outright, but, like other possessions of an ancestral family, this usually leads to friction and jealousy on the part of those overlooked. Some of the simple herbal remedies are common knowledge and are used by all, since remembrance of their ownership, if it ever existed, has been lost. At the present time it is difficult to learn details of proprietorship of some medicines, but these are indicated whenever possible. 424 755 757 [614] [465] [614] [425]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

(i) Brought from above as a present from Ālqunstem.
(j) One of the dancer's first ancestors.
(k) Combined themes such as this, referring both to the approaching potlatch and the dancer's origin myth, are common at potlatches and kukusiutek.

599*

am'hl·a Song Used for Ḵ̄amspoxtmom of Kimsquit(a)

A Ḵ̄aiyeɛmālaxa | skānuqomnapilsdax | ḵ̄ismaiustadax | se·itamshḵ̄ālsaix Presently the people who lack prerogatives will envy(b) what I possess. Because dānuɛmaiyelist | dam'hl·asadai

it increases annually, it is am'hl·a(c).

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

*B Samk'ānax·adomdax | P̄ōnpalōtsdimat | 'an'nā'asamy*ʷ*mis*
In the beginning there came down | Pōnpalōtsdimat(d) | with his river(e).

Shawamāsīpis | tsqwanqwanimālsnats | moakas·wals
He seats himself | at the mouth | of the "Heavy One"(f).

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

C The last part has been forgotten(g).

(a) Recorded as song VII D 30*a*, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.
(b) The word nuqom, which is translated as envy, is used only for the desire of ancestral prerogatives which can never be attained except by those who are members of the ancestral family concerned. [424] [614]
(c) It was impossible to obtain literal translations of the subdivisions.
(d) A name which Smooan (I, p. 332) took for himself on earth. It is claimed that the composers of this song erred in using this designation.
(e) Smooan came down to the Kimsquit River, but the grandiloquent phrasing expresses the sentiment that man and stream came together.
(f) The Kimsquit River is sometimes termed Wōkas as its name as chief. This designation was obtained by Smooan from Bella Bella, with his marriage to a woman of that tribe, and bestowed by him on the river. [103] [424]
(g) This song was used during the winter of 1923-4 and nearly led to friction. It is claimed that the right to the name Ḵ̄amspoxtmom was lent to a Kimsquit man who failed to return it. The borrower has been dead many years, but when his son proceeded to dance, one of the singers who was related to the original lender refused to take part in the singing. [578] [426] [424]

Ṯlaiyāham Song Used for a Kimsquit Man(a)

A anx·shqodja | aiyadiomtaipas | ditwinamldada | aiyawamnukwals
I have obtained | the ancestral right | which displayed | my forefathers(b).

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*533 B Sisstotsyuoo | ałtzułt | sta'ałłsdułsłsi | dismatumpłjt
Go within | my house, | I am giving food | to my friends.

[WOODLASS CHORUS]

C The third part of this song has been forgotten.

[614] [424] [685] [609]

(a) Recorded as song VII D 28b, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard. It is said that this song has been handed down for generations in an ancestral family; they now regard it as a family possession and would consider its use by others to be stealing.

(b) Many years ago a solitary Bella Bella used to paddle to Kimsquit almost every year. He was dressed like a chief and had the mien of one, so that his hosts assumed him to be a person of importance. It was later found that he was a poor man. The mocking of foreigners is a common theme of a'alk songs.

am'ła'a Song Used for Xmnmlais(a)

*533 575 578 A Nałsqałłsłsstsmamqualsas | ałłwsmasłłła
He has fallen so that his buttocks are uppermost, | Hail(b)!

Demnmalsas imat | słsuiatłsłsi
He has come to hurt, | that łsuiat(c).

[WOODLASS CHORUS]

B and C. The second and third parts have been forgotten.

(a) Recorded as song VII D 3c, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.

(b) A mockingly deferential salutation used in a'alk songs describing the łsłsuiat.

(c) Xmnmlais was an a'alk who is said to have seen a Cannibal łsuiat when the latter was supposed to be in the land above. A song was composed about the incident, and the above fragment has been remembered for many years. Xmnmlais was initiated into the łsuiat society; see vol. II, p. 265.

*533 575 796 203 As already described, whenever a dancer is performing, the women utter a peculiar high-pitched drone and the heralds call out remarks suitable to the occasion. A phonograph record[1] was made of the drone, followed by a cry suitable for either sisaok or a'alk dances. The following words are virtually sung:

Yałsałłimat | sstłumpałsis
Do not err, | chiefs.

[1]Recorded as song VII D 29c, National Museum of Canada.

#192 ʼatstmap, "Come and eat": Invitation to the ʼatsaist to assemble in a performer's house.
ʼatsha: House beams.
ʼaut-ste: Messenger bearing invitation to a potlatch.
[752] ʼaddzap: Massage.
[585] ʼaddzawak: 1—Presents, regarded as clothing, etc., given by the groom's relatives to the bride's kinsmen when the latter visit his house on the wedding day.
[431] 2—Other presents given by the husband's relatives to the wife's kinsmen prior to her repurchase.
[583] ʼawaqʼist, "The Throwing Off of a Heavy Burden from the Shoulders": Said of the repayment by a wife's relatives of presents received from her husband's kinsmen.
ʼawalstste: 1—Battering-ram.
2—The destruction of the house of a chief who is about to give a potlatch.
ʼaxlqaʼdam: One of the names of the supreme god.
[201] ʼqalmastem: Notification, by pressure on the foot, to a chief to go to the meeting-place.
[533] ʼsalsaam: The employment of feminine stick-beating.
ʼsqlo-mem: Hot Springs on South Bentinck Arm.
ʼsstskqalmas, "The Hearing": Synonym for ʼalstem, q.v.; this is a Kimsquit term only.
ʼt-qimut: Kwiatam rite in which the performer appears to be burnt to death.
ʼt-qualtem: The casting of ʼsaist masks on the fire.
ʼtymuk, "Far from the River": Village on the upper Kimsquit River.
[847] ʼtsaal: Abortion.
ʼt-wetla, "Disappointed": said of the supernatural beings called by a wáʼá dancer who arrive too late for the potlatch.

ulka: Slave from the lower Fraser owned in Kimsquit during the last century.
[101] ulmaktamp: Bella Coola term for the Bella Bella.
ulmaktaskstamas: Half-brother or half-sister.
[601] umlk: 1—Man.
2—Son; term used by old person in direct address to adult.
3—Husband.
[614] umlkato: Male relatives of same ancestral family.
umlkiles: Women who performs man's work.
[601] umlkstato: Single brother in a family with several sisters.
umulki, plural, umulkaki: Small boy, especially son; term used in indirect address.
[431] ʼqalla, "Working Clothes": Presents given by the relatives of the future bride [584] to the kinsmen of the future bridegroom at the first announcement of the engagement. The implication is that they will have to labour industriously to obtain the wealth necessary for the marriage.
[821] uminaxal: Cold wind of the mornings, semi-anthropomorphized.
usaly: Bella Bella term for the ustay.
[563] ustay: Bella Coola term for the people of mixed Bella Bella-Kimsquit stock who inhabited the shores of Dean Channel.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

#192

ksholmut: Kwiat name of a Nuxalk man.
ksla'wimut: Kwiat name of a Bella Coola man.
[824] kspel: Inner bark of cedar.
ksnishwut, "A Stripping Off": The giving, on demand, by a marriage dancer of his clothing to a herald.
'ksowapsilaix: Supernatural name of Raven.
[828] ksuaix, "Frenzied": Term applied to Cannibals and other destructive kukusiut when in a state of madness.
ksyum: Occasional exclusion of all but the singers from a house where a shaman is performing.
ksowaxwaxlaix: Kitsaquit man mentioned in an ancient story.
ksowatman: Kwiat name, probably of Kwakiutl origin.

M

Ma'ulus: Female dancer mentioned in a Raven story.
Malkiut: Kwiat name of a Kemgaix man.
[601] mama, mamia, mamas: Mother, term used by children.
Mamaiya: Celebrated Xenaix hunter.
[825] mam-aiya: Butterfly.
mam-gila: Measuring worm.
[824] mam-ia: Fly, insect.
ma'mukia: Swamp gooseberry.
[601] mda: 1—Father, common term in indirect address.
2—Occasional designation for the supreme deity.
mendimut: Stepfather.
[614] mesmesuks: Elderly male relatives of same ancestral family.
Mexmy: 1—One of the first men to settle at Nuklum in the beginning of time.
2—Form of the name Dudexmy when used by a male child.
Mexmy-aw-a: Form of the name Dudexmy when used by a female child.
Mistalitlawk: One of the supernatural Carpenters.
Mistipawuk: One of the supernatural Carpenters.
[804] mi-kp: Measure of distance equal to the breadth of one thumb plus one finger.
[825] mi-ny': Toad.
mitipa: Supernatural giant toad.
mitlin: Salmon eggs.
mu-mqin: Old male sea-lion.
[825] mu-sutkha: Water ouzel.
Mkqmtsis: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Mkusstilas, "Long Neck": One of the supernatural names of Great Blue Heron.
[601] mnsai-i: Co-husband in a polyandrous household.
[824] mu'usal-i: One of the paralys.
mqlul: Berry, black in colour.
Mkumsklitma: Generic term for the four supernatural Carpenters.
mumkulp: Spruce.
Mlal'ula: One of the first men to settle at Ialla in the beginning of time.
Mlalhamu: Land of salmon.
[224] Ml'uh: Mountain in the upper Bella Coola valley.
mlu-a: Stick carried by hunters when penetrating into the mountains.
[824] mlla': Red bearberry.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

mixmixfulp: Leaf of salalberry.

mla·wadjut: 1—Omen of misfortune, such as preceded the outbreak of smallpox, hence, [824]
2—Smallpox. [787]

mlka: Type of sea-going canoe with raised prow and small stern.

mna, vocative, mnao: Child. [601]

Mnakais: Supreme god when addressed in prayer.

mnk': Excreta.

mnmuntı, vocative, mnmuntcân·i: Ancestral family, practically equivalent to children when used by an old person. [614]

mnskânmaxta: The commemoration of a chief's potlatches and other major ceremonies by means of plain posts erected near his grave. [211]

Mntlato·mm, Tide-Measurer: A supernatural being. [764]

Mstelos: Man mentioned in a song.

Mtlakila: Supernatural being who gives potency to ssook rites.

mtletsta: Grandiloquent expression used by the kukusiut with reference to the way in which supernatural beings govern the length of human lives. [776] mtlalosâm: 1—The condition of being within range of speech and vision. The term is used to describe relations formerly existing between the dead and the living. [775]

2—To visit, term used with reference to the coming of a masked representation of a dead person; the significance is similar to that expressed in the first meaning.

mok': Pounded, dyed cedar-bark used to decorate ceremonial objects.

mokwuk: Head-ring of cedar-bark worn by kusiut initiates in the upper Bella Coola valley.

mopla: Lice. [825]

mopwila: Adolescent youth.

moxmoxk': Blue grouse.

mormouthlokânda: Dentalium-shell ear-rings worn by adolescent girls during seclusion. [301]

mu: Hand net for catching olachen. [227]

mudcâmkekta: Yellow cedar stave decorated with swan feathers such as is carried by a Mystery dancer.

mustomu: Wrestling.

Mutan·a: Rivers Inlet man living in the last century.

N

Nain'akwas: One of the first men to settle at Smith Inlet in the beginning of time.

Nâ'mu: Bella Bella village; the Anglicized form is Namu.

nân·: Grizzly bear. [825]

Nanantis: Name received from Grizzly Bear by a Kimsquit man in the beginning of time.

Nânâll: Kusiut name of a Nusfulst man.

Nanâtskwi: One of the first men to settle at Stmx in the beginning of time.

Nanâlskwil: One of the names of Mount Nusfulst as chief.

nân·lmnt: Non-ceremonial weeping, usually individual, and always with real feeling. [827]

Naos: Indeterminate locality in the distant east. [15.2]

 192*

numao, vocative, numaotao: Member of same sex and same ancestral family as speaker. [601]

Numätlam: Supernatural being who comes with Noätqmm to bring a call to the latter's protégé. [614]

Numelshmut: One of the names of Great Blue Heron as chief.

numitl: 1—A passage, especially the digestive tract. [826]
2—Laudatory adjective applied to chiefs, referring to goods distributed.

numnumktäs: Toilet-hole.

numlutsmam: Recompense, virtually pay, given to carpenters and other craftsmen at a mourning ceremony. [465]

numnälnmmax: Exchange marriage. [583] numpälotlmm: Passenger.

Nu·mts: Place near Nulkax.

Nunäxmälaix: Kusiut name created by ɩɩyuyuɩ at Kimsquit in the beginning of time.

nunmaoi di mänao: Half-brother or sister with different mother from speaker. [601]

nunmaoi ici stänao: Half-brother or sister with different father from speaker.

Nunnaxa'as, "The Inhospitable One": Name taken by a wife in consequence of slights received from her husband's relatives.

Nunuäxmusk: One of the four supernatural eagle-like creatures.

Nunudjigmm: Supernatural being who created repositories in the beginning of time.

Nunulnusk: One of the four supernatural eagle-like creatures.

Nunulpänem: House occupied by the first settlers at Nutqmalt in the beginning of time.

nunu·l'stimut: The use of potent medicines after seeing a giant toad.

nunulkwutstmm or nunulkwutstimut: 1—The giving of hemlock-bark and dyed cedar-bark to Tlitcaplilu·a. [782]
2—The making of offerings to ghosts by the casting of food on a fire. [775]

Nunumu·sk: One of the four supernatural eagle-like creatures.

Nununaixikdimut: Male supernatural being who travels with Noätqmm, takes charge of the singers who also accompany him, and sometimes dances happily.

Nunuska: Mother Nature.

nunupp: Fisherman with inherited right to use of a salmon-weir or of a place for catching olachen. [424]

nunqomamälq, "A Calling Back", or "A Seizing": Term applied to the death of a chief in the belief that it is due to the supernatural artisans having come down to carry him off. The word is often added to their designation. [226] [761]

Nunuqmäli, "Where Water Entered": House of one of the first groups of settlers at Kimsquit in the beginning of time.

Nunuqualaints: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola man.

Nunuqwlelslaiqu·a: Professional name of a female droner.

Nunuqwiutmm: Supernatural being; this is probably a synonym for one of the Carpenters.

Nunushmai: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola man.

Nunusmaouk: One of the four supernatural eagle-like creatures.

Nunuxwmolsk: Kimsquit hunter mentioned in an ancient story.

Nunutthunmm, "The One that Penetrates to the Head of the Rivers": Supernatural name of sockeye salmon. [825]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*192

[824] sqedilp: Cedar roots.
sqeil: Sling.
[578] sqeilqelkm: To use a sling.
sqili: Term of opprobrium applied to a woman, signifying slave ancestry.
[821] sqimamas: Fleecy cloud.
[412] sqiola: Muzzle-like power which binds the mouth of a Cannibal against ordinary food.
sqma: Wooden comb.
S'qa'i: Land of Ashes, alternative term for Sqamf.
sqo: Umbilical hernia.
[601] sqolyma: Distant relative of female sex, when referred to by man.
sqoltkidjat: Long phallus.
Sqomall: Village in the lower Bella Coola valley.
sqosa: Unconsumed portion of share of food carried away by guests from a meal.
sqoulq: Food distributed for carrying away as sqosa.
[415] sqoli: Large, flat, soft basket of broad strips of bark.
[431] sqomaqa: Presents given by guests to the donor of a memorial potlatch. sqolp: Maple.
[824] squm: Sudden start that expels the spirit.
squpail: Outer plank of cedar, convex and bark-covered on one side.
squal: Love song or other non-ceremonial composition.
squalm: Fern, probably one of the genus Aspidium.
[533] squalwalam: 1—Theme of a song dealing with current events, especially allusions to the faults of someone present.
2—Singers who use this type of composition.
[825] squal-ann: Large, unidentified bird.
[374] Squalaha: Heat: A supernatural being.
Sqali: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola man.
[825] sqaw'nn: Loon.
[262] stai-tl: Mountain goat marrow, a food which is said to have remarkable powers of preventing hunger.
Stalqalaqam, "The Increase of the Sun's Heat through the Addition of Fire Sticks": A'alk name obtained in the beginning of time.
stalhmq; plural, statalhmq; vocative plural, statalhmq:
1—Chief.
2—One of the first men to settle at Alqalaal in the beginning of time.
3—One of the first men to settle at Sunal in the beginning of time.
4—Name created by Smaoan for a grandson.
5—Sisook name of a Kimsquit man.
[601] stan: Mother, term commonly used by an adult in indirect address.
[825] standakidum: Bat.
standimut: Step-mother; the term is also applied to other women of the generation older than the speaker and related to him by marriage.
[601] standamats: Elderly female relatives of the same ancestral family as the speaker.
[614] skook: Whetstone.
Sisots: Man mentioned in a story.
[412] Stap': Mountain near Tal-ia.
stakam, "What Is Hidden": The correct solution of the Mystery dance.
stakmats: Archaic term for chiefs, now used only rhetorically.
[824] slals: Cranberry.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Xemlaix: One of the first men to settle at Xemqe·ts in the beginning of time.
Xemtum: Kusiut name of a Sisiutl man.
Xemxemlalts: 1—One of the nine supernatural siblings.
2—Ancestral name of a Bella Coola man.
Xemxemlaix: Sisaak name brought from above in the beginning of time.
Xemxemtum: 1—Supernatural beings who request the sun to appear.
2—One of the first men to settle at Xlpalxal in the beginning of time.
[533] xe·tle: Boastful type of song used by chiefs on war expeditions and at potlatches.
Xedilkes: One of the first men to settle at Xetlaalx in the beginning of time.
Xelkes: Kusiut name of a Kimsquit woman. The designation is pl Bella Bella origin.
[825] 'ixpe: Marten.
[412] xile: Stone axe.
xilxil: Party of potlatch messengers and the invitation they bear.
[203] Ximpdimut: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Ximmlaix: A'alk man mentioned in an ancient story.
Xmmmeslaix: Celebrated female shaman.
[821] ximpindz·i, plural, ximpindzakzi: Little girl.
[517] Xinpmes: 1—"Little Girls": Group of stars in the Great Bear.
2—Picnic, especially one on which fern root is gathered.
Xinsis: Bella Coola term for the Carriers living near Ootsa Lake. This is said to be their own name for themselves.
Xsimtu·a, "Right Foot": Stuax repository named from part of a supernatural creature.
Xipis: Mountain in the Carrier country.
xemtnots: Spirit, one of the supernatural elements in the human body.
xlixtum: Ceremony prior to a potlatch when tasks are allotted and the donor's house destroyed.
xlixl: The entrusting, before death, of a name for the benefit of a relative.
[586] Xlitwalt: Mountain in the upper Bella Coola valley.
xlokw·imut: The irrevocable desertion of her husband by a wife.
[825] Xmaxts: Locality below Nuxpalxt.
xmpmatsl: Minnows.
[601] xmu: Woman, or wife in indirect address (ki xmulaix: My wife).
[614] xmuxuts: Female relatives of same ancestral family, term of indirect address.
[423] xmudzm or xupmudzm: The right by which a husband uses his wife's land, though it is not his own.
Xnutli: Bella Coola sorcerer living in the last century.
xolelt: The forcible washing of a Cannibal.
Xoltxwsem: Name acquired by a man mentioned in an ancient story.
[785] xoltjut: Intercourse held during ceremonial chastity; the term has a sacred significance.
[891] Xomtsla: Male professional singer who came down to the Dean River in the beginning of time.
Xomxomps: Ancestral name of a Stuax man. The designation is said to have come from Smith Inlet.
Xompstem: Supernatural scoop-net fisherman, servant of the supreme god.
Xopalis: Bella Coola man mentioned in an ancient story.

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Since the end of the last century they have dwindled down in numbers, and a few only of their once populous villages are still inhabited, namely, Sâtaq, at the head of Dean Inlet; Nûtl'a'l, at the mouth of Salmon River; Nuqa'lkn (which embraces five villages, at the mouth of Bella Coola River; Stû'in, twenty-eight miles up Bella Coola River; and Ta'lio, at the head of South Bentinck Arm. The dialect of Nûtl'a'l and Sâtaq differs slightly from that of the other villages. The following is a list of their ancient villages, most of which are still inhabited at certain seasons, although not regularly:— 161 361 [197] 103 361

1. Sâtaq.
2. Nûtl'a'l. The tribe of this place is called Sûtalcmn.
3. Nuqa'lkn, embracing the villages K'emkô'tza and Stekô'etl on the north side, Pô'intla and Nutnô'intakônê on the south side of the river.
4. Sxnqtl.
5. Tsômô'etl.
6. Snû't'ak'.
7. Nû'kmita.
8. Asx'nanô.
9. Nuk-â'sqmsta.
10. Tsqcqk'â'nô.
11. Nû'sk-'alst.
12. Nûtlte'iq.
13. Stû'in, twenty-eight miles from the sea.
14. Snû'tl'alstl. Nos. 4 to 14 are situated along Bella Coola River, and are given as they are met with in ascending the river.
15. Sîâ'aqtl, at the confluence of Bella Coola and Driver (?) Rivers.
16. Ta'lio, at the head of South Bentinck Arm, embracing K'ea'pô, Ta'lio, Nû'ik', A'sêq.
17. K'eâ'lma, at the bay of that name in the southern entrance of Bentinck Arm. On the north entrance of Bentinck Arm were the Kîlô'ôl, but it is doubtful whether they belonged to the Bîlqula or to the Hâ'ilteuk. The latter call the people of Dean Inlet Ki'mkuitq. [101]

Each of these tribes is subdivided into gentes, which appear to be arranged in exogamic groups. I learnt the names of the following gentes, which bear the names of their ancestors:— 614

Gentes of the Nuqa'lkmn:

1. Tuk'eâ'la (=looking down on his family).
2. Spuqpuqô'lxmq; Qê'mtsica name: Mâ'lakyîlatl (see p. 415).
3. Sîatlqêlâ'aq.
4. Ka'hâqk'ana.
5. Pô'ilna.

Gentes of the Nuak'a'latxmn:

1. Tl'ak'anmô'et.
2. K'êuqêtlâ'nê.
3. ?

Gentes of the Tâlio'mn:

1. Iale'stmêt (=making good fire); Qê'mtsica name; T'â'l'xntâlit (=a cave protecting from rain).
2. Spatsâ'tlt.
3. Tumqoâ'akyas.
4. Ha'mtelt.

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

614 582 [551] The evidence which I can present regarding the laws of intermarriage is the following: I inquired of Nusk'ɛlu'sta (=cold water in face), a member of the Ialo'stimōt gens, whether he might marry a Spatsā'tlt woman; this suggestion he rejected with the greatest indignation.

FIG. 1.—House-front of the gens Tōk·oā'ls.

[342] [532]

Members of the first two gentes, he explained later on, are not allowed to intermarry, neither are members of the last two gentes, while the first and second may marry among the third and fourth. He accounted for this by stating that Ialo'stimōt's son married Spatsā'tlt's daughter, and that consequently the two gentes were related to each other.

FIG. 2.—House-front of the gens Tlak·aumō'ot, representing the moon.

[342] [532]

614 The gentes have crests similar to those of the neighbouring coast

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

614
614
532
342 773

tribes. The crest is represented in paintings on the house-front and on dancing implements.

The gens Tōk·ōā'is has a killer-whale (Delphinus orca) painted on the house-front (fig. 1). The tradition says that the ancestor of this gens

FIG. 3.—Crest of the gens Smō'ɛn, showing the mountain Suwā'kɛh, with two clouds near its summit; above a mackerel sky.

one day, when hunting in the mountains, found a house on which a killer was painted. The chief who lived in the house invited him and presented him with his crest for himself and for his descendants. The crest consists of the killer-whale, eagle, swan, and heron.

The crests of all gentes were obtained in like manner.

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

●614 The gens Spatsâ'tlt have breakers painted on the house-front, and use 532 in dances the mask of a large kind of whale (k·'ɛsts), of the crow, and of 342 the black bear.

The gens Tumqoâ'akyas use the mask of Ônɛstaitô'ma (=the sleeper) and the eagle.

The gens Tl'ak·aumô'ot of the Nusk·'ɛ'hɛtɛmh use the moon (fig. 2).

The gens Ialo'stimôt of the Tâlio'mh use the raven, robin (sist'a'qoud), eagle, whale, the bird t'êntlala (genus?), and s'atlel'ots, the flood-tide. They have sun, moon, and stars painted on the house-front, and the nusq·'sula suspended from the beams of the roof (see p. 420).

The highest gens of Nûtl'ɛ'l has the name Smô'ɛn (=the north wind). He has the mountain Suwâ'khh surmounted by a mackerel sky, and with clouds on its sides, painted on his house-front (fig. 3). Another object belonging to his crest represents waves.

614 The children belong to the gens of either father or mother, the decis-851 ion being left to the choice of the parents.

Secret Societies and the Potlatch.

171 The social organisation, festivals, and secret societies of the Bilqula 575 are still more closely interrelated than they are among the Kwakiutl, and must be considered in connection. We have to describe here the potlatch, the Sisau'kh, and the Kû'siût. The Sisau'kh corresponds to the Tlôola'qa of the northern Kwakiutl tribes, the Kû'siût to the Ts'êtsâ'ek·a. The 556 Bilqula believe that the potlatch has been instituted by ten deities, nine 773 brothers and one sister, the foremost among whom is Qê'mtslos, to whose 776 care the sunrise is intrusted. He resides with the others in a beautiful

Fig. 4.—Mask representing Qê'mtslos.

Fig. 5.—Mask representing Qêmqêmlâ'ola.

[532
575]

house in the far east, and cries ô! ô! every morning when the sun rises. He has to take care that the sun rises properly. The first six of these deities

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575 773 776 796 trails of ermine skins, and to swing carved rattles. The man, later on, returned to the sun. Ever since that time the Bilqula dance the Sisin'ka. Besides this it is stated that the Raven gave each gens its secrets.

FIG. 8.—Mask representing K'emk'emki'lika.

FIG. 9.—Mask representing K'ulu'qawa.

532 575 776

614 532 422 Each gens has its peculiar carvings, which are used in the Sisin'ka only, and are otherwise kept a deep secret, i.e., they are the sacred posses-

FIG. 10.—Mask representing Kuli'lian.

FIG. 11.—Mask representing Ti'etsk'qiniliana.

[575 776]

[531 292] sions of each gens. All gentes, however, wear the beautiful carved headdresses and use the raven rattles, regardless of the carving they represent.

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

represent. Every time the sacred objects of a gens are shown to the people a potlatch is given. The sacred objects, although the property of the various gentes, must nevertheless be acquired by each individual. That is to say, every free person has the right to acquire a certain group of carvings and names, according to the gens to which he or she belongs. Slaves and slaves' children, also illegitimate children, could not become Sisan'kn. A person cannot take a new carving, but must wait until it is given to him by his relatives—father, mother, or elder brother. Nesk'a-la'sta, to whom I owe my information regarding the gentes, and who is a member of the gens Ialo'stimit of the Talio'mn, stated that he had received the raven when he gave his first potlatch. At his second potlatch he received the eagle. He hopes that his mother will give him the whale at his next potlatch, and will at the same time divulge to him the secrets connected with it. In course of time, he said, he might get even others from his brother; but if the latter's children should prove to be very good, and develop very rapidly, his brother would probably give his secrets to his children. At festivals, when a person acquires a new secret, he changes his name. Each person has two names, a Kū'sūt name, which remains the same throughout life; and a Qō'mtsīn name, which is changed at these festivals. Thus, Nesk'sla'sta's (which is his Kū'sūt name) present Qō'mtsīn name is Atl'itlsmn'ha'sin, but at his next potlatch he intends to take the name of Kalū'kin. These names are also the property of the various gentes, each gens having its own names. In the list of gentes given above, the names enumerated are the Kū'sūt names of the ancestors. In two cases only the Qō'mtsīn names have been ascertained (see p. 409). When a man possesses several Sisan'kn secrets he will distribute them among his children. When a girl marries, her father or mother may, after a child has been born to her, give one or several of their Sisan'kn secrets to her husband, as his children make him a member of the gens. When a person gets to be old he gives away all his Sisan'kn secrets. After any secret has been given away the giver must not use it any more. The crest and the Sisan'kn carvings must not be loaned to others, but each person must keep his own carvings. The only exceptions are the carved headdresses and the raven rattles, which are not the property of any particular gens.

The laws regarding the potlatch are similar to those of the Kwakiutl. The receiver of a present becomes the debtor of the person who gave the potlatch. If the latter should die the debts become due to his heirs. If the debtor should die his heirs become responsible for the debt. Property is also destroyed at potlatches. This is not returned, and serves only to enhance the social position of the individual who performed this act. It is not necessary that all the property given by a person in a potlatch should be owned by him. He may borrow part of it from his friends, and has to repay it with interest. I was told, for instance, that a man borrowed a large copper-plate and burnt it at a potlatch. When doing so he had to name the price which he was going to pay to the owner in its stead. Since that feast he died, and his heirs are now responsible for the amount named at the potlatch.

The Kū'sūt is presided over by a female spirit, called Anūlikūtsai'n. Her abode is a cave in the woods, which she keeps shut from February till October, remaining all the while inside. In October she opens the door of her cave and sits in front of it. A woman is said to have been the first to find her. Anūlikūtsai'n invited her into her cave and taught

575 her the secrets of the Kû'siût. She wore ornaments of red cedar-bark
773 around her head, wrists, and ankles; her face was blackened, her hair 776 strewn with eagle-down. She commanded the woman to dance in the same way as she saw her dancing. The people should accompany her dance with songs, and, after she had finished, they should dance with masks. She said, 'Whenever a person sees me your people shall dance the Kû'siût. If you do not do so I shall punish you with death and sickness. In summer, while I am in my house, you must not dance the Kû'siût.'

575 Ever since that time the Bilqula dance the Kû'siût. When a man has 776 seen Auaûlikûtsai'n sitting before her cave he will invite the people to a Kû'siût. A ring made of red and white cedar-bark is hung up in his house, and the uninitiated are not allowed to enter it. Only in the evening, when dances are performed, they may look on, standing close to the door. As soon as the dances are over they must retire from the taboo house. Each Kû'siût lasts three days.

535 The various dances performed by members of the Kû'siût are also the 575 property of the gentes, and the right of performing them is restricted 614 to members of the gens. They must not be given to a daughter's husband, as is the case with the Sisan'kn dances (see above), but belong to the 424 members of the gens alone. They may, however, be loaned and borrowed [426] by members of the gens, who have a right to a particular dance, but who do not own it. Permission to use a mask or dance is obtained from the owner by payments. The owner may reclaim the dance or the borrower 575 may return it at any time. Membership of the Kû'siût is obtained through [551] an initiation. At this time the novice is given his Kû'siût name, which he retains throughout life. Each gens has its peculiar Kû'siût names, [428] which are inherited by young persons from their parents or from other relatives. Thus a young man who had the name of Pô'pô until he was about seventeen years old obtained at his initiation the name of Ti'akô'etl. I have not reached a very clear understanding of the details of the initia-
[556] tion; it seems that the dance is simply given to the novice in the same way as the Sisan'kn, this initiation being connected with a potlatch. But [787] still it seems possible that he must 'dream' of the dance which he is to perform. Only the highest degrees of the Kû'siût have to pass through a religious ceremony of some importance. The highest degrees are the [554] xlaqô'tla (the Ha'mats'a of the Kwakiutl), the Ô'lsq (the Nô'tlmatl of the Kwakiutl), and the Dâ'tla (the Nô'ntsistatl of the Hâ'iltsuk). These grades are also hereditary. A Kû'siût novice may acquire them at once at his first initiation.

575 When the xlaqô'tla is initiated he goes into the forest, where he 785 encounters his guardian spirit. It is believed that he goes up to the sun, and formerly he had to take human flesh along for food. The chiefs held 787 a council the night preceding the beginning of the ceremonies, and anyone who wanted to show his liberality offered one of his slaves to be [266] killed, in order to serve as food for the xlaqô'tla. The offer was accepted and a payment of from ten to twenty blankets made for the slave. The latter was killed, and the members of the xlaqô'tla order devoured one-half of the body before the departure of the novice to the woods. There the latter is tied up and left to fast. He may stay there for twenty or thirty days until the spirit appears to him and takes him up to the sun, 575 where he is initiated. Early one morning he returns, and is heard outside the houses. He has lost all his hair, which, it is believed, has been torn

Indians the tradition is considered much more clearly the property of the person who has it in charge than it is among the southwestern Indians. A description of the sisau'k ceremonial has been given by Jacobsen in the paper above referred to.[1]

A clan legend which is illustrated in the sisau'k ceremonial is called by the Bella Coola "Samoma" or "Smx̌'yusta." These traditions are the exclusive property of each clan. The laws according to which they descend from generation to generation differ from the laws prevailing among the other Coast tribes. The inhabitants of each Bella Coola village are not subdivided into clans, gentes, or septs; but each village community forms a unit, and possesses the same tradition. In order to keep the tradition in the tribe, the law requires that no person shall marry outside of his own village community. Thus the clan tradition is kept the exclusive property of the village community by means of endogamy. I have made very careful inquiries in regard to this point, and all the old men make substantially the same statement. Even marriages among near relatives are permitted;[2] and although marriages of people who are distantly related, or not related at all, are preferred, it even happens that cousins marry, or that an uncle marries his niece, in order to keep the clan tradition from being acquired by another village community. It seems, however, that, owing to the influence of the Coast tribes, the endogamic system has begun to give way to an exogamic system. Powerful and wealthy chiefs marry outside of their own village community, in order to secure an additional clan legend through marriage. This new system agrees with the one prevalent among the Kwakiutl tribes.

The k̓ō'sint, as stated before, is a religious ceremony in which all the deities of heaven are personified. The members of various clans are initiated according to their clan traditions; but the same societies and the same deities appear in the traditions of all the various clans. From what little I have been able to learn, it seems that there is an elaborate opening of the whole ceremonial, corresponding to the opening of the ceremonial among the Kwakiutl.[1] I received the following description of the opening ceremony:—

The person who invites to the k̓ō'sint, that is to say, the man whose son is to be initiated into one of the secret societies according to the tradition of his clan, requests a person who is called E'xtm to invite the nine brothers and their sister, who reside in the House of Myths, and in whose charge the k̓ō'sint is placed. The names of the brothers are Xtmxtmalā'ts.la, Xt'mtsiwa, Omq'omkī'lk'a, Q'ō'mtsiwa, Almalā'ts.la, Al'umkī'lk'a, K'ōē'lāa, Q'alaxē'wa, Ā'mik'; and that of their sister, t.'ctsā'xpēt.āsa (see p. 33). In the rear of the house an elevated room is prepared for E'xtm, in which he lies down. He is covered with rings made of red cedar-bark. For four days he stays inhabited by Salish tribes refer to the early separation of the Bella Coola tribe from the related tribes of the Gulf of Georgia, and that in their traditions they have retained the memory of the emigration of part of the tribe from the southern territory. It seems also probable that the allusion to the origin of one family of the tribe on Skeena River refers to a mixture with the tribes inhabiting northern British Columbia. 174

[1] Tram, 1894, pp. 1-43.

[2] I have described this fully in the Annual Report of the U. S. National Museum for 1895, pp. 310ff.

The traditions of the tribes also describe the style of house used by the ancestors of certain village communities; and it is interesting to note that some of these houses correspond to the subterranean lodges that were in use among the Chilcotin, while others correspond to the tents that were in use among the Carriers. It is said that the ancestor of the Nulle'ix used the subterranean lodge which is called tsi'pa (see p. 87), while the ancestor of the Nusq'a'lst used the skin lodge which is called skema (see p. 64). 171 174 177 342

Since the Bella Coola retain the fundamental traits of the social organization of their congeners in the south, and since their traditions bear evidence of an emigration from that region, and since, furthermore, the linguistic evidence proves that the Bella Coola and the Coast Salish at one time inhabited contiguous areas on the coast, we are justified in assuming that the general culture of the Bella Coola at the time of their emigration must have resembled that of the Coast Salish. The question then arises, How did the peculiar endogamic system and the remarkable mythology of the Bella Coola originate from the much simpler forms that we find among the Coast Salish? 174

One of the most remarkable features in the inner life of the tribes of the northern coast of British Columbia is the great importance of the clan legend, which is considered one of the most valuable properties of each clan or family. It is carefully guarded in the same way as material property, and an attempt on the part of a person not a member of the clan to tell the tradition as his own is considered one of the gravest offences against property rights. The possession of a clan tradition is felt by the Indian to be one of his most important prerogatives. When, therefore, the Bella Coola settled on Bella Coola River, and were thrown into contact with the northern Coast tribes, the lack of a well-developed clan tradition must have been felt as a serious drawback. The physical appearance of the Bella Coola proves that at one time they must have intermarried to a great extent with the Bella Bella. Through these marriages the peculiar customs of the Coast tribes were first introduced among them. This is shown by the fact that a great many of the mythological names can be proved to be of Kwakiutl origin, of which stock the Bella Bella are a branch. Thus the name for their supreme deity, Smal'yakila, is a Kwakiutl word meaning "the one who must be worshipped." The name Ö'sq'tsakilkx is also of Kwakiutl origin, and may be translated as "the wealthiest one." The great frequency of 174 177 [144] 174 177 776

7/Boas E-3 (1898-en. 1898)900 NBS Bellacoola NBS

174 words of Kwakiutl derivation will become clear by a glance at the following 177 list, which contains words that can be proved to be of Kwakiutl origin:—

776 a'xhoala = shaman.
Alk' = speaker.
E'mask'in (p. 49) (Kwakiutl, He'mask'in) = the greatest chief.
[192] Hau'hon (p. 100) = a fabulous bird.
L'E'qoog'ila = the copper maker.
L'E'qumóiks = sister of Mamaxalt'nix (the ending, ilx, designates "woman" in Kwakiutl).
L'E'qumoil' = mythological name of deer.
Ma'lak'ilas.
Mentsi't (p. 48).
Mia'lina = the country of the salmon (p. 38) (Kwakiutl, me) = salmon.
No'skila (pp. 49, 66).
O'mest.k'as (p. 70) = the real O'mest.
O'mest.mai (p. 70).
O'mq'omkl'ik'a (p. 33) (Kwakiutl, Q'ō'mq'omkilik a) = the wealthiest one.
Po'l.os.
Qonātsla'qa (p. 49).
Q'ōmō'qoa (p. 32) = the wealthy one.
Q'ō'mqōlis (p. 49) = rich at opposite side of river.
Q'ō'mtsiwa (p. 33) = wealthy at mouth of river.
Smki'yakila (p. 29) = the one who must be worshipped.
sl'siot = a fabulous fish or snake (pp. 28, 44, 48).
Smayalo'ōsla (p. 29).
T'ō'pewas (p. 97) = the fawn.
Winwi'ns (p. 38) = war.
Wa'k'itxmai (p. 50) = the greatest river.

174 With these names and customs the clan traditions must have found their 177 way to the Bella Coola, but their social organization differed fundamentally from that of the Bella Bella branch of the Kwakiutl. While the latter, 424 owing to intimate contact with the northern tribes, had adopted the four-clan system with prevalent maternal descent, the Bella Coola were still distinctly 614 divided into village communities that were not exogamic. It seems very likely [621] that the jealousy with which the ownership of a clan tradition was guarded by the Coast tribes was very early introduced among the Bella Coola. Two means were available for preventing outsiders from acquiring the traditions.
Among the Coast tribes with prevailing maternal institutions, among whom a limited number of clans existed, the ordinary law of inheritance was sufficient to retain the tradition inside of the clan. Not so among the Bella Coola.
174 If their organization at an early time was similar to that of the Coast Salish, 182 it is likely that the child was counted as well a member of the father's as 424 of the mother's family, although the young woman generally moved to the village occupied by her husband. If the child belonged to the families of 614 both parents, it had the right to use the tradition of either family; and consequently in the course of a few generations, the traditions acquired by [591] each family would have spread practically over the whole tribe. There were [851] only two methods possible to avoid this result. The one was to prevent marriages outside the village community; and this method would seem to have been most natural for a tribe organized in village communities, members [621] of which were allowed to intermarry. The other method would have been to regulate the laws of inheritance in such a way that the child had to follow either father or mother, but that it had not the right to use the property of both parents. It seems to my mind that the former method was more likely to develop under the existing social conditions, and that to this reason we must ascribe the development of an endogamic system among the Bella Coola. The occurrence of endogamic marriage among this tribe is quite isolated on the Pacific coast. All the other tribes have exogamic institutions, and by this means preserve their property rights. It is interesting to note that the southern Kwakiutl, who originally seem to have been organized in village communities, have adopted exogamic institutions; but there is a notable difference, in the organization of the village community, between the Bella Coola and the Kwakiutl. Among the Bella Coola we generally find four ancestors to each village,—usually three men and one woman. It is true that these are generally called brothers and sister, but they were created independently by Sɛnx, and are therefore not necessarily considered as blood relations. Among the Kwakiutl the village community are considered the descendants of one single being; consequently, among the latter tribe they are all relatives, who are forbidden to intermarry; while among the Bella Coola they are not relatives, and may intermarry.

My inference is, therefore, that the curious social system of the Bella Coola developed through the influence of the customs of the Coast tribes upon the loose social unit of the Salish village community. The possession of clan traditions was felt as a great advantage, and consequently the desire developed to possess clan traditions. These were acquired partly by intermarriage with the Coast tribes, as is shown by the fact that many of these traditions are borrowed from these tribes, partly by independent invention. The desire to guard the traditions which were once acquired led to the development of endogamic institutions, in order to prevent the spread of the traditions over the whole tribe.

The jealousy with which the traditions are guarded has had the effect of making each family try to prevent other families from knowing its own clan tradition. For this reason the clan traditions of the whole tribe are remarkably inconsistent. We find, for instance, that the well-known raven legend of the northern Coast tribes has been utilized by many families as a family tradition. But while one family uses one part of the tradition, other families use other parts of the same tradition. Thus it happens that among the Bella Coola we find the most contradictory myths in regard to important events in the world's history. Some families maintain that the Raven liberated the sun, while, according to another one, the Mink was essential in bringing about the present state of affairs. Still others say that Tɔtɔsɔ'nx, during his travels, caused the sun to appear. The discrepancies in the traditions referring to the visit of the Mink and Wasp to their father, the Sun, are also very remarkable. Although a considerable amount of

Boas E-5 (1888-ca. 1890)1900 . NE6 Bellacoola NE6

174 contradiction is inherent in all the mythologies of the North Pacific coast, 424 they nowhere reach such a degree as among the Bella Coola; and I presume 414 the fact that the traditions are kept secret by the various families accounts for this curious condition.

The prayers of the Bella Coola directed to Senx or Ta'ata bear a 171 remarkable resemblance to the prayers of the Tsimshian addressed to Laxha, 782 the sky. In both tribes we find the idea that when the Sun wipes his face it will be clear weather, and man will be happy; consequently the prayer to [821] the deity "to wipe his face" occurs quite often.

One of the most important customs that the Bella Coola borrowed from 177 the Coast tribes is the kn'siut ceremonial, with which are connected the 575 various secret societies, particularly the custom of ceremonial cannibalism. The ceremonies and the paraphernalia used by the Bella Coola and by the 773 Kwakiutl are practically identical. I told above (p. 34) the legend explaining 796 the origin of cannibalism. Among the Bella Bella and Kwakiutl, another tradition is told to explain the origin of this custom. The tradition tells of a spirit called Baxbakualanuxsi'wae, who lives in the forest, and who initiates the members of the Cannibal Society. The series of traditions clustering around this being differ fundamentally from those referring to the Cannibal Society of the Bella Coola. The custom has also spread to the Tsimshian, who say that the secret societies were introduced by a hunter who was taken into the inside of a cliff by a white bear. Inside he saw a house, in which the various societies were performing their ceremonies. It appears, therefore, that the same ritual which is practised by three distinct tribes is explained by three fundamentally distinct myths; and we must conclude that in this case the ritual is older than the myth,—that the latter has been invented in order to explain customs that were borrowed from foreign tribes, so that the ritual is the primary phenomenon, while the myth is secondary.[1]

These considerations explain some of the psychological motives for the 774 development of certain traditions and myths, as well as the curious incon-773 sistency of the clan traditions of the Bella Coola. They do not, however, explain the most fundamental characteristic of the traditions of the tribe. I pointed out in the third chapter of this paper, that, notwithstanding the numerous contradictions contained in family legends, the conception of the word and the functions of the various deities are so well defined that we must consider the mythology of this tribe vastly superior to that of the neighboring tribes. While the latter believe in a great many spirits which are not co-ordinated, we have here a system of deities. The existence of a systematic mythology among the Bella Coola proves that under favorable conditions the advance from the lower forms of beliefs to higher forms may be a very rapid one.

[1] See Report of the U. S. National Museum for 1895, pp. 60 ff.

[113]

8:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1897
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

every morning when the sun rises. He takes care that he rises properly. The first six of these deities are grouped in pairs, and are believed to paint their faces with designs representing moon, stars, and rainbow. In the kō'siut these deities make their appearance, and are represented by masks. Xē'mtsioa and Xēmxēmalâ'oLa wear the design of the full moon, indicated on the mask of Xē'mtsioa by a double curved line in red and black, the black outside, passing over forehead, cheeks, and upper lip. Xēmxēmalâ'oLa has a double curved line in red and black, the red outside, which passes over forehead, cheeks, and chin. Aiumkī'lik·a and Aiumalâ'oLa wear the design of the crescent, drawn in red and black, with differences similar to those between the first and second masks. The fifth Q'ōmq'ōmkī'lik·a and Q'ō'mtsioa have designs representing stars, both wearing the same style of mask. The seventh is Qula'xawa, whose face represents the blossom of a salmon-berry bush. The next in order, Kulē'lias (who wants to have blankets first), wears the design of the rainbow in black and blue. The ninth, Aē'amā'k, wears on the head a mask representing a kingfisher, and is clothed in a bird-skin blanket. The last of the series is a woman called L'ētsā'aplēLāna (the eater), the sister of the others. Her face is painted with the design of a bladder filled with grease. She figures in several legends as stealing provisions and pursued by the people whom she has robbed.

556 773 776 532 575 776

The sisau'k·, which is danced at potlatches and other festivals of the clans, is presided over by a being that lives in the sun. A man who had gone out hunting met the sisau'k· and was instructed by him in the secrets of the dance. When he returned, he asked the people to clean their houses and to strew them with clean sand before he consented to enter. Then he danced the sisau'k· and told the people what he had seen. He said that the being had commanded them to perform this dance and to adorn themselves when dancing with carved headdresses with trails of ermine skins, and to swing carved rattles. The man, later on, returned to the sun. Ever since that time the Bī'lxula dance the sisau'k·. Besides this, it is stated that the raven gave each clan its secrets. Each clan has its peculiar carvings, which are used in the sisau'k· only, and are otherwise kept a profound secret, i. e., they are the sacred possessions of each clan. All clans, however, wear the beautiful carved headdresses and use the raven rattles, regardless of the carving they represent. Every time the sacred objects of a clan are shown to the people a potlatch is given. The sacred objects, although the property of the various clans, must nevertheless be acquired by each individual—that is to say, every free person has the right to acquire a certain group of carvings and names, according to the clan to which he or she belongs. Slaves and slaves' children, also illegitimate children, can not become sisau'k·. A person can not take a new carving, but must wait until it is given to him by his relatives—father, mother, or elder brother. Nusk'Elu'sta, the Indian, to whom I

575 773 776 796 614 424 532 [692] [534] 424 532 556 614 [567] [848] [115]

424 owe my information regarding the clans, and who is a member of the 532 gens Ialô'stimôt of the Taliô'mx·, stated that he had received the raven 614 when he gave his first potlatch. At his second potlatch he received [115] the eagle. He hoped that his mother would give him the whale at his [556] next potlatch, and would at the same time divulge to him the secrets connected with it. In course of time, he said, he might get even others from his brother; but if the latter's children should prove to be very good, and develop very rapidly, his brother would probably give his secrets to his own children. At festivals, when a person acquires a new 424 secret, he changes his name. Each person has two names, a kû'siut 551 name, which remains through life, and a Xê'mtsioa name, which is 556 changed at these festivals. Thus, Nusk'Elu'sta's (which is his kû'siut 575 name) Xê'mtsioa name was AL'ILEMNE'lus'aix·, but at his next pot-
614 latch he intended to take the name of Kaliâ'kis. These names are also the property of the various clans, each clan having its own names. When a man possesses several sisau'k· secrets, he will distribute them among his children. When a girl marries, her father or mother may, after a child has been born to her, give one or several of their sisau'k· secrets to her husband, as his children make him a member of her clan. When a person grows old, he gives away all his sisau'k· secrets. After any secret has been given away the giver must not use it any more.
[426] The crest and the sisau'k· carvings must not be loaned to others, but each person must keep his own carvings. The only exceptions are the carved headdresses and the raven rattles, which are not the property of any particular clan.

426 The laws regarding the potlatch are similar to those of the Kwakiutl.
556 The receiver of a present becomes the debtor of the person who gave the potlatch. If the latter should die, the debts become due to his heirs. If the debtor should die, his heirs become responsible for the debt. Property is also destroyed at potlatches. This is not returned, and serves only to enhance the social position of the individual who performed this act. It is not necessary that all the property given by a person in a potlatch should be owned by him. He may borrow part of it from his friends, and has to repay it with interest. I was told, for instance, that a man borrowed a large copper plate and burnt it at a potlatch. When doing so, he had to name the price which he was going to pay the owner in its stead. Since that feast he died, and his heirs are now responsible for the amount named at the potlatch.

575 The kû'siut is presided over by a female spirit, called Anaâlikuta' 773 ai'x·. Her abode is a cave in the woods, which she keeps shut from 776 February till October, remaining all the while inside. In October she opens the door of her cave and sits in front of it. A woman is said to 535 have been the first to find her. Anaâlikuta'ai'x· invited her into her cave and taught her the secrets of the kû'siut. She wore ornaments of red cedar bark around her head, waist, and ankles; her face was blackened, her hair strewn with eagle down. She commanded the woman to dance in the same way as she saw her dancing. The people should accompany her dance with songs, and, after she had finished, they should dance with masks. She said, "Whenever a person sees me, your people shall dance the kū'siut. If you do not do so, I shall punish you with death and sickness. In summer, while I am in my house, you must not dance the kū'siut." 575 773 776 535

8:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1897
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Ever since that time the Bi'lxula dance the kū'siut. When a man has seen Anaūlikuts'ai'x· sitting in front of her cave, he will invite the people to a kū'siut. A ring made of red and white cedar bark is hung up in his house, and the uninitiated are not allowed to enter it. Only in the evening, when dances are performed, they may look on, standing close to the door. As soon as the dances are over, they must retire from the taboo house. Each kū'siut lasts three days. 575 776 535

The various dances performed by members of the kū'siut are also property of the clans, and the right to perform them is restricted to members of the clan. They must not be given to a daughter's husband, as is the case with the sisau'k· dances, but belong to the members of the clan, who have a right to a particular dance, but who do not own it. Permission to use a mask or dance is obtained from the owner by payments. The owner may reclaim the dance or the borrower may return it at any time. Membership of the kū'siut is obtained through an initiation. At this time the novice is given his kū'siut name, which is inherited by young persons from their parents or from other relatives. Thus a young man who had the name of Pō'pō until he was about seventeen years old, obtained at his initiation the name of L'akō'oL. I have not reached a very clear understanding of the details of the initiation; it seems that the dance is simply given to the novice in the same way as the sisau'k·, this initiation being connected with a potlatch. But still it seems possible that he must "dream" of the dance which he is to perform. Only the highest degrees of the kū'siut have to pass through a religious ceremony of some importance. The highest degrees are the ƛaxō'La (the hā'mata'a of the Kwakiutl), the ō'ƛex (the nū'LmaL of the Kwakiutl), and the dā'tia (the nō'ntsistalaL of the Kwakiutl). These grades are also hereditary. A kū'siut novice may acquire them at once at his first initiation. 535 575 614 575 [426] [551] [428] [556] [171] [554]

When the ƛaxō'La is initiated, he goes into the forest, where he encounters his guardian spirit. It is believed that he goes up to the sun, and formerly he had to take human flesh along for food. The chiefs held a council the night preceding the beginning of the ceremonies, and anyone who wanted to show his liberality offered one of his slaves to be killed in order to serve as food for the ƛaxō'La. The offer was accepted, and a payment of from ten to twenty blankets was made for the slave. The latter was killed, and the members of the ƛaxō'La order devoured one-half of the body before the departure of the novice to the woods. There the latter was tied up and left to fast. He may stay there for twenty or thirty days until the spirit appears 575 785 787 [266]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

128 from Snuhli. My informant's grandchildren regard them-
173 selves as Snuhli boys, and their names are embodied in myths
361 of that village, although their forbears have not lived there
166 for five generations. There is no reason to suppose this case exceptional. Other instances were obtained of movements of people from one village to another at earlier times, and there seems no cause to doubt the general accuracy of these. Names [554] embodied in the origin myths of different towns are used as prerogatives and have been potent factors in keeping their memory alive. Uncertainties and inaccuracies there must be in the foregoing list, but on the whole it appears to be fairly reliable, since few contradictions were received from different informants.

128 Accounts obtained of the same ceremonies from the descen-
184 dants of people of different villages were found in most cases to be identical. There were a few differences in custom between [796] the people of Stuix and those of the other upper valley towns on the one hand, and the inhabitants of the lower valley on [101] the other. These will be mentioned when necessary, but on the whole the inhabitants of the Bella Coola valley can be considered as a tribal entity.

114 Boas (p. 48) gives a list of Bella Coola towns which agrees 361 fairly well with the above. Among his villages are included Pe·ɔslɔ (no. 4), Nulxuxtskwan·e (no. 7), and Nusälsum (no. 16).[11] All the older people agreed that these are the names of streams, though settlements located on them may have been known by the same designations. Names of the five villages recorded by Boas, nos. 6, 8, 9, 19, and 24, were not known by several old men questioned on the subject.

101 The villages of the Bella Coola valley did not form a political ●619 unit; each was independent. A common language was spoken throughout and the inhabitants of the different towns recog-[631] nized that their origins and customs were similar. This was [197] also recognized to be the case with regard to the people living on South Bentinck Arm, and at the head of Dean Channel.

[11] Using in each case the spelling of this monograph.

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Indians from both of these areas were interviewed and it was found that, except for minor details in certain Beliefs, their customs were identical with those of the Bella Coola proper. Accordingly, in this monograph, the term "Bella Coola" will be taken to include the inhabitants, not only of that valley, but of South Bentinck Arm and the head of Dean Channel. Those living on South Bentinck Arm will be referred to as Tāl·io people, the Bella Coola term for them; those of Dean Channel as Kimsquit, the name by which they are generally known. It is an anglicized form of the word Kimgkwut, meaning "Canyon," by which the Bella Bella designate the people of Dean River. 101 619

VILLAGES ON SOUTH BENTINCK ARM

(28) Sātlia: on the east side of South Bentinck Arm, about a quarter of a mile from the point that marks its junction with North Bentinck Arm. Food was obtained from an ocean fish-trap.[13] Long deserted except as a summer camp. 361 [226]

(29) Qankdst, "Island": east side of South Bentinck Arm, slightly north of the island opposite the Hot Springs on the west side of the fiord. The town took its name from this island. In summer the numerous inhabitants lived immediately opposite it, at a place where they had an ocean salmon-trap; in winter they moved to a fortified spot at the base of a mountain slightly farther to the north. This village was blotted out by a landslide one spring long ago, and the few survivors were unable to re-establish it. [133] [226] [221] [731]

*(30)[14] Tsaoltmem: on the east side of the fiord about four miles above the last-named. A small town, whose inhabitants lived on the catch from their ocean fish-trap; it was recently deserted. [226]

[13]Ocean fish-traps work as follows:—A pen is made by a series of stakes, into which the salmon enter at high tide. It is then closed and, as the falling tide lays bare the mud, the imprisoned fish can be scooped out by hand or in hand-nets.

[14]Mackenzie did not visit either South Bentinck Arm, or Kimsquit, but it will be convenient to continue the use of asterisks to mark those towns which are said to have been inhabited at that time. [175]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

174 reliable traditions of Carrier settlements there. The probable explanation is that the Bella Coola formerly extended over the area, either in actual fact or according to mythology, but were supplanted by the Carriers.

175 The Dean River is called Nułəl, and the generic name for the people of the Dean valley is Sutslimx. About eighty years [101] ago a smallpox epidemic so reduced the villages on the Kims- [164] quit that the survivors abandoned them and moved to the [731] Dean. At that time a certain Kimsquit man is believed to have said: "We will take their places and kill even their dogs."

Since that time, the joint settlement has suffered one [164] epidemic after another, until a mere handful of the people [731] survive, and they are almost entirely descended from the Kimsquit River immigrants. Within the last few years, these have requested permission from the Bella Coola to abandon Kimsquit entirely and live among them. The two groups have [628] always been on the best of terms, but the Bella Coola have not forgotten the fate of the Dean River people and have been unwilling to admit the Kimsquit survivors.

Villages on the Kimsquit River, Sä·tsk'

361 *(44) Sä·tsk': this large and important town, at the mouth of the river, was deserted at the time of the smallpox epidemic.

*(45) Nuxwlst: this settlement can be grouped with the last-mentioned, although situated on the shore of Dean Channel, at the site of the present Manitou Cannery, six miles away. No meaning of the name is known.

Tribal Organization

●619 The subject of this monograph is the people of the above forty-five villages. They will be referred to as a tribe, and as this term is customarily limited to a political unit, a brief justification for its use is necessary.

342 Each Bella Coola village consisted of a single row of houses, 361 built along the shore of a river or the ocean. The front doors

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

opened out on to a wooden platform, which served as sidewalk 342
and extended from one end of the settlement to the other. 361
The outer side of this structure was always supported on piles; in fact, in many cases, the houses as well as the whole sidewalk were thus raised from the ground. This type of construction was necessitated by the sloping sites of the villages, but had the added advantage of being a protection against attack. The villages differed in size from insignificant settlements of three to four houses, to ones with twenty or thirty, each containing several families. The ease with which the red cedar could be split and worked into large planks made possible the construction of these large, rectangular houses which, with their horizontally laid walls and sloping roofs, presented a picture of stability and relative comfort superior to that of most Indian habitations.

Each village was practically an independent political unit. 631
Neighbouring settlements had many common interests which 628
threw them into contact with one another, but there was no organized cohesion between the towns of the Bella Coola valley, or between those of Täl·io and Kimsquit. There was still less to draw these three groups together. There was no supreme chief and no governmental meeting of the tribe as a whole. Not only were the three divisions not bound to support one another in war, they were often at loggerheads among themselves. Indeed, bloodshed between towns of the Bella Coola valley itself was not uncommon. Moreover, each group tended to merge with its neighbours. The Täl·io people fre- 563
quently married with the Rivers Inlet and the Bella Bella; 648
the Kimsquit with the ıstämx[11] of Dean Channel and the Kitlobe of Gardner Canal; and the Bella Coola of the upper valley with the Carriers.

In spite of these inconsistencies, the application of the word 619 tribe is justifiable for the following reasons:

A. Linguistic. All spoke the same language. There [197] were dialectical differences among the people of Bella Coola, Täl·io, and Kimsquit, but each group could understand the [11]To avoid unnecessary symbols, capital ı has not been used.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

619 others. This differentiated them clearly from all neighbouring [197] tribes.

B. Ceremonial. A member of a secret society in any of [575] the above towns was accepted as a member in any other one.
[609] A person of another tribe, even if known to belong to a comparable society, was treated as an uninitiated person.

C. Origin and Religion. The people of Bella Coola, Täl·io, and Kimsquit felt themselves to be akin through acceptance of the fact that their ancestors had been created together in the beginning of time. This marked them off with [771] great clearness from all other tribes, especially from the Carriers of the interior. This belief formed a sentimental and religious bond of great strength.

Neighbouring Tribes

648 It is desirable to describe, briefly, the tribes with which the Bella Coola came in contact.

THE CARRIERS

East of Bella Coola, amid the mountains of the interior, roved the Carriers. In summer they often came down to the river valley to fish or trade for salmon, and in winter they were sometimes forced by cold and starvation again to visit the Bella Coola, Bella Bella, or Rivers Inlet people. There was a [563] good deal of intermarriage between them and the inhabitants of the upper valley, so that the wanderers were able to spend the cold months with relatives. None the less, the Bella Coola
[186] considered these people utterly foreign in habits and beliefs,
[578] and to call a man a "Carrier" was, and still is, a deadly insult. The Carriers lacked the rich ceremonial life of the coastal peoples who, therefore, regarded them with scorn and con-
[796] tempt. The presence of a few of the much-despised Carriers was, however, almost necessary to the correct performance of the winter dances since they were uninitiated spectators whom it was necessary to impress and delude.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

773 have been many changes. Raven, the culture hero, taught 829 the early settlers many useful arts, and they were themselves so powerful that they were able to create ceremonial and other prerogatives in a manner impossible to their descendants. Moreover, the people realize that they have been influenced by neighbouring tribes since that time, but in spite of these additions, they believe that their life is patterned on that of their earliest forbears.

[181] As a group, the Bella Coola are philosophers. They demand a reason for everything, though once a reason has been given, and accepted, they think no more about the matter. The elaboration of Bella Coola mythology may be due in part to their desire to explain their social organization; but without question these myths, now accepted as facts, have had a great influence on the lives of the people. In fact the social structure of the tribe has tended to conform to the myths.

•621 It is believed that each group of first people formed a village 773 community, and pre-empted hunting-grounds in the vicinity. These usually consisted of small valleys opening from the main [361] Bella Coola River, tracts which could thus be easily defined.
[226] Each group also took possession of a suitable part of the river for a salmon-weir, or, if located on the coast, a convenient place for an ocean fish-trap. In course of time the first people married, of necessity, with members of other villages. According [591] to mythology, and equally according to modern practice, the women usually moved to the villages of their husbands. When 773 a child was born, it naturally grew up to share in the hunting-grounds of its father's village. Moreover, the father was able to bestow on his child various ceremonial dances; the concepts of some he had brought with him from above, others he had formulated on this earth. It is assumed that all the first people were mighty chiefs, able to initiate rites in a way that few modern men have been able to equal. But the mothers of these children, the first born on this earth, did not surrender the privileges of their own villages at marriage. Consequently, their children were of almost as much interest to the brothers

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

names are also willed, but since their value depends on the 578 goods expended to validate them, there is seldom bitterness 614 about their allotment. Indeed, a chief who is the legal owner of a designation which came from above in the beginning of 553 time, will in many cases choose to elevate his position with [428] respect to a title of comparatively recent date. But if any person who is not a member of the ancestral family should [685]
dare to use an ancestral name, all the members rise to avenge
the theft, for such they feel it to be. In recent years, however, [178] this practice has become comparatively common. In such cases a man, eager to share in the glories of a myth and able to give a potlatch, has validated an ancestral name to which he has no right. The presence of the white man alone restrains the injured ancestral family. Names are sometimes [426] lent or hired to those who are not members of the group for definite sums; the recipient recompenses the individual. If [427]
such names are not returned for several generations quarrels are apt to arise since the recipient claims to be the real owner and not the temporary possessor. During his tenancy of the name he is entitled to any prerogative attached to it, but he is not considered a bona fide member of the ancestral family.

Instances have occurred in which an old man or woman, [428] believing himself to be the last survivor of an ancestral family, has donated his names and myth to those who have befriended him, or these have been taken by those who buried him. Some [557] individuals are constantly watching to conduct the funerals of friendless old people in the hope of so obtaining names. But in almost every case this leads to friction, since it is virtually impossible for an ancestral family to die out. Perhaps in the next generation, perhaps in the following one, some youth will claim descent from the first ancestors of the supposedly defunct family, and claim the myth and names embodied therein. This [628] leads to a feud with the person, or his descendants, who has received the names through aid given to the "last" of the family.

Such instances of an ancestral family becoming practically 614
621

614 extinct, are unusual; normally, the group is largely centred in one village, but with members scattered in other localities. 621. There is no central organization. It is generally recognized that such a unit belongs in the village where its first ancestors settled, and the leading chief of that village is, therefore, an important person in the family, though without status of [622] "head" of it. His advice may be appealed to in cases of dis- [553] putes concerning names, but he lacks judicial authority. Theoretically, the descendants of the elder of two first people are considered as "elder brothers and elder sisters" of those descended from a younger brother or sister; but this is nothing more than an accepted fact; it plays no part in the social life of the community.

552 In addition to human names, the origin myths include those 614 applied to dogs. The first ancestral group had dogs, and these 773 animals had names, or were given them by their powerful masters. Ever since that time their descendants can apply these designations to their own dogs. It is unnecessary to validate such names, but no two canines can be given the same one at the same time, according to the rule which governs the bestowal of human names. This matter was not investigated in detail, and the only dog's name collected was one for which [539] the origin myth is as follows:

> When Tāl·ie was first settled in the beginning of time, the houses were built in parallel rows, one above the other, up the side of a steep knoll. At the very top was a toilet-house, built over such a steep incline [514] that excrement rolled down the hillside. In consequence, one of the early chiefs living there gave to his dog the name, Nuliqwmutl di mink', "Rolling excrement," which has since been preserved in the ancestral family of his descendants.

LAND

124 Great difficulty was experienced in obtaining information 423 about land tenure. The Bella Coola resent keenly the way in 177 which their land has been occupied by white settlers without, according to their standpoint, proper compensation. Ques-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

614 The recent decay of Bella Coola culture may have destroyed
[182] traces of more definite obligations with respect to the ancestral family, but all the evidence indicates that it has always been a fluid unit. Its very lack of functions makes it difficult to [128] discuss, and the above account was pieced together from scraps of information collected from many different people at various times; yet, intangible though it be, it is a very real unit to the Bella Coola and pervades their life. Each individual knows those to whom he is related. In many cases the exact kinship is lost, but it is remembered that a man from such-and-such a village married a woman from another village, and it is proved from the use by their descendants of names from the same origin myth. The concept of physical strength imparted by a closely akin ancestry is always present and gives a person the real "power" in the village founded by those first ancestors
614 of his. For the ancestral family is usually thought of in terms
621 of villages. A man belongs to the village where his first ancestor came to earth, though he is equally a member of other towns into which his ancestors may have married. A [554] man without ancestry, without sol'olam, is a miserable creature; he has no home in this world, or, theoretically, in the world to come. The ancestral family is a unit essentially held together by the ties of sentiment and pride of ancestry.

614 In addition to the above social elements of the ancestral 827 family, it is felt that all its members have certain tendencies. If one of the first ancestors had a certain physical peculiarity, or met with a particular kind of fortune, either good or bad, his descendants are more likely to experience the same than any other people. These tendencies may skip many generations, and may be inherited either through the mother or the father. In fact, Bella Coola belief on this point closely agrees with modern knowledge of heredity; the term for such an inheritable tendency is ɛsälonläm or uläxmundjut. Such characteristics are:

(1) Proficiency in using tools;
(2) Ability as a hunter;

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NZ6 Bellacoola NZ6

(3) The bearing of exceptionally well-behaved children; 614
(4) The bearing of exceptionally naughty children; 827
(5) Disposition to steal;
(6) Uncontrollable sexual desires;
(7) Sudden death, that is, members of certain ancestral families are less apt than others to die of disease or old age;
(8) Death by drowning. One informant, in whose family this is a tendency, has twice been thrown into the water and barely escaped. He fully expects to meet his fate in this manner;
(9) Insanity (not a common malady); [158]
(10) Dribbling at the mouth with increasing age;
(11) Liability to contract the skin disease known as lodaly. With regard to the transmission of this disease the surprising information was received that if a relative of a sufferer should drink from the same bucket or use the same spoon as the patient, he is likely to contract the disease, whereas another person can use them with impunity. This statement may be based on a knowledge of germs learnt from the white man, and warped by a belief in inheritable tendencies, although it is amazing that the theory of germs could have reached the elderly Bella Coola. Possibly this statement is a relic of an old belief in the transmissability of disease through contact, but it is more reasonable to ascribe it to white influence. 614 827 753 177

In a later chapter an account is given of certain occupational abilities, including that of carpentry, which must be confirmed and validated by presents. The above are quite different; they are either present or absent without any action on the part of the individual. 614 827

The Village Community

The village community referred to in the preceding section consists, fundamentally, of the descendants, traced in the patrilineal line, of the reputed first settlers to occupy a site. Since a Bella Coola always describes himself as a native of such-and-such a town, it follows that the village community 614 621

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

614 is a more obvious social grouping than the ancestral family,
621 though it is of the latter that a man is most proud. The member of a small, unimportant village often describes himself as a native of a neighbouring, larger one when at a distance from his home, simply as a matter of convenience.

Even before the coming of the white man, village sites were abandoned and people took up their residence with friends or relatives elsewhere. In fact, mythology contains instances of [773] such migrations at the very beginning of time. In cases of this [361] kind, memory of the earlier home has been preserved for many generations, and may perhaps be the explanation of the many villages which are described as two, and which have two names. In the early days immigrants seem always to have been welcome; they added to the numerical strength of the village, and the original inhabitants enjoyed boasting to the newcomers of their descent from the first settlers. Since any group forced to abandon their own homes naturally moved to those of relatives, there is no difficulty in understanding the process by [582] which they continued to intermarry with their new neighbours. Thus two, or even more ancestral families, inhabiting one village tended to form a closely inter-related stock. In rare instances, two unrelated ancestral families may have become inhabitants of the same village, which would unquestionably lead to intermarriage.

In most cases the endogamic tendencies already described cause the village community to be largely members of one ancestral family. In addition there are always other occu- [563] pants; strangers who have fled from their homes and sought refuge among the Bella Coola; the offspring of illicit intercourse [567] with slaves; guests; foreigners, especially Carriers temporarily [554] resident in Bella Coola; and finally slaves, without status in the community. The real inhabitants, those whose power is firmly planted in the village, are the reputed descendants of the first group of settlers, and accordingly a relative coming to [553] dwell in a village usually endeavours to obtain a name from the origin myth of the ancestral family occupying it, and thus

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

621 establish himself with the traditions of his new home. This is another illustration of the patrilineal tendency of the whole organization. [614] [553]

Politically, the village is the most important Bella Coola unit. Usually, though not always related to one another, the inhabitants are always friends. If an attack is made on a village by a hostile war-party, all the inhabitants suffer equally. On the other hand, if the residents decide to attack another settlement, there is no compulsion for anyone to share the burden. Each individual, with the exception of slaves, follows his own inclination. In the case of murder or other wrong inflicted by an individual, the responsibility rests on his immediate family, not the village. Factions within the village seem to have been unimportant; individual jealousies were common, and often led to murder, but if a family became unpopular or considered itself aggrieved, it usually moved to another village. Neighbouring settlements were generally on friendly terms and often assisted each other in war, but this was not compulsory. Indeed, cases are known in which a war-party from the outer coast, about to attack Sunxl, passed within a quarter of a mile of Xemqo-ts without its inhabitants even warning their threatened neighbours. [628] [682] [578] [627] [628]

As far as internal organization is concerned, the village is as fluid a unit as are most Bella Coola groupings. If one individual has attained a position of eminence through the potlatch system (vol. I, chap. IV), he is "chief" of the village, and his advice is generally followed. If several men have approximately the same importance, there is no dominating figure. In any case, a chief lacks executive authority, and such obedience as he receives is due to his personal influence. Some slight deference is paid to the man who uses the name of the eldest of the first group of settlers, the first chief, but this is not sufficient to warrant the title of "chief" with the significance usually attached to the term. The important members of the village are accustomed to meet for the discussion of ceremonial mat- 622 554 [556] 621 623 595 796

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

621 623 ters, and the village constitutes a unit for all dances; in fact [535] this ceremonial unity is its most important function.

[796] With the exception of a few villages built on the seashore, each Bella Coola settlement consists of a row of houses on the 361 river bank. These are of the usual rectangular, plank-built [184] type typical of the North-West Coast. In front of them stretches a sidewalk, usually supported by piles on the side 342 nearest the river to make it level. The houses, too, in many [171] cases have piles beneath their front ends, made necessary by the steep slope of the bank. In large villages there may be two rows of houses, behind and above one another. Usually there [487] is a rough path parallel to the row of houses at the very edge of the river. The number of houses varies; before the smallpox [164] epidemic some villages contained as many as thirty or forty, others, only two or three. There is no definite arrangement of the houses; anyone may build where there is a vacant space. [433] Much the same arrangement occurs in the sea-coast villages, each of which depends for its main sustenance on an ocean fish-trap, as the river villages depend on a salmon-weir.

342 The central part of each house is occupied by a large fire, [354] often sunk a considerable distance below the level of the floor, and around this is an open space free to all. Toward the side-walls are raised the partitions, forming bedrooms for the different families, or for different members of one. In many cases the flooring is removed in three or four parts of the house for small fires on which different groups cook, the central fire being used for heating and for more important meals. The [572] number of families occupying a house depends on its size; an [622] important chief, with many relatives, often builds an enormous house which is occupied by ten or more families; smaller houses contain only two or three. Life in the larger houses is free and open; people are constantly passing in and out, and any-[261] one present when food is being distributed is given a share as a matter of course. Most of the houses are decorated with [353] carved upright posts and paintings on the beams and back-wall. [535] A door through the latter leads to the back-room, so important in dances.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

796* 575* 578

expressed the opinion that the whole affair was a stupid blunder.

The Bella Coola state that long, long ago the usual outcome of friction between a'alk and kukusiut was the incorporation of members of the former society into the latter like any other uninitiated. The following account of an incident of this kind was obtained from a Kimsquit man who regarded it as historically accurate.

173 575* 578

Some five hundred years after the first settlement of this earth, the members of the two societies used to live amicably together during the summer, which was not surprising considering that both contained members of the same families. But during the winter the kukusiut all gathered in a village on the Dean River for their dances, while the a'alk also performed at the same season in the village of Tselhik, opposite the present Manitou Cannery below Kimsquit.[184] There was considerable jealousy between the two organizations, and the members were always seeking an opportunity to deride and ridicule their rivals. A Cannibal dance had been given by the kukusiut and the a'alk, who were present as uninitiated guests, had watched with wonder the disappearance of the performer into the mysterious realms above. But a few days later, Xmxmlsix, a chief and leader in one of the a'alk dances, happened to be in a lonely part of the forest where he was amazed to meet the Cannibal. The latter, confident of his supernatural power, spoke:

"In meeting me today you have met disaster, you will soon be a corpse."

Xmxmlsix, a middle-aged man of powerful physique, was not impressed by the other's powers, whether physical or supernatural.

"No," he answered. "It is you who have fallen into trouble. You are old and feeble and if you try to injure me it will be the worse for you."

"My age has nothing to do with it," reiterated the Cannibal. "You have met me and will die."

At this juncture two of the Cannibal's guardian-companions appeared, but Xmxmlsix still did not fear because they were both old and unarmed, whereas he had an axe. But when two more kukusiut appeared, [184]This Kimsquit informant stated that long ago a similar segregation of a'alk into one village and kukusiut into another took place in Bella Coola. Bella Coola informants knew nothing of this. The expulsion of the uninitiated from houses in which kusiut dances are taking place leads to a division of the village, and it is easy to understand how two sections could have been created without definite intention. This would hardly account for a separation into two villages and no explanation for the statement is offered.

[621] [591]

7:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1900 NE6 Bellacoola NE6

424 Indians the tradition is considered much more clearly the property of the 575 person who has it in charge than it is among the southwestern Indians. A description of the sisau'k· ceremonial has been given by Jacobsen in the paper above referred to.[1]

604 A clan legend which is illustrated in the sisau'k· ceremonial is called 424 by the Bella Coola "Sæmsma" or "Sma'yusta." These traditions are the exclusive property of each clan. The laws according to which they descend from generation to generation differ from the laws prevailing among the other [621] Coast tribes. The inhabitants of each Bella Coola village are not subdivided into clans, gentes, or septs; but each village community forms a unit, and possesses the same tradition. In order to keep the tradition in the tribe, the 614 law requires that no person shall marry outside of his own village community.
424 Thus the clan tradition is kept the exclusive property of the village community by means of endogamy. I have made very careful inquiries in regard 582 to this point, and all the old men make substantially the same statement. Even marriages among near relatives are permitted:[2] and although marriages of people who are distantly related, or not related at all, are preferred, it even happens that cousins marry, or that an uncle marries his niece, in order to keep the clan tradition from being acquired by another village community. It seems, however, that, owing to the influence of the Coast tribes, the endogamic system has begun to give way to an exogamic system. Powerful [622] and wealthy chiefs marry outside of their own village community, in order to secure an additional clan legend through marriage. This new system agrees with the one prevalent among the Kwakiutl tribes.

575 The kō'siut, as stated before, is a religious ceremony in which all the 614 deities of heaven are personified. The members of various clans are initiated according to their clan traditions; but the same societies and the same deities 796 appear in the traditions of all the various clans. From what little I have been able to learn, it seems that there is an elaborate opening of the whole ceremonial, corresponding to the opening of the ceremonial among the Kwakiutl.[3] I received the following description of the opening ceremony:—

575 The person who invites to the kō'siut, that is to say, the man whose 796 son is to be initiated into one of the secret societies according to the tradition of his clan, requests a person who is called E'xem to invite the nine brothers and their sister, who reside in the House of Myths, and in whose charge the [776] kō'siut is placed. The names of the brothers are Xemxemala'oLla, Xe'mtsiwa, Omq'omki'lik·a, Q'o'mtsiwa, Aimala'oLla, Al'omki'lik·a, K·le'lias, Q'ulaxa'wa, Λt'mak·; and that of their sister, L'etsa'apleLana (see p. 33). In the rear of the house an elevated room is prepared for E'xem, in which he lies down. He is covered with rings made of red cedar-bark. For four days he stays

[1] Vaan, 1894, pp. 1-13.

[2] I have described this fully in the Annual Report of the U. S. National Museum for 1895, pp. 310ff.

7:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1900 NE6 Bellacoola NE6

mythologies to those of the interior. It is unnecessary to revert to this subject here. The similarity of the Bella Coola legends to those of the other Coast tribes on the one hand, and to the traditions of the Athapascan tribes on the other, is evident. 114 177

It is, however, important to compare their social organization with that of the neighboring tribes, in order to gain a clearer understanding of the origin of their peculiar organization. As stated before, the Bella Coola are divided into village communities, which are organized on an endogamic basis. Each village community has its tradition, which is represented in certain ceremonies. The supernatural beings which play a part in these traditions are personified by certain dancers. Other Coast tribes have a much more complex organization. The Tlingit and Haida are divided into two clans, each of which is subdivided into a great many families, which, as it would seem, were originally village communities. This opinion is based on the fact that the names of many of the families must be translated as "inhabitants of such and such a place." The two clans are present in all the villages of the tribe, each family belonging to either one clan or the other. The Tsimshian have the same system, except that the number of clans is four instead of two. Each tribe is divided into families, which embrace the inhabitants of a certain region; but all the families of the whole tribe are classified according to the four clans. Among the Haida, Tlingit, and Tsimshian, descent is purely maternal; among the northern Kwakiutl tribes, conditions are somewhat different, according to observations made by Dr. Livingston Farrand. Here we have village communities which are subdivided according to four clans in the same way as those of the Tsimshian, but descent is not purely maternal. There is a strong preponderance of the latter form of descent, but parents are at liberty to place their children in either the paternal or maternal clan. The preponderance of maternal descent is, however, so strong, that from my previous occasional inquiries I drew the inference that descent was purely maternal. 621 171 [196] [176]

Among the southern Kwakiutl tribes the families constituting a village community are subdivided into a number of clans, but each clan is confined to one village. We do not find a limited number of clans pervading the whole tribe, as we do among the northern tribes. An analysis of the social organization of this tribe has shown that the present organization has evidently developed from a previous simpler state, in which the tribe was divided into single village communities. The present more complex organization resulted from the amalgamation of various villages. Owing to the influence of the totemism of the northern tribes, each village community adopted a crest, which in course of time became the totem of the clan.[1] The Kwakiutl have a peculiar organization, which may be considered a transitional stage between

[1] "Social Organization of the Kwakiutl Indians" (Report of the U. S. National Museum for 1895, p. 333). [113]

7:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1900 NE6 Bellacoola NE6

171 maternal and paternal institutions. Descent is in the paternal line; but a 621 man, at the time of his marriage, receives his father-in-law's crest as a dowry, which he holds in trust for his son, so that actually each individual inherits the crest of his maternal grandfather. The clans are exogamic.

The organization of the Salish tribes of the southern coast, who are linguistically closely related to the Bella Coola, is somewhat similar to that of the Kwakiutl. They are divided into village communities, a few of which have amalgamated, as, for instance, among the Salish tribes of Vancouver Island, among whom the tribe consists of a number of septs, each of which owns a separate village. Here the influence of northern totemism is very much weaker. While most of the village communities have certain crests, these do not play so important a part in the social life of the tribe or in its mythology as they do among the Kwakiutl, and the village communities are not exogamic. The Salish tribes of the interior are organized in very loose village communities without any trace of totem.

The fundamental difference between the northern tribes and the southern tribes consists, therefore, in the fact that the northern tribes have a limited number of clans which are present in all the villages, while among the southern tribes the village community is the only unit of organization.

The organization of the Bella Coola resembles most closely that of the Coast Salish tribes of southern British Columbia. In both cases the tribe is divided into village communities, which possess crests and traditions. This latter feature is, however, very much more strongly developed among the Bella Coola than among the southern tribes. They differ in their laws of intermarriage. While among the southern Coast Salish tribes there is a tendency to exogamy, the Bella Coola have developed a system of endogamy.

The tribes of the Coast Salish of the Gulf of Georgia claim descent from mythical ancestors, who are believed to have originated at the place which the tribe now inhabit. A number of traditions of this kind bear evidence of having been derived from historical events. Some of the tribes in the delta of Fraser River have traditions which refer to the amalgamation of tribes who descended from the mountains, and who are described as the descendants of animals living in the mountains, and of the natives of the delta.[1] I believe 174 that the tribal traditions of the Bella Coola which were told in a previous chapter also bear evidence of the historical fates of the tribe. It is very remarkable that the important tradition of Tōtosō'nx gives Fraser River as the place to which he descended from heaven. In another tradition, Bute Inlet is given as the place at which one of the Bella Coola tribes originated. In still another one, Skeena River is mentioned as the home of one of the tribes (see p. 69). I do not doubt that these allusions to territory

[113] [1] Ninth Report of the Committee of the British Association for the Advancement of Science on the Northwestern Tribes of Canada, 1894, p. 5.

174 words of Kwakiutl derivation will become clear by a glance at the following
177 list, which contains words that can be proved to be of Kwakiutl origin :—

776 a'tokoala = shaman.

Alk^a = speaker.
E'mask'in (p. 49) (Kwakiutl, He'mask'in) = the greatest chief.
[195] Hau'hau (p. 100) = a fabulous bird.
L'ā'qoq'ila = the copper maker.
L'ā'qumēiks = sister of Masmasla'nix (the ending, lēx, designates "woman" in Kwakiutl).
Lēqumail' = mythological name of deer.
Ma'lak'ilas.
Mmisi't (p. 48).
Mta'lina = the country of the salmon (p. 38) (Kwakiutl, mē) = salmon.
No'akila (pp. 49, 66).
O'"mesk'as (p. 70) = the real O'mēsL.
O'"mest.mēi (p. 70).
Omq'omkl'lik'a (p. 33) (Kwakiutl, Q'ō'mq'ōmkilik a) = the wealthiest one.
Pō'Las.
Qandatela'qs (p. 49).
Q'ōmō'qoa (p. 52) = the wealthy one.
Q'ō'mqētis (p. 49) = rich at opposite side of river.
Q'ō'mtsiwa (p. 33) = wealthy at mouth of river.
Smai'yakila (p. 29) = the one who must be worshipped.
sī'siut. = a fabulous fish or snake (pp. 28, 44, 48).
Smayale'ola (p. 29).
T'ō'pewas (p. 97) = the fawn.
Winwi'na (p. 38) = war.
Wa'k'itzmai (p. 50) = the greatest river.

174 With these names and customs the clan traditions must have found their 177 way to the Bella Coola, but their social organization differed fundamentally 424 from that of the Bella Bella branch of the Kwakiutl. While the latter,
614 owing to intimate contact with the northern tribes, had adopted the four-clan system with prevalent maternal descent, the Bella Coola were still distinctly [621] divided into village communities that were not exogamic. It seems very likely that the jealousy with which the ownership of a clan tradition was guarded by the Coast tribes was very early introduced among the Bella Coola. Two means were available for preventing outsiders from acquiring the traditions.
Among the Coast tribes with prevailing maternal institutions, among whom a limited number of clans existed, the ordinary law of inheritance was sufficient to retain the tradition inside of the clan. Not so among the Bella Coola.
174 If their organization at an early time was similar to that of the Coast Salish, 182 it is likely that the child was counted as well a member of the father's as 424 of the mother's family, although the young woman generally moved to the village occupied by her husband. If the child belonged to the families of 614 both parents, it had the right to use the tradition of either family; and consequently in the course of a few generations, the traditions acquired by [591] each family would have spread practically over the whole tribe. There were [851] only two methods possible to avoid this result. The one was to prevent marriages outside the village community; and this method would seem to have been most natural for a tribe organized in village communities, members [621] of which were allowed to intermarry. The other method would have been to regulate the laws of inheritance in such a way that the child had to follow either father or mother, but that it had not the right to use the property of both parents. It seems to my mind that the former method was more likely to develop under the existing social conditions, and that to this reason we must ascribe the development of an endogamic system among the Bella Coola. The occurrence of endogamic marriage among this tribe is quite isolated on the Pacific coast. All the other tribes have exogamic institutions, and by this means preserve their property rights. It is interesting to note that the southern Kwakiutl, who originally seem to have been organized in village communities, have adopted exogamic institutions; but there is a notable difference, in the organization of the village community, between the Bella Coola and the Kwakiutl. Among the Bella Coola we generally find four ancestors to each village,—usually three men and one woman. It is true that these are generally called brothers and sister, but they were created independently by Sɛnx, and are therefore not necessarily considered as blood relations. Among the Kwakiutl the village community are considered the descendants of one single being; consequently, among the latter tribe they are all relatives, who are forbidden to intermarry; while among the Bella Coola they are not relatives, and may intermarry.

7:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1900 NE6 Bellacoola NE6

My inference is, therefore, that the curious social system of the Bella Coola developed through the influence of the customs of the Coast tribes upon the loose social unit of the Salish village community. The possession of clan traditions was felt as a great advantage, and consequently the desire developed to possess clan traditions. These were acquired partly by intermarriage with the Coast tribes, as is shown by the fact that many of these traditions are borrowed from these tribes, partly by independent invention. The desire to guard the traditions which were once acquired led to the development of endogamic institutions, in order to prevent the spread of the traditions over the whole tribe.

The jealousy with which the traditions are guarded has had the effect of making each family try to prevent other families from knowing its own clan tradition. For this reason the clan traditions of the whole tribe are remarkably inconsistent. We find, for instance, that the well-known raven legend of the northern Coast tribes has been utilized by many families as a family tradition. But while one family uses one part of the tradition, other families use other parts of the same tradition. Thus it happens that among the Bella Coola we find the most contradictory myths in regard to important events in the world's history. Some families maintain that the Raven liberated the sun, while, according to another one, the Mink was essential in bringing about the present state of affairs. Still others say that Totoso'nx, during his travels, caused the sun to appear. The discrepancies in the traditions referring to the visit of the Mink and Wasp to their father, the Sun, are also very remarkable. Although a considerable amount of

1: McIlwraith

NE6 Bellacoola NE6

●622

/For information on achieving the status of "chief" through the display and distribution of wealth (especially at potlatches) see category 556./

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

773 hanging a number of bird and animal cloaks, representing ravens, eagles, whales, grizzly bears, black bears, and a few others. Ālquntām asked each individual which of these cloaks he preferred to wear. One selected a raven, another an eagle, and so on. Each donned his choice from the wall and immediately became the bird or animal chosen. Ālquntām gave each man or woman one or more names, and some food in compressed form; then sent him down in avian or mammal form. Even the animals could travel through the air like birds, and each landed on the peak of a mountain in the Bella Coola country, took off his cloak, and reassumed human form. The discarded coverings floated back up to Nusmāt·a. A few individuals, instead of coming to earth in animal form, swarmed down posts which stretched between the worlds.

177 This myth is fervently believed by the Bella Coola. Even 773 Christian Indians, though they readily admit the biblical creation as applied to the white race, remain convinced of the manner in which their own ancestors came into being. At the present time, though most ancient beliefs are rapidly passing away, few, if any, Bella Coola doubt this account of the creation of their forefathers. Their conviction rests not only on the religious aspect of their life, but on the sociological. A man's [551] most treasured possessions are the name brought down from [424] above by his ancestor in the beginning of time, the knowledge of the form taken by that ancestor, and information about the place where he landed. A collection of myths of this kind is given in vol. I, chap. VI. Lacking knowledge of his first an-[622] cestor's form, a Bella Coola has slight chance of becoming a [554] chief; such lore is the birthright of every descendant of one of [561] these first people, and those without it are almost certain to be the offspring of slaves. The social aspects of creation myths will be described later; at this point a broad outline must suffice. Nusmāt·a, "The House of Myths," is the place in which these myths were made, and are now stored, two reasons for its importance in the eyes of the Bella Coola.

[775] Nusmāt·a is not only connected with the history of an indi-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

instructed people about the significance of death omens; it was Raven who showed them the use of slings; and it was Raven who constructed secluded caves and ledges to serve as meeting-places for chiefs. 773 [622] [823]

In brief, the Bella Coola regard Raven as an explorer, teacher, and inventor, whose power, obtained from Ałquntäm, enabled him to construct and outwit his maker, but not to create. Much of his work was for the good of mankind, but much was evil and malicious, an aspect which belongs to mythology. Essentially human, Raven could have been included among anthropomorphic, as well as among zoomorphic beings. He differs from most of the supernatural ones in belonging entirely to the past, as his descendants have none of the first Raven's power. It is doubtful whether he still exists, but in any case he has long since ceased to take any interest in the affairs of the Bella Coola, who consider him only as a figure of mythology and ancient history. 773 776 [825]

SUPERNATURAL BEINGS OF THE VEGETABLE AND MINERAL KINGDOMS

Bella Coola beliefs concerning anthropomorphic and zoomorphic beings are relatively clear and exact; their appearance is known, their powers and functions recognized. The supernatural attributes of trees and plants are less definite. Ałquntäm created the former in the beginning of time, and they were consequently able to talk and act like human beings at that distant period. Owing to the degeneration of man, mortals are no longer able to converse with trees, although the latter can still understand our remarks. In a vague way, the Bella Coola continue to think of trees as having human personalities, but so little is known of their powers, and they enter so seldom into contact or conflict with mortals, that they are practically ignored. 776 824

In an equally vague manner, Nature is regarded as a Mother, giving birth to the trees and plants. One of the kusiut dances portrays this birth of the flowers every spring (II, p. 196). [535] [575]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

539 who, in turn, would pass on the request so that it might reach each 831 member of the party. Not only is it contrary to custom for a commoner 785 to hold intercourse with a chief's wife, but it is unknown for a man to ask another to sleep with his wife, so the youth was surprised and rather [837] frightened. However, he acceded to the request, passed on the instructions, and washed. As he was bathing, a seal appeared in the surf beside [622] him, and he was able to kill it easily. Each in turn behaved in the same manner, washed, and then killed a seal. Next morning, when the chief returned he was delighted that all had turned out in accordance with his hopes. At the same time the wind dropped so that the party was able to return home.

831 The power which had brought the seals within reach of the 785 men had been engendered in their own bodies by these ritual acts after a rather lengthy period of continence. The Bella Coola believe that such a procedure always increases their strength and ability, therefore giving them a better chance to gain favour from supernatural beings, and to take advantage of opportunities offered. Hunters in particular are careful with [224] regard to their marital life since animals know their acts and 825 thoughts, and hide from one who has not made himself "clean" [783] by continence, its termination, and bathing. Sxetsta consists of these three elements, but since continence is the most prominent feature, the term may be translated as "ceremonial chastity."

In its simplest form this comprises merely the three elements already mentioned. The longer the continence, the greater the power engendered by its termination. A man who has practised abstinence for a year has such strength within himself that almost any good fortune may occur, and cases are known in which it has been carried out for even longer periods. More often, an individual practises ceremonial chas-[184] tity in accordance with a family tradition. One old man gave the following recipe and was most emphatic that it always 224 brought success in hunting and fishing; he added that on the 785 two occasions he had tried it, he had brought back a phenomenal number of skins.

A person planning to set out on an expedition for any pur-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

614 extinct, are unusual; normally, the group is largely centred in one village, but with members scattered in other localities.
621. There is no central organization. It is generally recognized that such a unit belongs in the village where its first ancestors settled, and the leading chief of that village is, therefore, an important person in the family, though without status of [622] "head" of it. His advice may be appealed to in cases of dis-[553] putes concerning names, but he lacks judicial authority. Theoretically, the descendants of the elder of two first people are considered as "elder brothers and elder sisters" of those descended from a younger brother or sister; but this is nothing more than an accepted fact; it plays no part in the social life of the community.

552 In addition to human names, the origin myths include those applied to dogs. The first ancestral group had dogs, and these 614 animals had names, or were given them by their powerful 773 masters. Ever since that time their descendants can apply these designations to their own dogs. It is unnecessary to validate such names, but no two canines can be given the same one at the same time, according to the rule which governs the bestowal of human names. This matter was not investigated in detail, and the only dog's name collected was one for which [539] the origin myth is as follows:

> When Tāl·io was first settled in the beginning of time, the houses were built in parallel rows, one above the other, up the side of a steep knoll. At the very top was a toilet-house, built over such a steep incline > [514] that excrement rolled down the hillside. In consequence, one of the early chiefs living there gave to his dog the name, Nuliqwmutl di mink', "Rolling excrement," which has since been preserved in the ancestral family of his descendants.

LAND

124 Great difficulty was experienced in obtaining information about land tenure. The Bella Coola resent keenly the way in 423 which their land has been occupied by white settlers without,
177 according to their standpoint, proper compensation. Ques-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bella bella NE5

BC 614 428 721 and hunting-grounds to those who had helped them in their old age. But in every case the gift turned out to be of doubtful value, since young men grew up who claimed membership in the supposedly defunct ancestral family and combatted the right of those to whom it had been given. This always led to war.

BB BC 423 648 The following is an instance of a feud which arose from the bestowal of a hunting-area.

It is said that about 1850 the people of Tcawat (probably Bute Inlet) captured a Bella Bella woman as a slave. She escaped and fled up the Tcawat River, hoping to come in contact with the Bella Coola, who often hunted in that area. The woman was found by the mother's father of an informant who carefully looked after her while he was hunting beaver and brought her back to Bella Coola, thence sending her to Bella Bella. In gratitude her father, a Bella Bella chief, gave her rescuer the hunting-area known as Nulam, near Kwatna Inlet, with the consent of the members of his ancestral family. BB [425] The land so alienated should have remained permanently in possession of the Bella Coola ancestral family, but was too far rempved from Bella Coola to be used regularly by the new owners. After the death of the Bella Bella chief, a number of individuals who claimed membership in his ancestral family asserted their rights to it. Many years later, after white traders had made their appearance on the coast, a Bella Coola went to Nulam and killed a large number of beaver. As he was leaving with their pelts he was murdered by some Bella Bella, ostensibly as a trespasser. But for the restraining influence of the white man this incident would undoubtedly have led to war. The informant still feels that he is entitled to hunt at Nulam, and did so several times when he was a young man; but his sons have never exercised the right, and it has practically lapsed.

BB BC 423 622 It is unfortunate that the above incident is drawn from Bella Bella, where the power of chiefs is much greater than among the Bella Coola. Consequently it is impossible to say

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bella bella NE5

BB
BC
423
[622]

exactly what right the Bella Bella chief had to dispose of the land. The informant assumed that he must have been powerful enough to dictate to his followers, an unknown possibility in Bella Coola. However, the informant regards the case as typical of what would likely happen should a Bella Coola try to give away land. Out of generosity or gratitude old men have sometimes done so, but always they have forgotten someone, perhaps a mere infant, who on growing up lays claim to the sol'olam.

BC
423
614
[226]
[773]

Hunting-grounds are not the only valuable parts of the country. Even more important are stretches of river suitable for salmon-weirs. Of the same type are good places for olachen-nets, and rocks from which these fish can be caught with scoop-nets. Like hunting-grounds, these are said to have been pre-empted by the first people[7] and have passed into the ownership of the ancestral families descended from them. It is needless to repeat the gradual lapsing of rights to property of this kind in distant areas, since the principle is the same as that already described for land.

[773]
[226]

In one respect, salmon-weirs differ from hunting-areas, since the latter can be used by any number of individuals, whereas the number of salmon-traps possible at any one weir is limited. Again the mythological origin must be given to explain the customary usage. If, for example, a salmon-weir supposedly built by one of the first groups of people was fully manned in the third generation by ten individuals, it is as-

[7]Several Bella Coola myths describe how the first-comers brought with them from above stone hammers for the construction of fish-dams, and how others were provided with miniature dams which grew larger when placed in position. Mr. H. I. Smith kindly gave the writer the following account, received from an elderly Bella Coola:

Long, long ago a certain Tamukus lived with his father, the Sun, who decided to send his child to earth. He came down to Stuix, carrying a stone beneath his arm-pit, and accompanied by a Wolf. Tamukus made the stone into a pile-driver with a face sculptured upon it, and with this tool drove piles to make a fish-weir. After a while a number of human beings came paddling up the Bella Coola River. In course of time the Wolf returned above, but Tamukus remained on earth catching salmon, and teaching the people the method which was in use until the last few years.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

226
lies in public opinion which expresses contempt for a lazy man 626
who is constantly begging.

To anyone familiar with the definite social groupings of a 614
tribe divided into clans or land-owning families, the ancestral family of the Bella Coola must appear as a vague and unreal unit, only distinguished by its intangibility. So it was found when investigating in the field. When information began to accumulate, it seemed as if there must be some definite obligations incumbent upon all members of the ancestral family, but none could be found. Without asking a direct question, the point was raised whether, if a man were killed, the members [627] of his ancestral family would unite to avenge him. Conversely, were they liable for the deeds of any member? In each case the reply was in the negative; these matters concern only the immediate family. In regulating marriage the ancestral family [582] is important, since it is wise for a man or woman to seek his mate within the members of that group, though it is not compulsory. Theoretically, the terms of kinship applied to mem- [601] bers of the immediate family may be extended to members of [178] the ancestral family, but in practice this is rarely the case, and, if so, is functionless. It might be argued that this somewhat wide application of kinship terms, verging on the classificatory usage, is a relic of an earlier, and now broken-down, clan system. It is impossible to prove or to deny such a contention. When trying to discover whether the members 614
of an ancestral family ever contributed to a potlatch whereby 622
one of their fellows established himself as a chief, the following 431
interesting comment was received. The previous winter the 171
informant had been in Bella Bella, and there the point was raised by a Bella Bella chief whom he quoted as follows:

"We laugh at you Bella Coola because each of you is always trying to be chief. Our system is much better; we all help our chiefs."

The man agreed with the Bella Bella man that there was an important difference between the practices of the two tribes.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

establish himself with the traditions of his new home. This is another illustration of the patrilineal tendency of the whole organization. 621 [614] [553]

Politically, the village is the most important Bella Coola unit. Usually, though not always related to one another, the inhabitants are always friends. If an attack is made on a village by a hostile war-party, all the inhabitants suffer equally. On the other hand, if the residents decide to attack another settlement, there is no compulsion for anyone to share the burden. Each individual, with the exception of slaves, follows his own inclination. In the case of murder or other wrong inflicted by an individual, the responsibility rests on his immediate family, not the village. Factions within the village seem to have been unimportant; individual jealousies were common, and often led to murder, but if a family became unpopular or considered itself aggrieved, it usually moved to another village. Neighbouring settlements were generally on friendly terms and often assisted each other in war, but this was not compulsory. Indeed, cases are known in which a war-party from the outer coast, about to attack Sinxl, passed within a quarter of a mile of Ło̧mqo·ts without its inhabitants even warning their threatened neighbours. [628] [682] [578] [627] [628]

As far as internal organization is concerned, the village is as fluid a unit as are most Bella Coola groupings. If one individual has attained a position of eminence through the potlatch system (vol. I, chap. IV), he is "chief" of the village, and his advice is generally followed. If several men have approximately the same importance, there is no dominating figure. In any case, a chief lacks executive authority, and such obedience as he receives is due to his personal influence. Some slight deference is paid to the man who uses the name of the eldest of the first group of settlers, the first chief, but this is not sufficient to warrant the title of "chief" with the significance usually attached to the term. The important members of the village are accustomed to meet for the discussion of ceremonial mat- 622 554 [536] 621 623 535 796

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

621 623 ters, and the village constitutes a unit for all dances; in fact [535] this ceremonial unity is its most important function.

[796] With the exception of a few villages built on the seashore, each Bella Coola settlement consists of a row of houses on the 361 river bank. These are of the usual rectangular, plank-built [184] type typical of the North-West Coast. In front of them [342] stretches a sidewalk, usually supported by piles on the side [171] nearest the river to make it level. The houses, too, in many cases have piles beneath their front ends, made necessary by the steep slope of the bank. In large villages there may be two rows of houses, behind and above one another. Usually there [487] is a rough path parallel to the row of houses at the very edge of the river. The number of houses varies; before the smallpox [164] epidemic some villages contained as many as thirty or forty, others, only two or three. There is no definite arrangement of the houses; anyone may build where there is a vacant space. [433] Much the same arrangement occurs in the sea-coast villages, each of which depends for its main sustenance on an ocean fish-trap, as the river villages depend on a salmon-weir.

342 The central part of each house is occupied by a large fire, [354] often sunk a considerable distance below the level of the floor, and around this is an open space free to all. Toward the side-walls are raised the partitions, forming bedrooms for the different families, or for different members of one. In many cases the flooring is removed in three or four parts of the house for small fires on which different groups cook, the central fire being used for heating and for more important meals. The [572] number of families occupying a house depends on its size; an [622] important chief, with many relatives, often builds an enormous house which is occupied by ten or more families; smaller houses contain only two or three. Life in the larger houses is free and open; people are constantly passing in and out, and any-[261] one present when food is being distributed is given a share as a matter of course. Most of the houses are decorated with [353] carved upright posts and paintings on the beams and back-wall. [535] A door through the latter leads to the back-room, so important in dances.

I:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The married sons of a chief usually live in his house, and if he is very powerful the husbands of his daughters may also reside with him. Such a man is at the zenith of power, surrounded by a close group, formed of elderly relatives, of children and grandchildren. Connections by marriage are also added to the family group. At the present time, for example, one Bella Coola man is looking after his brother's widow, and it is felt that she is a member of his family. 592 556 622 602

Another way in which a rich man can increase the size of his family is by adoption. Parents who have lost an infant may adopt the child of some member of the ancestral family of either father or mother. The matter is usually arranged soon after birth, and the transfer takes place immediately after weaning. The real parents are willing since they know that the adopting parents will be able to validate valuable prerogatives and names for the child, which they themselves are unable to do. This desire for their child's welfare overrules parental love. In such cases the real father or mother can likewise bestow names and other prerogatives on the child, who really becomes a member of two families. This is often done by an old couple whose own children have married and moved away, and who thus find themselves lonely. It is considered disgraceful for parents to allow their children to be adopted by anyone not a member of their ancestral family, since that would be an admission of inability to bring up a child in the path of his ancestors. 556 597 614 [888]

"Your father was not strong," could be said to such a child as a reproach.

In the case of an orphan some wealthy relative is almost always ready to adopt him. Consequently, as he grows up, he receives his full share of the ancestral origin myth, and the names embodied therein, so that the loss of his own parents is of little consequence in the course of life. Occasionally a child is not adopted by relatives, and then his fate is indeed hard. 736 597

shelter in the house of any chief, and shared in the food which was being distributed at the almost continuous ceremonial feasts. Now, each family lives alone and no one feels any responsibility for this old man. [178]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

593 family are liable. It is very rare for a woman to be killed in 627 a blood feud. A death is answered by a death; if two persons 682 should be slain for one murder the family which has suffered the double loss endeavours to kill another of their enemies. In [562] case of wounding, an effort is made to wound the offender, but [683] if he should be killed his family would try to avenge him.
More often, one of the offender's family takes the initiative of offering goods to the injured family, "to cure the wound." If the offer is accepted, and the goods delivered properly, the matter is at an end. If a murder be committed within the ranks of the immediate family, for instance, if a brother kill a brother, revenge, if executed, must be meted out to the actual [622] offender. If requested to do so, the leading chief of a village may offer his advice, but it is always considered that revenge concerns only the immediate family.

612 Revenge is a topic which shows clearly the essential fluidity 614 of the family. There are no well-defined degrees of relation-[627] ship within which responsibility rests. Instead, everyone
[682] knows, in the open life of the community, how many persons share the family life of the individual, and they alone are held to account, or they alone demand compensation. From its very nature, the family must be a bilateral unit which, when powerful, stretches out to absorb members of the ancestral families of both mother and father.

Not only does the family thus appear constantly to be attracting to itself members of the ancestral family of either parent, but these relatives themselves are deeply interested in the affairs of the family. This is most clearly shown in the case of children who, of course, are members of the ancestral family of both their mother and father. A few days after 553 birth some relative is expected to call together the people of 612 the village where the child is born for the bestowal and validi-
614 zation of an ancestral name. It is considered an evidence of [551] poverty if this is done by the father, as if his child were only supported by his parents, not by a larger circle of relatives. It is immaterial whether this gathering be called by a relative

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

601 Coola social organization, and of the absence of standardized obligations based upon specific relationships.

Slaves

567 Since a slave was[20] without status in the Bella Coola community, it is perhaps incorrect to include a description of [559] slavery in a chapter on social organization; but as slaves lived in the Bella Coola villages, it seems reasonable to include them when dealing with the different units of the tribe. It was 162 impossible to obtain an accurate estimate of their number in 567 Bella Coola; slavery has been so long abandoned that the present natives could only hazard vague guesses. Judging from conversational remarks by elderly men, it seems probable that in the old days there was a considerable slave population in every Bella Coola village, comprising at times as much as thirty to forty per cent of the total population.

567 When a party raided a village most of the inhabitants were 727 slain, but some, especially children, young adults, or famous chiefs were captured. As far as could be learned, once a captive had reached Bella Coola he was in little danger, since torture or systematic slaying after the heat of battle had subsided was not a Bella Coola characteristic. The leader of the expedition retained many of the captives as his own slaves, and distributed others among his followers. Anyone, chief [422] or commoner, could own slaves in the same way that he could own any other type of goods.

567 Like any other commodity, slaves were bought and sold. 437 The Bella Coola were usually so well provided with salmon that they were able to exchange these fish with the members [622] of other tribes for slaves. Lack of strong chieftainship among [726] the Bella Coola hindered their success in war, so that most of [431] their slaves were obtained by trade. To the same category [773] belong those obtained as presents at potlatches. If, however, [641] a member of one of the tribes on the lower Fraser River was

[20] One of the first efforts of the white man's establishment in British Columbia was the freeing of all slaves. Consequently the past tense is used in this section.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

CHAPTER IV

RANK

Chieftainship—Secret Society—The Potlatch

CHIEFTAINSHIP

IN the previous chapter have been described the beliefs of the Bella Coola concerning the origin of names, and the attitude of pride with which they regard those embodied in ancestral myths, which carry with them prized prerogatives. But the unsystematic method by which ancestral names are inherited is sufficient to show that their possession, though valued for sentimental reasons, is not enough to make the owner a chief. On what, then, is Bella Coola chieftainship based? Expressed briefly, it depends on the number and value of presents distributed at any kind of ceremonial. To the Bella Coola, every rite, whether it be a marriage, the bestowal of a name, a dance, a type of funeral, or admission into a secret society, is a prerogative intimately associated with the myth by which the performance is authorized. Accordingly, the host is really displaying the glories of his ancestors before the eyes of guests present at the ceremony. To the Bella Coola it is unthinkable for such to be performed without the giving of presents to all; failure to do so would destroy the value of the prerogative. The potlatch is the ceremonial at which the most lavish generosity is displayed, but the principle of the acquisition of prestige by the giving of presents is the same for all other rites; the only difference is that at a potlatch a man is able to display his generosity to a larger number of recipients. In consequence, the aim of every ambitious man is to hold potlatches, since his status in the community virtually rests on his ability in this respect. The ritual of a potlatch will be given in detail in the latter part of this chapter, but its complications will be intelligible only after a description of the

622 ●
556 * 431
[424]
[775]
[554]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

622 broader principles of chieftainship. The first essential is to 556 consider the principles of present-giving.
431

PRESENTS

556 Consider, for example, a man who wishes to take for him-431 self one of his ancestral names, and at the same time to display certain features of his ancestral myth—a particular type of 424 house, totem-pole, or dance used by one of his forefathers.
He invites guests to his house, displays the feature of his myth, and must give a present to each to show the value of his prerogative and to demonstrate that he has not merely casually usurped the function in question. In giving a present of, for instance, $20, it is as if he said to the recipient:

"See! These are the glories of my ancestors of whom I am the descendant. I have a part in their fame. To make this valid I give you from my wealth a mere trifle, a matter of no consequence to me, who am so firmly established in the path of my ancestors."

556 The guest receives the money with mixed feelings. On the 431 one hand he has received $20 as a "present." But if he wishes to elevate his own position and his own prestige, together with that of his ancestors, it is incumbent on him to repay this sum [171] with interest. Contrary to the practice among some other coastal tribes, there is no fixed rate of interest among the Bella Coola. An ambitious man who seeks to become a chief will strive to the utmost to pay back with heavy interest when he himself gives a ceremony so that his fame will be carried far [558] and near. If he should repay only the principal, he would be regarded as having done all that was obligatory, but should he fail to do even so much, he would soon sink to a position of little consequence, no matter how lofty and distinguished his ancestral name might be.

171 In this respect there is a parallel between the Bella 556 Coola and ourselves. A man invited to a dinner party is not 558 compelled to return the compliment, but if, in the course of the writer was in Bella Coola, a non-ceremonial entertainment was given one evening at which several men sang and performed. The writer was asked to sing a Bella Coola song, which he did in the belief that it was not one that was incorporated in the ancestral myth of anyone. Unfortunately, his teacher had erred, and as soon as the song was completed an old woman arose and stated that it belonged to her ancestral family. She avoided the difficulty of its singing by immediately announcing that the singer was her "son." Thus the writer was adopted into a Bella Coola family, a circumstance which aided him considerably in collecting information. This did not alter the fact that a ceremonial song had been sung. Accordingly, the woman gave presents to the guests, thereby legalizing the adoption, and saving herself from the disgrace of having one of her songs used as if it were a matter of no consequence, free to anyone.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

123
533 556*
424
[597]

SEATING

Presents are also a means of obtaining seats. Every Bella Coola has at least one name embodied in an ancient myth. A man who wishes to become a chief can do so only by giving lavish presents to make his designation "strong," "firm," or "bright," to use Bella Coola expressions. Such gifts increase the importance of the owner's name, and they obtain for him the right to a seat, more or less definitely located, in the house. Since all Bella Coola habitations are built on similar lines, a man can occupy his wonted position when summoned to a ceremony in any house. The validating of ancestral names and the acquisition of seats are among the important features which occur at potlatches.

554
556*
[622]
[424]
[553]

In the beginning of time, when the first people were sent down to populate the earth, it is assumed that each who established a village, consisting of a single house, seated himself in the best spot within the dwelling, namely the central position behind the fire; his younger relatives ranged either beside him

[773]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

all that he sits in an enviable spot, irrespective of its location in the house. 554 556*

In precisely the same manner a man may take for himself a seat in the central part of the row behind the fire, but he is laughed at for endeavouring to assume a dignity, unworthily, unless he can validate his position by lavish presents. The Bella Coola are always ready to make fun of a person who fails to maintain his seat. On the death of the occupant of the central position it is taken for granted that whoever inherits his name will assume that location and give the essential presents, but it is not incumbent upon him to do so. He may choose to establish his new name at his old station, beside, instead of behind, the fire. Thus it has come to pass that the seat of the most important chief of a village is often at the side of the house. When all are seated the chiefs may be widely separated, and a parent may have obtained for his son a seat in a better part of the house than his own. But as a rule the chiefs sit in a row at the back of the fire, the most influential one in the middle. There must have been feuds when two men desired to seat themselves in the central position at the same time, but disputes about this were uncommon, because a man's seat was, and still is, primarily regarded as the intangible goods wherewith he is clothed, rather than his right to sit at any particular spot. It is these non-material coverings that enable a man to be bold and assertive in argument or suggestion, in fact to be a chief. A young man may have had conferred on him one of the noblest names, but his influence depends on the value of the goods expended on his behalf, subject of course to the universal characteristic that a man of forceful character may have more influence than his actual position warrants. [424] [428] [622] [424]

Jealous feuds are common when the man who owns the name of the first chief, first ancestor of a village, has duly validated it, but is being eclipsed in the giving of potlatches by a man whose name is of less intrinsic importance. Such a complication recently arose at Kimsquit, and the Bella Coola [578] [682]

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

554 ascribe two murders which took place there in 1915 to jealousy engendered by rivalry.

*556 A chief who desires to have his son, or other near relative, [578] succeed to his actual seat may validate for him a position at [682] his feet. If several potlatches be given, with distribution of goods for this purpose, it becomes recognized that the son shall [622] take his father's seat. None the less, he will not have his father's influence or prestige unless he can himself continue to give away goods, because the power of a chief rests on this, not on his ancient name or the location of his seat.

553 Further evidence that a man's influence rests less on his actual name than on the wealth distributed with reference to *556 it is found in the lack of uniformity in the type of names validated. Those of highest potential importance are the ones brought to the earth by the first-comers, yet in many cases a man prefers to elevate his position with respect to a name of later origin. It is not uncommon for a man to validate several ancestral designations, and choose one of them to be his most important by valuable gifts for the seat which he occupies with respect to it; or in other cases a name of modern origin is selected and elevated. Thus, a certain Bella Coola chief who is the legal owner of the names Q̣eil and Xemlaix, two of the first people to settle this earth, has based his greatness on the goods expended for a seat with reference to the name Siälxeläx, of more modern origin. It is accordingly clear that any Bella Coola can rise to a position of importance, even though he lacks the right to one of the most ancient names. Moreover, some chiefs prefer to validate several names rather than concentrate on one alone.

[622] Furthermore, a powerful chief can create a name. In this case the "power" of the designation rests, not in any supernatural origin, but in the actual wealth distributed. Two examples will serve to illustrate this point. Between 1880 and 1890 a chief was preparing to give a potlatch at which his nephew was to receive a name, when fire destroyed the village with the exception of his house. This added to the value of

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

554 chief had thus obtained a seat for his daughter, as well as ones
* 556 for his two sons. But usually a woman continues to use the 562 ancestral name given to her in infancy until she is able to [553] assist her husband in a potlatch, when a name is validated for her (see I, p. 410). The ancestral names of the first women to occupy this earth are reserved for women and, like men's names, vary in prestige according to the prowess of their owners. Most names given to children, though embodied in [551] origin myths, are applicable to either sex; and these are the common designations of women. Cases are known in which a woman has assumed an ancestral name if her brother has allowed it to fall into ill-repute through failure to give potlatches.

554 With such a fluid system, no fixed line can be drawn be-
* 556 tween chief and commoner. But after his fourth potlatch a man's influence in the community has become so great that
● 622 he will usually feel justified in having the carpenters make for [352] him a material seat. There is nothing to prevent a person having one made for him before he has given the requisite number of potlatches, but too rapid assumption may render him liable to the scorn of the community through his failure to show himself sufficiently "strong." The contempt shown [626] to anyone attempting to usurp too lofty a place is a strong deterrent to a proud young man.

[532] On the material seat are carved the man's ancestral crests, in other words the forms in which his first ancestors came to [352] earth, or some of the beings with whom they came in contact. To show these is a matter of pride, but unless the display is fittingly validated, the man's own dignity will be lowered, as well as that of his ancestors. Construction of a seat is particularly common when a man is establishing himself in the central position behind the fire, and claims this to be where his first ancestor sat. Others among the first people may have chosen seats in other parts of the house, and in these, likewise, a man who is taking his ancestral name may have a material seat constructed. Establishment in such a position increases a chief's feeling of mental superiority, as if strength-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

ened by the age-long power of his ancestor. Finally, in old age a powerful chief is careless where he seats himself; his fame is so great that he can afford to disregard all conventions. 554 556* 622 [183]

POWER OF CHIEFS

It will be seen from the foregoing that chieftainship among the Bella Coola does not depend on hereditary rank, still less on an elective principle, but on the individual's prestige as displayed, especially in his ability to acquire for himself a firm seat by the giving of presents. As he continues to do so his influence becomes ever greater. Consequently, it is impossible to state clearly what are the powers of a chief; such depend upon his prestige and influence. For a Bella Coola chief has no executive or judicial authority; what deference is shown to him depends on his success as a man, a factor which is constantly rising or falling.

The coming of the white man has enabled the Bella Coola [177] to earn comparatively large sums of money by trapping and fishing. This in turn has enabled nearly everyone to give at [434] least one potlatch, a very different state of affairs from that which prevailed in the last century when it required years of toil for a man to amass the necessary food and skins. Consequently, in many towns there were no men who had given potlatches, so that a man's prestige was estimated by the [431] presents he had given at smaller ceremonies. Sometimes, [535] moreover, a man preferred to increase his fame by giving rites of a different nature, such as kusiut dances, and the presents then distributed might elevate him in the eyes of the community, to a position above that of a man who had given a potlatch. This, however, was unusual.

After a fourth potlatch a man is accorded a position of eminence, and is termed a numitl chief. Numitl is an untranslatable word, with the significance of "passage," an allusion to the amount of goods which have passed through his hands. Jealous and vulgar-minded persons pun on the word, applying [578]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

554 it to the digestive tract. After a man has given four potlatches he feels superior to those who have been unable to do likewise.
* 556 His name is "bright," "clean," "heavy," "firm," or "upright"
● 622 in Bella Coola terms, and so, likewise, his seat. He feels inde-[578] pendent and proud. Such a chief will fearlessly enter the backroom where ceremonial rites are taking place, even if not entitled to do so.

"He is so strong, he can go where he will," say the Bella Coola.

The advice of such a man is taken because of his ability and prestige, especially by the members of his own family. A few years ago, for example, when a certain Bella Coola died, his brother wished a kusiut name-prerogative of the deceased to pass to the dead man's daughter. The girl's mother's father, a numitl chief, objected, and his desires were followed, although the name in question was not connected in any way with his family. In small matters, too, people gladly carry out the [592] wishes of a chief. Work around the house is done for him without thought of disobedience. An old man was asked whether, when he was young, chiefs gave many orders and acted as masters in their households.

"You bet," the old man answered emphatically with a dry chuckle.

231 It is difficult now to form an accurate estimate, from observation, of the influence of chiefs solely through virtue of the 552 goods they have expended. But the following is a concrete 622 example. In November, 1923, the writer, while walking through the Bella Coola village, was bitten by a dog. He was told that the animal belonged to a certain old woman. When next he saw the owner he asked her whether she knew that her dog attacked passers-by.

"Yes," she answered, in a matter-of-fact tone, "He is a chief and can do what he likes."

Further questioning elicited the information that the old [766] woman and her husband, the childless last survivors of an ancestral family, had transmitted some of their ancestral

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

names to their dog, and had distributed presents to validate the bestowal. Consequently, the animal is a chief (see Plate 11)[1] and can do as he likes. When it dies it will be mourned as a chief. Moreover, a number of people have returned the presents which they received at the time the dog was made a chief, and this money is kept by the woman and her husband, to be used when they perform the rite of mourning for the dog at death.

When this is possible, in the present degenerate days, it is not difficult to understand how, formerly, a great chief felt himself above the restraints that hindered lesser men. The last great Bella Coola chief was Potles, who died between 1870 and 1880. His influence and power were so great that he was a virtual ruler, daring anything. If he requested a young man to take his food box home and the youth was slow to obey, Potles had no hesitation in killing him on the spot. Such great power, though unusual, is intelligible to the Bella Coola, since Potles gave far more potlatches than any of his contemporaries. Other chiefs have been known to attempt a similar arbitrary use of power, but have failed, since their prestige was not great enough to justify it. The fame of a mighty chief spreads up and down the coast, and protects him and the members of his family from being ambushed and slain in any sporadic foray. During an actual fight, however, a chief had to take his chances with the rest, but the comparative immunity was a great advantage.

The Bella Coola recognize the fundamental differences between their own concepts about chieftainship and those of other coastal tribes with whom they come in contact. This point was mentioned in the course of conversation by several men. The most powerful chief known to them was Tcubisa, who, they say, was virtual monarch of the Kitkatla. None of his subjects could go hunting without his permission, and he had rights to a certain share of their booty. At any ceremony presents had first to be given to him, and if he were slighted in this respect, he would kill the offender. It is be-

[1] [See cat. 116, p 186 (c) - ANALYST]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

171 lieved that all the Kitkatla chiefs were powerful, but Tcubsa
* 556 was the greatest of all. It is said that one of his prerogatives[1]
● 622 was to exercise jus primae noctis whenever a Kitkatla was 829 married. Without question, tales of this chief's prowess have become exaggerated in transmission, none the less they show that the Bella Coola realize the great importance of the northern chiefs. Concerning their nearer neighbours, the Bella Bella, the Bella Coola understand the way in which the members of a family combine to help their chief in the giving of presents. They say that the Bella Bella consider the Bella Coola practice of each one endeavouring to make himself a chief to be foolish in the extreme. Such is also said to be the opinion among the Kwakiutl, who support their contention that in Bella Coola all are chiefs, from the fact that flooring exists under the seats of all, whereas in Fort Rupert, their home, such occurs only beneath the seats of chiefs.

262 Corresponding to the extreme paucity of functions pos-
574 sessed by Bella Coola chiefs, their prerogatives are likewise
622 scanty. Indeed, they take their validated seats only during certain rites of the secret society connected with chiefs, at potlatches, and at ceremonial meals. These last occur whenever a deer or seal is killed; the latter is considered a great delicacy.[2] [225] Anyone can kill a seal, but it would be unthinkable for a Bella Coola to share its flesh with his immediate family only. The [252] animal is cleaned, the hole made by bullet or spear carefully plugged, and the carcass boiled whole in a large box. Mean-[203] while a herald (I, p. 244) summons the chiefs to the house where the successful hunter lives. If the meal is to consist merely of one small seal, only a few chiefs are invited, those of greatest influence through their possession of "strong" seats. When [562] several seals have been killed, the number invited is correspondingly larger, but no woman may partake unless she ranks

[1]This is said to have been a personal prerogative, not shared by all chiefs, and requiring validation by valuable presents.

[178] [2]Only traces of the rite described in this paragraph occur at the present time. In fact, the reservation of seal meat for chiefs alone was discontinued towards the close of the last century.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

as a man by the duly validated ownership of a chief's name in her own right. Formerly a slave was never allowed to eat seal, unless he had been the slayer. If many seals are killed, chiefs from adjacent villages are sometimes invited. The chiefs seat themselves according to their proper positions and are first served with the blood-stained grease that floats to the top of the water as the meat is boiling. When cooked, the meat is cut into strips, measured in terms of so many finger breadths, according to the number of guests. The cuts run down each fore-flipper, so that each receives a narrow strip including one of the toes. The head is always given to the herald.[3]

Wealthy chiefs frequently invite their fellows to ordinary meals even when no seal or deer has been killed. On these occasions, as at seal feasts, the guests are designated by their ancestral names, not by those in general use.

Chiefs are also accustomed to meet for the discussion of matters connected with the winter ceremonial; on such occasions their number may be augmented by men of influence in the secret society, though they do not rank as chiefs. Such a meeting is always called when a new member is to be initiated into the kusiut society. If there is difference of opinion the influence of even a numitl chief is outweighed by a man of importance in the society. The matter is discussed by all present and a decision reached by general agreement. It is difficult for a white man to understand how such is possible without either a vote, or general recognition by all that the views of some individual must be accepted. The writer was present at one such meeting, and was struck by the manner in which, after considerable, and at times heated, discussion, a consensus of opinion was reached, and accepted even by those who had proposed a contrary course.

Near every village is a place where the chiefs hold such meetings. All the inhabitants know the general locality, but

[3]Every effort was made to ensure the accuracy of this account, but errors may have crept in on account of the length of time which has elapsed since the ceremony was carried out in full detail.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

622 there is such dread of the supernatural powers possessed by 623 members of the kusiut society that none would dare go there.
778 If an uninitiated person should do so, he would formerly have been either killed or initiated into the society. The meeting-[575] place of the Q̓omqo·ts chiefs is on a ledge of rock jutting out over a waterfall about a quarter of a mile from the village. The stream winds down a narrow cleft of the mountain side, screened by dense vegetation, and suddenly falls into a cauldron, so hemmed in by cliffs that no sunlight can enter. The ledge is immediately above the brink of the falls, one of the most awe-inspiring places imaginable. The meeting-places of other villages lack such natural settings, though all are at the bases of cliffs, or near some easily distinguished feature. Some 178 of them are decorated with rude carvings, pecked into the 532 stone. The meaning of the designs is not known to any of 778 the present inhabitants. Some of them were made, long ago, by chiefs when they were composing tunes; they picked out the rock in time to the music forming in their minds. Others
[211] were mere memorials of certain events. If a chief gave an important ceremony, he, or one of his friends, carved a figure, perhaps that of a man, perhaps of some animal connected with the rite, to recall the occasion. No carvings have been made within the life-time of any Bella Coola, so it is probable that they had further significance, now unknown.

622 When a chief wishes to summon his fellows for a meeting 623 he visits each and notifies him by a simple pressure of the foot, in many cases unobserved even by those sitting near. The 201 person so called slips away, unostentatiously, to the meeting-place.

578 The position of chief was not without disadvantages in the old days. The Bella Coola are so jealous that anyone who 622 succeeded in elevating himself to a position above his fellows
682 became an object of envy. Their mythology contains many [152] examples of the murder of some powerful chief by rivals of his own village, and informants of today state that these records are true. One intelligent man asserted that his father had thus been slain about seventy years earlier. It appears that attempts were commonly made to kill chiefs by means of sympathetic magic, and it is quite possible that such attempts, becoming known, preyed upon the minds of the victims to such an extent that death resulted.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

578
622
682
[754]

WEALTH

Since wealth is so important in chieftainship, it would be desirable at this point to consider the concepts of wealth. Unfortunately, it is impossible to give a satisfactory treatment of this subject. The coming of the white man altered the economic aspects of Bella Coola life so radically, and at such an early period, that concrete examples of economic interdependence, so useful in a thorough study, could not be obtained in the field. It is possible that greater attention to this subject might have produced more satisfactory results, but I am doubtful of this.

114
177
556*

In the old days, "wealth" was of two categories: (a) Prerogatives, tangible or intangible, which could be shown, pictorially or dramatically, or could be expounded in words; and (b) Goods which could be distributed for validating such prerogatives. Individual possessions, unsuited for distribution, were hardly considered as wealth; a sewing-machine, a bottle of whiskey, a bed, or some other luxury might give satisfaction to the owner, but did not increase his importance in the eyes of his fellows. The value of objects was only for their use in ceremonial distribution; indeed, prior to such distribution, they were only of potential value. This attitude controlled Bella Coola economics in the early days of contact, and still influences their behaviour. A native store-keeper once ruefully commented on the fact that he would gain no advantage from the goods on his shelves, since he hoped merely to sell them, not to give them away.

556*
[422]
[177]

A man's relatives were expected to help him in the acquisition of goods, but the extent of their contributions was never 184

476 556*

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

present, and the fame of the initiate is thereby carried farther afield than would be possible if only Bella Coola were in attendance. Every individual duly secluded and given a sisaok name feels himself ceremonially allied to others who have had a similar experience, and they form a grouping which may be termed the sisaok secret society. 553 556* 575

The close connection between this society and chiefs is obvious from the presence of names of each type in the same ancestral myths. None the less, every chief, that is a person with duly validated ancestral name and seat, is not a sisaok, unless he has validated a sisaok name for himself and undergone the period of seclusion. Conversely, a man may be a duly authorized member of the sisaok although lacking a seat and the other marks of chieftainship. The relationship is, however, so close that the Bella Coola think of the sisaok society as a society of chiefs. Sisaok dances take place at potlatches and funerals, and occasionally at gatherings of less importance. Difficulties arise at the death of a chief who has failed to use some of his goods for the acquisition of a sisaok name. Such a case took place at the death of an important Bella Coola in the summer of 1923. Theoretically, he was ignorant of sisaok rites, but after much discussion these were used on account of his importance as a numitl chief, an instance of the manner in which a man's personal importance over-rules ceremonial dictates. 575 622 [553] [535] [766] [183]

The Bella Coola believe that only some of their sisaok name-prerogatives came to this earth at the beginning of time with their first ancestors, and that many more have been acquired later by supernatural experiences. These were especially common among their forbears as they ranged over this earth seeking places to settle in the beginning of time. No sisaok name can be assumed casually; each must have had a specific origin. There are few sisaok origin myths, though theoretically there should be one to account for every name. The explanation appears to lie in the undoubted fact that many sisaok prerogatives have been acquired comparatively recently 424 551 575 773 [177]

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

(4) The strengthening of the donor's seat. 556*

(5) The strengthening, or initial establishment, of seats for a number of young relatives of the donor who may, or may not, be those who are being initiated into the sisaok society. Other youths may also be established on seats by their relatives. 796

The duration of a potlatch varies with the number of rites being performed. The preliminaries, including the beginning of seclusion for sisaok initiates, requires at least several weeks, in some cases months. There is further delay of a week or more after the arrival of the first guests, as only when the last party has arrived can the actual potlatch begin. This can then be completed in three days and nights, although if many initiates are performing their sisaok dances, a longer time is required.

What are the consequences of giving a potlatch?

In the first place the donor spreads the fame of his name far and wide, also the myth with which it is incorporated. Thus he increases the renown of his ancestors, a source of intense pride and gratification. 556*

More important even than this, it elevates the donor himself. With the proper carrying out of the complicated ritual and the knowledge that his name is now known among different tribes, a man experiences a feeling of mental superiority which enables him to take a leading part in the affairs of his community. In Bella Coola a chief (stältumx) is a person whose influence is paramount owing to his success in giving potlatches.[6] If several chiefs in one village have given potlatches, he who has given most is generally of greatest importance, although often a man of forceful character who has held, for example, five potlatches will be regarded with greater respect than one of lesser weight, even if he has given six. The whole system is exceedingly fluid, as might be expected where chieftainship depends on individual prowess. In theory, the man who holds the name of the first person to occupy a village, at

[156] 556* 622 [554] [182]

[6] Particularly if he has given four potlatches and can accordingly be described as a sumäl chief (I, p. 173). In sisaok songs the archaic word stäämunts is also sometimes employed for "chief."

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 556 the time the earth was settled, ought to be chief of that village.
● 622 If he has been able to give the necessary potlatches to weight his possession of that name, the fact that he is the legal descendant of the first chief will add a certain amount to his prestige, but unless he has been able to do this his influence will be slight.

* 556 Thirdly, potlatches smooth the way for the giver after 622 death. Before the corpse of a chief is removed from the house 766 where he has died, a speaker always announces the number of [775] potlatches he has given and the total value of goods distributed at them. These gifts in a vague way are felt to make easy the deceased's path in the next world as they have done in the present. The feature of the potlatch, though firmly believed by some of the older people, plays a less important part in the life of the Bella Coola than might be expected.

* 556 What are the requisites for giving a potlatch?

(1) Possession of an ancient myth, containing a name or [424] names. Probably every Bella Coola has this requirement. A man's family may not be the proud owners of one of the ancestral myths dealing with the first settlement of this earth, but they will at least own some ancient myth which they can elevate by giving a potlatch. As has been said, the owner of one of the most ancient names in many cases chooses to elevate one of lesser antiquity, a course which must, perforce, be done by one who lacks an origin myth. The slight feeling of defer-[554] ence with which those are regarded who hold the names of the first inhabitants of the earth, the mighty chiefs of old, is subordinate to the very real feeling of respect in which is held the successful giver of potlatches. The descendant of one of the first people has the potential right to chieftainship, but unless he can give potlatches he will fail to gain that eminence.

* 556 (2) An occasion for giving a potlatch is never lacking. It 769 consists of a number of closely associated rites, any one of which will serve as a reason for the ceremony. The most important feature, the return of a dead ancestor or ancestors to visit the living, is available to anyone at any time. The Bella

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

142
231
291
516
622

PLATE 11

Photograph by the author

A Bella Coola couple with their dogs; the one on the left is a chief.

[+186 (c)]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Coola say that the return of the dead "washes away grief," 556* 769 and unquestionably it has a comforting effect on the mind of the donor of the potlatch.

(3) Wealth. Unless a man has the necessary goods with 476 which to make presents he cannot invite guests, no matter how 556* important may be his ancestral myths and names. Some of 602 this wealth he may be able to amass by his own labours, but unless he is assisted by his wife's family it is virtually impossible for him to succeed. The Bella Coola believe that a man [583] cannot become a chief except through large payments made [622] by a woman's family when they "rebuy" her from her husband. In other words, no man can succeed without the support of his wife. In choosing a mate a man is guided almost entirely by [587] the ability of her family to give him financial support. In some cases an elderly couple assist a married son to give a potlatch; this custom, though considered quite proper, is not common.

(4) Supernatural assistance. To the Bella Coola this is 556* quite as important as the preceding. One man may work very 787 hard but his efforts are never crowned with success, whereas another man will prosper in every venture. This is due to the supernatural attributes given by the supreme god to the latter. By prayer, ceremonial chastity, and other means, a man may increase the powers granted to him, but if these are entirely lacking, he can never hope to rise to the position of chief.

PRELIMINARIES

In describing the potlatch, it will be convenient to refer to 556*
the donor as X, and assume him to be a middle-aged member of the nusk society, whose seat and name, though duly ratified, lack importance through his previous failure to give large presents.

For a number of years X has prospered. He has amassed quantities of skins, blankets, tools, copper ornaments, clothing, canoes, baskets, dentalium shell, slaves, and other valuables.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

203 522 *556 in such a way that the contents dribble over the recipient; sometimes, though able to catch the dish, a herald may deliberately allow the sticky pulp to cover him. The humour of this is increased by the fact that guests at potlatches always receive their food in a ceremonious manner.

203 *556 [773] Though one of a herald's duties is to act as buffoon, his position is only very slightly derogatory. In the beginning of time, Raven himself did not hesitate to act in this capacity on many occasions. Ever since, the post has usually been occupied by relatives of chiefs, especially by those who are unable to give potlatches. In some cases the position is sought by ambitious young men, willing to endure the slight loss of dignity for the emoluments. Since the basic principle of every Bella Coola ceremony is that the donor must recompense those who have assisted him, heralds are always lavishly rewarded. At potlatches especially, chiefs remember their dependence upon the heralds, and shower presents upon them. One who has allowed himself to be spattered with liquid food to amuse the guests, is suitably compensated, but in any case he receives presents for summoning and seating the guests and for interrupting the speeches. The same principle holds good in all other ceremonies. An elderly informant related that once in his younger days he had been dancing a nusek dance, when two heralds remarked that the ground on which he was dancing was dirty, meaning, that it had not been made clean by the distribution of sufficient presents to justify his dance. His mother at once gave the heralds two muskets, valuable articles in those days, to clear her son's path. These belonged to the informant, who knew nothing about the transaction until it had been completed, but he accepted as a matter of course the necessity of giving presents to heralds. If the seat on which a chief is sitting should break, presents must be given to heralds, and if a kasiat should fall when a herald is watching, the latter receives gifts. At the marriage of a chief's son, a herald can claim and remove any of the clothing of the bridegroom or his associates. Above all other occasions, when a young chief is

[622] [585]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

211 example, there is a description of his totem-pole with a ball
556 at the top, and beneath it an eagle's nest containing two fledg-
778 lings towards which a grizzly bear is endeavouring to climb.
532 This is the only known instance of a pole on which the different figures stand in definite relationship to one another. No explanation is offered beyond the statement that this was the form used by Alkai in the beginning of time. Another ancient pole, used by one of the ancestral families of Ilaxod, consists of [778] a simple shaft surmounted by a sphere; this represents a mountain which enters into their ancestral myth as supporting the sky.

As with all features embodied in ancestral myths, a chief can use his own discretion in cases where he has a choice of [431] design. A totem-pole with specific figures is a common present from a chief to his son-in-law, and it is a mark of respect [422] for the latter to use and validate this at the first opportunity, [601] in preference to one belonging to his own ancestral family. Since the pole erected at a potlatch may have no association with the ancestral name and myth of the donor, the underlying principle in all cases is that the value of the pole depends upon the quantity of gifts distributed to validate its erection. One man mentioned an instance in which he had become confused with regard to the proper design for the totem-pole connected with his ancestral myth, and had used one belonging to a second myth in association with a name from the first. Both were his property, the transaction was duly validated, and the matter passed off without question. It is possible that the [183] decay of custom which has followed the coming of the white man may have been partly responsible for this error, which was regarded as a somewhat stupid, though not improper mistake; yet it is clear that even when designs are remembered as portions of ancestral myths, they can be alienated from them and validated as isolated objects in the same manner as names and all other features of ancestral myths.

More often, the exact details of a pole are not included in the ancestral myth and a chief wishing to have one erected can

1:McDermith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

[534] Faithful and cases of rape were either unknown or very rare. The daughters of chiefs, too, were guarded with great care and any effort to seduce one of them would be punished by her father. The parents of a girl used to watch her carefully, and the opportunity for immorality was not great in the days when everyone went to bed at sundown except on the occasion of a ceremonial dance. As one informant described it:

"The daughters of chiefs used to be looked after as if they were in house, cherished and guarded by their parents and relatives. No one would dream of molesting them. And a chief's daughter used to be proud and look after herself. Nowadays, girls don't care, and everything has become degraded."

If the daughter of a chief did dishonor herself, the parents lost interest in her, as one who was spoilt. It was always assumed that a girl of rank was a virgin at marriage, and if it was discovered that she had been living an immoral life, her husband in many cases returned her in disgrace to her parents who, equally shamed, were expected to send back to him the goods he had expended for their daughter. Loss of virtue was judged only from indirect information. If the daughter of a chief was found pregnant before marriage, she was almost ostracized by her family. No ceremonial marriage could be arranged for her, and the child could not be cleansed from the stigma of illegitimacy.

On the other hand, it appears certain that there was a good deal of intercourse in the old days between chiefs and slave women, or even between slaves and the daughters of chiefs. In the latter case the woman was often cast aside by her relatives though they sometimes yielded to the inevitable and tried to wash away the disgrace with gifts. At the same time, public opinion was unfavourable to a man who consorted with many women, or to a woman who allowed herself to be at the disposal of many men. Any regular union of masters with their slave women for the deliberate purpose of having children was unknown. A girl's consent was always necessary, given either personally or through an intermediary. Even a chief hesitated

1:Mc:Dowalth X-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

to kill an enemy, but his success is accredited to his supernatural possessions which have given him skill as a warrior rather than to his own ability. 761 726

It is felt that no ordinary explanation is sufficient to account for the death of a great chief. No matter what may have been the actual cause, it is always said that the supernatural Carpenters, who in the beginning of time created mankind, came down and "seized" or "called back" the deceased, thinking him too good for this world. It is believed that these beings are keen hunters, and that Alqaxmim allows them to pursue influential people. This sentiment is always expressed in mourning songs for a dead chief, but although accepted as a matter of fact, it is little more than a conventional belief which serves to comfort the mourners. The infraction of a taboo is another reason frequently given for a chief's death. It is said that there was a loud crash and the earth shook before the death of Pasko; he became ill immediately, and his stomach began to swell. The stricken chief said that Sway' itself had fallen upon him, but the common belief was that he had erred in some ritual act. At any rate, he died within a few hours. 761 622 [775] [538]

RITES FOLLOWING DEATH

News of a critical illness spreads rapidly through the village and the house in which the sufferer is lying becomes a rendezvous for friends asking about his condition. Failure to do so would be considered ungracious, with the result that there is such a constant coming and going that rest is denied the sick person. Shamans are called upon to practise their powers in a noisy manner, and female relatives weep and wail. The die is irrevocable. 963 [956]

When the patient shows no further indication of life, the shamans cease, but the women redouble their cries. Relatives, friends, and sympathizers all crowd into the house and begin to weep, often adding verbal lamentations. The progress of the news from house to house can be traced by the wailings. Meanwhile 964

1:McDowalth E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

765 religious rites affecting the whole community. In spite of the prohibitions enforced, it is said that a widow or widower usually becomes fat after the death of a partner. This observation agrees with several instances known to the writer, but whether it is of universal application is doubtful, although the Bella Coola emphatically state that this is the case.

Memorial Rites

THE MEMORIAL POTLATCH

177 The most important, as well as the most complicated, 552 mourning rite is the memorial potlatch, ckwanit, for which so 769 much wealth is required that it can be carried out by chiefs 622 alone. This ceremony, being associated with nuxwi rites, has altered enormously in form within recent years. Before the introduction of cone-shaped whistles and other foreign elements, it was almost indistinguishable from an ordinary potlatch and the two were occasionally combined, having as central feature the return of the deceased in the form of his crest. Among the tribes of the outer coast, especially the Bella Bella, the two types of ceremonial were apparently distinct, and as the Bella Coola adopted more and more of their neighbours' nuxwi ritual, they followed their custom in this respect as well. It is said that a certain Nuskila, uncle of a man about sixty years of age in 1922, was the last to combine both. The Bella Bella felt that he had thereby committed a ritual error for which he would be punished; within a few years he died, and the Bella Coola assumed that this was due to the unanimous expectation of his death on the part of the Bella Bella. From that time onwards, the Bella Coola were careful to separate features belonging to potlatches from those of memorial potlatches.

After a comparatively few years, the white man's domin- 648 ation had increased so enormously on the central coast that the potlatch, including both types, was prohibited by law. Owing to the consequent difficulty of performing complicated

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

rites, the Bella Coola were again led to carry out at a single gathering features which properly belonged to several. To combine the memorial potlatch with the potlatch, being a return to an earlier custom, presented no serious difficulties and was consequently widely adopted. The Kimsquit people, moreover, seem never to have adopted the clear Bella Bella differentiation, and as the rapid decrease in population threw them in ever closer contact with the Bella Coola, their influence tended to lessen differences between the two ceremonials. 177 556* 769

At the present time, a memorial potlatch is almost identical with an ordinary potlatch in practice. The same rites are often carried out at both; each varies considerably, and when the distinctive elements are omitted the two become indistinguishable. None the less, they are never confused in the minds of the participants. The house where a potlatch, hau, is taking place is called a nuslimsta, that where a memorial potlatch, skwanit, is occurring, a nuskwanätsta. In giving invitations and making comments, heralds are careful not to refer to the ritual under the wrong name; in fact, it may be said that the chief difference between the two is in the minds of the donor and his guest. Sociologically, both are considered to be on a par. Equal wealth is required, and each can be performed only by a chief, both on account of the expenditure involved and owing to the difficulties in procedure which are thought to be too great for a lesser man to surmount. 556* 769 [203] [622]

Difference in the donor's motives is usually sufficient to separate a memorial potlatch from an ordinary one. The latter is given by a chief desirous of increasing his prestige by lavish expenditure, for which one of the excuses is the validation of the appearance of a dead relative. Although this is the central feature, so many other rites are performed that it is sometimes obscured or may, indeed, be omitted entirely. On the other hand, a memorial potlatch occurs as soon as possible after the death of a father, mother, or other dearly loved kinsman, and it is clear to all that the donor's reasons for the rite are to commemorate the deceased, and to console himself and his imme- [622]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

of different ancestral families to which the deceased belonged, irrespective of whether or not he had used a name from one. Being a member of the group, its songs can legally be used in his honour. Elements from different myths are often combined into one composition, corresponding to the different localities and characters which the dead person has visited in travelling back the path of his multiple ancestors to the beginning of time. If one person only is being commemorated, four songs are prepared; if several, two are used for each. Three for any individual is unlucky. Two types, skwanät and änultnänk, are in common usage, and the singers, after conversation with the donor of the ceremony, decide which shall be employed. The former describes in some detail features from one or more of the deceased's ancestral myths, mentions the journey which he has taken to visit the individuals and scenes referred to, and calls on him to assume the form of his first forefather. A common theme is to state the origin of his name, and how he loved it so greatly that he left the earth to follow it back through time and space. The following is an abbreviated version of such a song, based on the origin myth of Käliäkıs:

"We have been unable to satisfy you here. Go whither Käliäkıs came, and become a raven. Go to the east and get abalone-shell; go to the west and get copper. They will satisfy you."

Another skwanät of the same type is:

"Your first ancestor circled the world with the aid of an abalone-shell paddle. Do you likewise. That will gratify you as nothing on earth could do."

On the other hand, an änultnänk seldom refers to the ancestral history of the deceased, but to his actions during life. It records the number of slaves, canoes, and other valuables given away at potlatches,[36] and alludes to other praiseworthy actions. This type of mourning song, though usually used [36] An analogous method of making known a man's distribution of wealth is by a written sign over his door (see Plate 24).

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

533 only for a chief, can be employed for a dead child. In this case, *556 the theme describes the efforts of the parents to incorporate 769 the deceased in the traditions of their ancestors, and the [622] number of times he had been ceremonially married. The text of one used a few years ago is:

"We said, Hail! Sinxälotla [the child's crest was the Sun] when she was born. What more could we have done? Why did she leave us?"

The text may refer to the prerogative of employing mourners, as in the following:

"Come ye professional mourners, help me to give voice to my lamentations."

The tunes of mourning songs are usually remembered from year to year, and the singers may merely alter words to make an old song applicable. In some cases, such compositions are [424] changed so slightly that they become virtually possessions of an ancestral family, and may then be preserved for generations until even the history of the names embodied is forgotten.
[174] Occasionally, ancient relationship between two such groups can be deduced from the occurrence of the same names in their mourning songs, although all traditions of intermarriage have been forgotten. There is considerable difference between the tunes of skwanät and änuhänk; in fact, this distinction may be more important than the themes, since the latter do not invariably conform to the types just described. A few items of ancestral history may be incorporated into a song dealing primarily with the actions of the deceased and vice versa. Sometimes four of one type are used, sometimes two of each. Much thought is devoted to the compositions, the singers meeting every day to try over and improve one another's efforts. The texts, long and complicated, require much practice, since any error would be an admission of gross inefficiency. These daily rehearsals take place in the donor's house and he is required to provide food for the singers. It is not uncommon to use a [177] song of Bella Bella origin, since the Bella Coola admit that members of that tribe excel in compositions of this type.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

537 viated by the presence of welcome guests. Mention is fre-
* 556 quently made of the journey taken by the dead man to the 769 scenes of his ancestral myths. In addition to being an orator, the speaker must also be a numitl chief, since it is felt that ● [622] none other can have the necessary assurance and poise to refer to these most sacred and important subjects. During the speech, assistants blow eagle down over the heads of all present.

Food has been prepared in advance, and as soon as the speaker has finished, the heralds call the guests to partake of it. The first course is then distributed, smoked salmon mixed [264] with olachen grease. Speeches are sometimes delivered during this part of the meal, as well as at the second course, cranberries with more olachen grease. If the guests have arrived during the afternoon, there is no delay between the feast and the ritual that follows, but if they have come during the morning, there is a gap until the evening. Visitors usually time their arrival for the early part of the afternoon.

537 The next event is a speech from one of the foreign chiefs, phrased in grandiloquent terms similar to those used by the
* 556 Bella Coola orator. He speaks of the manner in which the 769 supernatural Carpenters have hunted the deceased, but reminds 609 his hearers that this is because Alquntăm has decreed it, therefore all must be for the best. He refers to the dead man's crest, 533 and to the manner in which this guise will be available to him.
During the day, the singers have been careful to learn the tune of a mourning song used by the ancestral family of each foreign chief likely to speak. This they now beat out, often assisted by some of the guests, and always accompanied by their singing. No one dances to accompany the song; it is merely a tactful mark of sympathy, implying that the speaker himself knows the grief occasioned by death, and, also, that he too is sufficiently important to be able to use a mourning song. If, as is usually the case, there is more than one influential chief in the party, a second rises to speak, repeating in different terms the sentiments expressed by his predecessor. Another

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

764 stepson, George Nelson, had not been living with his wife for 159 about one year.

Early in the afternoon of June 27, Captain Schooner was notified by telephone of the serious illness of his daughter at the cannery where she was working. He set out immediately, but found her dead on his arrival. Without waiting to consult Samuel King, he called together the chiefs who happened to be [622] in the vicinity, Willie Mack, Jim Pollard, Billy Pollard, Bobby Nebby, and Alexander Clallaman.[11] He informed them that 764 he did not propose to let his daughter be thrown carelessly into 769 the ground like a dog, but that he was going to hold a memorial potlatch immediately after the funeral. Schooner, being a *556 numitl chief as well as father of the dead woman, was able to 159 do as he liked, and no one objected to this plan, although in [178] former times such a ceremony neither took place at once, nor in summer. If Samuel had been present, he would have been consulted as a matter of course. It was quite fitting for Jessie to be buried by her father, since she had borne her husband no children, and had been rebought several times. Moreover, Samuel lacked the determination and prestige of his father-in-law. Having settled this main point, Captain Schooner intimated that as Jessie's granddaughter, Dan Nelson's infant, was at the point of death, it would be well to combine the mourning for both at the single ceremony. No mention was made of the amount to be used for the rite. Schooner himself had $200 to expend for the purpose which would have been sufficient, and his attitude was that he neither knew nor cared whether his relatives would assist him. Soon after the other chiefs had left, Reuben Schooner arrived from the logging-camp from which he had been summoned. Father and son discussed arrangements not only for the actual interment, a simple matter, but for the memorial potlatch. It was decided that the dead woman should return as a composite figure consisting [11] None of these was closely related to the Schooner family.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

lowed the actor, blowing eagle down over him repeatedly. After one circuit of the hall, the performer passed out through the front door, from the vicinity of which was heard once more the large whistles and the screaming of the eagle, both growing less distinct as if the bird were flying away. 769 556* 535

The wearer of the mask displayed considerable dramatic talent and succeeded in giving a realistic display in spite of the glaring lights which exposed his bare feet and betrayed the human handicraft of the mask in a manner impossible in the native type of house with a single, central fire as the sole illumination. The Carriers had watched the performance with interest, probably tinged with contempt, but to the Bella Coola it was no mere spectacle, it was a religious rite of the highest importance. All the spectators realized that the figure was human, but this seemed inconsequential as they gazed upon the representation of the dead woman in the form of her crests, to which they believed she had been transformed by death. Even the children were silent, and the only sound during the passage was the wailing of a sleepy infant. The eagle crest belonged to Jessie by virtue of membership in the ancestral family descended from her father's first ancestor, traced patrilineally, who had come to earth at Tcimott in the form of this bird. The blackfish was a crest acquired through her mother; the raven represented a copper raven belonging to an ancestral myth of the dying grandchild. In former times, carpenters would have worked for weeks preparing an elaborate composite figure, but Captain Schooner wished no delay in the ceremony for fear of police interference, so that it was necessary to use what masks happened to be in existence and to place them in conjunction by means of the crude white sheet. Jessie had not been initiated into the sisaok society, but no opposition was raised to the use of sisaok whistles both on account of her status as chief, and owing to the influence of her father who, a nemitl chief, feared no restrictions and heeded no conventions. Besides, both her brothers were influ- 769 556* 424 178 575 622

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

769 *556 ential susaok. In former times it is certain that objections would have been raised to this breach of ceremonial privilege.

[424] [178] [575] [622] There was a pause for several minutes after the withdrawal of the figure. Then Reuben threw a copper on the floor in the track taken by the actor "to make bone for the dead woman." A number of chiefs went forward to join the singers and discuss whether or not the copper should be redeemed. No one wished to do so, so Captain Schooner said he would have it fastened to a post over Jessie's grave, a proposition to which all agreed.

769 *556 533 After interminable discussion in which Captain Schooner, Nebuchadnezzar, Reuben Schooner, Jim Pollard, and Alec Davis took the principal parts, it was decided to sing the fourth mourning song at this point. There was no reason why this should not have been done at the customary time, after the other three, but wide latitude in detail was allowed in this [178] ceremony; in fact, exact ritual never flourished in Bella Coola and has become increasingly rare in recent years. This song had been composed a number of years previously when Captain Schooner had called in the Bella Bella to a memorial potlatch, and great care had been expended on its composition owing to the skill of the guests in songs of this type. The words, altered to fit the circumstances, were phrased as if George and Dan were lamenting the loss of their mother and other relatives.

"I, we," they ran, "are thinking of our mother, our brothers, our sisters, our mother's brothers, our mother's sisters, our father's brothers, our father's sisters, of all our dead relatives. Please, ye chiefs from abroad, turn your heads, listen to our wail. You revered great ones, let us all cry together. It is we who have called you hither; look upon us."

This song was sung in the manner already described, except that more of the Bella Coola were familiar with the words and tune and could accordingly join in.

769 *556 Meanwhile Captain Schooner, with his sons Reuben and Harry and his grandsons George Nelson and Andy Schooner, had been crouching in a corner of the hall, poring over the money which was to be distributed to validate the ceremony,

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

769 sum being used for each name, and the bills were displayed
*556 before messengers carried them to the recipients.

553 Finally, Jim Pollard took the opportunity to bestow on 425 Captain Schooner the name, Snusilkāls. This designation
[614] was the property of the donor's ancestral family and should [622] not have been transmitted without the consent of all its members. Jim had probably informed several of them of his intention, but no objections would have been raised if he had overlooked this courtesy, since he is the only numitl chief among them, and the only one with determination and prestige. It was not an outright gift, since it was announced that it must be returned to the donor's family on Captain Schooner's death. Jim Pollard acted as his own announcer for this transaction, explaining that he gave the name in gratitude for the help which Captain Schooner had rendered at the death of his, Jim's, father about twenty years before. He promised that at the earliest opportunity he would give presents to validate the transmission.

769 During the lengthy distribution of money, the audience had
*556 shown unmistakable signs of weariness. It was now between 2.00 and 3.00 A.M., and as soon as Jim had finished speaking the guests dispersed quietly, though many of them gathered in groups in one another's houses to discuss what had taken place.

Captain Schooner slept late after the lengthy ceremony, but was proud and contented when interviewed about noon. He felt that what was fitting for his daughter had been performed, and was willing to take the consequences of having broken the law.

768 Little else of note occurred in connection with Jessie's funeral. Samuel King deposited near her grave a sewing-machine which his wife had used for only a short time and Captain Schooner decided to replace this with an older one belonging to his wife. He made this exchange on the afternoon of June 30, when Samuel, in company with a number of women, was burning the rest of Jessie's clothing and possessions. Captain Schooner explained his act by saying:

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

in the second, as indicated by their diminished population. It is also said that about 1850, when a party of Bella Coola had camped for the night near Ocean Falls, one of the sleepers wakened his comrades by calling on them to look at the brilliant lights. No one then understood what he meant, but the meaning has become clear since the installation of electric lights in the town. 177 756* 787*

In addition to the preceding, a number of stories of the regular shaman type were collected, in which, however, the principal figure is said to have been a snāxom. They are included in this section for the reasons already mentioned. 539 756* 787*

A POTENTIAL Snaxom

The mother of an elderly Bella Coola used to receive direct communications from Ālquntām which gave her the necessary qualifications for a snāxom, though she did not wish to exercise her power. She was able to see over the whole earth, and to talk to sun, moon, and stars in a language which the other Bella Coola did not understand. She built a small house for herself in the woods where she usually slept alone; sometimes her husband joined her, but he was always afraid of the gigantic toads and other monsters that were her companions.

THE WOMAN WHO COULD CALL THUNDER

About one hundred years ago there was living in a village at the mouth of the Dean River, a man, uwinuxdle, and his wife, Snaqwaix. He was a famous hunter who frequently observed ceremonial chastity and his wife claimed to be a shaman, but the inhabitants of the villages on both the Dean and Kimsquit rivers doubted this, as did also those living in the lower Bella Coola valley. Snaqwaix was so boastful and disagreeable that at last the chiefs held a meeting and went one day to her house, where they told her that if she failed to give a satisfactory demonstration of her powers she would be killed.[18] Some were ashamed to doubt her word, but the concensus of opinion was that she should prove her claims, so they all sat down in her house and waited. She looked around and selected one man, Kmlkad, without apparent reason, and told him that he was to [18] Such power on the part of chiefs is most unusual and, though it was related without comment by the narrator, should not be regarded as historically correct. [622]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

754 would probably fall a victim. He became ill in May, 1923,
761 and, though treated by a white doctor, grew steadily worse
789 until he died in the latter part of June, three weeks after the 828 year had elapsed. All the Bella Coola firmly believe that this [622] was due to the power of thought. The father of the woman was a powerful chief whose thoughts were accordingly potent, and some consider that his concentrated desires and expectations were enough to kill the accused, while others believe that his expressed statements convinced others of the result, and that it was their combined thought that caused the death. It usually requires the thoughts of more than one individual to lead to this effect. The doctor who attended this man stated that his patient had shown symptoms of melancholy and resignation during his last sickness; it seems clear that the expectation of death must have lessened his chance of recovery.

771 A prominent theme in Bella Coola folk-lore is the belief 954 that a person cannot long survive who has made himself un-828 popular. It is sometimes stated that a magical means was [538] employed to remove him, and this was no doubt often the case; a person who learns that a "medicine" had been employed to kill him is in no fit mental condition to counteract the power of suggestion, particularly if he knows that others are aware of what has been done. His death is regarded as proof of the efficacy of the means employed and the belief of others grows stronger. As already stated, this conviction still survives. When this ethnological investigation was being conducted, a
[648] point under discussion was whether or not the Kimsquit people should be allowed to live in Bella Coola. One chief took the lead in objecting and everyone expected that, having thus roused the ire of would-be immigrants, he would die. He did so soon afterwards, and it is universally believed that it was caused by the concentration of the hostile thoughts of the Kimsquit. Similarly, the potency of taboos is increased by the fact that since [784] time immemorial the thoughts of everyone have been opposed to any infraction. Consequently, an offender is liable to punishment both for breaking an injunction and because he

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

789 ceremonial dances without making mistakes. The Bella Bella 856 paint a representation of a wolf's bladder for the same purpose.
[532] The basis of this medicine is the belief that it is the gall-[826] bladder which causes wildness and intelligent fear, and hence that anyone so treated will be careful not to make mistakes.
[825] A bird with a large bladder is thought to be difficult to approach, whereas a deer, which has a small one, or none at all, is often stupidly brave. This medicine is known only to the mem-
[424] bers of certain families and is used for the children of chiefs [622] alone, since errors on the part of others is a matter of little importance.

MEDICINES OF CHILDHOOD

789 Some of the instruction given to boys and girls, and the 856 acts which they are enjoined to perform, are virtually religious, and have accordingly been described in earlier chapters. For 771 example, when a lad washes in the river before daybreak, scours himself with a smooth stone and prays to Alqantăm, he is carrying out what might with justice be called a religious act. If, however, he believes that mere washing is enough to compel some desire or end, it is magical. Different Bella Coola have different sentiments concerning the exact means by which this method causes the desired effect. To some it is unquestionably a true prayer, but in other families it is customary for a father to take his son, when he has reached about eight years of age, and wash him four times, to the accompaniment of the usual prayer. It is believed that this causes the lad to grow up powerful and active, constantly striving for success. This type of washing may be called magical.

789 In the following there is no element of uncertainty; they 856 belong unquestionably to the category described in the preceding section.

To Cause Agility

The following medicine is frequently employed by fathers when their sons are first able to walk:

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

It is said that one man accidentally sucked when spitting on a toad, and swallowed the creature. It lived within his stomach for fifty years, causing no discomfort though its master could feel it moving, and its singing could be heard at intervals. This brought him no supernatural power, although he was enabled by it to live to a great age. When at last he died, the toad came hopping out of his throat and was carried respectfully to the river by his friends who covered the creature with eagle down and dyed and undyed cedar-bark. 789 825 886

Some of the rites already described with regard to animals and fish are similar in nature to this medicine.

To Cause Obesity 789

A medicine was formerly used by chiefs to make them fat and important-looking, but details of it have been forgotten. 826 622

To Cause Ability in Singing

Catch an apxon·i (varied thrush?) alive and pat it four times against the throat of the woman to whom it is desired to impart the art, saying: 533 789

"May she be a singer like you." 825

Release the bird and the woman will become a good singer.

This bird is considered by the Bella Coola to be the finest songster among British Columbia birds, and they say that many animals and fish, including even the halibut, gather to hear its singing.

To Cause Ability in Hunting 224

There is a poisonous plant which, when eaten, almost kills the eater. If he recovers, he is henceforth endowed with great ability as a hunter. The species could not be ascertained. 789 824

To Cause Change in Weather

If a cold wind is desired: Heat the penis of a mountain goat or beaver at a fire. 789 821

If rain is desired: Wash the penis of a large buck and throw it into the ocean or a river, saying: 825

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

755 of water in which had been boiled eight splinters from a coffin. She would have obtained two from each side, and two from each end, in each case inserting the point of a crooked knife to pry loose a fragment of the wood, and then pulling it off in the same direction as the sun travels. It would have been immaterial from which aspect the first had been taken, but Y would have been careful to move around the coffin from east to south to west to north, corresponding to the course of the sun.

It is believed that no one has now the ability to use this cure.

Sorcerers

754 Among the causative medicines of which knowledge has [424] been handed down in various families for generations are secret means of killing. Every sorcerer must have such a possession, but he is not so branded unless he begins to exercise his powers for anti-social purposes. For example, if it be known that a [575] certain individual is able to cause death, the members of the kusiut society are eager to admit him to their group, so that his ability will be at their disposal to punish anyone who breaks their regulations. Likewise, if a chief decides that a certain [622] man should die, the power of his thoughts may suffice to cause the death, but the desired end will be effected more certainly by requesting aid from the owner of a means of killing. Such [756] an individual is frequently a shaman who is only too glad of an opportunity to exhibit his powers. The following methods of execution are said to have been employed socially, that is, with the connivance or at the request of chiefs or the members of the kusiut society:

(1) The executioner scratches for four successive nights on the door of the victim's house. If the latter suspects what is to take place, he may endeavour to escape by remaining awake which renders the scratching powerless. It is said that no one has been able to remain sleepless for more than three nights which gives the killer his opportunity.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Dance of Wil·a]

About dusk on the following day X, who is in his own house, suddenly stands up and cries out: 575* 796*

"Yes. It has come. I am afraid. Yes! I will do as you bid me." 787

The kukusiut women begin to drone and the uninitiated are expelled. Heralds announce that a kusiut has been pressed to earth, and presently they go to every house inviting the kukusiut to gather in X's. From this point on, the rite of lustāmem continues in the manner already described.

The ability of X to summon these nine brothers from above is a special prerogative; other kukusiut have one or other of them as patron, but lack the power to call the whole number to earth. One kusiut has exclusive knowledge of the mat which is spread for Omqomkilka when the other supernatural beings summon him to a ceremony; another of the place where the brethren obtain their eagle down. Detailed information was not obtained about these ceremonies. [424]

THE CANNIBAL DANCE

Of all kusiut dances, the one of which the uninitiated are most afraid, and which is, therefore, the strongest, is the Cannibal dance. It is believed that the performer is exposed to greater dangers than in any other rite, and observers have the most spectacular ocular demonstrations of his powers. The patrons of most Cannibals are Alqantām, Sxexēlaiq, or Kāmai·ts, who implant in their protégés a wolf, bear, or eagle, causing them to devour strange foods. The Bella Coola consider that a man is equally a Cannibal whether he has the prerogative of eating corpses, biting the living, eating dogs or raw salmon, or biting himself. The most common of these is the right to bite the living, and few of the older people are not scarred thereby. Fear of Cannibals is one of the strongest causes for the respect with which the uninitiated regard the kusiut society, but though the holders of prerogatives of this type are regarded with awe on account of their powers, they are not considered as chiefs, as the Bella Coola say is the case

575* 796* 424 [981] [796] [787] [981] [171] [622]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Cannibal Dance]

among the Bella Bella, Fort Rupert, and Rivers Inlet people. Indeed, in Bella Coola a poor man may be the most dreaded Cannibal of all, if he has been able duly to validate and perform his right in this respect. Nor is the dance carried out with the same rigour in Bella Coola as among the tribes of the outer coast.

The ritual of different prerogatives varies to such an extent that several accounts must be given, in spite of the repetitions that this form of presentation entails. On account of the length of time necessary, a Cannibal dance usually begins early in the season. The following describes the manner in which Kāmātslak of Kimsquit, who can bite the living, carried out his rite; it was obtained from his brother, who is thoroughly conversant with the details. It will be convenient to refer to Kāmātslak as X, and to use the present tense throughout.

A meeting is held at which the marshals and others choose, in agreement with X and his relatives, a day suitable for him to commence his performance. Under normal circumstances it is on some qulem that a marshal announces that he can hear X's call, and on the following evening, when the ritual has been completed, the uninitiated are startled to hear continuous whistling from the slopes of the mountains near the village. The instruments used are of the usual bladder type, but the long-drawn-out sound, termed Ālālāwa, is said to be the voice of the kindly supernatural woman, Snitsmāx.*

*The sole function of this being seems to be the restoring to life of those who appear to have been killed in the performance of hamat rites. The Bella Coola are uncertain whether or not she is identical with Tlātqālālāwa. The noise which heralds her coming is produced by the whistles of four hamatsa who throughout the night range the forests and mountains within ear-shot of the village. By bending their heads up and down, they are able to increase the weirdness and apparent shortness of the sound. The four travel in single file; the leader blows, and when his breath is nearly exhausted he passes the head of the second man, who starts whistling forthwith, while the original leader drops to the rear. As the second harmonic wearies, he signals in the same way to the third, and so on; in this way the whistling is continuous, and the uninitiated are convinced that it cannot be caused by mortals, even if such as they should venture to them. If a non-member should meet the four, they would at once kill him or make him a prisoner, keeping him out of sight until he could be initiated into the society.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

CHAPTER III

WARFARE[1]

General Observations — Specific Accounts

General Observations

721 648 PRIOR to the establishment of British rule, there was considerable warfare among the coastal tribes of British Columbia. Long-continued struggles leading to the extermination of one or other of the participants were unknown, but there were constant raids, counter-raids, forays, and attacks. These were never as continuous as on the Plains, where martial achievements were regarded more highly than on the coast, but it appears probable that at least several villages of the Bella Coola were embroiled every few years. Nevertheless, [796] war was secondary in importance to ceremonial rites. During the winter, peace reigned and members of hostile tribes were [556] even received as guests at some dances. At potlatches they might be subjected to insult, later to be avenged in the same manner or by active hostility, but seldom was actual violence offered either to envoys or guests. The symbol of peace and 726 friendliness was eagle down; the occupants of a canoe who 825 bore an invitation to a potlatch, or who were guests them- 778 selves, used to blow this substance up into the air whenever another craft approached, and it was incumbent on the latter [484] to veer over to the other side of the channel. Eagle down was [578] considered to be so sacred that when two men were quarrelling [622] a chief could stop them by blowing some of it over their heads. 721 In winter, hostilities were prevented by ceremonies, and in summer the people were usually busy laying in supplies of food; consequently, it was only in the late spring that fighting was [575] at all common. Even then the dictates of ceremonial life were [622] not entirely forgotten; no hamat novice went to war and

[1] Warfare having long been discontinued, the past tense is used throughout this chapter.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

seldom a chief who had given many potlatches. Successful raiders rarely slew such an one; his position placed him above the dangers to which lesser men were subject. [721] [575] [622]

Raids appear never to have been carried out solely for the purpose of giving warriors opportunities to display their prowess, or of permitting young men to prove their mettle. Scarcity of food was the commonest cause for forays when, of course, the victims were chosen for their accumulated supplies. The Kwakiutl especially, lacking abundance of salmon, often attacked the Bella Coola. Even more dreaded were the Kitkatla, the most warlike people of the central coast, who used to raid for many miles to carry off slaves whom they sold or traded for other commodities. [648]

Trespassing, too, was a source of friction which often led to hostility. In such a case, the offenders were usually held up to ridicule at potlatches, and the irritation gradually increased until wiped out in bloodshed. Members of a tribe which had suffered from a raid prompted by any of these motives would await a suitable opportunity for retaliation; this in turn would be avenged, and a vendetta often ensued lasting for generations. As already described, a ceremonial error brought punishment from a neighbouring tribe; this was the only motive which caused fighting between different Bella Coola villages. In the last century there was a struggle of this kind between the people of Stuix and Ālqālāxl in which the former were victorious and took many slaves who were later ransomed. When ill-luck had dogged a village or a group of villages for some time, the inhabitants sometimes endeavoured to wipe out their misfortunes by attacking another tribe. [685] [626] [556] [688] [628] [727] [777]

The teeming salmon at Bella Coola, Kimsquit, and Tāl·io, made it unnecessary for the Bella Coola to wage aggressive war for which they were unfitted both on account of their unmilitary attitude and their lack of central authority. On the other hand, they were tempting victims for more belligerent neighbours. The narrow Bella Coola valley, however, far removed from the open sea, and densely populated, was difficult to attack. [642] [648] [133] [161]

721 to attack. It is said that the Fort Rupert people once raided 48 it, but their hair became entangled in the thorns growing near the tide-flats and they were easily slain while struggling to free themselves. Two warriors escaped and hid in the branches [727] of a huge spruce tree. They used to slip down at night and steal food, thus supporting themselves for several weeks, but [728] were at last discovered and ambushed. On such occasions the villages of the lower and central valley usually rallied to the help of Kimsquit, the most exposed one, although there was no mechanism to enforce such assistance. The inhabitants of [774] this town attributed their protection to Alquatsin, and used to claim that he had decreed that they should be immune owing to their close association with him. Though Bella Coola [361] itself was comparatively free from molestation, Kimsquit and [162] Talio, with smaller populations and less strategic positions, were subject to frequent attacks. At least one of the villages at 712 the head of South Bentinck Arm was defended with a stockade of cedar trunks, set upright in a double row and covered by a water-gate with a deadfall.[1] This water-gate protected the [48] residents on many occasions, and it is remembered that one [72] Fort Rupert raiding-party was annihilated while endeavouring to batter down the door with a huge ram. The defenders, armed with muskets, picked off the attackers as they struggled in the open.

721 All the older men were emphatic in stating that most of their raids were in revenge for such attacks. Although such statements were partisan, they were confirmed in every way [42] and were probably tolerably correct. Lack of a strong government was a serious handicap to the Bella Coola. After being [23] assailed, the members of the town would discuss retaliation, and if unanimity of opinion was reached, that course was de-[22] cided upon. Public opinion alone selected the leader, usually [70] a man who had given a number of potlatches, especially one whose position had been made stronger by previous validation

[1] It is said that such stockades surrounded other villages, but definite information on this point was unavailable.

as a warrior. Such a chief had no command over his followers. If he were a man of great prestige, many would be willing to serve under him, but he could not compel the services of anyone except his own slaves. A few individuals often declined to follow their fellows to war, although the force of public opinion usually prevented a too individualistic course. Inhabitants of other towns used their own discretion whether or not to join the party. If some of their relatives had been slain in the previous attack, revenge influenced them to share in the retaliation, otherwise only the prestige of a mighty chief could attract them. No case is known to which all the Bella Coola villages joined in a single expedition; there were often temporary alliances between neighbouring settlements, but complete lack of central organization. The course of events was similar when a chief wished to raid without the motive of avenging an attack. For example, if a Bella Coola had been endeared by a foreign tribe and slain by his owner, a brother of the victim might decide on revenge. The usual course was to kill a slave belonging to the murderer, though sometimes he led a raiding party if he could gain the necessary support.

Each warrior provided his own weapons, frequently the same as those used for hunting. Bows with sinew-sipped arrows were most relied upon for offence, though slings were also used from canoes. Every man carried a spear, pointed like an arrow, for hand-to-hand fighting, although there was relatively little of this, most of the combats being fought at a distance with much noise, boasting, and explosions, but few casualties. Spears were, however, useful if the attackers succeeded in surprising a village at night. Hatchets are a thing of the past, consequently it was impossible to obtain detailed information concerning offensive weapons. Armour consisted of maple or birch slats reinforced with mountain and were around the body and chest; this rendered quick movements difficult but was effective against arrows. Muskets were introduced many years ago and armour consequently became useless. Large shields of mountain were carried in all cases.

the body to his own house, preparatory to burying it. It was April, but as they were waiting, a violent thunderstorm blew up from the east, the body done that such had ever occurred at that season. Thunder had promised to come to Frank's aid, but the lacres had died so suddenly to make any appeal, the supernatural one had just leaves of his grandfather's death and had come rushing to his assistance. Realizing the danger, the mourners and his friends hastily buried the corpse, throwing over it a number of blood-stained shirts, and hastily scurrying down the earth. There was a furious hurricane, trees were uprooted, houses shook, the earth over the grave swelled up if in a whirlpool and shirts of it were carried up into the air. Only the presence of the blood on the shirts prevented the return to life of Frank.[1]

This second unsuccessful attack on the Kitkatla so disheartened the Bella Coola that they made no more raids on their northern foemen who, flushed with victory, became even bolder than before. As usual, the Kimsquit and [illegible] people suffered more than the inhabitants of the more valley. On one of these forays, about 1800, the Kitkatla killed Quiemstal, a brother of Pudes, the leading chief of the Bella Coola at the time. This was revenged in all the rules of warfare even by the murder of one of the leading families and the burn of many prisoners, a man whom none was so well known as that of Pudes, Nalagulum of Dean Rapids, or Pudes-himself. The loss of such chiefs was enough to protract their escape during the second hour of conflict, and the Bella Coola were partly empty.

A few years later a single canoe came paddling up North Bentinck Arm and was hailed about half a mile from the beach. Scouts investigated, and returned to Bangkwa with news that the occupants were Kitkatla, and that Pudes-himself was among them. At once there was heated discussion among the people of the lower valley. Many who had lost relatives in the protracted struggle wished to wipe out the party, others, to see what they wanted. A few daring individuals dashed through the forest and lied on the visitors at long range; they were unarmed, not with bullets, but by the bear cross-holding staff of a messenger, a sign of friendly intentions. If the newcomers had fired on the scouts, a fight would have ensued, but the peaceful complexion thereout suggested

---

[1] This tale is a curious illustration of the manner in which supernatural elements become some less common which have an historical basis. It is to be assumed that the incidents were in a supposedly dark range to principles, and really believed that supernatural powers must have assisted them. Frank was found as a minor, and probably learned of a rainstorm from Thunder during his war, danger. This was accepted and the interpretation of impossible incidents followed in the mouth.

Fuhon remained encamped for several days, during which time he sent word to the Bella Coola that he regretted the death of Qoiwulist and had come to make peace. He added that his followers had tried to dissuade him, saying that he would be killed, but he had answered that he was too great a man to allow fear to influence his actions.

Having waited for several days, the party came up the Bella Coola River, their canoe loaded with presents and eight slaves, while Fuhon's brother, Ho-ulis, were the weak of his ceremonies as further proof of friendly intentions. It was unusual to display one escape in a crowd ceremonial, but this was an unprecedented event, to know that he might soon be killed and he preferred to die while bearing the obvious mark of recuperation with some incident of an unusual myth. The canoe was beached opposite the house of Fuhon where the crew blew eagle down into the air to mark their peaceful mission. Men had gathered from all parts of the Bella Coola valley and several hundred wished to disregard the talk-makers and slay their enemies, a course which they had recommended for several days and had tried to precipitate by cross-acts against the Kitkatla. Fuhon himself had not spoken, but he also approved and advised the people not to leave Fuhon, since overbearing hostility would result. Though his wishes did not entirely quiet the angry men, they actually received the Kitkatla of a welcome. Fuhon brought forward a cross-stick, and told some of his people to hold it upright as then, when Fuhon leaps from his canoe, he would land upon it, and could be carried to the house without putting foot to the ground. Fuhon expressed proudly that there was nothing so weak strong enough to support him, since his many protection had made him incomparably heavy. Now the two, he accepted the honour, as necessary to binding chiefs only to mighty chiefs, and was carried into the house where he was seated in the far right-hand corner, an honourable location. Fuhon invited all the people in the vicinity, slaves as well as Bella Coola, and the inner partitions of the house had to be removed to provide space for the dining.

Though Fuhon had decided against the immediate killing of the Kitkatla, he had concocted a scheme to test their bravery and the accuracy of their claims for peace. The one brave of this escape his nephew, Ho-ulis, who was to carry it out. When all were seated, the latter appeared, his face smeared with ochre, and his hair tied up in a top-knot with wound skins as is customary during war. Ho-ulis moved motionless around the house, brandishing a weapon and repeatedly pointing to or Fuhon in a threatening manner. If the Kitkatla had shown cowardice, particularly if one of them had fired his own weapon, a massacre would have resulted. But they remained unmoved, confident in the prestige of their leader, while he knew that though his body might be

[illegible] McDowell E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

539*
682

[illegible] The man, a crack shot, took careful aim at Sekakmtw-a's top-knot, but the musket had a flatter trajectory than he expected, so the bullet, instead of dropping and filling the man, flew straight and merely cut down the tuft on top of his head. Sekakmtw-a ran off to the village and Nacwalata was carried to the house of one of his relatives on the north bank of the river.

Conflicting reasons are given for this assault. Some state that Sekakmtw-a's uncontrollable temper led him to fire; others that he did so on the orders of Pathe, who was offended because Nacwalata had disobeyed an order to carry food home to his wife. It is whispered that on several occasions Pathe had used Sekakmtw-a to get rid of those who had displeased him.

If the assault had been committed during the summer, revenge would have been an affair of the injured youth's relatives, but it occurred during the fishing season so all members of the society were affected. A party was organized to arrest the offender with the aid of an American who happened to be at the Hudson's Bay Company's post at the time. Sekakmtw-a was in the rear part of one of the houses at Kimsquit when his enemies assembled and stood hesitating at the door. As he faced them, an old man, relative to Nacwalata, crept behind and leapt on him, wrapping his arms and legs around him. The murderer drew a knife and struggled furiously before he was overcome, bound and carried to Alqulkiel where his victim lived. Sekakmtw-a pleaded that he had mistaken Nacwalata for one of his Chilkotin relatives, to whom no attention was paid to this, he said that he had acted under orders from Pathe. This was likewise disregarded, and was shown any intention of revenge on the alleged instigator since he, being a chief, could do as he liked. It is said that Pathe endeavoured to help his henchman by sending a message to some Chilkotin who were camped in the vicinity and inviting them to rescue their kinsman. [22]

Meanwhile it was obvious the Nacwalata was seriously wounded. His relatives said that if he lived, they would be willing to accept compensation for the assault, so Sekakmtw-a was kept, bound hand and foot, in a house where a dance was taking place. During the night he almost succeeded in freeing himself from his bonds, but this was discovered and he was again tied up; it is possible that an accomplice assisted him in the attempt to escape. Towards dawn Nacwalata died and it was decided that his murderer should be killed at once.

The dancers all helped to tie him outside and make preparations for shooting him, but no one dared the task of executioner. Meanwhile the Chilkotin were gathering; night seemed imminent and the excite-

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

142 sally used but the older people state that beards were by no
144 means rare in former times. Careful inquiries were made [302] concerning the ancestry of a man, about seventy years of age in 1922, whose curly beard suggests that he must be a half-breed, as indeed he is assumed to be by the white settlers of the valley. His father was Patlas, the most influential chief of recent years, his mother was herself the daughter of an important chief. None of the older men had ever heard the slightest rumour of faithlessness on her part. There were white [648] traders on the coast at the time of his birth, and intercourse with 567 slave women and others of low family was not uncommon, but 622 it would have been difficult for a chief's wife to misconduct herself, and still more difficult for her to conceal all knowledge of it in view of the open life which prevailed at that period. Moreover, it is said that Patlas himself had a similar beard, as did also the parents of several men who in 1922 were fifty or sixty years of age.

142 Although the possibility of white mixture cannot be over-144 looked in the case of this one individual, one must not dis-
896 regard the opinion of the people themselves on hairiness in general. They are proud of it and regard beards and mous-
[302] taches as marks of virility given to them by Alqantäm; baldness and lack of facial hair are considered a sign of weakness. They aver that their fathers and grandfathers were even more hirsute than they. Furthermore, they point out with pride [186] that this is a difference between themselves and the tribes of the interior, who are, as they say in scorn, "hairless like Chinaman." Finally, it is noteworthy that the hair on the head of many Bella Coola is wavy, or even curly (see Plate 70), instead of straight as among the majority of Indian tribes.[1]

Character

181 It is an almost impossible task to describe briefly the characteristics of a people. Those of the Bella Coola have

[1] This characteristic has led the writer to wonder if it could possibly have been caused by Ainu mixture.

177 fathers. Inherited beliefs are too deep-rooted to pass away 771 entirely within a few generations. Even those who claim to [181] have adopted the new faith remain convinced of the potency of magic, and of the existence of those supernatural creatures which do not actively conflict with the white man's creed. Such lack of consistency is a world-wide trait, particularly intelligible among the Bella Coola whose philosophy abounds in contradictions, dependent upon statements handed down in the origin myths of different families.

626 The Bella Coola are constrained not only by the omni-[181] presence of supernatural beings; they are constantly subjected to the influence of their fellows. They are far less individualistic than white people. A chief may boast that he can do as [622] he pleases, that he can disregard the restrictions of lesser men; he often does so, but only because public opinion recognizes that he has reached a position of eminence by giving many potlatches. The duly validated warrior is brave because he
[703] feels that everyone is aware of his valour. The man who per-
[769] forms some ceremony in accordance with an ancestral myth incorporates himself with his forbears, and is strengthened by the conviction that he has gained their support and approbation. In every phase of life, a person is profoundly affected
777 by the approval or disapproval of his neighbours. At present
626 the construction of small houses, each occupied by a single
942 family, makes it possible for a man to hide himself, or to do work unknown to the rest of the community. This lessens the force of public opinion, although it is even now more potent than conscience in checking anti-social acts. Formerly, in communal houses, every action was fully known, making individual freedom of thought and act virtually impossible. A man [602] is chiefly influenced by his relatives who take a great share in what the white man would consider purely family affairs. The effect of the group upon the individual must not be overlooked, nor can it be over-stressed in a study of these people.

177 The education and conversion of the younger men have 626 enormously lessened their reliance upon their fellows. In former 182
561

Ayant: Locality near Dean where berries are plentiful.
A'yaqi: Chief living at Tal'o in the beginning of time.

A

ana'kla: One of the a'ult dances.
ana: I, first person singular.
'ax: Hearing eggs which brought into house ready for preparation as food.*

B

Bakwal: Supernatural animal.
Balak: One of the five women who dwell west of Kwatsa in the beginning of time.
ba'pla: To gamble, as done by the uninitiated at a Mystery dance.
Bashqumalus or Bashqumalaklus: Kwakiutl supernatural being.
bilk': Longevity.
Bilkwa: Kwakiutl name of a Salia man.
bilsa-i: Abalone shell.
Bilsamakla: Influential Kwatsa woman who died about 1870.
bqlal: Bell-capped bar worn by chiefs.
Bla-gmu: A Kimsquit company.
Bla'ksma: Dean man mentioned in an ancient story.
bqla: Supernatural, man-like creature.

D da xoxq' da xo xoxq': The sky, regarded as the lower side of a land inhabited by supernatural beings.

Dakdal-ulaxs: 1.—"The Comet," synonym for Nadapum.
2.—The Sacred paraphernalia of secret Nadapum.
Dakdalaxs, "The Even-Comet": Synonym for Nadapum.
Dakdalaxsmu: Supernatural being who events Nadapum.
Dakdalaxsu: Supernatural dog salmon resident in the land above.
di tsalaxsa di ulaxs: Dawn's husband.
di tsalaxsa ut ulaxsa: Aurora's husband.
Dagwa'nalt: One of the first men to settle at Bqalla' in the beginning of time.
daxlas: Archaic term for Sacred Bundles.*
dawlk: Frayed cedar-wood, as used for tinder.
dawlaklu, plural, dqlklaklaxsa: Sun; term used in direct address for an adult.
Dawlqa: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Dji dzamalil, "The Slave Owner": Designation of the supernatural women Kwatsa.
Djaklaxsa: Collective term applied to the Kwakiutl-speaking peoples of the mainland.
Dzaqlu'ax: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Dzakwaq[1]: Chief of abalone-shell people on the lower Fraser in the beginning of time.
Dzakwaq[2]: One of the first men to settle at Dean in the beginning of time.
Dzakwqan: One of the first women to settle at Tal'o in the beginning of time.

*This word was recorded from a man with the individual usage of an s sound.
*This word was recorded from a man with the individual usage of an r sound.

2:McIlwraith E-9 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

192*
[424]

nindinte: Intangible factor prerogative consisting of the insertion of some object into the digestive tract.
Nuqlo: Expert supernatural dancer; to his associates he is a yearling mountain goat. nuxuy or nuxdyâxuc: First complete dance given by a factor initiate.
nuxwnak: Mummel, any kind.
Nuxwnamis: One of the names of Great Blue Heron as chief.
Nuxlâlis: 1—One of the first men to settle on the upper Dean in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Snaitâ in the beginning of time.
Nuxlayam: Supernatural being who brings the salmon.
Nuxnamamâ: Name given to his grandson by one of the first settlers at Ilchul'u in the beginning of time.
nuhcim: Factor prerogative as a Bracket; this is said to be a Bella Bella term.
nulpitin: Sloping stick extending from floor to roof behind the fire on which, at Kemano, factor masks are hung.
nunnuqâ: The making and use of hood nets for chicken.
Nunqâmaxum: 1—"The Adviser"; One of the names of the supreme god.
2—Chiefs of a village, collectively; virtually, "The Sages."
nu'nuxkim: 1—Ceremony at which sacred names are validated to the eyes of the fellow villagers.
2—Any ceremony at which all kinds of dances are performed.
nu'nuqâxi: Assemblage of the initiates to practise difficult cries.
Nu'qwim, "The One with Thick Pubic Hair": Phrase-name given to a dancing wife.
Nunsâlis: One of the names of Raven as chief.
nunsâlisâxum: Sentence of death passed by the initiates on one of their fellows as punishment for an error.
nunjiqu: A loss, especially of an ancestral right.
Nunkâxum: Synonym for Nuqlayam, the supernatural being who brings the salmon.
Nu'nu, "Inheritable": Name taken by a woman in consequence of rights received from her husband's relatives.
nuqâlnâc: Taboo-feth.
nuqcin: Herb.
Nuqkâqu: Anthropomorphized evil cold wind.
nuqkâ'nu: Historical term of respect for aged dead.
nuqkâ'nu ala Kamu: 1—High rule.
2—Long life.
nuqlqanu: Cross-piece tied to canoe to hold chicken-net post usually while being driven.
Nu'qumiq, "Place of Foul Water": Village in the lower Bella Coola valley.
Nuq'i: 1—Village on head of South Bentinck Arm, on the east side.
2—River flowing into head of South Bentinck Arm from the east.
Nuqlâmâxum: Synonym for Nuhcimâxum, an inferior supernatural woman.
nuqlâ: The inheritance of income against supernatural odds, the term is used with reference to the selection of the relatives of the Wyanny dance.
nuhnâmâmum: Any non-sacred dance held at the conclusion of the factor season.
Nuhsa'an: An inferior Kwakiutl chief.

[422]
[559]
[796]
[611]
[424]
[121]
[769]
[125]
[535]

[illegible] Indeed the tradition is considered much more clearly a property of the person who has it to charge than it is among the southern Indians. A description of the clan's ceremonial has been given by Jacobsen in the paper above referred to.[1]

A clan legend which is illustrated in the clan's ceremonial is called by the Bella Coola "Sesnem" or "Sesl'ynem." The traditions are the exclusive property of each clan. The laws according to which they descend from generation to generation differ from the laws prevailing among the other Coast tribes. The inhabitants of each Bella Coola village are not subdivided into clans, gentes, or septs; but each village community forms a unit, and possesses the same traditions. In order to keep the traditions in the tribe, the law requires that no person shall marry outside of his village community. Thus the clan tradition is kept the exclusive property of the village community by means of endogamy. I have made very careful inquiries in regard to this point, and all the old men make substantially the same statement. Even marriages among very near relatives are permitted, although marriages of people who are distantly related, or not related at all, are preferred. It even happens that a cousin marry, or that an uncle marry his niece, in order to keep the clan tradition from being acquired by another village community. It seems, however, that, owing to the influence of the Coast tribes, the endogamic system has begun to give way to an exogamic system. Powerful and wealthy chiefs marry outside of their own village community, in order to secure an additional clan legend through marriage. This new system agrees with the one prevalent among the Kwakiutl tribe.

The Sl'ima, or sacred lodge, is a religious society in which all the deities of heaven are represented. The members of each clan are initiated according to their clan traditions; but the same societies of the same deities appear in the traditions of all the various clans. From what little I have been able to learn, it seems that there is an elaborate ceremonial of the whole community, corresponding to the winter of the ceremonial among the Kwakiutl. I received the following description of the ceremonial:—

The person who invites to the Sl'ima, that is to s., the man whose son is to be initiated into one of the secret societies according to the tradition of his clan, requests a person who is called Ts'ems to be the nine brothers and their sister, who reside in the House of Qulha, and whose charge the Sl'ima is placed. The names of the brothers are Sesnemlk'ula, Xl'ameiwa, Sesqumlk'ula, Ql'ameiwa, Ximmlk'ula, Sl'amlk'ula, Sl'ula, Qulsal'wa, Xl'ulsl'a, and that of their sister, Ulmlqulqum (see p. 33). In the rear of the house an elevated room is prepared for Ts'ems, which he has down. He is covered with cedar mats of red underbark. Ts'ems four days he stays

[1] Op. cit., p. 130.

[2] See Boas, The Indians of the Lower Fraser, p. 71. Compare Sim Ian, op. cit.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

621 establish himself with the traditions of his new home. This [614] is another illustration of the patrilineal tendency of the whole [553] organization.

Politically, the village is the most important Bella Coola unit. Usually, though not always related to one another, the inhabitants are always friends. If an attack is made on a village by a hostile war-party, all the inhabitants suffer equally. On the other hand, if the residents decide to attack another [628] settlement, there is no compulsion for anyone to share the burden. Each individual, with the exception of slaves, follows his own inclination. In the case of murder or other wrong [582] inflicted by an individual, the responsibility rests on his immediate family, not the village. Factions within the village seem [578] to have been unimportant; individual jealousies were common, and often led to murder, but if a family became unpopular or [627] considered itself aggrieved, it usually moved to another village. Neighbouring settlements were generally on friendly terms and [628] often assisted each other in war, but this was not compulsory. Indeed, cases are known in which a war-party from the outer coast, about to attack Ilwed, passed within a quarter of a mile of Symqa-ts without its inhabitants even warning their threatened neighbours.

As far as internal organization is concerned, the village is as fluid a unit as are most Bella Coola groupings. If one individual has attained a position of eminence through the potlatch 622 system (vol. I, chap. IV), he is "chief" of the village, and his 554 advice is generally followed. If several men have approx- [536] imately the same importance, there is no dominating figure. In any case, a chief lacks executive authority, and such obedience as he receives is due to his personal influence. Some slight deference is paid to the man who uses the name of the eldest of the first group of settlers, the first chief, but this is not sufficient to warrant the title of "chief" with the significance usually attached to the term. The important members of the village 621 are accustomed to meet for the discussion of ceremonial mat- 623 585 596

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

621 623 [535] [996] 961 [184] [342] [171] [487] [164] [493] 342 [354] [572] [223] [264] [352] [535]

tere, and the village constitutes a unit for all dances; in fact this ceremonial unity is its most important function.

With the exception of a few villages built on the seashore, each Bella Coola settlement consists of a row of houses on the river bank. These are of the usual rectangular, plank-built type typical of the North-West Coast. In front of them stretches a sidewalk, usually supported by piles on the side nearest the river to make it level. The houses, too, in many cases have piles beneath their front ends, made necessary by the steep slope of the bank. In large villages there may be two rows of houses, behind and above one another. Usually there is a rough path parallel to the row of houses at the very edge of the river. The number of houses varies; before the smallpox epidemic some villages contained as many as thirty or forty, others, only two or three. There is no definite arrangement of the houses; anyone may build where there is a vacant space. Much the same arrangement occurs in the sea-coast villages, each of which depends for its main sustenance on an ocean fish-trap, as the river villages depend on a salmon-weir.

The central part of each house is occupied by a large fire, often sunk a considerable distance below the level of the floor, and around this is an open space free to all. Toward the sidewalls are raised the partitions, forming bedrooms for the different families, or for different members of one. In many cases the flooring is removed in three or four parts of the house for small fires on which different groups cook, the central fire being used for heating and for more important meals. The number of families occupying a house depends on its size; an important chief, with many relatives, often builds an enormous house which is occupied by ten or more families; smaller houses contain only two or three. Life in the larger houses is free and open; people are constantly passing in and out, and anyone present when food is being distributed is given a share as a matter of course. Most of the houses are decorated with carved upright posts and paintings on the beams and back-wall. A door through the lower beam to the back-room, so important in dances.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

as a man by the duly validated ownership of a chief's name in her own right. Formerly a slave was never allowed to eat seal, unless he had been the slayer. If many seals are killed, chiefs from adjacent villages are sometimes invited. The chiefs seat themselves according to their proper positions and are first served with the blood-stained grease that floats to the top of the water as the meat is boiling. When cooked, the meat is cut into strips, measured in terms of so many finger breadths, according to the number of guests. The cuts run down each fore-dipper, so that each receives a narrow strip including one of the tens. The head is always given to the herald.*

Wealthy chiefs frequently invite their fellows to ordinary meals even when no seal or deer has been killed. On these occasions, as at seal feasts, the guests are designated by their ancestral names, not by those in general use.

Chiefs are also accustomed to meet for the discussion of matters connected with the winter ceremonial; on such occasions their number may be augmented by men of influence in the secret society, though they do not rank as chiefs. Such a meeting is always called when a new member is to be initiated into the hamat'sa society. If there is difference of opinion the influence of even a semáil chief is overweighed by a man of importance in the society. The matter is discussed by all present and a decision reached by general agreement. It is difficult for a white man to understand how such is possible without either a vote, or general recognition by all that the views of some individual must be accepted. The writer was present at one such meeting, and was struck by the manner in which, after considerable, and at times heated, discussion, a consensus of opinion was reached, and accepted even by those who had proposed a contrary course.

Near every village is a place where the chiefs hold such meetings. All the inhabitants know the general locality, but

*Every effort was made to ensure the accuracy of this account, but errors must have crept in on account of the length of time which has elapsed since the ceremony was carried out to full detail.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEb Bellacoola NEb

622 there is such dread of the supernatural powers possessed by 623 members of the hamatsa society that none would dare go there.
998 If an uninitiated person should do so, he would formerly have been either killed or initiated into the society. The meeting-[575] place of the tlemqa-ti chiefs is on a ledge of rock jutting out over a waterfall about a quarter of a mile from the village.
The stream winds down a narrow cleft of the mountain side, screened by dense vegetation, and suddenly falls into a cauldron, so hemmed in by cliffs that no sunlight can come. The ledge is immediately above the brink of the falls, one of the most awe-inspiring places imaginable. The meeting-places of other villages lack such natural settings, though all are at the bases of cliffs, or near some easily distinguished feature. Some 178 of them are decorated with rude carvings, pecked into the 592 stone. The meaning of the designs is not known to any of 998 the present inhabitants. Some of them were made, long ago, by chiefs when they were composing songs; they pecked out the rock in time to the music forming in their minds. Others [211] were mere memorials of certain events. If a chief gave an important ceremony, he, or one of his friends, carved a figure, perhaps that of a man, perhaps of some animal connected with the rite, to recall the occasion. No carvings have been made within the life-time of any Bella Coola, so it is probable that they had further significance, now unknown.

622 When a chief wishes to summon his fellows for a meeting 623 he visits each and notifies him by a simple pressure of the foot, in many cases unobserved even by those sitting near. The 201 person so called slips away, unostentatiously, to the meeting-place.

The position of chief was not without disadvantages in the 571 old days. The Bella Coola are so jealous that anyone who 622 succeeded in elevating himself to a position above his fellows
623 became an object of envy. Their mythology contains many [165] examples of the murder of some powerful chief by rivals of his own village, and informants of today state that these records are true. One intelligent man asserted that his father had *583 [424] (a) This is a Rivers Inlet name, the dancer's prerogative having come from that area.

(b) This song was composed for, and used during the hamatsa season of 1923-4.

(c) A reference to the house in the land above. The somewhat grandiloquent phrasing is to impress the uninitiated.

[424] (d) The dancer had prerogatives both as Scratcher and Cannibal, a rare combination.

(e) The dancer must, presumably, have been in concealment for some reason. The implication is that the fear and danger of his powers had been increased from the fact that he was out of sight.

(f) That is: The crying is increasing. The reference is to the peculiar cry of all Seventh dancers.

(g) That is: His cedar-bark ornaments return to him. These indicate that he is about to dance.

(h) Presumably referring to the dancer.

(i) The wording is as if the hahaiat themselves were startled at the excessive vigour of the dancer.

(j) The significance is that those who have not received calls are terrified at what has come to the dancer.

(k) That is: When there is too much talking above. The uninitiated are led to believe that lengthy discussion in the land above presages some strange power coming to the dancer.

Song Used for Sanskilaxa(a), a Bella Coola Pungee Dancer(b)

A W'xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx I am terrified | x'xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx at what I hear(c), | xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx some talking | xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx by Xqaxxxx.

[xxxxxxxx xxxxxxx]

B xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx They(d) have hidden themselves, | xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx they do not want to die(e), | xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx they are debating furiously, xxx xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx their force becomes strange(f).

[xxxxxxxx xxxxxxx]

C Xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx Some have parted in anger, | xxx xxxxxxxxx their thoughts being at variance;

xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx [623] they move round to be with those of the same opinion(g); | xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx they agree with a wise man(h).

*575 [796] (a) This woman performed during the hamatsa season of 1923-4, the first time a Pungee dance had been displayed for many years. Four songs were composed for her.

(b) Recorded as song VII D 12a, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.

(c) The dance is wended as if the dancer were listening to the supernatural beings discussing the call which they proposed to send down. The uninitiated are led to believe that she actually has this ability. 583* [787]

(d) Referring to the supernatural beings.

(e) The implication is that the power of the dancer is so great, and the rite so dangerous, that even the supernatural beings themselves are afraid.

(f) The dancers is so animated and so such an important subject that the faces of the participants take on strained expressions.

(g) When a Bella Coola meeting is being held, those who hold similar views usually group themselves together. [229]

(h) A man of forceful character has expressed himself and the others concur.

Second Song Used for Sneeźźa'ha, a Bella Coola Forager Dancer(a)

A [illegible] It is true what my mother	[illegible] [illegible] to me(b),	[illegible] has spoken to me

[illegible]
Sneeźźa'ha(c).

[illegible]

B [illegible]	[illegible]
He(d) told me to raise my hand to me what he was holding(e)(f)
[illegible] the world(f)	[illegible] of the gathering above(g).

[illegible]

C [illegible] Bent their heads together(h)	[illegible] all the chiefs(f),	[illegible] those of lesser prestige

[illegible]
But were to fear, unable to [illegible]

(a) Recorded as song VII D 10a, National Museum of Canada, singer, Jim Pollard. This song, composed by Peter Nelson, was used during the festival season of 1923-4.

(b) This was the animal song used when Sneeźźa'ha danced, and the dance follows, in a certain sense, the first one. The uninitiated are led to believe that the dancer was able to see what her mother had described to her in previous years.

(c) That is: Sneeźźa'ha has spoken to me.

(d) Referring to a supernatural being, probably the dancer's patron.

(e) It was impossible to obtain an individual translation for each of these subdivisions. The implication is that the dancer was sitting with head bowed as her chief when the supernatural one held her hand upward to me when he was holding out to her in his hand. [787]

(f) Ahalal is a great translation. The reference is to the rite above as which the dancer personal has performed.

(g) A reference to the gathering of the supernatural beings.

(h) As if in secret and confidential discussion.

721 to attack. It is said that the Fort Rupert people once raided
648 it, but their hair became entangled in the thorns growing near the tide-flats and they were easily slain while struggling to free themselves. Two warriors escaped and hid in the branches [727] of a huge spruce tree. They used to slip down at night and steal food, thus supporting themselves for several weeks, but [628] were at last discovered and enslaved. On such occasions the villages of the lower and central valley usually rallied to the help of Sympo-o, the most exposed one, although there was no mechanism to enforce such assistance. The inhabitants of [774] this town attributed their protection to Alpanim, and used to claim that he had decreed that they should be immune owing to their close association with him. Though Bella Coola [561] itself was comparatively free from molestation, Kimsquit and [162] Talio, with smaller populations and less strategic positions, were subject to frequent attacks. At least one of the villages at
712 the head of South Bentinck Arm was defended with a stockade of cedar trunks, set upright in a double row and entered by a water-gate with a drop-door.[1] This water-gate protected the [648] residents on many occasions, and it is remembered that one [724] Fort Rupert raiding-party was annihilated while endeavouring to batter down the door with a huge ram. The defenders, armed with muskets, picked off the attackers as they struggled in the open.

721 All the older men were emphatic in stating that most of their raids were in revenge for such attacks. Although such statements were partisan, they were confirmed in every way [642] and were probably tolerably correct. Lack of a strong government was a serious handicap to the Bella Coola. After being [628] assailed, the members of the town would discuss retaliation, and if unanimity of opinion was reached, that course was de- [622] cided upon. Public opinion alone selected the leader, usually [701] a man who had given a number of potlatches, especially one whose position had been made stronger by previous validation

[1] It is said that such stockades surrounded other villages, but definite information on this point was unavailable.

1:McIlwraith NE6 Bellacoola NE6

● 624

/For information on Bellacoola heralds and their function in the potlatch ceremonies, see category 203./

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

law in public opinion which expresses contempt for a lazy man who is constantly begging.

To anyone familiar with the definite social groupings of a tribe divided into clans or land-owning families, the uxorieal family of the Bulu Cocis must appear as a vague and unreal unit, only distinguished by its intangibility. So it was found when investigating in the field. When information began to accumulate, it seemed as if there must be some definite obligations incumbent upon all members of the uxorieal family, but none could be found. Without asking a direct question, the point was raised whether, if a man were killed, the members of his uxorieal family would unite to avenge him. Conversely, were they liable for the deeds of any member? In each case the reply was in the negative; these matters concern only the matrilineal family. In regulating marriage the uxorieal family is important, since it is wise for a man or woman to seek husband within the members of that group, though it is not compulsory. Theoretically, the terms of kinship applied to members of the matrilineal family may be extended to members of the uxorieal family, but in practice this is rarely the case, and, if so, is fortuitous. It might be argued that this somewhat wide application of kinship terms, ranging on the classificatory usage, is a relic of an earlier, and now broken-down, clan system. It is impossible to prove or to deny such a connection. When trying to discover whether the members of an uxorieal family ever constituted a patrilineal kinship one of their fellows established himself as a chief, the following interesting statement was received. The previous witness the informant had been in Bulu Bulu, and there the point was raised by a Bulu Bulu chief whom he quoted as follows:

"We laugh at you Bulu Cocis because each of you is always trying to be chief. Our system is much better; we all help one chief."

The man agreed with the Bulu Bulu men that there was an important difference between the practices of the two tribes.

G/DE/Swedish E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB DeGeerville NEB

friends, a further cause for their preferential treatment. A Bella Coola who had been enslaved and ransomed had to undergo cleansing ceremony to remove the taint of slavery before he could take part in the ceremonies of the community. It was impossible to learn the details of this rite.

A master had complete power over a slave, unaffected by the force of public opinion, since the affairs of a slave, being without redress, were of no consequence to anyone. Accordingly, the lot of a slave depended on the character of his master, as on his own ability and industry. An industrious slave was valued; such an one would not be traded or sold except though dire necessity, and in course of years he became, so far as actual treatment was concerned, one of the family. Very wealthy men gave their slaves Tsetsa[*] dance preparations, spending large sums for the purpose. In such a case the one might become an influential member of the community, though the fact that he was not free was never forgotten. On the other hand, a master had not the slightest compunction about beating a lazy slave, and could kill him if he so desired. None of the present Bella Coola has heard of such a act; it was considered more sensible to sell or give away an unsatisfactory slave. It was accepted as a matter of course that a master should provide his slaves with food and clothing, and everything produced or obtained by one belonged to him. A slave-owner had full rights to his female slaves, and unquestionably exercised them. The only restraints were the jealousy of his own wife, or wives, and the feeling that it was unlighted for a free man to demean himself. It was impossible to learn with even approximate accuracy to what extent intercourse took place between masters and slaves. Probably at a great deal, though there was considerable freedom exhibited between slave women and the young men of the community, unrestrained by the pride of chieftainship. When a slave had been faithful for a number of years and had become about a member of the family, his master would try-

[*] Such plays (I, p. 18) were seen rarely given.

554 chief had thus obtained a seat for his daughter, as well as one
* 556 for his two sons. But usually a woman continues to use the 562 ancestral name given to her in infancy until she is able to [553] assist her husband in a potlatch, when a name is validated for her (see I, p. 400). The ancestral names of the first women to occupy this earth are reserved for women and, like men's names, vary in prestige according to the prowess of their owners. Most names given to children, though embedded in [55] origin myths, are applicable to either sex; and these are the common designations of women. Cases are known in which a woman has assumed an ancestral name if her brother has allowed it to fall into ill-repute through failure to give potlatches.

554 With such a fluid system, no fixed line can be drawn be-
* 556 tween chief and commoner. But after his fourth potlatch a 622 man's influence in the community has become so great that [359] he will usually feel justified in having the carpenters make for him a memorial seat. There is nothing to prevent a person having one made for him before he has given the requisite number of potlatches, but too rapid assumption may render him liable to the scorn of the community through his failure to show himself sufficiently "strong." The contempt shown [624] to anyone attempting to usurp too lofty a place is a strong deterrent to a proud young man.

[592] On the memorial seat are carved the man's ancestral crests, [359] in other words the forms in which his first ancestors came to earth, or some of the beings with whom they came in contact. To show these is a matter of pride, but unless the display is fittingly validated, the man's own dignity will be lowered, as well as that of his ancestors. Construction of a seat is particularly common when a man is establishing himself in the ancestral position behind the fire, and claims this to be where his first ancestor sat. Others among the first people may have chosen seats in other parts of the house, and in these, likewise, a man who is taking his ancestral name may have a memorial seat constructed. Establishment in such a position increases a chief's feeling of moral superiority, so if strength-ability are always seeking to lend goods to those who are planning potlatches or other rites, knowing that the investment is safe and lucrative.

X uses his own discretion as to how much wealth is necessary. He knows how much he owes for presents received on previous occasions, and would not dream of giving a potlatch until able to repay them. Failure to do so would hold him up to the derision of the whole countryside. But he acts upon his own judgment with regard to interest. If he continues to lend goods until he is able to repay with great interest, he gains prestige from his generous returns, but meanwhile he does not enjoy the distinction which would have followed a smaller effort at an earlier period. Further, there is the uncertainty about how much his wife's family will contribute, though this can be estimated with a fair degree of accuracy; in Bella Coola every transaction is made publicly, so each man knows the wealth of his neighbour. The favourite month for a potlatch is October, before the hamat dances, when there is abundance of food. At this season there is plenty of salmon roe, berries, and crabapples, all of which might be ruined by frost. Occasionally, a potlatch takes place after the hamat period, but in that case the only foods available are slacken grass, smoked roes, smoked fish, dried herring-hack, and dried berries. If several men in one village decide to give potlatches in the same year there may be rivalry and dispute as to which shall be first. There is no satisfactory method of settling this point.

When all is ready X sets a herald (S. p. 344) to summon his fellow villagers to his house the following day for ulamen. It is customary for all to accept, but no social obligation is broken should a man or woman fail to do so.

The man moving to and fro in his own house, knowing that free food will be distributed. While his expected guests are adorning themselves by washing and painting, X, aided by his family and others, prepares large quantities of food, borrows boxes, and makes other necessary arrangements. The one by repeating loudly a few words, or even phrases, from the speeches being delivered, or calling on the audience to notice what has just been said and to learn accordingly. A white man would be annoyed at such interruptions, but the Bella Coola consider them evidence of attentiveness.

The making of comments is a duty performed at every type of ceremony, but it is indispensable at potlatches, since a chief depends on the heralds to emphasize and explain the points of his family history which are being displayed. One intelligent man likened their functions to a compass, constantly guiding the course of ceremonial life. Without a herald a chief would be as useless as a ship tossed on the ocean with no hand to steer. Although the principal duty of heralds is to extol the actions of a chief, they can, and are expected to, decide one who fails to carry out the customary requirements. Cases have occurred in which influential men have so far forgotten their function of generosity as to fail to invite their fellows after killing a deer or other large animal; or women have declined to share their abundant berries. Nothing is said at the time, but when next the people have come together for some ceremony, a herald refers to the occasion under as slim a disguise that everyone is aware of his meaning. This public ridicule lowers the prestige of a chief to such an extent that he is careful not to offend again. Not many years ago, a certain Kimsquit chief failed to ask others to share some mountain goats which he had killed; at the first opportunity a herald referred to himself as Tahi, Mountain Goat, and all present realized that he was really alluding to the one who had been remiss.

Heralds must exercise care in their criticisms at the expense of chiefs because, unless public opinion is with them, the point of the remark is lost, and they expose themselves to the wrath of the person offended. Nevertheless, heralds always strive to cause merriment, and often take risks with this aim in view. They try to make humorous remarks, and also to raise amusement by their action. As already described, the dancer of a potlatch may throw to one of them a dish containing liquid food and those who are not. Any o'alt, provided that he has enough food for a meal, can call in his neighbors, but the one who usually does so is a man who has received his name a year or two before the occasion.

A few days before the time selected, the host asks the singers to compose a new song for him. For a marginal dance particularly, and in some cases for any one of the other three divisions of the society, the new dance not deal with incidents connected with the host's ancestral story, but with humorous or disgraceful incidents of the present time. If a man has caught ten salmon and kept them all for himself, his misfortune is commented upon in the song. If a wife has deserted her husband for another man, the actions of the two are mercilessly ridiculed. If a chief has failed to display generosity it is likewise recorded, and reference is made to events in dance circle. To do this is one of the functions of a marginal, and the singers are always ready to assist him. In the same time they often add a new incident to the dance belonging to some other o'alt dance so that he can will be able to perform. In this way the songs are remembered from year to year, which is different from the customary Bella Coola usage.

On the morning of the day chosen, the host asks one of the singers to beat a drum repeatedly but slowly, as a signal that a non-commercial dance is about to take place. Minor men, heralds go from house to house announcing who is to give the dance. In the late afternoon the people gather in the dance's house where men, women, and children sort themselves without distinction of rank, the only reserved place being that for the singers behind the fire. They hear out the host's name and he dances to it, while the singers themselves sing the words to the accompaniment of the audience. Using their own discretion, they then hear out the name of another o'alt and he also dances, followed in succession by a third, a fourth, and as many as the singers think fit. Sometimes the songs of round are used in a similar manner. When many have danced, the host distributes food to all his guests, not forgetting to give the largest performances of this kind. But ceremonial and ethical concepts, shown at their highest development in the potlatch, are not limited to a few weeks of the year or to any class of the community. Generosity on a large scale can be publicly displayed by chiefs alone, but to a lesser degree this virtue must be practised by everyone, since avarice is considered a major sin. Persons who happened to pass house in which a meal is taking place must be invited to dine in; to do otherwise would be considered rude. The poor newcomer must take at least a bite to show that he is at cheerful and not proud to eat with his host, while if he changes, he shows whatever is being served as a matter of course. The head of the family should be the first to move any food* as proof that it is not poisoned, but otherwise he form rule, if any, better than his guests. This custom is now rapidly falling into disuse through the construction of individual food houses with doors and locks. The fisherman who has exclusive rights to a suitable place for netting eulachon or salmon may give some of his catch to anyone who asks him. If he has landed four salmon, the first solicitor is given one, later comers none at all. When a net is set in the river, anyone passing followed to raise it and take some of the contents. If there is two fish, he may remove one, if many, three or four. To do all would be a despicable theft, sufficient to brand the trespasser as greedy; hence public opinion governs the transactions being carried to excess. A hunter who brings back naval mountain goats or other large game is expected to invite a neighbours to a feast, which certainly means that he must save his takings.

Lib/Dewolfe E-1 [1902-1924] 1948
NEB Discards NEA

Presents of this kind increase the power of the donor who has thus acted in accordance with Bella Coola ethics, and are advantageous investments since others are indebted. The system is carried to such lengths that, will recent years, it was more profitable to give away goods than to sell them. In the case of a sale, the purchaser endeavors to give as little as possible, whereas the recipient of a gift shows as much as

*This is a modern practice, dating from the introduction of house-doors.

1:McDavitt E.-1 (1922-1924) 1948
NES DeDavitt NES

533 of each song dances to it. Anyone who has enough food to 536 provide a meal for all is glad to invite his neighbours to such 574 an affair, but the singers and heralds can force a stingy man to act as host. Everyone knows his neighbour's resources and the singers have no hesitation in going to the house of a man with an ample supply of food and beginning to beat out songs [illegible] there. The heralds are quick to see what is happening and [illegible] call the people, with the result that the involuntary host is compelled to provide a meal in order not to be thought mean and churlish. Without waiting for the singers to take the initiative, heralds likewise often invite people to the house of a man whom they know to be well provided with food.

During the summer, the necessity of laying in supplies of salmon makes it impossible to hold many dances, although one of the non-sacred type just described takes place whenever there is a lull in the fishing. In the early autumn, when berries, fish, and game are abundant, the thoughts of chiefs turn to potlatches and the lengthy preliminaries are begun. At this season, too, a chief who lacks sufficient wealth to invite foreign guests, calls in his neighbours for a social dance and initiates some of his young relatives into that society. The ritual, described in the last chapter, resembles that of a potlatch except that no new house is constructed, there is no return of a dead relative, and the ceremonial connected with the coming of foreigners is necessarily omitted. In some cases a chief performs this type of rite a year before he proposes to hold a potlatch, and explains that he is doing so because he will be unable to give presents to the inhabitants of his own village at the later affair. Gifts so distributed are returnable with interest, though it is not obligatory for recipients to do this in time for the donor to make use of their repayment at his potlatch.

Ceremonials of this nature occupy the Bella Coola during the early autumn, while in winter hamat'sa dances take place almost nightly. When they are over, it is time for the non-sacred variety of s'alt performances, and for another type of rite, nusa'xa'xa'mas.

Lib. Dewolf: E.5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

well, and these are some learnt by the child who is fortunate enough to have many kinsmen. Primarily, responsibility rests with the parents for the care and support of their offspring, but they have the advice, assistance, and material aid of their relatives. Nor are these limited to the near kindred of either father or mother; all members of the ancestral family take their part. Strangers, also, even if unrelated, take an interest in any child who shows their hallmarks, irrespective of his rank.

Much of the care bestowed on children is of a magical nature and must be reserved until a later chapter. Little boys follow their fathers on hunting expeditions and so acquire knowledge by practical experience, as do girls from their mothers with regard to household tasks and feminine occupations. Even small children are quick to notice the attention paid to the orders of chiefs, and carry out their commands without demur. A disobedient child is beaten or thrown into cold water; the parents usually act in such cases, though a near relative does not hesitate to do so, especially if he is a chief. Like all other children, Bella Coola boys and girls are fond of stories and listen eagerly to the tales told in the long evenings by some old man or woman. Many of these are somewhat obscene, but they serve to teach much ancient lore, and at the same time to emphasize many taboos and restrictions which are thus inculcated without definite schooling. They illustrate the laws of morality, as does the public disapproval shown to anyone who infringes some point of etiquette or behaviour. If a child makes fun of a sea-fish or a bull-head, he is not told to stop doing so; instead, one of his elders tells him how, in the distant past, there was a famine, and adviseth him not to scoff at the fish which alone saved his ancestors from starvation at that time. If a rude little boy laughs at a maimed or deformed man, he is told of Sisiutl, a Bella Bella cockle who repeatedly mocked a one-eyed man and presently, himself, lost the sight of an eye.

"Don't laugh at cripples, blind people, or those who are

[584]

dress just described. The giving of dress at this time is not obligatory, nor does it affect the validity of the coming marriage. It is merely a mark of friendly feeling between the two groups of relatives, and, by adding to the importance of the event, increases the potential strength of the unions children.

[584]

If either X or Y should die during the period of engagement, the presents, or their equivalent, must be returned to the donors. No formal methods are employed to ensure this, but the force of public opinion suffices to compel a man to do [585] [586] that which is proper, in fact, he is anxious to do so. If Y should die, an effort is made to replace her with a sister, cousin, or other near relative, so that the friendly relations entered upon by the two families may not be lost. The gifts mutually given by the two families may be returned and re-donated or the substitute simply takes Y's place without further arrangement. Sometimes, in spite of the wishes of their parents and the [587] disloyal ceremonies carried out, either X or Y breaks the engagement by going to live with somebody else. It is then a mark [588] of pride for the family of the offender to return the gifts they have received, and almost equally a mark of honour for the aggrieved party to give back what has been bestowed upon them, in order to demonstrate how little value they place on the possession of goods.

Though a lengthy engagement is desirable, it may be curtailed. If, for example, one of X's relatives should die before the usual period has elapsed, Y's father may suggest an immediate wedding. He knows that X's family will have heavy [764] expenses in connection with the burial and mourning ceremonies; hence it is courteous to offer a quick marriage with the financial advantages accruing to them at the ceremony. In this case, X either does not work at all for Y's family, or for only a short time. Moreover, if Y reaches marriageable age without her father receiving suitable proposals, he can himself take the initiative by consulting the parents of an eligible young man. If the suggestion is agreeable, the engagement is announced in the manner already described, and the marriage takes place [illegible] one, but only one of great importance could hope to aspire to more, while the case of Pakic was considered to be unique and highly desirable.

[illegible] A chief's wives always lived in the same house, and it is said that disputes were frequent. Pakic endeavored to prevent jealousy by providing each woman with a special bedroom and sleeping for a single night with each in order. One informant had two wives when a young man, and he found that the only way to avoid constant bickering was by sleeping in one bed, between them. The evidence seems clear that plurality of wives was usually the cause of considerable friction, though this never deterred a man from taking a second wife if he could. The only special rule of incest in this regard was that two sisters could not be married at the same time.

[illegible] In answer to questions about polyandry, two men told of a barren woman who had two little-minded husbands between whom she used to sleep. The whole affair was considered disgusting, but public opinion did not correct the offenders since a person's marital affairs were considered to concern the individual only. It was accordingly assumed that the institution of true polyandry did not exist, when, exceptionally, information was volunteered about its occurrence in the families of influential men. A very powerful chief, if his only child was a daughter, quite frequently married her simultaneously to the sons of other chiefs. She was then considered more fortunate, since only a wealthy man could provide for a daughter in this way, and expend the large quantities of goods necessary to ensure her proper marriage in each case. The husbands were never brothers, and seldom related, since the additional power sought to ally his daughter with different ancestral families for the benefit of any resultant children. The joint wife was accustomed to live for a number of months in the house of one of her husbands, with her other husbands forming part of his household. She would then move to the house of another, who assumed the leadership of the group, ceremony, they can part in discretion without anyone being offended.

When a wife runs away and seeks refuge with another man, her husband sometimes tries to kill his rival, but frequently both families endeavour to heal the breach amicably. Some of her relatives, particularly those who played an influential part in the marriage, first ask the husband whether or not he is willing to take her back. If the answer is in the affirmative, they next try to persuade her to return. Every argument is used, in many cases confined with threats against her relatives, and the reconciliation often succeeds. But she must never go back without presents, "to do with the water that has covered the marriage." The husband invites all his fellow-villagers to his house to a ceremony which is said "to uncover the house (of troubles)." The singers are in attendance and sing in succession many theme songs, followed by comic songs, and to which the owner of the song dances, but since the supernatural beings are not present, the effect is of a non-sacred nature. The goods received from the family of the erring wife are distributed and the matter is at an end. Those who persuaded the wife to return are specially rewarded.

If the brethren will should refuse to return, or if she should have a child to her lover, reconciliation is not possible. There is no incumbent on the woman's relatives to return to the husband so much goods as he has expended, with additions if they wish to uphold their own reputation. If the husband is clearly to blame, or if he is the deserting person, his wife's family are not required to return the gifts they have received. There is no judicial tribunal of any kind, the force of public opinion alone impels restitution if the offender wishes to maintain his reputation in the community. Acting on this principle, the relatives of a deserted wife sometimes restore to her husband's family the presents they have received, thereby demonstrating their nobility and at the same time shaming the offender.

Formerly there was an elaborate ceremony to dissolve the

586
622
837
796

husband or wife who destroyed a marriage by deserting his, or her, partner for a lover. One informant, aged about seventy, twice took part in this rite when a young man, but probably did not know the full details of it. He stated that it followed a divorce of two persons who had been married with full ceremony, whereas another, slightly younger informant, who remembered having seen the ceremony once when a mere lad, believed that it was only in the families of commoners. It appears certain that the rite has not been practised since about 1880, consequently there is an element of doubt as to the actual details, and even as to whether it was an affair of chiefs or commoners. It is probable that it was among the former.

When a woman deserted her husband one of the leading chiefs would take this opportunity of giving a ceremony of the type known as ilaqkhum.* After consulting with his fellows to ensure that no one had any objections, and rarely including the deserted husband, he summoned the singers to his house. He would tell them his plans, and they would prepare the songs for the occasion. Five or six were always composed, with an effort to include as many foul remarks and allusions as possible, particularly with regard to the organs of the woman and her lover.

The singers spent about a week composing the songs, and meanwhile the chief who was giving the ceremony prepared food and made other necessary arrangements. When these were ready, the donor invited to his house all the members of the nuxnt and kwiat societies for a rehearsal. The singers sang over the airs for the instruction of the guests. They were always worded as if it were the deserted husband speaking in foul terms of his ex-wife. The theme of one was:

"My wife has pudendum like those of a black bear."

The guests joined in the singing and also supplied foul themes by calling out observations about the organs of women in general, and of the deserting wife in particular. The singers

*The relation of this to the ilaqkhum of the same name is obscure, cf. I, p. 378.

S:00:Twenty XI-9 (1922-1924)1968
NEB Bellinconia NEB

mind to incorporate as many of these as possible, so that the rite soon became a chorus of obscenities. The songs were sung and resung until all present were familiar with them, then the dancer of the rite distributed food and all departed.

The following afternoon everyone, including those uninitiated into either society, were invited to the dancer's house. Probably the only absentees from the village were the deserting wife and her lover, while guests from neighbouring settlements were often in attendance. On this occasion, for the first time, the deserted husband used to take the leading part. When the singers struck up the tune of the first song, he used to appear, supported by four or five assistants. His face was blackened with soot, he wore a lynx-skin belt, and above his head was fashioned some insulting object, usually a representation of the female organs made of wood, cedar-bark and leaves, as realistic as possible. As the singers sang, aided by those who had learnt the songs on the previous day, the husband danced, moving his body so that the ornament on top of his head was shaken suggestively. Meanwhile the spectators kept calling out filthy epithets of any kind on his ex-wife and her lover. Sometimes the dancer was able to insert some obscene remarks into the display. On one occasion, for example, he pulled some lynx fur from his belt and threw it in the face of a Tlil-ie man who happened to be present, and who had once seduced a married woman and accordingly bore the brunt of a similar rite, with the remark:

"All Tlil-ie women have hairy pudendis like that."

The guests were invited to suggest foul nicknames for the man with whom the dancer's wife had eloped. One of these was adopted by general agreement of opinion, and the man was commonly called by it henceforth. Two names so created were:

Ishdoo, "The One Whose Face is Wrinkled like a Woman's Organs," and, Zoodzaak, "The One Who Cohabited Publicly."

536 One very old man is still, 1923, commonly called by this ●626 last designation, much to his annoyance.

When the songs had been sung, each accompanied by the 839 dancing of the deserted husband, the donor of the ceremony
796 distributed food and the guests departed. The only advantage [556] to the giver of the rite was that it enabled him to show his wealth in an apparently disinterested fashion by gifts of food. Usually he was a friend of the aggrieved husband.

When a husband deserted his wife, the other women of the village used to perform an exactly similar ceremony. The same type of songs were composed, and during their singing the deserted wife used to dance, wearing above her head [292] representations of a penis and testicles. By means of hidden strings she was able to cause the former to become erect.

On other occasions the ceremony was varied by an announcer asking the offended party about the appearance of the deserter. There followed a minute and highly coloured description about the unpleasantness of his genital organs, a description which was swiftly incorporated into the songs.

It can be taken as a matter of course that the above description is little more than an outline of the Bella Coola ceremony of shaming. In spite of its deficiencies, it is important, as evidence of the former sentiment with regard to divorce. Obscene though the ceremony must have been, both in acting and in the free use of personalities, it must have been a powerful deterrent to divorce.* Indeed it would be difficult to imagine a stronger one in a community where a man's position is judged by public opinion and where his greatest aversion is to public ridicule. It is unfortunate that we shall probably never know whether the rite was associated with chiefs or commoners.

CEREMONIAL MARRIAGE

511 Since marriage gains much of its importance from the complicated business transactions between the two families, with 556
[848]

*A similar rite was occasionally carried out for unmarried mothers.

b McDowell R-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

place in the manner already described. After passing through the fourth hole, or for the fourth time through the single opening, the two go to some lonely pool in the forest where the mourner washes. They light a fire and deposit on it some of his clothing, placing the rest in a stump or hollow tree. The friend always takes with him a supply of new clothing which the person being purified puts on and returns home, cleansed from the immediate taint of death. 764 783

The above rite protects widower or widow, but does not alter the fact that for one year they are ceremonially "unclean" and must obey sundry taboos. They must not go to the bank of the river, or even appear at the front door of a house facing it. To do so is displeasing to the salmon; for the same reason they cannot eat this fish unless it has been smoked. If they wish to travel on the ocean, they cannot embark at the village but must go through the woods to a point on the shore and there be picked up by the canoe. There is a regular "Widows and Widowers Rock" about a mile on either side of every village on the ocean. The one near Kimsquit is called Sqiw'ti, and there is thought to be blood on it. A person mourning a consort must wear a hat decorated with miniature coppers of which the bottoms are bent upwards; should this be omitted, when the offender remarries, the new husband or wife will soon die. 765 [783] [785] [262] [484] [292] [761]

In addition to these taboos, there are customary laws of behaviour, an infraction of which renders the offender liable to social disapproval. Widows and widowers should cut their hair short, and the former should rub ashes on the face. Sexual intercourse is prohibited to both sexes; if this rule is broken, the relatives of the deceased are insulted. Remarriage should not take place for at least a year, although among poor people it sometimes occurs after only six months, in which case all taboos and restrictions automatically cease. There is no law on this point, but it is considered fitting to allow this period to elapse. These requirements clearly indicate that bereavement is not merely an individual affair, but entails social and [621] [302] [834] [587] [735]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

tense throughout this chapter, and to assume the presence of a number of young men and women ignorant of the significance of the rites. Formerly, the kukusiut often had difficulty in impressing the uninitiated with their prowess, and feuds with the o'alt were common.

Although membership in the kusiut society depends on an ancestral prerogative, it is essentially a democratic institution. A certain amount of wealth is necessary to validate a kusiut prerogative, but nothing comparable to that required for a potlatch; in fact, poor men are often persons of great importance within the ranks of the society. Nor are the prerogatives considered to be as valuable as ancestral rights, so that slaves are often admitted as kukusiut by their masters. An important kusiut is not esteemed by the community in the same way as the donor of many potlatches; in short, membership in the society brings limited ceremonial and semi-religious advantage, not social prestige of a public nature.

Powers and Functions of the Society

Any secret society can be viewed from the standpoints of a member, and of a non-member. The scope of the kusiut organization can be most clearly outlined by describing first what an uninitiated person knows about it. From his infancy, parents impress upon a child the supernatural powers of the kukusiut and the dangers attached to their rites. Such instruction is perhaps strongest where one, or both, is not a member. They then voice their own fears, and do not merely deceive for the good of the society. Steeped as every child is in a firm belief of the near presence of the supernatural, he readily believes what he is told. He learns, for example, that if, without special invitation, he dares enter the house where a kusiut dance is taking place—at any time during the four days or more that it lasts—his spirit will be drawn from him. This is sufficient to deter him from prying too closely into the rites. Strangely enough, there seem always to have been differences in teaching with respect to this deception. It is believed that if a non-

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

It is believed that if a non-
*575 initiate pass between the central fire and the raised platform
774 behind it, where the dancer is usually concealed, his spirit will 755 be attracted to this material object. Even though the performer is in another house at the time, he at once senses what [784 has happened and asks who has lost his spirit. The guilty 626 person, believing that he will die unless it is returned to him, always admits what he has done. The dancer, accompanied by several attendant kukusiut, proceeds to the raised platform, presses his cupped hands four times against it, and by sucking with his mouth pretends to draw forth the spirit. But since the dancer has a direct call (II, p. 6) from his supernatural patron (II, p. 6), he cannot come in contact with the uninitiated without danger to the latter, so he transfers the supernatural element to the leg of another kusiut, who is not dancing at the time, by pressing four times. This assistant then returns it to the owner by kneading it four times into the back of his neck.
[626 The reckless uninitiated person suffers no harm, but is more careful in future.

[784 Another belief is that if a non-member even walks close to 626 the doorway of the house during the four days, or more, that a dance is taking place, his spirit is attracted to the dancer, wherever he may be at the moment. Consequently the uninitiated use the beach path instead of the sidewalk. Accounts differ as to what results from the transgression. According to [778 one, the dancer falls down as if dead, due to the contact between something non-sacred and the power with which he is imbued. It is at once recognized what has happened and any kusiut can draw forth the spirit by placing his two hands, shaped like a cup, against the dancer and sucking violently. While so doing he calls hoip loudly and any kukusiut present beat time furiously. As soon as the alien spirit has been removed, the dancer recovers. Still holding his hands cupped together, the extractor now proceeds to the house of the non-member and returns the latter's spirit by kneading it into the back of his neck. If this were not done, the loser would soon [784 become mad, try to eat dirt, and die. According to another

3:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NES Bellacoola NES

informant, the entry of a strange spirit into his body does not inconvenience the dancer, although he senses its presence, and asks who will pay for its return. Unless the owner at once steps forward to claim his property and promises to pay, his spirit is thrown into the fire and he dies. The kukusiut sometimes tell an uninitiated person that his spirit has been attracted from him, thereby terrifying him so greatly that he appeals to a shaman to recover it for him. The expert greases his hands, warms them at a fire, and pretends to pluck something from the kusiut which he inserts into the loser's neck. 575* 774 785 [784]

In view of the firm conviction that the spirit is essential to an individual's welfare, it is not surprising that this belief should awe the uninitiated and fill them with profound respect for the kukusiut. The diversity in the details of procedure proves that the practice has not become standardized; those who are not members of the society believe and do not test the claims. 575* 774 626

Another source of strength claimed by the kukusiut is ability to witness and imitate the dances of the supernatural beings held in Nusmät-a prior to the entry of Äiqunäm. As already described, it is believed that a supernatural element from every living creature upon earth ascends at this time but, in a way that is not fully understood, only those belonging to kukusiut can take part in the ceremonies. Is it strange, therefore, that members of the society are regarded with awe by their less fortunate fellows? Presents are given after every dance in Nusmät-a and the supernatural elements receive their due share. When, however, Äiqunäm enters, he is so big and so hot that almost all who have assembled rush forth furiously, and in the crush at the narrow doorway disaster overtakes many of the visiting human representatives. Some drop their gifts, and their owners will be unfortunate; others fall, and their owners cannot survive until the next ceremonial season. This same fate may befall even those who are not members of the kusiut society, but they do not have the ability to appreciate what has happened. 575* 787 776 996 777 761 and their subterfuges, it sometimes happens that an uninitiated person sees or hears something which he should not know. The simplest way to deal with this situation is to kill the observer. It is said that no less an type a young man, impelled by curiosity, wandered up a valley into which he had been warned not to penetrate, and met a Cannibal whom he believed had vanished into the upper realms. Almost dumbfounded, he accepted the latter's invitation to sit down, and was slain by him. More often, and especially if the observer is the child of a kwaiat, he is initiated into the ranks of the society. If this happens at any time of year except the actual ceremonial season, he cannot perform immediately, but he is taken to the secret meeting place of the village chiefs, and there the mysteries of the organization are explained to him. The uninitiated are told that the observer has had a shaman's experience. With the aid of the older kwaiat he then performs a dance and conjuring feat of the type already described (I, p. 564), and is secluded until the next autumn, meanwhile wearing the distinctive collar of a shaman. In the songs used on this occasion no mention is made of a wash-basin, so of course the lad only performs ceremonially. When winter comes he is formally initiated into the society.

It is somewhat difficult to understand and explain the sentiments which lead a young man to obey rigidly the dictates of the senior kwaiat in deceiving his former friends. If it becomes known that a youth has seen something which should have been concealed, the senior kwaiat of his village meet in their ceremonial spot and decide that he must be put through the shaman's rite. Some relative of the youth is always ready to provide the necessary kwaiat prerogative; otherwise he would have to be killed. Two or three members are then sent to catch the young man. On some pretext they lure him into the woods and then carry him away, struggling in fear, to the holy of holies, the place which he had been told to avoid since he would die if he penetrated to it. Here he finds all the seniors of his village, seated with grave expressions on #575 their form. In spite of what he may have seen, the lad cannot rid himself of the supernatural fears with which he has been 781 involved from childhood, and the experience is terrifying to 424 a degree. It may be that he has seen some of the whistles, and thereby knows that the strange sounds are made by men, not by supernatural beings. In this case he is shown their mechanism in detail, and warned of the dire fate which will befall him if he tells others of his knowledge. Fear impels him to silence, and at the same time he realizes that what he has discovered has placed him in a superior position to that of his former associates. He feels, too, that he has been admitted into the ranks of the society to which his father, grandfather, and ancestors have distinguished themselves, and that it would be desecration to make light of what they have held sacred. Finally, an initiate does not at first grasp the fact that all the cries are deceptions, and by the time that this is apparent to him he has become so thoroughly a part of the organization that he has no thought of betraying his associates, upsetting a vital part in the complicated fabric of Bella Coola life, and exposing himself to ruin and death. A logical white man might think these considerations insufficient, but the existence of the society proves that the varied motives operate so strongly that a young man does keep silence. Some informants state that hypnotism was formerly used to ensure obedience.

[928]

#575 The hahaiat are always ready to deal with an emergency 176 such as sometimes occurs in spite of every precaution. It is 781 remembered that about one hundred and fifty years ago during 424 a dance at the village of Nuqáymáts, a figure, representing one of the supernatural beings, had the misfortune to drop his mask, the strings by which it was tied having worn through. The house was crowded with uninitiated to whom the deception at once became apparent. For a moment there was wild confusion, but the senior hahaiat rose to the occasion and closed the door, allowing no uninitiated person to leave. Then a hahaiat was sent out with a whistle which he sounded as if the supernatural being of which it was the voice was growing

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[No Dance of NoaKunim]

approaches the Bella Coola River, and proceeds up it, beneath the surface of the water, invisible to all. Its destination is Smaxmaxa, where its captain leaps to Nuxpalemaxta to await the coming of Sqaweiem. The crew consists of a number of supernatural beings, who will be described in connection with the ceremonies the night of nalaxem. This canoe, which brings the salmon and berries to Bella Coola, has four masts but no sails, and is enormous. Whenever the weather is fine, Noakynum lowers first one side and then the other of his craft so that the salmon may leave; after swimming around for a time they always return, refreshed by their exercise. In former times when people were purified by ceremonial chastity, several succeeded in seeing the craft, and from them it is known that it is about six hundred yards in length, that it travels without leaving a wake, that any canoes passing near are sucked along after it, and that a mallard duck, perched on the bow, quacks continuously. Intelligent informants agreed that the bringing of the salmon during the autumn was inconsistent, but they could offer no explanation. One man believed that this was pointed out not many years ago by a man whose patron was Nuikynum, but that the marshals requested him not to upset established ritual by too much logic. Noakynum is patron for several kukusiut, who are believed by the uninitiated to be able to see his canoe. As he passes up the river the kusiut dances begin.

It is unnecessary to describe the full ritual in each village, as this is supposed to be identical, and probably contains only slight variations, if any. In Tsmasti the kusiut who has the prerogative of seeing Noakynum is a certain Qoxalin-i,[15] in Kimsquit, Alaxinuasam,[16] and in Sististi, Xemtnum. Although, [15] Details of this dance were learnt from the father of Qoxalin-i, who intimated that the name was a family possession. Several months later an old woman referred to the handing of this designation by her father and said that the present name had failed to return it. Bitter feelings are often caused by disputes of this kind.

[16] Meaning "Cloud Covered," a reference to the invisibility of his patron, as if the latter were hidden by clouds. Many kusiut names have significances of this type.

*576 tion and those quarrelling follow him as he goes to every house
*796 growling and crying xwe, xwe, xwe. By the time he returns home their anger has cooled. It is then necessary to quiet X by means of the elaborate beating of sticks. This is repeated four times, while a kwiat spits violently over him.

Before leaving his own home to attend a kwiat dance, a little food is always given to X in case he should become hungry and start biting people. On qulaw he always dances after the dance of the ceremony,[illegible] and when the kukusiut eat together he always receives his portion immediately after that of the marshals. Fear of all Cannibals is one of the most potent deterrents to the uninitiated, but the most dreaded are those, like X, who have just returned from the land above and may at any moment break forth into an orgy of biting. Several elderly informants recalled vividly the terror with which they regarded such a Cannibal when they were young.

[620] [781]

The kukusiut take full advantage of the fear which X inspires in the uninitiated. On qulaw nights when the time arrives for the latter to depart, they are often chased forth by the frenzy of X, or one of his fellow-Cannibals who has likewise been to the land above. X starts to call out, xwe, xwe, xwe, and rises to his feet; the singers at once begin to beat out one of his songs and the uninitiated hurriedly flee, while the Cannibal's guardians press close around him as he dances as if to prevent him running amuck among the frightened people crowding out of the door. As he dances and hears his song, he becomes more and more excited; he growls and only the repeated hoip of his guardians and their pressure upon the back of his neck appear to restrain him. Non-members and even those kukusiut who do not understand the full mysteries of the Cannibal dance cannot fail to be impressed. The raising of the arms is supposed to inflame a Cannibal, so if it is desired still more to impress the uninitiated, one of the kukusiut lifts his arms, and is bitten by X. The heralds at once go through the village announcing what has taken place. Meanwhile X, maddened by the taste of blood, dashes from the house, closely guarded by a number of hahaiat. Growling, he enters the lowest house of the village and, to the uninitiated there, it appears as if the restraint of his guardians is all that prevents the biting demon from breaking loose among them. This is repeated at every house in the village, and then X returns to that in which potlatch is taking place, where he is guided to his usual corner and a hahaiat throws cold water over him. Any senior hahaiat, often one who is also a dancer, calls on these present to beat time, and the frenzied confusion of sticks sounds forth. X remains quiet and more water is thrown over him. This pounding of sticks is four times repeated, and after each more water is thrown over the Cannibal, until at last his temporary fit of frenzy is stilled. Then the hahaiat set in conclave and leave. It must be remembered that the uninitiated hear the beating of sticks from adjacent houses, and their awe is perhaps increased by the fact that they cannot actually see what is taking place. 575* 796* [981]

[781]

[illegible] Cannibals have performed in a single year, the order in which they dance is subject to arrangement.

[The Cannibal Dance]

This liability to madness lasts throughout the ceremonial season, effectively suppressing any venturesome uninitiated, and at the same time serving as a bond of union among the hahaiat themselves, who must sink individual differences of opinion in face of the absolute necessity of upholding X's prestige. A Cannibal novice can likewise become frenzied at any time during the summer following his initiation. [626]

The Cannibal dance entails a considerable amount of physical and mental effort, while if X bites many individuals, as he likes to do as a means of demonstrating his prerogative, he is forced to expend a considerable amount of goods as "Bandages." These two factors often deter a man from performing this dance. A Cannibal who has just been initiated as a hahaiat at once begins to bite, and is carried away to the upper regions. He is required, moreover, to give his ceremony the following winter, like any other novice. During the summer he generally remains hidden within his house, and when he goes 575* 796* 556 [431] [424]

[The Cannibal Dance]

The initiated, who have seen or heard of X's heroism, readily believe the fiction that he has returned for a meal, and has once more gone aloft. One informant stated most emphatically that this was his belief when a young man; he had been warned by his father of the seriousness of the ceremonial and told that if he should dare to speak or think disrespectfully of it, a tsaxiut would "grip him by the ankle causing the flesh to become rotten." During a Cannibal's absence the uninitiated remain in a state of terror, fearing that, on returning, he may chance to light beside them and devour them. In consequence, they seek refuge in their bedrooms, or at any rate in the immediate vicinity of their houses.

After an absence of thirty or forty days it is decided that X shall return at a certain time. During the night preceding, he washes and shaves his head to further the belief that he has been to a land where the great wind has blown away his hair as well as the dirt from his body. Several accomplices are sent out, to a mountain above the village, to a house in the valley below, and to an island in the vicinity. In the early dawn the man up the mountain drones and growls, usually four times, according to the arrangement made. The people listen expectantly. After a short pause, the man in the valley makes the same noise; no mortal could cover the distance between the two places in the time that has elapsed, but all things are possible to a Cannibal. A herald goes through the village, crying out:

"We are left behind, we are left behind."

The tsaxiut dash off upstream towards the place from which the sound is still coming, but as they draw near it is stilled, only to break forth presently from the island behind them. The herald goes through the village informing everybody that:

"He has gone away."

Presently X dashes out into a clearing on the island, naked and with arms reddened; he runs around madly while an accomplice in concealment uses a whistle. The tsaxiut pursue

[721]

[375]

[663]

[648]

[685]

[636]

[554]

[688]

[628]

[727]

[777]

[642]

[648]

[133]

[161]

sublime a chief who had given many proofs. Successful raids rarely slew such as one; his position placed him above the dangers to which lesser men were subject.

Raids appear never to have been carried out solely for the purpose of giving warriors opportunities to display their prowess, or of permitting young men to prove their mettle. Scarcity of food was the commonest cause for forays when, of course, the victims were chosen for their accumulated supplies. The Kwakiutl especially, lacking abundance of salmon, often attacked the Bella Coola. Even more dreaded were the Kitkatla, the most warlike people of the central coast, who used to sail for many miles to carry off slaves whom they sold or traded for other commodities. Trespassing, too, was a source of friction which often led to hostility. In such a case, the offenders were usually held up to ridicule or pelaboration, and the invasion gradually increased until wiped out in blood-shed. Members of a tribe which had suffered from a raid prompted by any of these motives would await a suitable opportunity for retaliation; this in turn would be avenged, and a vendetta often ensued lasting for generations. As already described, a ceremonial axe brought punishment from a neighbouring tribe; this was the only motive which caused fighting between different Bella Coola villages. In the last century there was a struggle of this kind between the people of Stuie and Mpätäiod in which the former were victorious and took many slaves who were later ransomed. When ill-luck had dogged a village or a group of villages for some time, the inhabitants sometimes endeavoured to wipe out their misfortunes by attacking another tribe.

The teeming salmon at Bella Coola, Kimsquit, and Tälio, made it unnecessary for the Bella Coola to wage aggressive war for which they were unfitted both on account of their unmilitary attitude and their lack of central authority. On the other hand, they were tempting victims for more belligerent neighbours. The narrow Bella Coola valley, however, far removed from the open sea, and densely populated, was difficult to attack.

as a warrior. Such a chief had no command over his followers. 721
If he were a man of great prestige, many would be willing to 701
serve under him, but he could not compel the services of any- 622
one except his own slaves. A few individuals often declined to 626 follow their fellows to war, although the force of public opinion 628 usually prevented a too individualistic course. Inhabitants of other towns used their own discretion whether or not to join the party. If some of their relations had been slain in the previous attack, revenge influenced them to share in the retaliation, otherwise only the prestige of a mighty chief could attract them. No case is known in which all the Bella Coola 642 villages joined in a single expedition; there were often tem- 628 porary alliances between neighbouring settlements, but complete lack of central organization. The course of events was similar when a chief wished to raid without the motive of avenging an attack. For example, if a Bella Coola had been 648 enslaved by a foreign tribe and slain by its owner, a brother of the victim might decide on revenge. The usual course was to kill a slave belonging to the murderer, though sometimes he had a raiding party if he could gain the necessary support.

Each warrior provided his own weapons, frequently the 726
same as those used for hunting. Bows with obsidian-tipped 411 arrows were most relied upon for offence, though slings were also used from canoes. Every man carried a spear, pointed like an arrow, for hand-to-hand fighting, although there was relatively little of this, most of the combats being fought at a distance with much noise, boasting, and expletives, but few casualties. Spears were, however, useful if the attackers succeeded in surprising a village at night. Hostilities are a thing of the past, consequently it was impossible to obtain detailed information respecting offensive weapons. Armour consisted 714
of maple or birch slats reinforced with moosehide and worn 726
around the body and chest; this rendered quick movement difficult but was effective against arrows. Muskets were intro- 411
duced many years ago and armour consequently became use- 177
less. Large shields of moosehide were carried in all canoes,

177 factors. Inherited beliefs are too deep-rooted to pass away 771 entirely within a few generations. Even those who claim to [181] have adopted the new faith remain convinced of the potency of magic, and of the existence of those supernatural creatures which do not actively conflict with the white man's creed. Such lack of consistency is a world-wide trait, particularly intelligible among the Bella Coola whose philosophy abounds in contradictions, dependent upon statements handed down in the origin myths of different families.

626 The Bella Coola are constrained not only by the omni-
[181] presence of supernatural beings; they are constantly subjected to the influence of their fellows. They are far less individualistic than white people. A chief may boast that he can do as [622] he pleases, that he can disregard the restrictions of lesser men; he often does so, but only because public opinion recognizes that he has reached a position of eminence by giving many potlatches. The duly validated warrior is brave because he
[703] feels that everyone is aware of his valour. The man who per-
[769] forms some ceremony in accordance with an ancestral myth incorporates himself with his forbears, and is strengthened by the conviction that he has gained their support and approbation. In every phase of life, a person is profoundly affected
177 by the approval or disapproval of his neighbours. At present
626 the construction of small houses, each occupied by a single
342 family, makes it possible for a man to hide himself, or to do work unknown to the rest of the community. This lessens the force of public opinion, although it is even now more potent than conscience in checking anti-social acts. Formerly, in communal houses, every action was fully known, making individual freedom of thought and act virtually impossible. A man
[602] is chiefly influenced by his relatives who take a great share in what the white man would consider purely family affairs. The effect of the group upon the individual must not be overlooked, nor can it be over-stressed in a study of these people.

177 The education and conversion of the younger men have 626 enormously lessened their reliance upon their fellows. In former times, older relatives were revered, not only as senior members of the ancestral family, but as those most familiar with myths and other cherished possessions. With the spread of new ideas, the young people no longer respect the love of their elders, and consequently do not heed their admonitions and advice. Theoretically, such self-reliance would seem desirable, but in practice it has led to unfortunate results. A young man, considering himself superior to the older people, glories in acting on his own initiative, but too often he lacks the requisite strength of character to guide his own life. If he wishes to drink, he does so; if he desires to marry, he chooses his mate without considering the transmission of ancestral rights which stabilized unions in former times; if he tires of his wife, he deserts her for another; if he cheats or steals, he is no longer restrained by relatives who fear disgrace. The elders, incapable of stemming the tide, watch sadly and ask seriously whether the coming of the white man has brought compensation for the loss it has caused. It is deplorable that the emancipation of the younger men and women has taken place before the development of the sense of individual responsibility and conscience which public opinion formerly rendered less necessary. Christianity provides a moral code for those who are fully converted, but for the many in the transition stage, the break-down of the old system of family influence has been tragic.
182
561

Profound religious beliefs and lack of individual initiative are shared by all Bella Coola with the exception, perhaps, of a few of the younger people who, having been educated at white man's schools, have adopted the new outlook unconditionally. In most characteristics they display as wide variability as any other people. In truthfulness, for example, they range from one extreme to the other. As the writer became familiar with the older men, he found it possible to recognize without difficulty the strength of some and the weakness of others. There are liars, but they can be easily detected owing to their lack of finesse. It is a pleasure to record the reliability of the author's friends and informants. Their veracity was checked repeat-

577 [illegible]ally until complete confidence was established, simplifying
[124] work in the field to an enormous extent. Equal trust could be placed on these men in other respects; articles of value were repeatedly left in their houses with the absolute certainty that they would be guarded with care. Some few individuals there were, however, who were neither honest nor trustworthy.
[777] Bella Coola religion is not concerned with ethics, but public 326 opinion demands honour in dealing with relatives or friends.
977 In former times, for example, debts incurred by an individual [42] were considered a liability by his relations. If a man died after [60] buying goods on credit for a potlatch, his family were disgraced [177] if they failed to pay his bills; now, unfortunately, nothing constrains the younger people, many of whom try to avoid settling even their own debts, much less those of dead relatives. Individual conscience has not replaced the tribal and, more specifically, family influence. Dishonesty in small matters is not [648] uncommon, particularly in dealing with white people who,
[177] according to the Bella Coola, were the first to transgress. The older people bitterly lament the lack of morality of the younger and state, probably with entire justification, that they would have been prevented by the open life which prevailed when several families shared a single house. On the whole, however, the average Bella Coola is probably no less honest than the average white man.

153 Individuals vary enormously in mental ability. In making 124 this investigation, it was necessary to interview all the older people of the tribe. Disregarding those unwilling to provide information, it was found that some absolutely lacked the ability to explain matters with which they were familiar; some did not have sufficient patience to be good teachers; some were so forgetful that they would omit necessary points in a story or account; some were downright stupid, whereas others displayed mental ability of no mean order. In reading ethnological literature, one is apt to think of the troubles experienced by the author, and to overlook the fact that natives have as

115 Schooner lacked the musical acumen of Joshua and Jim, but 117 he revealed himself as a tribal patriarch, proud of his family's [153] history and eager to assist his grandchildren and great-grandchildren, but feeling himself lost and helpless in the struggle before them. With sadness, but without bitterness, he used to speak of the approaching end of Bella Coola culture, and his words brought home the tragedy which the spread of civilization brings to so many, and the responsibility resting upon the white people as a whole.

153 Until an intelligence test is devised to correlate the mental 115 ability of the white man with that of the native, it is impossible to compare the two scientifically. None the less, the writer deliberately expresses the opinion that Joshua Moody and Jim Pollard are two of the most brilliant men he has met in any walk of life. They are undoubtedly the most able of the Bella Coola; others have only slightly less ability, while the mass of the population compares favourably with an average white community. Their ability, however, is def-
198 initely conditioned by their conservatism. Absolute trust in the traditions of their ancestors has checked speculation, as the established explanation is never questioned; new inventions, unauthorized by custom, have been regarded as almost sacri-
[624] legious; the force of public opinion, while valuable as a deterrent to anti-social practices, has effectively restrained innovations. The Bella Coola are a good example of a community where development has been atrophied by extreme conservatism fostered by religious beliefs.

105 Taking into account the material obstacles, the achievements of these people have not been insignificant. In former [322] times, provided only with tools of stone and untempered copper, they built graceful canoes, made watertight boxes, hewed planks from mighty cedars, and erected large houses which called for considerable engineering skill. Judged by [532] white standards, their carving and painting lacked artistic deli-[535] cacy, but it required no mean ability to portray crest designs to meet their own standards. Passing from the purely mechanical group. The moral code is not concerned with animals. The life of the Bella Coola would be unbearable to most white people, yet they find it far from unpleasant. They sigh at present conditions, but there is much to amuse them notwithstanding. If several people are talking together, one is sure to hear bursts of laughter every few minutes. It takes little to interest them; a story they have heard a hundred times, the troubles of a neighbour with his wife, the eccentricity of a white man, the stupidity of the investigator, any of these is enough to cause a hearty laugh. When collecting information, it was constantly necessary to joke with them; the most feeble attempt was enough, but they lost interest in the work unless kept smiling. Their sense of humour is not refined; jests about sexual matters are common and are enjoyed alike by men, women, and children. It is not that their tastes are perverted, but rather that they have no reticence in discussing this topic, so they find it easy to see the ludicrous aspects of a subject which is ever near the surface in their minds. They have no hesitation in poking fun at their friends; a successful practical joke, such as hiding the writer's tobacco, is enough to fill them with amusement. If the victim shows temporary resentment, the glee of his friends is complete, and shrieks of laughter usually terminate the trick.

Unless the white man who comes to live among the Bella Coola is unusually broad-minded, he is at first repelled by the dirt and untidiness prevailing everywhere; even the people themselves seem unnatural. He finds it difficult to realize the sincerity of their religious beliefs, and the manner in which these influence their daily lives is hard to grasp. The potlatch system appears so grotesque that it seems to reflect a psychology diametrically opposed to his own. The force of public opinion on personal conduct is almost incomprehensible. Gradually, however, he begins to understand the reasons underlying Bella Coola life. The potlatch becomes intelligible when regarded as a means of achieving fame; constant attention to supernatural beings is natural considering the firm conviction

2; McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

105 of their omnipresence; the guiding force of public opinion is 182 seen as a check on individual licence, fostered or inculcated by
[626] the ties which hold together ancestral families and make it impossible for a man to lead an isolated life where others will not be affected by his actions. If the white man is willing to receive new ideas, he will learn much from the comments of the Bella Coola on his own customs. Many have been to
[556] Victoria or Vancouver, and they feel that the contrasts of wealth observable in such big cities are atrocious; they ask [602] how this is compatible with Christianity. They feel that it is unnatural for a man not to receive support from his cousins of [356] all degrees; that the hoarding of wealth for the mere gratification of personal desires is selfish; that the selling of land is extraordinary; and that failure to ascribe every incident to supernatural causes is sacrilegious. These differences of viewpoint on so many matters explain the first impression of strangeness. A careful investigator comes to realize that he is among a people who fundamentally differ but slightly from his compatriots, though outwardly they have little in common. With respect to love, ambition, parental affection, sense of honour, pride, intelligence, even humour and vanity, the Bella Coola are essentially similar to ourselves. Unfortunately, these characteristics are expressed in ways unintelligible and often repellant to the casual traveller. If he will only look beneath the surface, he will find a people who are neither saints nor sinners, but essentially human, with the faults and follies as well as the elements of strength and wisdom which comprise, as Kipling puts it, "Men in a world of men."

177 The coming of the white civilization has been cataclysmic
[161] to the Bella Coola. Within two generations they have been reduced to a mere handful; instead of living in scattered vil-
[361] lages, roaming the mountains for game and fishing at will, they now dwell in a single settlement and the taking of animals and fish is subject to law; the introduction of metal tools and mechanical appliances has revolutionized their mode of life; new foods, new clothing, new furniture has altered their living conditions; fermented drink has presented a factor unknown

Smithsonian Ms-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

 192P

Sinaqoil: One of the first men to settle in the Dean River valley in the beginning of time.

Sinaxinaxi: 1—"Right Hand": Name of a Sisaw repository derived from a supernatural creature.
2—Kwakiut name of a Bella Coola woman.

sin'ucin: Intangible kwakiut prerogative of imitating eaglets. [424]

sinalqakuxu: Song sung by a kwakiutl dancer on recovery from apparent death. [861]

sinkim: Regular bearings given to a male child.

Sinlaxan, "Time for Gathering Fern Root": Fourth moon after the summer solstice. [805]

Sinlaxwim: Rain after snow, anthropomorphized. This presumably refers to rain that comes after violent thunder. [821]

Sinlaxmis di Xiut, "The Gathering of the Supernatural Beings": Fifth moon after the summer solstice. [805]

sinmil(ia): Term of opprobrium applied to one who will not allow his children to perform ceremonial dances. [626] sinmuk: Outright bestowal of a prerogative at marriage.

sinuta: Departure to a new locality. [425]

sisi, sucutiu, sisui: Father's brother or mother's brother.

sisui: Paddle. [601]

sisuitin: Dangerous power such as is present at various petrified places. [501]

Sitkuxu: One of the names of the supreme god.

Sitlinq': Ancestral name of a Bella Coola woman. [778] siut, sucutiu, sisui: 1—Any supernatural being, the significance being "Learned."

2—Supernatural power of any kind.
3—Synonym for qomoxu, the large nusuk whistle.
4—Killer whale. [825]
5—Song.
6—Kwakiut name of one of the first men to settle at Kimsquit in the beginning of time.

Siutaw-i: Part of a peculiar repository.

Siutuxtiu: Celebrated Bella Coola warrior.

siutuxtu: Wordless chorus. [533]

Siuxl-u, "Where Canoes Are Left": Village on the upper Kimsquit River.

Siwid: Celebrated Djoldzum: chief living in the last century.

sinlitum: 1—Expedition without definite objective, made by a dependent person. [828]
2—Individual making such a journey. [484]

Siyuxw-u: 1—Daughter of the supreme god.
2—Kwakiut name of a Bella Coola woman.

siuxtu-iuxuta: Place where healing power is petrified.

Siuxlufutum: Synonym for Mutlakila, the supernatural being connected with nusuk rites.

siwiumuq: Kwakiut dance or object used in the land above which serves as pattern or model, tuxuxu, for the user's protégé on earth.

siwuqkuxtunk: Actual goods used for the "Opening," the first public announcement of a forthcoming marriage. [584]

siwuxul: Unmarried mother. [848] siyuxtu: To perform the services of a herald to a master, especially the proper direction of all chiefly rites. The word siuxtu may be connected with this.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

226
lies in public opinion which expresses contempt for a lazy man 626
who is constantly begging.

To anyone familiar with the definite social groupings of a 614
tribe divided into clans or land-owning families, the ancestral family of the Bella Coola must appear as a vague and unreal unit, only distinguished by its intangibility. So it was found when investigating in the field. When information began to accumulate, it seemed as if there must be some definite obligations incumbent upon all members of the ancestral family, but none could be found. Without asking a direct question, the point was raised whether, if a man were killed, the members [629] of his ancestral family would unite to avenge him. Conversely, were they liable for the deeds of any member? In each case the reply was in the negative; these matters concern only the immediate family. In regulating marriage the ancestral family [582] is important, since it is wise for a man or woman to seek his mate within the members of that group, though it is not compulsory. Theoretically, the terms of kinship applied to members of the immediate family may be extended to members of [601] the ancestral family, but in practice this is rarely the case, [178] and, if so, is functionless. It might be argued that this somewhat wide application of kinship terms, verging on the classificatory usage, is a relic of an earlier, and now broken-down, clan system. It is impossible to prove or to deny such a contention. When trying to discover whether the members 614
of an ancestral family ever contributed to a potlatch whereby 622
one of their fellows established himself as a chief, the following 431
interesting comment was received. The previous winter the 171
informant had been in Bella Bella, and there the point was raised by a Bella Bella chief whom he quoted as follows:

"We laugh at you Bella Coola because each of you is always trying to be chief. Our system is much better; we all help our chiefs."

The man agreed with the Bella Bella man that there was an important difference between the practices of the two tribes.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

621 establish himself with the traditions of his new home. This is another illustration of the patrilineal tendency of the whole organization. [614] [553]

Politically, the village is the most important Bella Coola unit. Usually, though not always related to one another, the inhabitants are always friends. If an attack is made on a village by a hostile war-party, all the inhabitants suffer equally. On the other hand, if the residents decide to attack another settlement, there is no compulsion for anyone to share the burden. Each individual, with the exception of slaves, follows his own inclination. In the case of murder or other wrong inflicted by an individual, the responsibility rests on his immediate family, not the village. Factions within the village seem to have been unimportant; individual jealousies were common, and often led to murder, but if a family became unpopular or considered itself aggrieved, it usually moved to another village. Neighbouring settlements were generally on friendly terms and often assisted each other in war, but this was not compulsory. Indeed, cases are known in which a war-party from the outer coast, about to attack Sinxl, passed within a quarter of a mile of Xemqo-ti without its inhabitants even warning their threatened neighbours. [628] [628] [578] [627] [628]

As far as internal organization is concerned, the village is as fluid a unit as are most Bella Coola groupings. If one individual has attained a position of eminence through the potlatch system (vol. I, chap. IV), he is "chief" of the village, and his advice is generally followed. If several men have approximately the same importance, there is no dominating figure. In any case, a chief lacks executive authority, and such obedience as he receives is due to his personal influence. Some slight deference is paid to the man who uses the name of the eldest of the first group of settlers, the first chief, but this is not sufficient to warrant the title of "chief" with the significance usually attached to the term. The important members of the village are accustomed to meet for the discussion of ceremonial mat- 622 554 [536] 621 623 535 796

1)McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

as far as incest rules are concerned. In this particular instance 597
the woman did not show any interest in her new relatives, failed to visit them, or to take part in their ceremonies, so that the adoption, though still legal, has practically lapsed. When [428]
this man dies his children will not consider the claims of their father's "sister" to inherit any of his possessions, as they would have done if she had showed herself appreciative of her adoption.

It will thus be seen that the size and composition of the 592
family vary according to the wealth and influence of the father. The duties of the members are difficult to define since they concern almost entirely the routine of life. The father, head of the family, directs the gathering of firewood, repair of the house, obtaining of food supplies, and other matters of the same sort. If he gives a potlatch his children must help him, [431]
which they do willingly since they gain from the ceremony. If a father is too autocratic, his older, especially his married children, simply move away. Nor is his power over his younger [602] children unbounded, since their mother's relatives take great interest in their welfare and would resent any ill-treatment.

If a person is killed or wounded, revenge is the affair of his 593
family. Just how many individuals are involved depends on 627
the composition of the family. In the case of the killing of a 682
child, living with his parents alone, none but the father would feel it incumbent to retaliate. If an adult person is murdered, his or her brothers feel and avenge the insult. But should an important member of the community be slain, an old man surrounded by a numerous family, it is the affair of all. Every effort is made to slay the murderer, but if he should escape from the country, the injured group is satisfied by killing one of his family. Here again the same inexact composition is found. A man's son, brother, or father are the only persons strictly liable, and even here the common sense of the Bella [671] Coola outweighs their theoretical laws. A murderer's brother, living in another village, would not be held liable; but more distant relatives living with the offender and considered as his family are liable.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

593 family are liable. It is very rare for a woman to be killed in 627 a blood feud. A death is answered by a death; if two persons 682 should be slain for one murder the family which has suffered the double loss endeavours to kill another of their enemies. In [562] case of wounding, an effort is made to wound the offender, but [683] if he should be killed his family would try to avenge him. More often, one of the offender's family takes the initiative of offering goods to the injured family, "to cure the wound." If the offer is accepted, and the goods delivered properly, the matter is at an end. If a murder be committed within the ranks of the immediate family, for instance, if a brother kill a brother, revenge, if exacted, must be meted out to the actual [622] offender. If requested to do so, the leading chief of a village may offer his advice, but it is always considered that revenge concerns only the immediate family.

612 Revenge is a topic which shows clearly the essential fluidity
614 of the family. There are no well-defined degrees of relationship within which responsibility rests. Instead, everyone
[627] knows, in the open life of the community, how many persons
[682] share the family life of the individual, and they alone are held to account, or they alone demand compensation. From its very nature, the family must be a bilateral unit which, when powerful, stretches out to absorb members of the ancestral families of both mother and father.

Not only does the family thus appear constantly to be attracting to itself members of the ancestral family of either parent, but these relatives themselves are deeply interested in the affairs of the family. This is most clearly shown in the case of children who, of course, are members of the ancestral family of both their mother and father. A few days after 553 birth some relative is expected to call together the people of 612 the village where the child is born for the bestowal and validation of an ancestral name. It is considered an evidence of 614 poverty if this is done by the father, as if his child were only [558] supported by his parents, not by a larger circle of relatives. It is immaterial whether this gathering be called by a relative

McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

He is especially rich in caribou-skins, used for foot covering, and goat-skins, so treasured for their wool.[1] He and his wife have laid up abundant food, and, most important of all, his wife's family is wealthy. Rumours have spread that X will soon give a potlatch and perhaps one or more foreign chiefs has given him a large cone-shaped whistle, such as is used in nusk ritual (see Plate 12). These whistles, called qomo·ts, are often referred to as the "breath" or "voice" of a chief; they are also called sloptsta, the "heart" or "wind" of a chief; a third designation is nulwinuts. X carefully conceals a whistle in one of his boxes. Such a present expresses the kindly feeling existing between those akin to one another in that they have risen to a position of eminence above the common crowd. Its receipt spurs a man to greater efforts to amass the wealth necessary for giving a potlatch by keeping before his eyes the realization of what another has done. A rival chief never gives such a present. X returns each whistle secretly at the time of his potlatch.

Early in the autumn X decides that he has almost enough wealth. To complete the essential amount he will not hesitate to borrow from his friends. It is most unusual to be refused, for it is incumbent on X, unless he wishes to lose the esteem of the community, to repay his borrowings with heavy interest, and when X distributes his goods at his potlatch it will be announced how he has obtained them, and the lender is proclaimed as a person of sufficient wealth to be able to spare some of it. Goods so loaned are termed "belt goods," a reference to the manner in which a man fastens up his cape with a belt before setting to work. The assumption is that X will have to labour to repay his indebtedness. Failure to repay is a serious matter, and the lender would be justified in seizing a canoe or other valuable article as surety for his debt; in fact, feuds are commonly caused by unpaid debts. Men of business

[1] Formerly, when goat-skin blankets were highly valued, goats were never shot for fear of the blood staining the wool. Instead, they were cornered by dogs, and choked to death in nooses. For presentation, each skin was laid out on the floor and then cut into longitudinal strips, two, three, or four fingers wide.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

203 553 *556 614 [424] services. None the less, one of their prized prerogatives, the visible embodiment of an element in their ancestral myth, is no longer present. In such circumstances, no member of an ancestral family would give a potlatch unless able to revive at it the dormant name in a new herald. The intending donor usually consults with the senior members of the ancestral family as to a suitable incumbent, or especially if he is an influential chief, he may simply use his own discretion. In either case, some relatively young member of the ancestral family is offered the post. If he accepts, the matter is settled; if not, another is invited in his stead. The new herald cannot function until his name and appointment have been validated by the distribution of presents at the potlatch. Such gifts are not returnable, since they are held to "have become nothing" for the name. Relatively lavish expenditure for this purpose is one of the many ways in which a chief is able to show his prowess and generosity. Thus established, a herald can carry out his duties thenceforth. He functions at every ceremonial, but especially at potlatches given by members of his own ancestral family, in whose origin myth his own name is embodied. From [627] [796] constant participation in all kinds of ceremonials, a herald becomes conversant with every type, and is appealed to as arbiter in difficult points of ritual, thus adding to his reputation.

203 *556 Although acceptance of the post of herald somewhat curtails a man's activities in other respects, instances are known of energetic ones using the gifts received to establish themselves as chiefs, passing on their herald names at the same time to other incumbents. More often, a herald uses his wealth for the benefit of a son or other relative, being satisfied with his own status in the community. He takes a prominent part in every ceremony and is a person of some standing, yet is spared the responsibility of actually giving rites himself, a position which offers many attractions to a man lacking great ambition and initiative.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

pended, so that it serves as a visible and tangible memorandum of the chief-like generosity of its owner. By means of these media, debts are passed from one individual to another without actual liquidation in goods; in fact, it is unlikely that the Bella Coola possess sufficient money to meet the sums represented by their coppers. 556* [435] [426]

Professional Prerogatives

The importance of prerogatives in the lives of the Bella Coola has already been noted in many connections. A man's name is his only because his ancestral family has the prerogative of using that designation; a kusiut dance can be performed only by an individual with the necessary prerogative; specific totem-pole designs, the portrayal of bird or animal on spoons, seats, house-posts, and other objects is a right dependent upon an ancestral prerogative; as is also the area on which a man can hunt or fish. The concept colours all Bella Coola life. Not only is a man's ceremonial life based on this principle, but on it depend his actions as chief, and the economic sources of his food-supply. No prerogative, even though it be the property of a man, is effective until validated by the distribution of presents. Much of a man's energy throughout life is expended on the validation and display of his prerogatives; most Bella Coola feuds are caused by the infringement of one individual on another's rights. 424 556* [532] [796] [431] [627] [578]

In addition to the various types already mentioned, there are a number of professional prerogatives on which depend a man's vocation. That of herald approximates this class, although the Bella Coola consider it rather as a right operative only during ceremonials. Professional prerogatives rest on the belief that a man's ability as a hunter, wood-worker, and so forth does not rest in his innate skill, but upon an inherited right which must be confirmed and validated by the distribution of presents. These can be given at any convenient time when the people have been called together, but, as it is to the man's advantage to have his right made known as widely 424 463 556* provided with means of sustenance, a house, and certain supernatural powers. The right to the names of these people, as well as to the type of ceremonial objects used by them, has been the privilege of their descendants. But these early Bella Coola, like their modern descendants, had several designations, each carrying with it a definite prerogative. In a single myth there may be embodied a dozen or more names and incidents which are quoted at the present day to authorize such different phases of culture as dances, rights to hunting-grounds, professions, names of dogs, or kusiut prerogatives.[1] Any myth which gives the initial use of a name, a dance, or any other prerogative, is termed a smaiusta. Each of these is, or was in the old days, remembered with great care and never recounted in full detail except to the members of the ancestral family whose names are embodied in it. Even at potlatches the full details of the myth are not laid bare. Indeed, if a young man is of a flighty, garrulous disposition, unlikely to preserve the dignity of his ancestral fame, the details are concealed from him. Even at the present time there is much resentment at any unauthorized use of a smaiusta, and in the old days this would inevitably have led to bloodshed.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Boas (p. 116) states that the terms smaiusta and sumsma are synonymous. The writer feels certain that this is an error. It was discussed repeatedly with various Bella Coola, all of whom agreed that a sumsma is a mere story which can be told by anyone, whereas a smaiusta is a myth possessed by the individual, or individuals, whose prerogatives are derived from it. To the Bella Coola the two are utterly different.

None the less, there is no doubt that records of the past change from one category to the other. A wealthy chief, eager to give a potlatch, but lacking the mythical authorization, must frequently have used a sumsma, claiming the hero as an ancestor. There would be veiled amusement at him for doing so, but the prestige of one who can give potlatches is so great that in time his claim would probably be accepted. The two

[1] The details of these will be described later.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

584 preliminary agreement may have been made while they were only seven or eight years old, though marriage seldom occurs before the age of seventeen or eighteen. More often the agreement is made when X and Y have passed the age of puberty, and they wait for about two years before marrying.

583 Throughout this period, X's relatives are expected to give at 425 least one feast at which Y's relatives are the guests of honour, 553 and always receive presents. At one of these rites X's father, with the concurrence of his relatives, may mark his approval
[584] of the coming event by bestowing on Y's father, or one of her other relations, an ancestral name from his family myth. This does not become the absolute property of Y's family, since the myth in which it is embodied does not belong to them, unless, of course, they are members of the same ancestral family. It is fitting that a name of this kind be bestowed by the recipient on one of Y's children, or returned to X's family a few generations later by a return marriage. If this is not done, in course of time the designation is apt to be regarded by Y's family as their own. If there are no children, Y's relatives should give back the name to X's [627] family, but there are many instances of feuds caused by failure to do so. According to mythology, prerogatives may some-
[773] times be given outright, without thought of their use by the resultant children, or of their being restored by return marriages. It is claimed that the people of the Kimsquit River
[648] have, through such a present, the inalienable title to use a certain spot in the Kitlobe River for their olachen nets, and likewise the Kitlobe people have an irrevocable right to the Kimsquit name Siálhmy. These two prerogatives were transferred at the beginning of time. At present, anyone bestowing outright his family prerogatives would be considered weak-
[578] minded and the other members of the ancestral family would strenuously object. Considerations of this sort make it desirable to seek a wife within the ranks of the ancestral family.

During the period of engagement, Y's family may present a name, or names, to X's father, with the same conditions as those just described.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
N56 Bellacoola NE6

old man came back to Bella Coola with his son, a man about twenty-five years of age. During his absence all his relatives had died, and he was forgotten. He went to the house of a man with whom his ancestors had intermarried generations ago, explained who he was, and was welcomed. The old man and his son have since lived there, although it is doubtful if the owner of the house had ever heard of their existence, and the son cannot even speak the Bella Coola language. 602 476

X and Y themselves are not entirely overlooked in the exchange of presents between their two families. If Y's father is well pleased with his son-in-law he may show this not only publicly, which redounds to his own credit, but by the communication of secret lore such as a special number of nights for ceremonial chastity. Conversely, if Y should not be a kusiut, her father-in-law often asks her father's permission to make her a member of that society. The woman's father is naturally pleased and makes no objections; so she is initiated, using a name and prerogative embodied in her husband's family. Commonly too, they give her one of their ancestral names at any convenient ceremony later than the wedding. In conformity with the rules already explained, if Y should die childless the names return to X's relatives, but if there are children they pass to them. It is said that sisaok names can never be transferred in this manner. 606 431 425 [785] [575] [553] [575]

Y's father and other relatives continue to take an interest in her ceremonial welfare and in her personal comfort. If X beats or otherwise abuses her, they expostulate; and if his cruelty becomes unbearable they shelter their daughter when she runs away from her husband. If X should murder Y, she would be revenged by her family. Only one instance of this was known, when the murderer avoided his pursuers by fleeing from the country. As a rule a wife is fairly well treated, though this depends on the character of the husband, the importance of her relatives, and the amount of goods expended to validate the marriage. Among slaves and persons of no influence, it is assumed that a husband may sell his wife as a 593 [602] [627] [567] [432] [648]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

567 ceremony usually consisted simply of the man and woman 588 living together. In theory, this prevented the children from ever obtaining a name or other prerogative embodied in the ancestral myth of the free-born parent, and an effort was always made to conceal from them the details of the ancestral family's origin myth. But, as already described in the section dealing with slaves, the expenditure of valuable presents served to eradicate, or at least to cover, the blot. If the child succeeded in giving many potlatches, the stain was generally forgotten. On the other hand, if the child of a slave married to a free man was not "washed," he could always be shamed by a reminder of the disgrace of his parents' wedding.

682 In case of murder, the son or other near relative of the [583] victim sometimes accepts a daughter or other member of the offender's family instead of exacting blood revenge. The bride [627] is delivered to her husband with valuable goods "to wash away the blood," but these never suffice entirely to remove the disgrace from her or her children. The latter may inherit names and prerogatives from their father, but even if they attain to the position of chiefs, they can always be put to shame by reference to their mother's marriage as an atonement for murder. Of course the influence of a great chief makes it impolitic to refer to his ancestry, and there are a few instances of men having reached such a position of eminence that the blot [554] has been practically forgotten. The wife's family must continue to give presents to the husband for years after marriage, otherwise her lot is unenviable indeed, and her children have the status of the unwashed offspring of a slave and a free-man. In some cases a marriage of this type is entered upon years after a murder, if a son or other descendant wishes to end the anxiety of constantly expecting blood revenge.

REPURCHASE OF THE WIFE

556 Repurchase of a wife is the necessary consequence of every 583 reputable Bella Coola marriage. It is assumed that the pre-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

not yet been repurchased in 1924 and the Bella Coola were beginning to look askance at her. It is doubtful whether the child realized that she was married, certainly the fact had not the slightest effect on her behaviour. Unless the wife is rebought, any names which she took to her husband at her fictitious marriage remain his property.

Ceremonial marriages are sometimes carried out for special reasons. If the husband at a real marriage feels that he is over-indebted to his wife's relatives through the names and prerogatives they have brought him, he sometimes arranges to restore some of these and thus even the transaction by ceremonially marrying one of his young female relatives to one of his wife's family. She takes back some of the acquired names to her fictitious husband and the matter is amicably arranged. Realizing the difficulties experienced by the father of many daughters, one of his sons-in-law may, if his father-in-law has many times rebought his daughter and so demonstrated his nobility, try to arrange a fictitious marriage between the old man and one of his son-in-law's relatives. It often happens that the proud old chief will decline such assistance, confident in his own ability and prestige. Revenge is often settled by a fictitious marriage, arranged in the same manner and with the same attached stigma as that already described. Sometimes the infant is ceremonially married to the son of a chief, instead of to the chief himself, though no true wedlock follows.

It is not even necessary to have a small girl to act as bride. If a man wishes to ally himself by marriage to a famous chief and lacks a daughter, he can perform the marriage rite with a "bride" consisting of his finger, leg, hand, or other part of the body. In a case in 1915 the "wife" was a favourite dog, which was duly married to a chief. In fact, ceremonial marriage is merely one of the many methods used by the Bella Coola to enter into financial dealings with an influential chief; it provides an honourable means of displaying the wealth of the bride's family; it increases the prestige of a girl and her relatives, or the prestige of her relatives alone if "she" is an inani-

CHAPTER III

WARFARE[1]

General Observations — Specific Accounts

General Observations

721 PRIOR to the establishment of British rule, there was con-
648 siderable warfare among the coastal tribes of British Columbia. Long-continued struggles leading to the extermination of one or other of the participants were unknown, but there were constant raids, counter-raids, forays, and attacks. These were never as continuous as on the Plains, where martial achievements were regarded more highly than on the coast, but it appears probable that at least several villages of the Bella Coola were embroiled every few years. Nevertheless,
[796] war was secondary in importance to ceremonial rites. During the winter, peace reigned and members of hostile tribes were [556] even received as guests at some dances. At potlatches they might be subjected to insult, later to be avenged in the same manner or by active hostility, but seldom was actual violence offered either to envoys or guests. The symbol of peace and 726 friendliness was eagle down; the occupants of a canoe who 825 bore an invitation to a potlatch, or who were guests them-778 selves, used to blow this substance up into the air whenever [486] another craft approached, and it was incumbent on the latter [578] to veer over to the other side of the channel. Eagle down was considered to be so sacred that when two men were quarrelling [627] a chief could stop them by blowing some of it over their heads.
721 In winter, hostilities were prevented by ceremonies, and in summer the people were usually busy laying in supplies of food; consequently, it was only in the late spring that fighting was [575] at all common. Even then the dictates of ceremonial life were [622] not entirely forgotten; no kusiut novice went to war and

[1]Warfare having long been discontinued, the past tense is used throughout this chapter.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE

174 reliable traditions of Carrier settlements there. The probable explanation is that the Bella Coola formerly extended over the area, either in actual fact or according to mythology, but were supplanted by the Carriers.

175 The Dean River is called Nulsl, and the generic name for the people of the Dean valley is Sutshmx. About eighty years [101] ago a smallpox epidemic so reduced the villages on the Kims- [164] quit that the survivors abandoned them and moved to the [731] Dean. At that time a certain Kimsquit man is believed to have said: "We will take their places and kill even their dogs."

Since that time, the joint settlement has suffered one [164] epidemic after another, until a mere handful of the people [731] survive, and they are almost entirely descended from the Kimsquit River immigrants. Within the last few years, these have requested permission from the Bella Coola to abandon Kimsquit entirely and live among them. The two groups have [628] always been on the best of terms, but the Bella Coola have not forgotten the fate of the Dean River people and have been unwilling to admit the Kimsquit survivors.

Villages on the Kimsquit River, Sä-tsk'

361 *(44) Sä-tsk': this large and important town, at the mouth of the river, was deserted at the time of the smallpox epidemic.

*(45) Nuxwlst: this settlement can be grouped with the last-mentioned, although situated on the shore of Dean Channel, at the site of the present Manitou Cannery, six miles away. No meaning of the name is known.

Tribal Organization

619 The subject of this monograph is the people of the above forty-five villages. They will be referred to as a tribe, and as this term is customarily limited to a political unit, a brief justification for its use is necessary.

342 Each Bella Coola village consisted of a single row of houses, 361 built along the shore of a river or the ocean. The front doors

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

opened out on to a wooden platform, which served as sidewalk and extended from one end of the settlement to the other. The outer side of this structure was always supported on piles; in fact, in many cases, the houses as well as the whole sidewalk were thus raised from the ground. This type of construction was necessitated by the sloping sites of the villages, but had the added advantage of being a protection against attack. The villages differed in size from insignificant settlements of three to four houses, to ones with twenty or thirty, each containing several families. The ease with which the red cedar could be split and worked into large planks made possible the construction of these large, rectangular houses which, with their horizontally laid walls and sloping roofs, presented a picture of stability and relative comfort superior to that of most Indian habitations. 342 361

Each village was practically an independent political unit. Neighbouring settlements had many common interests which threw them into contact with one another, but there was no organized cohesion between the towns of the Bella Coola valley, or between those of Täl·io and Kimsquit. There was still less to draw these three groups together. There was no supreme chief and no governmental meeting of the tribe as a whole. Not only were the three divisions not bound to support one another in war, they were often at loggerheads among themselves. Indeed, bloodshed between towns of the Bella Coola valley itself was not uncommon. Moreover, each group tended to merge with its neighbours. The Täl·io people frequently married with the Rivers Inlet and the Bella Bella; the Kimsquit with the ɪstāmɩ[11] of Dean Channel and the Kitlobe of Gardner Canal; and the Bella Coola of the upper valley with the Carriers. 631 628 563 648

In spite of these inconsistencies, the application of the word tribe is justifiable for the following reasons: 619

A. Linguistic. All spoke the same language. There were dialectical differences among the people of Bella Coola, Täl·io, and Kimsquit, but each group could understand the [197]

[11]To avoid unnecessary symbols, capital ɪ has not been used.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

ferent units with which he is connected, but the following is 611
an instance of survival for several generations. Qwai·lils is an 614 orphan about ten years of age, now living in Bella Coola; he is looked upon with considerable respect as being a member of ancestral families in Bella Coola, Kimsquit, Smith Inlet, Kitkatla, and Kitlobe. His pedigree, given below, explains his powers. The symbol = marks a marriage, and the male is shown on the left in each case.

Theoretically, Qwai·lils is as much a native of Smith Inlet as he is of Bella Coola where his father made his home. If he should visit Smith Inlet and make known his pedigree, he would be received by the members of the ancestral family of his great-great-grandmother.[4] His welcome would be more assured if he were the owner of a name from their origin myth. Difficulties of communication and frequent wars made it [628] virtually impossible in the old days to keep in touch with relatives in distant tribes, except in the case of a mighty chief who was able to invite visitors from great distances to feasts. Thus names taken by women to foreign husbands were virtu- 614 ally lost to the members of her ancestral family. In the course of a few generations, such designations carried afield 553
would be revived as if dormant by some member of the family, 178
and all recollection of the foreign marriage forgotten.

[4]As the Bella Coola are now living in a single village, it was impossible to obtain a modern instance of the ownership by one individual of rights in a number of localities within the tribal area. It appears certain, however, that the sentiments expressed with regard to Qwai·lils at Smith Inlet are identical with those formerly held for possessions in ancestral families located in different Bella Coola villages. [628]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

names are also willed, but since their value depends on the 578
goods expended to validate them, there is seldom bitterness 614
about their allotment. Indeed, a chief who is the legal owner of a designation which came from above in the beginning of 553
time, will in many cases choose to elevate his position with [428] respect to a title of comparatively recent date. But if any person who is not a member of the ancestral family should [685]
dare to use an ancestral name, all the members rise to avenge [178]
the theft, for such they feel it to be. In recent years, however, this practice has become comparatively common. In such cases a man, eager to share in the glories of a myth and able to give a potlatch, has validated an ancestral name to which he has no right. The presence of the white man alone
restrains the injured ancestral family. Names are sometimes [426]
lent or hired to those who are not members of the group for [427] definite sums; the recipient recompenses the individual. If such names are not returned for several generations quarrels
are apt to arise since the recipient claims to be the real owner and not the temporary possessor. During his tenancy of the name he is entitled to any prerogative attached to it, but he is not considered a bona fide member of the ancestral family.

Instances have occurred in which an old man or woman, [428]
believing himself to be the last survivor of an ancestral family, has donated his names and myth to those who have befriended him, or these have been taken by those who buried him. Some [557] individuals are constantly watching to conduct the funerals of friendless old people in the hope of so obtaining names. But in almost every case this leads to friction, since it is virtually impossible for an ancestral family to die out. Perhaps in the next generation, perhaps in the following one, some youth will claim descent from the first ancestors of the supposedly defunct family, and claim the myth and names embodied therein. This [628] leads to a feud with the person, or his descendants, who has received the names through aid given to the "last" of the family.

Such instances of an ancestral family becoming practically 614
621

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

establish himself with the traditions of his new home. This is another illustration of the patrilineal tendency of the whole organization. 621 [614] [553]

Politically, the village is the most important Bella Coola unit. Usually, though not always related to one another, the inhabitants are always friends. If an attack is made on a village by a hostile war-party, all the inhabitants suffer equally. On the other hand, if the residents decide to attack another settlement, there is no compulsion for anyone to share the burden. Each individual, with the exception of slaves, follows his own inclination. In the case of murder or other wrong inflicted by an individual, the responsibility rests on his immediate family, not the village. Factions within the village seem to have been unimportant; individual jealousies were common, and often led to murder, but if a family became unpopular or considered itself aggrieved, it usually moved to another village. Neighbouring settlements were generally on friendly terms and often assisted each other in war, but this was not compulsory. Indeed, cases are known in which a war-party from the outer coast, about to attack Sinxl, passed within a quarter of a mile of Qomqo-ts without its inhabitants even warning their threatened neighbours. [628] [682] [578] [627] [628]

As far as internal organization is concerned, the village is as fluid a unit as are most Bella Coola groupings. If one individual has attained a position of eminence through the potlatch system (vol. I, chap. IV), he is "chief" of the village, and his advice is generally followed. If several men have approximately the same importance, there is no dominating figure. In any case, a chief lacks executive authority, and such obedience as he receives is due to his personal influence. Some slight deference is paid to the man who uses the name of the eldest of the first group of settlers, the first chief, but this is not sufficient to warrant the title of "chief" with the significance usually attached to the term. The important members of the village are accustomed to meet for the discussion of ceremonial mat- 622 554 [536] 621 623 535 796

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

given as a slave to a Bella Coola, he was treated as a guest.[11] 567
Slaves were bartered between Bella Coola individuals as a [437] matter of course. Their value depended on sex, ability, and [435] industriousness, as well as on supply and demand. When there was an over-supply, the value of a slave fell to twenty or thirty [437] salmon, but whenever an owner found that someone wished to purchase a particular slave he endeavoured to raise the price.
If a foreigner borrowed goods in Bella Coola he usually had to [426] leave a relative as pledge. Thus, not many years ago, a Xaxais
Indian, from near Ootsa Lake, borrowed goods from a Kimsquit man and left his son as pledge. The goods were not returned, so the son was sold as a slave to the people of Kitimat.

It was not uncommon for a Bella Coola to lose his freedom 525 by gambling. At lɛ̂hɛ̂l especially, a player who had exhausted 567 his goods not infrequently wagered his children, or in extreme cases, himself. If he lost, his children, or himself, became the property of the winner. Unless speedily repurchased by some relative, such slaves were usually sold or given away at the first opportunity to a member of a foreign tribe, since it was considered improper for a man to hold a member of his own 567 tribe in servitude. The same course of action was taken on [628]
those rare occasions when one Bella Coola village fought [727] against its neighbour and prisoners were taken.

To the Bella Coola, who still consider a man's "power" in [554]
the land as dependent to a considerable extent on his ancestral myth, a slave's greatest misfortune lay in the fact that he had [773]
no ancestral home, and hence no rights.

"No slaves came to earth with the first people," they say.

A slave was a stranger in a strange land, unsupported by a chain of ancestors reaching back to the beginning of time. On the whole, captives taken in war were better treated than other [727] slaves since it was felt that such a misfortune might occur to anyone at any time. They were frequently ransomed by their

[11] This is said to be an ancient practice, due to the fact that several of the forefathers of the Bella Coola came to earth in that region and were on friendly terms with the inhabitants. It is conceivable that this tradition may have reference to the breaking away of the Bella Coola from the main Salish stock. [773]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

names to their dog, and had distributed presents to validate the bestowal. Consequently, the animal is a chief (see Plate 11)[1] and can do as he likes. When it dies it will be mourned as a chief. Moreover, a number of people have returned the presents which they received at the time the dog was made a chief, and this money is kept by the woman and her husband, to be used when they perform the rite of mourning for the dog at death. 231 552 622 766

When this is possible, in the present degenerate days, it is not difficult to understand how, formerly, a great chief felt himself above the restraints that hindered lesser men. The last great Bella Coola chief was Potlas, who died between 1870 and 1880. His influence and power were so great that he was a virtual ruler, daring anything. If he requested a young man to take his food box home and the youth was slow to obey, Potlas had no hesitation in killing him on the spot. Such great power, though unusual, is intelligible to the Bella Coola, since Potlas gave far more potlatches than any of his contemporaries. Other chiefs have been known to attempt a similar arbitrary use of power, but have failed, since their prestige was not great enough to justify it. The fame of a mighty chief spreads up and down the coast, and protects him and the members of his family from being ambushed and slain in any sporadic foray. During an actual fight, however, a chief had to take his chances with the rest, but the comparative immunity was a great advantage. 556* 622 [156] [628] [726]

The Bella Coola recognize the fundamental differences between their own concepts about chieftainship and those of other coastal tribes with whom they come in contact. This point was mentioned in the course of conversation by several men. The most powerful chief known to them was Tsakse, who, they say, was virtual monarch of the Kitkatla. None of his subjects could go hunting without his permission, and he had rights to a certain share of their booty. At any ceremony presents had first to be given to him, and if he were slighted in this respect, he would kill the offender. It is be- 171 556* 622 829

[1] [See cut. 116, P 186 (c) - ANALYST]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

as a man by the duly validated ownership of a chief's name in her own right. Formerly a slave was never allowed to eat seal, unless he had been the slayer. If many seals are killed, chiefs from adjacent villages are sometimes invited. The chiefs seat themselves according to their proper positions and are first served with the blood-stained grease that floats to the top of the water as the meat is boiling. When cooked, the meat is cut into strips, measured in terms of so many finger breadths, according to the number of guests. The cuts run down each fore-flipper, so that each receives a narrow strip including one of the toes. The head is always given to the herald.[1]

Wealthy chiefs frequently invite their fellows to ordinary meals even when no seal or deer has been killed. On these occasions, as at seal feasts, the guests are designated by their ancestral names, not by those in general use.

Chiefs are also accustomed to meet for the discussion of matters connected with the winter ceremonial; on such occasions their number may be augmented by men of influence in the secret society, though they do not rank as chiefs. Such a meeting is always called when a new member is to be initiated into the kusiut society. If there is difference of opinion the influence of even a numitl chief is outweighed by a man of importance in the society. The matter is discussed by all present and a decision reached by general agreement. It is difficult for a white man to understand how such is possible without either a vote, or general recognition by all that the views of some individual must be accepted. The writer was present at one such meeting, and was struck by the manner in which, after considerable, and at times heated, discussion, a consensus of opinion was reached, and accepted even by those who had proposed a contrary course.

Near every village is a place where the chiefs hold such meetings. All the inhabitants know the general locality, but

[1] Every effort was made to ensure the accuracy of this account, but errors may have crept in on account of the length of time which has elapsed since the ceremony was carried out in full detail.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

553
* 556 A man may receive so many prerogatives with regard to house
425 painting that he has to continue the designs on the sides of his
[606] dwelling, or he may receive so many figures for a totem-pole [532] that he can erect one of composite pattern. X may acquire prerogatives not only from his father-in-law, but from his mother-in-law, and if he is the husband of several wives, the family of each may contribute something. If, for some inexplicable reason, X is not given any prerogative from the family of his wife, he uses one of his own ancestral myths with the names belonging thereto. A man who gives many potlatches can choose to validate numerous family names for himself, or to concentrate on one alone, elevating it to a position of great importance. But any names he validates must belong to his [685] family; it is contrary to custom for a Bella Coola to steal a name to which he has no right.

*556 At this, or some other suitable time, X prays for assistance 782 in the complicated rites that are to follow. Taking four pieces of pounded and dyed cedar-bark, and four pieces of undyed bark, he places on each a small quantity of food and throws the eight into the fire. Likewise he may throw in four small pieces of any kind of goods. As he does so he appeals to the supreme god:

"Please strengthen my spirit for the many duties which are before me."

Instead of praying himself, X may ask a shaman to do so [756] for him, in the belief that the latter's supplication will be more efficacious.

* 556 The necessity for supernatural assistance lies in the fact 688 that any serious error or disaster in the performance of potlatch rites calls for summary punishment, since X has allowed cere-
● 628 monial susask knowledge to reach the uninitiated. In such a case the duty of meting out a penalty falls upon the members of a foreign tribe. Nothing is said at the time, but the departing guests take away with them information of what has happened. Great latitude is allowed as to who shall be the chastisers. The guests may be related to X and the members

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NEó Bellacoola NEó

of his village, hence they will not feel it incumbent upon them to intervene. But news travels, and in course of time the susaok members of some other tribe will decide to send a raiding party against X's village. All informants agreed most emphatically that this custom prevailed among the coast people from the Tsimshian country to Alert Bay, but specific examples could not be obtained. The Bella Coola regard such a raid as the proper course to pursue, and belligerent tribes may have used an irregularity in the potlatch rites as an excuse for an assault. It is clear, however, that this custom never attained such prominence that it could be called a law. 556* 688 628

The following is an instance of the Bella Coola outlook on the question: 556* 688

The father of an informant had had such success in giving potlatches that his neighbours were jealous. On one occasion he prepared a representation of a whale, an elaborate wooden frame, fifteen feet long, operated by men concealed within and carrying passengers; this was a figure which entered into his ancestral myth. One of the carpenters who made it, bribed by a jealous rival of the donor of the potlatch, arranged that the lower jaw of the whale should fall to the floor during the proceedings. This revealed the mechanism of the structure. White influence on the coast prevented an incursion of foreign raiders, but according to this informant, the chiefs determined that his father should die, and they employed a sorcerer for this purpose. His father and eleven other relatives died soon afterwards. This man, the sole survivor, ascribes his escape to his adoption of Christianity. [578] [532] [578] [177] [754]

Another instance of the penalty which follows errors in potlatch ritual occurred a few years ago, when a number of young men used the cone-shaped whistles openly, as if they had been toys. The presence of the white man prevented any open steps towards punishment, but before long all the youths died. No one knows what caused their deaths, though probably they were due to an expert in black magic acting on the instructions of a senior susok. [534] [177] [754]

After the prayer, X and his family give more food to their guests, whose boxes containing what they are to carry away are increasing in number. By his lavishness, X increases his prestige in the eyes of his fellow-villagers. 556*

If he can afford to build a new house embodying the form [335]

1; McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

go to the homes of their friends in the village; it is a matter of convenience, not of ritual. 556* [574]

In the evening, there may be no rite of any kind, but X often invites everyone to his house for the performance of non-ceremonial dances. The singers strike up one of his sisaok or a'alk (I, p. 273) tunes and he dances to it. Then a tune belonging to one of his relatives is beaten out, and he too dances. After several have thus performed, a meal is served and all disperse. No supernatural beings are in attendance, hence there is no solemnity to the occasion; the evening's rites merely serve to show the guests the dances owned by their host and his family. 535 556*

As each party of guests arrives the same procedure is repeated. X provides food for those who have assembled from day to day, so he anxiously awaits the last-comers. When at last they come the guests from all other towns are in their allotted sections of X's house, and are free to make gibes at the tardiness of those latest in appearing. Occasionally, hard feelings are engendered in this way, although it is an established custom to mock at the last to arrive. They seat themselves and a small amount of food is given them. 556* 574 [628]

RITUAL CARRIED OUT BY THE GUESTS

Two youths, chosen by X for the purpose, sprinkle eagle down over the heads of all those present, as far as possible blowing it first over the chiefs. It serves as a token of good-will, and marks also the ceremonial nature of the occasion. Then a leading sisaok, perhaps a siki, stands up and says in effect: 556* [788] [237] [575]

"Thank you for coming. You are welcome. We thank you for coming to witness what X has done. He is delighted to have you here, because he has lost many of his relatives and wishes to perpetuate their memory. They would be grieved if he did not do so."

An elaborate meal is now served by a number of young men. [264]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*556 [575] (11) Dismissal of the supernatural power possessed by the nusok initiates, thereby enabling them to return to normal life in the community.

*556 578 171 All day, food is being distributed in X's house with guests in almost constant attendance. Not only are large presents of food made to any chief who has previously shown generosity to X, but he also takes this opportunity to bestow insults on anyone from whom he has received the same. Among the Bella Bella and people of Rivers Inlet guests were frequently ridiculed with respect to their habitual diet or mode of life. Unquestionably, the Bella Coola sometimes did likewise, both at potlatches and at kusiut rites to which strangers were invited. Although it is dangerous to dogmatize on this point, because the practice has long since fallen into disuse, it appears highly probable that mockeries were less prevalent in Bella Coola than at other places on the coast.

*556 558 628 It is comparatively common, however, for a chief to shame a guest by a lavish disregard for valuables. News is constantly passing from town to town, so that the intended victim usually hears what is in store for him. A guest always takes valuable goods with him when he goes to a potlatch, but one who expects to be insulted takes care to have an unusually large supply. The host seats this particular visitor close to the fire, and during the afternoon or early evening he throws large quantities of grease and food upon it, to demonstrate "the warmth" and "fineness" of his house. The guest experiences physical discomfort from the extreme heat, and suffers mental pangs at having a rival boast of his power and fame. To assert his own importance he will throw goods on the fire, as if they were water to extinguish it, and the host will counter by throwing on more valuables. The contest is continued until the goods of the guest are exhausted, or the host fears to burn more lest he should not have enough left to validate the potlatch. He who has destroyed most is considered to have shown his superiority. [578] The Bella Coola state that such rivalry was unknown between chiefs of the same village.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The following is an account of a feud which took place about 1870: 556* 558 628

The people of Sinxi had gone to a potlatch at Tāl·io with a plentiful supply of goods, expecting to be insulted in revenge for a slight cast upon their host when visiting Sinxi. They were allotted places close to the fire, upon which the donor cast a large quantity of olachen grease until the intense heat almost roasted his guests. Not one of them moved; to have done so would have meant an admission that they were being made uncomfortable by their host's demonstration of wealth by this waste of valuable food. Presently, Sinxālotla, the leading chief of the visitors, stood up and called for "water" to douse the flames, meaning goods of equal or greater value, to indicate that he was as wealthy as his host and as little afraid of destroying valuables. His companions threw on the fire boxes filled with skins, but Sinxālotla desired still further to demonstrate his prowess. Hastily, he asked some of the other Bella Coola present to lend him a sea canoe (of the large type called Haidāl), promising to repay with two of the same kind. The Bella Coola agreed and the craft was carried in, the bearers showing their disregard for the host by breaking his door as they did so. The canoe was thrown on the fire and the flames mounted. Sinxālotla called upon his Tāl·io rival to douse that fire. The latter was afraid to do so, being aware that he had barely enough goods to pay his debts at the coming distribution. Accordingly, he tacitly acknowledged the superiority of Sinxālotla, who thus rose in public esteem. [501]

It is very difficult to discover just how often such destruction of goods took place. The Bella Coola realize that the prevalence of this practice among the Kwakiutl led to the potlatch being forbidden by law, and are reticent on the subject. Reliable informants agree that it was a fairly common custom in the early days, although it never went to the extremes prevailing at Fort Rupert and Alert Bay, where, too, was common the breaking of coppers in anger, an act unknown in Bella Coola. In other respects, also, the potlatch among the Bella Coola appears to be less important and less complicated in ritual than among the Kwakiutl, so it is highly probable that the above statement is correct. 556* 558 171

Another method of shaming a guest is to serve him, or any member of his party, so clumsily or gracelessly with food that it is spattered over him. In some cases this happens acci- 558 556*

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

CHAPTER V

FEATURES ASSOCIATED WITH THE POTLATCH

Heralds—Totem-Poles—Coppers—Professional Prerogatives—A'alk Dances—Miscellaneous Ceremonies

128 *556 THE ritual of the potlatch is so complicated that, in order to present a coherent account of it, it has been necessary to omit entirely some features that occur at many potlatches, and to refer briefly to others. This chapter is devoted to an elaboration of these points, thus avoiding the use of lengthy foot-notes in the preceding chapter.

HERALDS

203 *556 The principal functions of heralds[1] have already been described. They go from house to house inviting the people to assemble for the different ceremonies connected with the potlatch, but that is only one of their many duties. They likewise bear invitations to all types of ceremonies, such as marriages, mourning rites, or kusiut dances; in fact, they act as town criers. A person holding any public rite requests one or more heralds to deliver the invitation which is repeated in every house of the village in order from bottom to top.[2]

There are variations, of course, according to the rites to be performed. At a potlatch, the first duty of a herald is to seat [574] the guests in their proper places. This requires not only a good •628 memory, but also considerable tact, since errors with foreign [578] guests cause friction and embarrassment, and diminish the prestige of the whole ceremony. During the actual progress of the rites, a herald must constantly add dignity to the occa-

[1]Herald, *alk*ʷ, plural, *mɛalk*ʷ*als*, not to be confused with a'alk, the name of a society (1, p. 273).

[2]This order may once have had a ceremonial significance but it has been considered for a long time merely a matter of convenience. When giving presents also, a man follows the same order in his mind and names first the occupants of the bottom house, thus minimizing the danger of overlooking a guest.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

766 575 but even if unaware of the fact, they realize that some supernatural, invisible visitor has arrived.

[776] Heralds go from house to house, and sometimes to adjacent [203] villages as well,[2] inviting the people to pay a farewell visit to [628] the dead man who will soon leave them; in this invitation the susaok name of the deceased is used. The guests assemble at once, irrespective of their rank or membership in the susaok society. To mark their grief, female relatives pull out tufts of their hair, and both men and women of the immediate family [302] cut their hair short. The body, either in its coffin or covered with blankets, is placed between the central fire and the back-room, immediately behind the place where the singers take their stations. When all are present, a son or other near rela- [537] tive who is also a fluent speaker, stands up and expounds how the Chief, meaning Mulakila, has come to visit the dead man, 533 and how all should try to understand the song he has brought.[3] 575 A hidden susaok has been blowing a whistle intermittently, and 766 the singers pretend to be able to understand words of a song in its notes. In reality they have prepared in advance the new one which they now beat out, accompanied by their voices. The theme either describes the coming of the supernatural visitor, or recounts the number of potlatches given by the deceased, and the manner in which these will make smooth the path whither he is going in the same way that distributed goods validate a chief's seat in this world. This song is practised and improved upon amid the booming of the whistle as if the singers were constantly gaining new ideas and embellishments from the words of the supernatural visitor. Sometimes a few incidents are added from the susaok myth. After several repetitions, a relative of the dead man asks the singers to beat out the latter's susaok songs, as many of them as are remembered from the time he was first initiated into the so-

[2]The Bella Bella are said to invite foreign guests to this ceremony.

[3]Sometimes the people are present when the coming of Mulakila, heralded by [184] whistling and a thump on the roof, takes place. There are variations in this, as in all other susaok rites.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

525 were about to die. During the day he spent much of his time aimlessly
* 539 making miniature wooden darts and circles of pliant-wood, such as are
* 787 used in a game, and idly tossing these around. One day when he was so engaged he heard someone come to the door, and looking up he saw a strange man.

"A wina[1] is coming to Djusdju·sa," said the stranger.

"Come in," replied Djusdju·sa.

The stranger was a supernatural being, though whether Djusdju·sa was at once aware of this is doubtful.

"What do you bet?" asked the stranger, assuming that they would play with the darts and hoops which Djusdju·sa held in his hands.

"Alas, I have nothing," said the miserable man, though all his gambling instincts were aroused. "All I own in the world is a dried salmon fin which I use to chew on; I can barely keep alive with that and clams."

"Come on," said the supernatural stranger; "I will wager this pair of decorated moccasins against your salmon fin."

They gambled and Djusdju·sa won.

The loser handed over the moccasins, saying, "Go down to the beach and put just the toes of these shoes into the ocean."

Then he disappeared.

Djusdju·sa placed the toes in the water, and instantly the sea was filled with small herring-like fish called ḵmän·i. Djusdju·sa caught and devoured as many of these as he wanted, but he did not clean himself, nor did he tell his brothers of his good fortune on their return.

Next day the supernatural stranger again appeared, offering to wager another pair of shoes against one of the hoops which Djusdju·sa had made. Once more the lad was victorious, receiving a pair of moccasins which, when dipped in the sea, brought countless spring salmon. The following day he won a pair which attracted the sockeye salmon, and on successive days ones to bring other species of salmon, until he was able to attract every kind. Finally, during his brothers' absence one day, Djusdju·sa, throwing off his disguise of lethargy, filled the house with all kinds of salmon. Great was the surprise of the hunters on their return; they asked him if he had become endowed with supernatural power, and he replied that he had. In exchange for being taught to gamble with crab-apple sticks, the supernatural one had so cleaned Djusdju·sa's eyes that he could see where the king-stick[2] was concealed; hence he would be able to win on all occasions.

[192] [628]

[1] Wina, the term used for a raiding-party, is also applied to a contest in any game of skill, especially one in which teams or individuals from different villages take part.

[2] This is a marked stick and the players guess in whose hand it is concealed.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 688 Frequently the marshals and associated kukusiut depute others to act as their executioners. Sometimes a shaman who is also a kusiut is asked to slay the offender, or a kusiut in whose ancestral family a knowledge of means for secret murder has been handed down for generations may be called upon. The executioner is told that if he fails he will himself be killed. Although no Bella Coola would admit that a person so charged had committed murder by other than magical means, it appears highly probable that such was the case. It is believed that long ago the kukusiut were able to kill an offending uninitiated person by drawing forth his spirit, wrapping it in undyed cedar-bark and casting it into the fire. The victim would die within a short time. [761] [754]

*575 203 628 The desire to carry out kusiut ceremonials with proper dignity and ritual not only acts as a strong bond of union among members of the society in a single village, but between those in different towns and even in different tribes. When a marshal has struck a kusiut, the ceremony, whatever it may be, is at once stopped. Two kukusiut are sent off to bear the tidings to the nearest village up the valley, and two more to the one below. The messengers go beneath the house in which a dance is taking place and knock on the floor of the back-room. Someone presently hears them and a kusiut goes out to investigate. When the envoys have told their tale he returns, whispers to the singers, and the ceremony concludes for that night. As soon as the uninitiated, if any are present, have been ejected, the messengers enter with blankets almost covering their faces and seat themselves between the fire and the back-room where the senior members crowd around to listen. From this village two more kukusiut are despatched with the news which is thus transmitted with remarkable speed from end to end of the valley. When next the marshals are admonishing the kukusiut of their respective villages, they do not fail to draw attention to the way in which the law has been upheld. Conversely, if a marshal hears indirectly that there has been a flaw in the ritual of a neighbouring village,

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

he beats in the fire with his stick, and expresses the hope that the name of the marshal in the town where the error took place may be blackened unless he does better. 575* 628 203

As an individual kusiut who errs is punished by a marshal, so is punishment meted out to the members of a village in which any serious accident occurs during a dance. Such disasters are fire, causing concealed kukusiut to appear among the uninitiated, the breaking of a sidewalk on which a number of the members are dancing, or the capsizing of lashed canoes which are used in some of the performances. The obvious effect of such mishaps is to lower the prestige of the kusiut society in the eyes of the uninitiated. The news travels from town to town, and to adjacent tribes. This is a casus belli for any village which wishes to attack the one where the disaster took place; in fact, a raid is considered meritorious. Owing to frequent marriages between the members of neighbouring villages, it usually happens that the inhabitants of adjacent settlements are unwilling to attack, but the news spreads until it reaches a town willing to take the lead. The marshals, aided by any other influential kukusiut, discuss the matter and decide on war; uninitiated are called upon to take part, though they are told only that the foray is connected with the rites of the kusiut society which increases rather than decreases their awe. The threatened villagers, knowing that an attack is inevitable, send out sentinels and guards, and, if possible, flee at the last moment to neighbouring towns for safety, allowing the raiders to burn their village and carry off loot. If a fight takes place many people may be killed, but slaves are never taken. In the last century Stuux attacked Ałqäläxl; the assailants were aided by a number of Chilkotin to whom they were related but who had not the slightest idea of the cause of the raid. Although an attacked town is usually helped by its neighbours, this is not the case when the assault is caused by error in kusiut or susaok ceremonial.

575* 628 688 721 [727] [567]

Nor is punishment for error or disaster in ritual meted out [648]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 only by members of the same tribe. The Bella Coola firmly 648 believe that if, for example, there is a serious disaster at 688 Qomqo·ts, that village will be raided by the people of Bella
721 Bella, Fort Rupert, Kitkatla, or by tribes even farther away.
[628] News of the accident reaches Täl·io or Kimsquit and the inhabitants, themselves related by blood to the offenders and therefore unwilling to punish them, call upon the members of a foreign tribe to do so. On different occasions this statement, in practically identical terms, was made by six independent informants, so there appears to be not the slightest doubt as to the belief of the people in this law. But when specific cases were asked for, they could not be obtained. It therefore appears clear that the Bella Coola, probably owing to long teaching on the part of the kukusiut, consider that an error in ritual is sufficient to bring punishment from an alien tribe. There must be some basis of truth in this conviction, and it is highly probable that the kukusiut must have taken advantage of raids to explain to the uninitiated that these were caused by disasters in ritual. One informant was of the opinion that, following the collapse of a house at Kimsquit during a Cannibal dance, a Bella Coola chief called upon Tcubisa, chief of the Kitkatla, who raided Kimsquit in punishment. Quite apart from the belief inculcated in the uninitiated, it is obvious that tribes eager for war sometimes used an accident as pretext. The Bella Coola know of no case in which they raided a foreign tribe for this reason, although they state that if they had been called upon to act as punisher, they could not have refused.

*575 Leaving now the functions of the society as a whole, the 424 rights of an individual member can next be described. Each 425 kusiut has:
553

(1) A Kusiut Name. Like every other prerogative, a name of this type can be acquired from father, uncle, grandfather, or other relative, or even by a son from his mother. As a rule a kusiut wills his designation or designations, for a man may [556] have several, before death and his wishes are observed. Al-

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

perform several ancient rites through a desire to "show off" before someone who was ignorant. In recent years there has been a tendency to concentrate on kusiut ceremonials, and to judge a man's worth by his lavishness in them, but this is only a modern development due to the prohibition of the potlatch. Nevertheless, even in former times some individuals preferred to invite foreign guests to kusiut dances and to give them valuable gifts rather than to save these for potlatches; such a ceremony is called a kukusiutek. Whenever strangers are present at a kusiut dance they receive small pieces of dyed cedar-bark as proof of the friendly intentions of the host. The general consensus of Bella Coola opinion is that it is foolish for a man to concentrate on kusiut performances, particularly if he impoverish himself to the detriment of potlatches.

Although foreign guests are seldom invited to kusiut rites, a dancer frequently calls in his fellows from adjacent villages. But as the ceremonial season is simultaneous in the different settlements, with almost nightly performances, it is often impossible to avoid conflict in dates. Which invitation shall have preference is decided in the following manner:

During the days of qotlum and nebusam the dancer sends a herald of powerful physique to invite guests from as many villages as he wishes. Simultaneously, a messenger may be approaching from the opposite direction with a similar invitation. Each envoy watches carefully around each bend in the path for his rival, and whichever can first call out his message is entitled to continue to give his invitation in the village of the outwitted herald. It is considered exceedingly bad taste to decline a summons, so the ceremony to which the defeated herald was bearing an invitation must be postponed. Sometimes the two messengers sight one another simultaneously, and the relative priority of their messages is then decided by a contest of strength. The rivals stand in the path, shoulder to shoulder, arms close to their sides, and shove with all their strength, the winner being the one who can force his opponent to move his feet. This last means of deciding is used exclu-

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Dance of the Tally Posts]

for the dance to start, and X suddenly cries out that he is feeling peculiar. The night selected is usually that of the nebusam of some other kusiut, and X is at once escorted to his own house from which the uninitiated are expelled. For that night and the two following he remains concealed within, leaving only when necessary and taking care that no uninitiated see him. During the afternoon following the third night of concealment, a large number of kukusiut gather in X's home and escort him to the lowest house of the village. He goes around the fire shaking a rattle violently and calling out: 575* 796*

"More! More! Please say exactly what you want and I will do it."

The uninitiated have been told that X has been unable to comprehend the impending call, hence they have no difficulty in realizing that this is a request to his supernatural patron to be more explicit.[89] This appeal is repeated in every house of the village in order from bottom to top. The rite is so important that X often summons kukusiut from neighbouring towns and, on the occasion described, the dancer proceeded to Sinxl with his escort and there entered every dwelling with the same request that he had made in his own village. [628]

In the evening X returns to his home where presently the kukusiut gather from the villages that he visited. The uninitiated from adjacent houses hear whistling so are not surprised when heralds enter to announce that a call has come to X. The ritual is of the regular lsuxtämem pattern and a song is composed and practised; the theme is of X's ability to visit the land above but the type is that of a shaman's song. The ritual concludes in the usual manner. [533]

The next day, nusiutälsap, the customary raised enclosure is erected and a number of kukusiut gather wood in the forest. In the evening the carpenters are requested to make a long ladder, the only paraphernalia required. The evening's ritual ends as usual. [417]

[89] The patron for this dance could not be learnt.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

seldom a chief who had given many potlatches. Successful raiders rarely slew such an one; his position placed him above the dangers to which lesser men were subject. 721 575 622

Raids appear never to have been carried out solely for the purpose of giving warriors opportunities to display their prowess, or of permitting young men to prove their mettle. Scarcity of food was the commonest cause for forays when, of course, the victims were chosen for their accumulated supplies. The Kwakiutl especially, lacking abundance of salmon, often attacked the Bella Coola. Even more dreaded were the Kitkatla, the most warlike people of the central coast, who used to raid for many miles to carry off slaves whom they sold or traded for other commodities. Trespassing, too, was a source of friction which often led to hostility. In such a case, the offenders were usually held up to ridicule at potlatches, and the irritation gradually increased until wiped out in bloodshed. Members of a tribe which had suffered from a raid prompted by any of these motives would await a suitable opportunity for retaliation; this in turn would be avenged, and a vendetta often ensued lasting for generations. As already described, a ceremonial error brought punishment from a neighbouring tribe; this was the only motive which caused fighting between different Bella Coola villages. In the last century there was a struggle of this kind between the people of Stuxʷ and Äłqäläxł in which the former were victorious and took many slaves who were later ransomed. When ill-luck had dogged a village or a group of villages for some time, the inhabitants sometimes endeavoured to wipe out their misfortunes by attacking another tribe. 648 685 626 556 688 628 727 777

The teeming salmon at Bella Coola, Kimsquit, and Täl·io, made it unnecessary for the Bella Coola to wage aggressive war for which they were unfitted both on account of their unmilitary attitude and their lack of central authority. On the other hand, they were tempting victims for more belligerent neighbours. The narrow Bella Coola valley, however, far removed from the open sea, and densely populated, was difficult to attack. 642 648 133 161

721 to attack. It is said that the Fort Rupert people once raided
648 it, but their hair became entangled in the thorns growing near the tide-flats and they were easily slain while struggling to free themselves. Two warriors escaped and hid in the branches
[727] of a huge spruce tree. They used to slip down at night and steal food, thus supporting themselves for several weeks, but
[628] were at last discovered and enslaved. On such occasions the villages of the lower and central valley usually rallied to the help of Q̓omqo·ts, the most exposed one, although there was no mechanism to enforce such assistance. The inhabitants of [776] this town attributed their protection to Älquntäm, and used to claim that he had decreed that they should be immune
[361] owing to their close association with him. Though Bella Coola itself was comparatively free from molestation, Kimsquit and [162] Täl·io, with smaller populations and less strategic positions, were subject to frequent attacks. At least one of the villages at
712 the head of South Bentinck Arm was defended with a stockade of cedar trunks, set upright in a double row and entered by a water-gate with a drop-door.[1] This water-gate protected the
[648] residents on many occasions, and it is remembered that one
[726] Fort Rupert raiding-party was annihilated while endeavouring to batter down the door with a huge ram. The defenders, armed with muskets, picked off the attackers as they struggled in the open.

721 All the older men were emphatic in stating that most of their raids were in revenge for such attacks. Although such statements were partisan, they were confirmed in every way
[642] and were probably tolerably correct. Lack of a strong govern-
[623] ment was a serious handicap to the Bella Coola. After being assailed, the members of the town would discuss retaliation, and if unanimity of opinion was reached, that course was de-[622] cided upon. Public opinion alone selected the leader, usually [701] a man who had given a number of potlatches, especially one whose position had been made stronger by previous validation

[1] It is said that such stockades surrounded other villages, but definite information on this point was unavailable.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

as a warrior. Such a chief had no command over his followers. 721
If he were a man of great prestige, many would be willing to 701
serve under him, but he could not compel the services of any- 622
one except his own slaves. A few individuals often declined to [626]
follow their fellows to war, although the force of public opinion [628]
usually prevented a too individualistic course. Inhabitants of other towns used their own discretion whether or not to join the party. If some of their relatives had been slain in the previous attack, revenge influenced them to share in the retaliation, otherwise only the prestige of a mighty chief could attract them. No case is known in which all the Bella Coola [642]
villages joined in a single expedition; there were often tem- [628]
porary alliances between neighbouring settlements, but complete lack of central organization. The course of events was similar when a chief wished to raid without the motive of avenging an attack. For example, if a Bella Coola had been [648] enslaved by a foreign tribe and slain by his owner, a brother of the victim might decide on revenge. The usual course was to kill a slave belonging to the murderers, though sometimes he led a raiding party if he could gain the necessary support.

Each warrior provided his own weapons, frequently the 726
same as those used for hunting. Bows with obsidian-tipped 411 arrows were most relied upon for offence, though slings were also used from canoes. Every man carried a spear, pointed like an arrow, for hand-to-hand fighting, although there was relatively little of this, most of the combats being fought at a distance with much noise, boasting, and expletives, but few casualties. Spears were, however, useful if the attackers succeeded in surprising a village at night. Hostilities are a thing of the past, consequently it was impossible to obtain detailed information respecting offensive weapons. Armour consisted 714
of maple or birch slats reinforced with moosehide and worn 726
around the body and chest; this rendered quick movement [411] difficult but was effective against arrows. Muskets were introduced many years ago and armour consequently became use- [177] less. Large shields of moosehide were carried in all canoes,

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

CHAPTER IV

GAMES

517 121 [177] THE subject of games, lying on the border-line of social customs, was one which was not fully investigated. The Bella Coola, like all other peoples, have a number of sports and pastimes and although the old diversions are being forgotten by the younger people, many of the old men and women are familiar with those played in their youth. As isolated customs these may be of small value, but games of all kinds often preserve ancient practices and, as providing useful clues to the spread of peoples or of culture, are worthy of investigation. Unfortunately, lack of time made it impossible to give the subject the attention it deserved, and the few games here described must not be considered an exhaustive treatment of the subject.

526 [171] [628] Though less fond of competitive sports than the Indians of the Plains, the Bella Coola enjoy canoe-racing and wrestling. The former appears to have been an ancient diversion; picked crews from different villages competed amid the encouraging shouts of their fellows, and even now the younger men are anxious to display their skill in this respect. Wrestling, which [177] used to be common during all non-sacred gatherings, has almost entirely disappeared since the prohibition of the potlatch.

538 [517] The favourite sedentary pastime, enjoyed equally by young and old, is the telling of stories. Those of a sacred nature, especially ancestral myths, are reserved of course for ceremonial occasions, but the older men and women remember [825] many tales describing the exploits of birds and animals which are recounted again and again to the enjoyment of the listeners, although they may have heard the same recital fifty times. Children enjoy the companionship of some old story-teller and it is a common sight to see an old man or woman, surrounded by an eager group, explaining once more how Raven outwitted his rivals or was himself led into difficulties. Many of these [867] stories are somewhat indecent; others appear brutally frank, in former times. Sklsa might almost be called the Bella Coola national game, although it is now (1923) seldom played. 526 [172]

A game with somewhat similar rules is sqwlaiăk, played with small wooden spears tipped with bone. When a number of men or boys decide to play, they choose two captains who in turn select their teams; any number can take part, provided that the sides are equal, but five each is usual. There is a special name for each player according to his position, and he bets against the corresponding member of the other team. A mark is set up, and one of the captains throws his spear, so that it will stick upright in the ground as near the target as possible. The rival leader endeavours to beat this, and if he fails, his second man throws, and each in succession until one comes closer to the goal than the rival captain. Then the latter's number two tries to beat the last thrower, followed by those on his own side until one succeeds or till all have thrown. The game thus ends when all of one side have thrown unsuccessfully. The winning side is, of course, the one to which belongs the player whose throw is nearest the target. Each member of the losing team pays his wager to his adversary and a second round is begun. 526 525

The sport is now rarely indulged in, but in former times games used to continue all day, and valuables were lost in the gambling which was considered to be a necessary part of it. Men used to observe ceremonial chastity to increase their chances of success and the expert was regarded with admiration by younger lads. The crack team of a village often used to visit other towns to compete against their representatives, and the games were contested amid frenzied excitement on the part of the supporters. This occasionally led to serious fighting. [785] [554] [628] [578]

Another sport of a similar type is archery; a mark is set up and each competitor tries to lodge his arrow as close to it as possible. This game has now entirely lost favour, the young men preferring a type of football played without strict attention to rules, but with great energy. 526

Bella Coola children, too, have their games and recreations, many of them of an imitative nature. Little boys enjoy nothing 857

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

become entangled in the loop when drawn back by the cord attached to the butt. A tug-of-war now takes place, those of each party who have caught the ring endeavouring to pull it to their side of the water. At last one or other is successful, and brings ashore the prize, with the dangling spears of their adversaries. Sometimes a lad with a fine weapon determines to retain possession of it at all costs and is dragged through the pool to the amusement of all. 526

TOURNAMENTS

It is doubtful whether the subject of tournaments should be considered as belonging to mythology, warfare, or games, since it has aspects pertaining to each. Several of the older men affirmed that prior to the introduction of muskets, it was not uncommon for rival villages to stage fights according to definite rules, after full intimation of the attack had been given. This usually followed a period when angry comments had been made, but when the provocation was not sufficient for war. In such a case, the challenging town would notify its rival that on such a date an expedition consisting of, for example, twenty canoes would attack them with stones. Such an announcement could not be disregarded; the inhabitants of the two settlements prepared for action and wagered the large number of valuables essential to all such competitions. 526 628 726 [525]

Many years ago, the Kimsquit people challenged the ıstämx to a tournament of this kind. It was first necessary to choose the contestants. Twenty of the strongest men were selected, each to stand in the bow of a canoe and hold a moose-skin to shield the paddlers behind. To test their endurance, each took his place and the canoes were paddled towards the shore while all the other inhabitants, lined up on the beach, showered stones on them. On this first test, six of the twenty fell beneath the avalanche of projectiles and were accordingly considered too feeble. Their places were taken by six others who were tested the same way the following day, and the same procedure was repeated until the twenty strongest men in all Kimsquit had been found. A certain Sinuxetl was chosen as

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

526 captain. Meanwhile the stáms people had been carrying out similar tests, so that the picked men of both settlements were 628 ready on the appointed day.
726 A canoe was sent forward to give final notice of the approaching flotilla so that the twenty canoes from each settlement came together, fully manned and armed. First ten canoes on each side came to blows, the captain of each craft singling out a hostile one and dealing with it alone. The crews threw stones over and around their own bow-man, trying to beat down the moose-skin held up by their rival, or sometimes endeavouring to throw missiles high up into the air on to the heads of their foes. Whenever a bow-man was knocked down, his crew was defenceless and subject to serious injury if they continued the fight. If, however, they abandoned the conflict, the winners made no effort to punish them further, nor did they join in an attack on any other canoe; that each craft had one adversary only was the rule in all tournaments. In this instance, the Kimsquit people were victorious, no less than eighteen of their canoes defeating the craft opposed to them. Sinuqutl returned home in triumph, singing his war-song, and was received with as much enthusiasm as if he had led a successful raid. Indeed the casualties, consisting chiefly of broken heads, were sometimes almost as serious as on a foray, but no revenge was ever claimed in case of death so caused. Instead of throwing stones by hand, it was sometimes agreed that they were to be cast by slings which made the tournament more dangerous. The warriors never left their canoes, so that hand-to-hand fighting was impossible.

It is probable that tournaments of this nature took place many years ago, although none of the men now living had ever participated in one, and many had never heard of this type of competition. Until relatively recent years, however, heavy moose-skins were held up as protections in the bows of canoes, and men were selected for the task of being pelted with stones in the manner just described.

000 One other type of game, string figures, was studied rather extensively. These are described in Appendix B.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

 192*

Sxyamuxtx: Supernatural children guarded by the hermaphrodite in the land above.
Sxwul: Name taken by a Sisaa man in the beginning of time.
sxtuxymuit: Place in stream or river where a salmon has just jumped.
sxwumit'a: Name created upon earth.
sxwuptuit: Door.
sxwut: Water-tight receptacle made from the internal organs of a mountain goat.
Sxwukmyuxw, "What Sweeps Away the Food": First moon after the winter solstice.
sxwumuls, "Tears": Preliminary presents given to guests at a memorial potlatch.
sxw'ikumkiix, "Short-lived": Rhetorical term used with reference to the death of a young chief.
sxyaxwi: An adolescent girl, not yet subject to the full taboos of womanhood.

[825] [415] [805] [431] [195]

T

ináxix: Cave.
lai: 1—Son, in direct address. As a courtesy title this is often used for lads unrelated to the speaker.
2—Masculine suffix.
Taiskwak: 1—One of the first men to settle at Schooner Pass in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Snaile'ut in the beginning of time.
taitsumuuk: Desertion of husband by his wife.
taiu: Dorsal fin of a fish.
taiuiuq: Heavy kind of copper.
taiumuu: Tournament between rival villages.
Tal'ax: 1—Village at head of South Bentinck Arm.
2—Generic name applied to all villages on South Bentinck Arm.
Talukw'a: Nuxalk name embodied in a Snaili origin myth.
Tamtmuk-pain, "The Breather": One of Titcqilite'a's names and hence a designation given to shamans.
Tamukuu: Sisaa man mentioned in an ancient story.
tapamuuxum: The issuing abroad of invitations to a memorial potlatch.
tapix: Forest consisting of dense underbrush between big trees.
taqul: Blood-stained cedar-bark pad.
ta'a: 1—Bird arrow.
2—Weapon, invisible to mortals, with which a wolf kills its prey.
Taxi, vocative, Taxu: 1—Designation of supreme god used in prayer.
2—Father, term used by child.
lakkanip: Water-lily.
Ta-qa-ai: Land inhabited by the Kwakiutl.
Tashuuum: Leading chief of Sisaitsut and reputed founder of the village.
Taqakwum: Bella Coola chief living in the last century.
takuu: Type of sea-going canoe with bow and stern identical.
tamkuuk'a: 1—White-fronted goose.
2—Type of sea-going canoe named from the bird.
tamu: Husband (di tamuuxulai: My husband).
tamuul: River.
Tamuuxulai: Chief who came to Cape Mudge in the beginning of time and later moved to Bella Coola.

[601] [586] [825] [628] [101] [824] [601] [824] [825] [601]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

 192*

Wa·as: Xnais woman living in the beginning of time.
wals: Dog. [825]
warmats: Dog, archaic.
wa·xsia: Cape of yellow cedar-bark. [291]
waxmastsia: Brother or sister of grandparent.
Wiahai: One of the first women to settle at Swalill in the beginning of time. [601]
Wiaqoli: 1—One of the first men to settle at Tăl·ie in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Stsux in the beginning of time.
Wikwas-ăwula: Synonym for Kwala: Influential Kwakiutl woman captured in the beginning of time by a Nuxalkt chief.
Wikwasuat: Kimsquit hunter mentioned in an ancient story.
wina, waratse, winao: War-party.
Winăs: Slave living at Nuxalkt several generations ago.
winăs di qulu, "War-Party of the Ocean," or winăs di sa·ilăje·ts, "War-Party of the Tides": Supernatural being.
Wiswina: Supernatural being who captured birds and fish for the benefit of mankind.
Wiswinawak: Supernatural being, perhaps identified with one of the warm winds. [628] winato: Assistance rendered by the inhabitants of a town to a neighbouring settlement being attacked. [726] Wiqitqawakts: Bella Bella chief living in the beginning of time.
Wiumbilak: Smoan's daughter-in-law in the beginning of time.
Wi'ttlao: Ancestral name of a Kimsquit man.
Wiuklts: Sisaak name of a Kimsquit man.
Wiwat: Man who travelled to the Skeena River in the beginning of time.
Wiwas: One of the first men to settle at Schooner Pass in the beginning of time.
wi·a: Kasiat dance in which the nine supernatural siblings are summoned to earth.
Wily: One of the first women to settle at Schooner Pass in the beginning of time.
Wilu: One of Raven's female Crow relatives.
wly: Cripple.

X

Xaiqalat: Ancestral name of a Tăl·ie man.
Xaiqu: Stream entering the Bella Coola from the north near Nuliaz. [821]
Xai·ut: Continuous North Wind, anthropomorphized.
xak'lai·: Cry raised as each of the first spring salmon is brought ashore. [226]
Xalatya: Stop-daughter of Raven in the beginning of time.
xaqtsis: Great blue heron.
Xat: Designation of a tribe, probably a branch of the Carriers, dwelling far to the south-east of the Bella Coola. [825]
xawf: Canada goose.
xal·a: Root of qaymăx, an unidentified plant.
Xebalas: Kasiat name of a Bella Coola Cannibal.
Xebustaw·a: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Xelimak: Kasiat name of a Bella Coola woman.
xem: The successive rising of the sun from day to day. This word, which is common in derivatives, appears usually to be pronounced yem after s. [821]
Xemesa: 1—One of the nine supernatural siblings.
2—One of the first men to settle on the Dean River in the beginning of time.
3—One of the first men to settle at Swalali in the beginning of time.

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

128 from Snuləli. My informant's grandchildren regard them-
173 selves as Snuləli boys, and their names are embodied in myths
361 of that village, although their forbears have not lived there
166 for five generations. There is no reason to suppose this case exceptional. Other instances were obtained of movements of people from one village to another at earlier times, and there seems no cause to doubt the general accuracy of these. Names [554] embodied in the origin myths of different towns are used as prerogatives and have been potent factors in keeping their memory alive. Uncertainties and inaccuracies there must be in the foregoing list, but on the whole it appears to be fairly reliable, since few contradictions were received from different informants.

128 Accounts obtained of the same ceremonies from the descen-
184 dants of people of different villages were found in most cases to be identical. There were a few differences in custom between [796] the people of Stuix and those of the other upper valley towns on the one hand, and the inhabitants of the lower valley on [101] the other. These will be mentioned when necessary, but on the whole the inhabitants of the Bella Coola valley can be considered as a tribal entity.

114 Boas (p. 48) gives a list of Bella Coola towns which agrees 361 fairly well with the above. Among his villages are included Pe·ɔlə (no. 4), Nukɣ.ɣtskwən·e (no. 7), and Nusälsum (no. 16).[13] All the older people agreed that these are the names of streams, though settlements located on them may have been known by the same designations. Names of the five villages recorded by Boas, nos. 6, 8, 9, 19, and 24, were not known by several old men questioned on the subject.

101 The villages of the Bella Coola valley did not form a political 619 unit; each was independent. A common language was spoken throughout and the inhabitants of the different towns recog-
[631] nized that their origins and customs were similar. This was [197] also recognized to be the case with regard to the people living on South Bentinck Arm, and at the head of Dean Channel.

[13] Using in each case the spelling of this monograph.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

opened out on to a wooden platform, which served as sidewalk 342
and extended from one end of the settlement to the other. 361
The outer side of this structure was always supported on piles; in fact, in many cases, the houses as well as the whole sidewalk were thus raised from the ground. This type of construction was necessitated by the sloping sites of the villages, but had the added advantage of being a protection against attack. The villages differed in size from insignificant settlements of three to four houses, to ones with twenty or thirty, each containing several families. The ease with which the red cedar could be split and worked into large planks made possible the construction of these large, rectangular houses which, with their horizontally laid walls and sloping roofs, presented a picture of stability and relative comfort superior to that of most Indian habitations.

Each village was practically an independent political unit. 631
Neighbouring settlements had many common interests which 628
threw them into contact with one another, but there was no organized cohesion between the towns of the Bella Coola valley, or between those of Tāl·io and Kimsquit. There was still less to draw these three groups together. There was no supreme chief and no governmental meeting of the tribe as a whole. Not only were the three divisions not bound to support one another in war, they were often at loggerheads among themselves. Indeed, bloodshed between towns of the Bella Coola valley itself was not uncommon. Moreover, each group tended to merge with its neighbours. The Tāl·io people frequently married with the Rivers Inlet and the Bella Bella; 563
the Kimsquit with the ıstāmx[11] of Dean Channel and the Kitlobe 648 of Gardner Canal; and the Bella Coola of the upper valley with the Carriers.

In spite of these inconsistencies, the application of the word 619
tribe is justifiable for the following reasons:

A. Linguistic. All spoke the same language. There were dialectical differences among the people of Bella Coola, [197]
Tāl·io, and Kimsquit, but each group could understand the [11]To avoid unnecessary symbols, capital ı has not been used.

2: McIlwraith NE6 Bellacoola NE6
642

/The locus of political power and authority appears to be the kusiut society. For information on this secret society, its disciplining of members, and its relations with the uninitiated see category 116, pp. 1-266./

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

seldom a chief who had given many potlatches. Successful raiders rarely slew such an one; his position placed him above the dangers to which lesser men were subject. 721 575 622

Raids appear never to have been carried out solely for the purpose of giving warriors opportunities to display their prowess, or of permitting young men to prove their mettle. Scarcity of food was the commonest cause for forays when, of course, the victims were chosen for their accumulated supplies. The Kwakiutl especially, lacking abundance of salmon, often attacked the Bella Coola. Even more dreaded were the Kitkatla, the most warlike people of the central coast, who used to raid for many miles to carry off slaves whom they sold or traded for other commodities. Trespassing, too, was a source of friction which often led to hostility. In such a case, the offenders were usually held up to ridicule at potlatches, and the irritation gradually increased until wiped out in bloodshed. Members of a tribe which had suffered from a raid prompted by any of these motives would await a suitable opportunity for retaliation; this in turn would be avenged, and a vendetta often ensued lasting for generations. As already described, a ceremonial error brought punishment from a neighbouring tribe; this was the only motive which caused fighting between different Bella Coola villages. In the last century there was a struggle of this kind between the people of Stuux and Ałqäläxł in which the former were victorious and took many slaves who were later ransomed. When ill-luck had dogged a village or a group of villages for some time, the inhabitants sometimes endeavoured to wipe out their misfortunes by attacking another tribe. 648 685 626 556 688 628 727 777

The teeming salmon at Bella Coola, Kimsquit, and Täl·io, made it unnecessary for the Bella Coola to wage aggressive war for which they were unfitted both on account of their unmilitary attitude and their lack of central authority. On the other hand, they were tempting victims for more belligerent neighbours. The narrow Bella Coola valley, however, far removed from the open sea, and densely populated, was difficult to attack. 642 648 133 161

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

721 to attack. It is said that the Fort Rupert people once raided
648 it, but their hair became entangled in the thorns growing near the tide-flats and they were easily slain while struggling to free themselves. Two warriors escaped and hid in the branches
[727] of a huge spruce tree. They used to slip down at night and steal food, thus supporting themselves for several weeks, but
[628] were at last discovered and enslaved. On such occasions the villages of the lower and central valley usually rallied to the help of Q̓omqo·ts, the most exposed one, although there was no mechanism to enforce such assistance. The inhabitants of [776] this town attributed their protection to Ałquntäm, and used to claim that he had decreed that they should be immune
[361] owing to their close association with him. Though Bella Coola itself was comparatively free from molestation, Kimsquit and [162] Täl·io, with smaller populations and less strategic positions, were subject to frequent attacks. At least one of the villages at
712 the head of South Bentinck Arm was defended with a stockade of cedar trunks, set upright in a double row and entered by a water-gate with a drop-door.[1] This water-gate protected the
[648] residents on many occasions, and it is remembered that one
[726] Fort Rupert raiding-party was annihilated while endeavouring to batter down the door with a huge ram. The defenders, armed with muskets, picked off the attackers as they struggled in the open.

721 All the older men were emphatic in stating that most of their raids were in revenge for such attacks. Although such statements were partisan, they were confirmed in every way
[642] and were probably tolerably correct. Lack of a strong government was a serious handicap to the Bella Coola. After being [623] assailed, the members of the town would discuss retaliation, and if unanimity of opinion was reached, that course was de-
[622] cided upon. Public opinion alone selected the leader, usually [701] a man who had given a number of potlatches, especially one whose position had been made stronger by previous validation

[1] It is said that such stockades surrounded other villages, but definite information on this point was unavailable.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

as a warrior. Such a chief had no command over his followers. 721
If he were a man of great prestige, many would be willing to 701
serve under him, but he could not compel the services of any- 622
one except his own slaves. A few individuals often declined to [626]
follow their fellows to war, although the force of public opinion [628]
usually prevented a too individualistic course. Inhabitants of other towns used their own discretion whether or not to join the party. If some of their relatives had been slain in the previous attack, revenge influenced them to share in the retaliation, otherwise only the prestige of a mighty chief could attract them. No case is known in which all the Bella Coola [642] villages joined in a single expedition; there were often tem- [628] porary alliances between neighbouring settlements, but complete lack of central organization. The course of events was similar when a chief wished to raid without the motive of avenging an attack. For example, if a Bella Coola had been [648] enslaved by a foreign tribe and slain by his owner, a brother of the victim might decide on revenge. The usual course was to kill a slave belonging to the murderers, though sometimes he led a raiding party if he could gain the necessary support.

Each warrior provided his own weapons, frequently the 726
same as those used for hunting. Bows with obsidian-tipped 411
arrows were most relied upon for offence, though slings were also used from canoes. Every man carried a spear, pointed like an arrow, for hand-to-hand fighting, although there was relatively little of this, most of the combats being fought at a distance with much noise, boasting, and expletives, but few casualties. Spears were, however, useful if the attackers succeeded in surprising a village at night. Hostilities are a thing of the past, consequently it was impossible to obtain detailed information respecting offensive weapons. Armour consisted 714
of maple or birch slats reinforced with moosehide and worn 726
around the body and chest; this rendered quick movement
difficult but was effective against arrows. Muskets were intro- [411]
duced many years ago and armour consequently became use- [177]
less. Large shields of moosehide were carried in all canoes,

714 and one was held up by the bow paddler as the craft neared the
726 shore to protect him and those behind from arrows and stones cast by slings. When not in use, shields were laid away in boxes with some white substance resembling flour.[3] On the
[103] shore of the fiord below Bella Coola, opposite Winter Bay, there are some boulders of the same white tint; even now these are often spoken of as "The Shields of the Bella Coola." It is said that hostile raiders, seeing them, used to remark that they had reached the outposts of Bella Coola.

726 The same lack of leadership shown during preparations for a war was evident during hostilities. The so-called leader had 701 little authority over his men, who could desert and return home
703 at any time. Lack of martial ability among their own chiefs
[648] sometimes led the Bella Coola to place themselves under the authority of a Bella Bella in a way which would be impossible
[642] for a war-like people. Frequently such divided leadership led to disaster, and is the surest proof that the Bella Coola were not as aggressive or bellicose as other coastal tribes.

726 Except when attacking the Carriers, all raiding parties
[533] embarked in canoes and followed a definite order of procedure
[703] handed down from the past. In the stern of each craft sat the captain, a chief, who, as the craft was leaving, began to sing his xe·tla song, keeping time to it with the beats of his paddle; the recounting of the glories of their ancestors was supposed to encourage the warriors. Instead of leaving simultaneously, a rendezvous was often chosen down the fiord, and the expedition finally moved off from there when all the canoes had arrived. While still in friendly territory, a flotilla proceeded
726 openly. A small amount of dried salmon and water was car-
789 ried by a war party and morsels of the former were eaten at intervals. The bow-man took as much food and drink as he thought could be consumed at one sitting, put a fragment of dried salmon in his mouth, chewed it four times on the same side of his mouth as he was paddling, and swallowed it. Then

[3]Some undetermined substance said to have had protective or preservative qualities.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

opened out on to a wooden platform, which served as sidewalk 342
and extended from one end of the settlement to the other. 361
The outer side of this structure was always supported on piles; in fact, in many cases, the houses as well as the whole sidewalk were thus raised from the ground. This type of construction was necessitated by the sloping sites of the villages, but had the added advantage of being a protection against attack. The villages differed in size from insignificant settlements of three to four houses, to ones with twenty or thirty, each containing several families. The ease with which the red cedar could be split and worked into large planks made possible the construction of these large, rectangular houses which, with their horizontally laid walls and sloping roofs, presented a picture of stability and relative comfort superior to that of most Indian habitations.

Each village was practically an independent political unit. 631
Neighbouring settlements had many common interests which 628
threw them into contact with one another, but there was no organized cohesion between the towns of the Bella Coola valley, or between those of Täl·io and Kimsquit. There was still less to draw these three groups together. There was no supreme chief and no governmental meeting of the tribe as a whole. Not only were the three divisions not bound to support one another in war, they were often at loggerheads among themselves. Indeed, bloodshed between towns of the Bella Coola valley itself was not uncommon. Moreover, each group tended to merge with its neighbours. The Täl·io people fre- 563
quently married with the Rivers Inlet and the Bella Bella; 648
the Kimsquit with the ıstāmɣ[15] of Dean Channel and the Kitlobe of Gardner Canal; and the Bella Coola of the upper valley with the Carriers.

In spite of these inconsistencies, the application of the word 619
tribe is justifiable for the following reasons:

A. Linguistic. All spoke the same language. There were dialectical differences among the people of Bella Coola, [197]
Täl·io, and Kimsquit, but each group could understand the [15]To avoid unnecessary symbols, capital ı has not been used.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

619 others. This differentiated them clearly from all neighbouring [197] tribes.

B. Ceremonial. A member of a secret society in any of [575] the above towns was accepted as a member in any other one.
[609] A person of another tribe, even if known to belong to a comparable society, was treated as an uninitiated person.

C. Origin and Religion. The people of Bella Coola, Täl·io, and Kimsquit felt themselves to be akin through acceptance of the fact that their ancestors had been created together in the beginning of time. This marked them off with [771] great clearness from all other tribes, especially from the Carriers of the interior. This belief formed a sentimental and religious bond of great strength.

Neighbouring Tribes

648 It is desirable to describe, briefly, the tribes with which the Bella Coola came in contact.

THE CARRIERS

East of Bella Coola, amid the mountains of the interior, roved the Carriers. In summer they often came down to the river valley to fish or trade for salmon, and in winter they were sometimes forced by cold and starvation again to visit the Bella Coola, Bella Bella, or Rivers Inlet people. There was a [563] good deal of intermarriage between them and the inhabitants of the upper valley, so that the wanderers were able to spend the cold months with relatives. None the less, the Bella Coola
[180] considered these people utterly foreign in habits and beliefs,
[578] and to call a man a "Carrier" was, and still is, a deadly insult. The Carriers lacked the rich ceremonial life of the coastal peoples who, therefore, regarded them with scorn and con-
[796] tempt. The presence of a few of the much-despised Carriers was, however, almost necessary to the correct performance of the winter dances since they were uninitiated spectators whom it was necessary to impress and delude.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bellabella NE5

THE BELLA BELLA

BC 648

West of Bella Coola lived the Bella Bella, known as ułqwläsıms. Although linguistic differences prevented free exchange of ideas, and active hostility was not unknown, there was considerable intermarriage between the two tribes. The Bella Coola recognized the similarity of culture between them; in fact, whereas a Carrier was despised for lack of knowledge of ceremonial and dramatic matters, a Bella Bella was respected for his superior lore in that respect. The Bella Coola believe that many of their rites have been obtained from them.

BB [101] [563] BC [563] [186]

The chief Bella Bella villages are said to have been: Qwalna, on "Kwatna" Bay; Nā'mu, at "Namu"; Qwiyai, four miles from the last-mentioned; Nulam.

BB 361 [191] [563]

At Qwalna, the nearest settlement, so many of the people spoke Bella Coola that it was practically bilingual. There had been so many intermarriages for generations that the people were not considered foreigners; in fact, Boas includes it among Bella Coola villages (p. 48). There were seven villages on Kwatna Inlet and the Kwatna River which flows in from the south-east.

BC [563] [648]

(1) Sinulkemitl, "Where It Spoke": a small outpost on the eastern shore of Kwatna Inlet near the entrance. There may once have been a permanent settlement at the site, but for many years it was used only as a look-out station when raiders were expected.

BB 173 361

It is said that on one occasion, long, long ago, a party of Kwatna people was encamped at this spot, waiting for enemy raiders whose approach had been reported. They did not appear when expected and one of the watchers, wearied by the long wait, said to the genital organs of one of his female companions who had annoyed him:

"Tell us what is going to happen."

"You will all be killed to-morrow," answered a rumbling voice from the organs, to the great amazement of everybody.

So it transpired. The hostile raiders surprised the watchers the next day and only one escaped to tell the tale.

The place has since been known as, "Where It Spoke." It was long ago deserted.

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bellabella NE5

THE ıstämx[1]

BB
BC
563
361
[164]
101
[197]

Before the smallpox epidemic, about 1865, there were towns on the fiords and villages of Dean Channel between Kimsquit and Bella Bella. The inhabitants were called ıstämx by the Bella Coola, and ıstaitx by the Bella Bella. Their settlements were at Elcho Harbour, Green River, Cascade Inlet, and at several unidentified places. Their language is said to have differed slightly from that of the Bella Bella, but the people themselves married freely with both Kimsquit and Bella Bella, thus forming a connecting link between these tribes.

A list of ıstämx towns was obtained from one old man, who claimed to be a descendant of the people. It was impossible to verify this information, and since he himself was not an ideal informant, the following can be regarded only as approximately correct.

(1) Ällko: at Elcho Harbour.

(2) Kıldeıt: on a fiord one mile above the last-named.

(3) Ällhk or Yuqwaıt: on a river three miles above the preceding.

(4) Nuwaisäx: on a river two miles above the preceding.

(5) Nusqatl: on a fiord three miles above the preceding.

(6) 'Omllom: on a fiord three miles above the preceding.

(7) Suxwlk: on a river two miles above the last-named and thirty miles below Kimsquit.

According to the old man from whom the above list was obtained, Nuxwlst, at Kimsquit, recorded earlier as village no. 45, was also populated by ıstämx people. There was so much intermarriage between the two groups that it is now impossible to ascertain whether the inhabitants not only of Nuxwlst, but of Suxwlk as well, were predominantly Kimsquit or ıstämx.

BC
484
132
[648]

The open plateau in which the Bella Coola River rises has always made travel possible for long distances, so that not only

1 [^Bellacoola term for the people of mixed Bellabella - Kimsquit stock who inhabited the shores of 'Dean Channel' - see 2: McIlwraith, cat. 116, p584 - Analyst]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

133 the neighbouring Carriers, but Chilkotin as well sometimes 484 descended to the valley. On the coast, though the dense under-[648] brush prevented travel along the shore, the long fiords, shel-
[501] tered from the open Pacific, were ideal for the use of canoes.[16]
648 Comparatively lengthy journeys were neither difficult nor uncommon. The Täl·io people were usually on amicable terms with the inhabitants of Rivers Inlet, and the Kimsquit with the Kitlobe. The Bella Coola were accustomed to attend [574] potlatches at Alert Bay and Fort Rupert,[17] Knight's Inlet, and Bute Inlet, receiving their hosts, in turn, at Bella Coola. On the other hand, there was little friendly intercourse with the northern tribes, of which the Kitkatla especially were dreaded by the residents of the central coast. Until recent years the Bella Coola had no direct knowledge of other Salish-speaking peoples, although some of the Chilkotin told them of a tribe living far to the south, in the interior, whom they encountered in some of their wanderings and used to term Nuxälkımx, recognizing the similarity between their language and that of the [197] Bella Coola. A few years ago several Bella Coola attended a [871] boarding-school and were amazed to find that many of their words were understood by fellow-students from Chilliwack.

648 To sum up: The Bella Coola were in close contact with 177 the neighbouring coastal tribes, with the members of which they felt themselves to have cultural affinities. They recognize that they have received many ceremonial rites from their neighbours, and must have adopted other elements of culture which they now consider indigenous. It is probable that certain Bella Coola customs must likewise have been transmitted to other tribes, but such lie without the scope of this monograph. The outlying villages were in close contact with foreign neighbours, and tended to assimilate elements of their culture, [101] but, on the whole, the Bella Coola present a tribal unity with distinctive local customs, falling within the general pattern of coastal culture.

[16]For types of canoes, see Appendix A.
[17]The principal Kwakiutl villages.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

human beings, in the beginning of time when they were semi-supernatural, sometimes prevailed against him. One story actually records his murder. From the point of view of morality, an angle from which the Bella Coola themselves do not regard him, Ałquntām is neither moral nor immoral; he has the virtues and vices of a man. That, in fact, is a fair summing up of Ałquntām; he is a superman, creator of life, supreme god in the sense that he is chief of the supernatural beings, but not an all-powerful deity. 776* [538]

Compared with Ałquntām, other supernatural beings are insignificant. The Bella Coola do not regard them as a hierarchy with definitely graded rank and power; accordingly, the order in which they are described is immaterial. Reference has already been made to the supernatural Carpenters.[9] There are four of them, created by Ałquntām in the beginning of time; it was they who constructed the mountains and rivers of this land, the animals and birds populating them, and supervised the making of mankind. They are considered to be four brothers, collectively known as Mesmesälänx.

The eldest and most powerful is Yulätimut, "He Who Completes Any Task with a Single Smoothing Motion."

The second brother is Mätläbälitcak, "He Who Completes Any Task with a Single Stroke of an Adze."

The third brother is Mälläpexwak, "He Who Completes Any Task with Two Strokes of His Adze."

The fourth and youngest brother is ıhtlulāk, "He Who Completes Any Task in a Single Day."

In Kimsquit, Mätläbälitcak is often called Mesmesälänx and the collective term is not used. These names explain the beliefs of the Bella Coola with regard to the powers of the Carpenters. After their work in the beginning of time, the three younger brothers returned to Nusmät·a, where they have since resided, but Yulätimut came to earth and married a Bella Bella woman. The Bella Coola admit that members of this [186] [648]

[9]Cf. Boas, p. 32.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*776 tribe are superior to themselves in carpentry, and ascribe their [186] skill to the fact that many of them are descendants of Yulā- [648] timut. Some of the coastal tribes are said to believe that Ālquntām erred in the manufacture of many of the sea mammals, giving them, for example, human heads on fish bodies; he later rectified this by sending his Carpenters to adjust their form. This is not a Bella Coola belief. One elderly man stated that the skill of the Carpenters in painting and modelling was derived from a little girl named Q̓oxtlanao; no confirmation could be obtained for this statement and the information was vague and unreliable.

Since their creation of the sky and many features of this world, as well as birds and animals, the Carpenters have entered but little into the lives of the Bella Coola. Like other supernatural beings, they are capable of going anywhere, but for many generations they have not been seen on this earth. Their most important function, perhaps, is to act as patrons [575] for various kusiut dancers. This subject will be described in detail in vol. II, chap. 1; for the moment it is enough to say that many supernatural beings regard members of this semi-sacred society as their protégés, and grant them power to per- [535] form dances. On these occasions masked figures are used to represent the patrons, thus enlightening uninitiated persons as to the appearance and attributes of various supernatural beings.

Among the many residents of Nusmät·a are two sons of Ālquntām, Sänollxmulelts Ālquntām and Sno'olxlts Ālquntām. The former in particular is dearly loved by his father and is often spoken of as Nuslexwanxwultam, "The Cherished One." These two beings take no part in the affairs of mortals except [575] as patrons of kusiut dancers. Like all supernatural beings they are considered to be immortal. Since Ālquntām has two sons it is to be assumed that he has, or had, a wife. Her name is not generally known, although she is sometimes spoken of as [538] Nusmät·aien·a, "The Woman of Nusmät·a." There are also many stories describing his amours with human women resulting in semi-supernatural offspring.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 776 encountered on land, but the sea likewise is the home of anthropomorphic creatures. Far beneath the surface is a land much [772] like the earth, inhabited by people resembling humans who sometimes assist a drowning person. The mysteries of this undersea world are known to the Bella Coola chiefly through accounts handed down from generation to generation, though its inhabitants have often appeared at the surface. Their hair is long and somewhat reddish, their bodies are hairless, and their faces are in many cases stained with black. One man stated that about three years before a Japanese, fishing near Namu, had caught in his net one of these people, a girl about two years old. He drew her into his boat, where she squatted on the bottom, docile and submissive. After a time the fisherman became frightened and threw his captive overboard. The [648] [186] Bella Coola say that the Bella Bella, greater seafarers than themselves, have more extensive knowledge of these undersea dwellers.

539 Similar, if not identical, beings live beneath rivers and lakes; they have often been seen on the surface, and occa- * 776 sionally, long, long ago, certain fortunate individuals saw their houses. Accounts of such are embodied in Bella Coola mythology and will be described later. The following can be considered an example of a simple type:

About three hundred years ago, Lewumewumlaix, a Kimsquit fisherman, built a pier-like framework, projecting into the Dean River, on which to stand while fishing for salmon with a long-handled[10] scoop-net. One August day he was using his net when, after a number of successful sweeps, it became very heavy. As the net came to the surface he found, to his amazement, that a small boy was hanging on the rim. A number of people who had been watching from the shore, called to him to throw away his net with its uncanny haul. Heedless of this advice, Lewumewumlaix tried to lift his net and, on finding it too heavy, began to drag it through the water so as to drag it out on the shore. All went well for the first few yards, till suddenly the boy shoved against the net, pushing the fisherman into the water on the other side of the pier. Immediately the supernatural one vanished from sight. As the bystanders rushed to [10] The handles of nets of this type are said to have been about thirty feet in length.

1:McIlwraith E-3 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

ancient history and fame of his family. It is a matter connected with the past, a matter of the mind, a source of pride to him to have such a possession, but a matter that does not affect his daily life. 211 424 993

So far as could be learnt, the Bella Coola crests consist of the following birds and animals: raven, bald eagle, grizzly bear, black bear, wolf, whale, blackfish, merganser, loon, sqémstsé, possibly deer, and the mythical double-headed snake, nsiatl. To these must be added the sun, because some of the original people came to earth in human form by sliding down his eye-lashes, the sun-beams; and nahnéitsa, the posts which stretched from earth to the land above, down which a number [illegible] The Bella Coola believe that these posts are particularly common memorials among the tribes of the outer coast. According to some accounts it was these posts which supported the first sky until it fell. 825 [796] * [792] [829] [792]

A crest is connected almost exclusively with the distant past. A Bella Coola whose ancestor came to earth as a raven pays no attention to the ravens of the present time. The matter was approached from every possible angle and not the slightest sign of respect toward living specimens of a man's crest could be noticed. A query as to whether or not a man refrained from eating his crest was regarded as highly humorous. Nor is there any trace of fellowship between unrelated families even if they happen to have the same crest. The subject was broached repeatedly, until at last one informant smiled broadly and said: 424 999 825

"I know now what you want to find out, I can tell you all about it."

He recounted how the Kitkatla are, in his opinion, stupid enough to regard as brothers all those who have the same animal story even if they are members of different tribes. He said that when he was a young man at Vizneia, where Indians from all parts of the coast used to meet, a Kitkatla had once asked him what was his animal. He was puzzled, but as the [648]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bella bella NE5

BC 614 428 721

and hunting-grounds to those who had helped them in their old age. But in every case the gift turned out to be of doubtful value, since young men grew up who claimed membership in the supposedly defunct ancestral family and combatted the right of those to whom it had been given. This always led to war.

BB BC 423 648

The following is an instance of a feud which arose from the bestowal of a hunting-area.

It is said that about 1850 the people of Tsawat (probably Bute Inlet) captured a Bella Bella woman as a slave. She escaped and fled up the Tsawat River, hoping to come in contact with the Bella Coola, who often hunted in that area. The woman was found by the mother's father of an informant who carefully looked after her while he was hunting beaver and brought her back to Bella Coola, thence sending her to Bella Bella. In gratitude her father, a Bella Bella chief, gave her rescuer the hunting-area known as Nulaw, near Kwatna Inlet, with the consent of the members of his ancestral family. The land so alienated should have remained permanently in possession of the Bella Coola ancestral family, but was too far removed from Bella Coola to be used regularly by the new owners. After the death of the Bella Bella chief, a number of individuals who claimed membership in his ancestral family asserted their rights to it. Many years later, after white traders had made their appearance on the coast, a Bella Coola went to Nulaw and killed a large number of beaver. As he was leaving with their pelts he was murdered by some Bella Bella, ostensibly as a trespasser. But for the restraining influence of the white man this incident would undoubtedly have led to war. The informant still feels that he is entitled to hunt at Nulaw, and did so several times when he was a young man; but his sons have never exercised the right, and it has practically lapsed.

BB [425]

BB BC 423 622

It is unfortunate that the above incident is drawn from Bella Bella, where the power of chiefs is much greater than among the Bella Coola. Consequently it is impossible to say

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

601 Coola social organization, and of the absence of standardized obligations based upon specific relationships.

Slaves

567 Since a slave was[11] without status in the Bella Coola community, it is perhaps incorrect to include a description of [554] slavery in a chapter on social organization; but as slaves lived in the Bella Coola villages, it seems reasonable to include them when dealing with the different units of the tribe. It was 162 impossible to obtain an accurate estimate of their number in 567 Bella Coola; slavery has been so long abandoned that the present natives could only hazard vague guesses. Judging from conversational remarks by elderly men, it seems probable that in the old days there was a considerable slave population in every Bella Coola village, comprising at times as much as thirty to forty per cent of the total population.

567 When a party raided a village most of the inhabitants were 927 slain, but some, especially children, young adults, or famous chiefs were captured. As far as could be learned, once a captive had reached Bella Coola he was in little danger, since torture or systematic slaying after the heat of battle had subsided was not a Bella Coola characteristic. The leader of the expedition retained many of the captives as his own slaves, and distributed others among his followers. Anyone, chief [422] or commoner, could own slaves in the same way that he could own any other type of goods.

567 Like any other commodity, slaves were bought and sold. 437 The Bella Coola were usually so well provided with salmon that they were able to exchange these fish with the members [622] of other tribes for slaves. Lack of strong chieftainship among [726] the Bella Coola hindered their success in war, so that most of [431] their slaves were obtained by trade. To the same category [773] belong those obtained as presents at potlatches. If, however, a member of one of the tribes on the lower Fraser River was

[11] One of the first efforts of the white man's establishment in British Columbia was the freeing of all slaves. Consequently the past tense is used in this section. [648]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*556 578 Island chief was felt by the Bella Coola to be quite natural; one of their own chiefs might have resented the insult in the same manner. This account may have no historical basis, but it is a clear example of Bella Coola sentiment.

*556 ●648 558 [765] Further examples may help to clarify this point. A few years ago a number of Kwakiutl Indians visited Bella Coola to perform a mourning ceremony in honour of a deceased Bella Coola who had a Kwakiutl name from his grandfather, a member of that tribe. All the natives were invited to a large house, where the visitors gave a dance according to their own ancestral myths; the songs which were used recounted the history of the Kwakiutl name of the dead man. After thus displaying their prerogatives, they felt themselves obliged, and proud, as hosts, to give presents as validation. The sum of $546 was distributed among the guests. Realizing that it would be impossible to return such a sum by holding ceremonials in Fort Rupert, the home of the Kwakiutl, the leading Bella Coola decided to return the compliment immediately. The amount to be given was discussed at great length. Appreciating the courtesy of the foreigners in thus coming to pay honour to the deceased, it was not wished to insult them by giving a larger present, which would have had the effect of intimating that the recipients considered the $546 a trifling amount. Accordingly it was finally agreed to give the visitors about $300, which was done as validation of a Bella Coola ceremony at which the strangers were present. Thus the hosts allowed themselves to be shamed as a mark of courtesy. Not to be outdone in politeness, the Kwakiutl chief made a speech, expressing his willingness to allow the Bella Coola to drive him (this occurred in the days of horses and carts) to the wharf to take the steamer. In other words, he allowed the Bella Coola to put him in their debt, as they had allowed him and his party to do with respect to the distribution of money. The visit terminated with friendly relations maintained on both sides.

123 533 *556 424 The need of validating every ceremonial act by presents can be further illustrated by the following instance. When

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

203 that he wants so-and-so, giving the name of a chief, to go, for
* 556 instance, to Bella Bella, to invite a certain person, whose name 484 he gives, to the potlatch. X likewise names those whom he [575] wishes to form the escort. As a susaok whistle is used, it is essential either that the chief himself be a senior susaok, or that a siki go with him. It is immaterial whether or not all of the crew are members of the society. Nobody is compelled to go, but as all know it will be a matter of pride to X to recompense them, none declines except for some strong reason. X names those whom he wishes to proceed to other tribes, sending one canoe to each group of towns. He arranges their departure according to the distance each must travel, the aim being to have all the guests arrive at Bella Coola at the same time. X is expected to provide food for his guests as soon as they arrive, and as the potlatch cannot start until all have assembled, X tries to ensure simultaneous arrival, no easy matter [648] since the area from which guests are invited extends from the Nass River to Alert Bay.

The mysterious and sacred nature of the potlatch is impressed on the minds of the uninitiated at the time of departure. When the chief who is to bear the invitation, and the members of the crew are ready in the canoe at the beach, there is heard from X's house the sound of a whistle. The uninitiated, unaware of the method by which the noise is produced, consider it to be the voice of some supernatural being connected with the potlatch. Either the messenger himself, or some assistant with him, blows a whistle. This can be done without exposing the method by putting the whistle to the lips under cover of a large blanket. When this has sounded the canoe is free to proceed.

The messenger-chief carries with him his susaok mask, which he dons if he sees another canoe approaching, while [532] eagle down is scattered over the heads of the paddlers. These two signs intimate that the occupants of the craft are on ceremonial business, therefore must not be molested. For a con-[726] siderable distance up and down the coast the sacred nature of

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

426 hence repayment or non-repayment does not affect the standing of the debtor in the community. The giver expects no
*556 return, but should he come to financial straits he would have [558] no hesitation in asking aid from the Bella Bella chief. He expects, moreover, that the latter will contribute to the expenses of his funeral. This would be optional, as repayment of a non-ceremonial present concerns the donor and recipient alone, without effect on the status of either in the community. In this instance, if the old man had died soon after his son, his debts would not have been paid, since there were surviving no immediate relatives. Sons or other near kinsmen always settle the debts of dead parents out of family pride, but it is considered most improper for the creditors to think about re-[558] payment. By giving they have shown their power, the question of return is the concern of the family of the deceased recipient.

Very rarely does the donor of a potlatch fail to return his investment presents except through oversight. In spite of every precaution, errors occur, and these are said to be caused either by a supernatural being, itself invisible, rising between [776] the donor and his guest, hiding the latter, or by Snuqwalnkaista stealing away his thoughts. Unless the donor wishes [578] to insult a guest, he will give him presents later on, and that ends the matter. But if he does not do so, the slighted man 426 may return the insult, and thus feuds are often generated that
*556 may lead to war between tribes. About 1860 it is said ●648 that a conflict between the people of Bella Bella and Rivers Inlet was caused in that way. In the autumn of 1921, a Bella Coola chief insisted on dancing at a Bella Bella potlatch, although it was commonly known he did not have the necessary goods for distribution to validate his dance. The hosts waxed sarcastic, taunts were answered by taunts, and only the presence of some white men prevented bloodshed. Relations between the two tribes are still strained as a result of this incident. The Bella Coola chief was subject to spells of [828] insanity, and danced during one of these. According to the

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

426 556 *
[648]
[828]
[558]

Bella Coola, the Bella Bella should have taken this into account, along with the man's generosity on previous occasions, and overlooked his remissness.

Cases have been known of a "stupid" man endeavouring to increase his prestige by giving many potlatches when unable to pay his debts. Such a one is laughed at for his stinginess, which is not the attribute of a chief, and is given only small presents.

It must be clearly understood that debts publicly incurred, in other words investment presents received at any ceremony, must be publicly returned, if the debtor is to gain the public esteem granted to one who pays back with interest. But everyone cannot give a potlatch; hence any young man desirous of returning his obligations, and of rising in public favour, can do so at a potlatch given by somebody else. Guests are present from abroad, so his discharge of indebtedness is made known farther afield than if he had done so at a local gathering, and the donor has the additional satisfaction of being able to give to the strangers. Sometimes as many as ten young men will ask X for permission to pay their debts at his potlatch. Such is never refused, because it means more ceremonial, and greater interest, which indirectly increase X's prestige. A young man who has been taken to a foreign potlatch as an adherent of a guest always receives presents, and if he repays these with interest his name begins to become known, especially as his return payments are unexpected. It is thus that a man whose chiefly name (or names) has been dormant for generations, can begin to restore it. Thanks to presents he gives at X's potlatch, he will in return receive large gifts, until finally he is able to give a potlatch himself. After X has paid his own indebtedness the debts of others are settled. In each case the speaker announces the amount received on such and such an occasion and the amount returned. Thus all present are able to estimate the generosity of the payer, a chiefly attribute. When a young man plans to give his first potlatch it is customary for the older chiefs of his village to advise whether he has

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

he can. Several of the older people mentioned that early white traders would have received more for their goods by giving them away than by selling. 556 431

Even at the present time the Bella Coola sometimes carry out a practice which was once common. Particularly in the early autumn or in spring, a chief who has large supplies of food may decide to show his wealth to the members of a neighbouring tribe such as the Bella Bella. Alone, or with a few friends, he goes to a foreign village where he is sure to find accommodation in the home of some friend, relative, or important chief. In the evening he invites the inhabitants of his host's village to the house in which he is staying, and uses the food he has brought with him to provide them with an elaborate meal. His guests now feel it incumbent on them to repay this generosity, and one of them asks the singers to beat out one of his songs, the Bella Bella equivalent to susaok, a'alk, or even kusiut. The owner dances to it and then gives presents to the stranger to validate the performance he has just witnessed. This is repeated by everyone to whom he has given food, and although each present may be small, their total is greater than the original outlay. Sometimes a poor man, feeling himself too insignificant to give a ceremony of this kind, takes a supply of food to a foreign tribe to sell. If the hosts wish to show their generous dispositions they persuade him to give it away in the fashion just described, which always brings in more than he could obtain by sale. It is even customary for the hosts to lend such a stranger enough food for public distribution if his own stock is too small. 556 648 [484]

Although the most important Bella Coola dances are performed at potlatches or during the kusiut season, they are not confined to these periods. Professional singers do nothing else and, except during the run of salmon when everyone is busy fishing, a dance occurs every few nights. Supernatural beings are not called down; consequently there is little solemnity and everyone has a good time. On these occasions, kusiut songs are first beaten out, followed by susaok and a'alk, and the owner 533 535 574

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

At this juncture someone saw a party of strangers, and wondered who they might be as they entered the town. There was great rejoicing when the two brothers told their parents who they were, for they had been so transformed that they were unrecognizable. As Sä·lma had said, Łäloxmän·a's three beautiful wives came rushing up, eager to have him take them back, but he paid no attention to them. He welcomed only the ugly one, who had mourned for him, and massaged her until she became the most lovely of all. 539*

Smaoan, delighted at the safe return of his sons, and proud of Łäloxmän·a's beautiful children, sent invitations far and near to a great potlatch. At this ceremony he validated, with many presents, a seat in the house for Łäloxmän·a. The name thus confirmed was Spätcaldt, "The First Born," a name given to Łäloxmän·a by Kapsälopst. Smaoan also took this opportunity to confer names on his numerous grandchildren. After sojourning for some time in Kimsquit, the Kitlobe people returned home, richly laden with gifts.

In the course of time Wisamkilak bore her husband two more children. Smaoan continued to prosper and to give potlatches, at one of which he gave one of his grandchildren the name Stältumx, "Chief." This designation at once became honourable on account of the goods expended. Łäloxmän·a did not wish to forget his Kitlobe friends, so in time he sent two of his children to live there. One of them was Stältumx, a name that has ever since remained there. Thus friendly relations between Kimsquit and Kitlobe, first opened by Łäloxmän·a, have been maintained. There have been many marriages between people of these two areas, each knows of Łäloxmän·a, and it was only about one hundred and fifty years ago that a Kimsquit woman, Äts̓qutl by name, was married to a Kitlobe man to repay the original marriage of Wisamkilak. [648] [582]

When Smaoan became old he gave yet another potlatch at which he took for himself the name Łilixwnimut, "The Scatterer." He created this from his own fertile imagination, with reference to the way in which he scattered eagle down when first travelling to the north in eagle form. It has since been used by his descendants when old. [551]

The descendants of Smaoan enjoy not only the prerogative of using this myth and the names included in it, but other privileges connected with it. If one of them gives a potlatch he carves the form of a mätsqus on the spoons to be used at it, and paints the wall of his house with a whale design. Omqomkilka's descendants are more likely than others to receive supernatural good fortune from a mätsqus. The descendants of both 539* 424 [532]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

In the beginning of time it is believed that a son of Smaoan married the daughter of a Kitlobe chief (I, p. 338). As dower she brought her husband several Kitlobe names, which were transmitted in time to her children and which remained in Smaoan's home, Kimsquit, for many generations. The Bella Coola believe that it was remembered for hundreds of years that these designations did not belong there. Whenever one was conferred, the myth was recounted to tell how it first came to Kimsquit; whereas in Kitlobe when the myth from which the names were taken was related, it was always added that those in question could not be used since they were now in Kimsquit. About one hundred and fifty years ago, Ätsqtutl, a Kimsquit woman, was married to a Kitlobe man to repay this debt, and cement friendship between the two tribes. She took as dower the names long ago brought from Kitlobe. Similarly, if any name or other prerogative of an ancestral myth has been alienated from the ancestral family to which it belongs, a father searches for a woman who will be able to restore it to his son as a marriage gift. The word used for searching is "hunt," the term applied to seeking fur-bearing animals. 173 583 648

The accompanying pedigree illustrates a return marriage. Qwahila's daughter was married to a Fort Rupert man and took with her as dower several Bella Coola names and other prerogatives. The loss of these was remembered and they were brought back by the marriage of Yäkotlıs, a member of Qwahila's ancestral family, with a daughter of the woman who had gone to Fort Rupert. Usually several generations elapse before a return marriage is made. This incident was perfectly well known to the son of Yäkotlıs.

Qwahila = of Qomqo·ts
|
Nukao·sa = Daughter of Fort Rupert
|
Yäkotlıs = Daughter of Qomqo·ts

If parents who are seeking a wife for their son have also a daughter approaching marriageable age, they may try to avoid a later return marriage by arranging that their daughter shall be married to a brother, or other near relative, of their son's wife. Exchange marriage was formerly more common than 583 [178]

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

583 at present, though even now it is considered highly desirable.
[178] The sentiment is that already described: the more closely the parents are bound together by ties of common ancestry, the greater will be their children's ceremonial strength. Further, reciprocal alliances of this type obviate all danger of feuds, since return marriages are not required.

582 In recent years it has become fashionable, or socially
178 "smart," with some Bella Coola families to seek wives from unrelated ancestral families, and even from other tribes. It is 648 said that this practice was initiated by Potles, an important chief who died between 1870 and 1880. He sought foreign marriages on acccount of the prerogatives which were brought as dowers by his wives, and considered that such rights, transmissable to his children, more than compensated for the lack of strength provided by related ancestors. Many have followed his example, with the result that some ancestral families have entirely abandoned the endogamic tendency. Boas (p. 124) has made the same observation. Although this exogamic [581] principle is directly contrary to that which has already been described, yet it should be noted that each has the same explanation—the search for a wife able to bring most to her as yet unborn children.

584 Should the parents consider a foreign woman as wife for 581 their son, then her worth is discussed from every angle. One woman may have the right to good hunting grounds, the family of another may have some valuable sisaok prerogatives, a third some kusiut rites. Anxious thought is put on the relative values of these. One man had heard of the French system of dot, and emphasized strongly how far superior to, and more sensible it was than the Canadian practice. In recent years [178] the younger Bella Coola have been arranging their own marriages, and the older men lament bitterly that they are influenced only by the beauty and working ability of the girl, not by her real worth, the prerogatives which she can bring to her children.

Although parents consider chiefly the ancestry of their

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

584 preliminary agreement may have been made while they were only seven or eight years old, though marriage seldom occurs before the age of seventeen or eighteen. More often the agreement is made when X and Y have passed the age of puberty, and they wait for about two years before marrying.

583 Throughout this period, X's relatives are expected to give at least one feast at which Y's relatives are the guests of honour, 425 and always receive presents. At one of these rites X's father, 553 with the concurrence of his relatives, may mark his approval
[584] of the coming event by bestowing on Y's father, or one of her other relations, an ancestral name from his family myth. This does not become the absolute property of Y's family, since the myth in which it is embodied does not belong to them, unless, of course, they are members of the same ancestral family. It is fitting that a name of this kind be bestowed by the recipient on one of Y's children, or returned to X's family a few generations later by a return marriage. If this is not done, in course of time the designation is apt to be regarded by Y's family as their own. If there are no children, Y's relatives should give back the name to X's [627] family, but there are many instances of feuds caused by failure to do so. According to mythology, prerogatives may some-
[773] times be given outright, without thought of their use by the resultant children, or of their being restored by return marriages. It is claimed that the people of the Kimsquit River
[648] have, through such a present, the inalienable title to use a certain spot in the Kitlobe River for their olachen nets, and likewise the Kitlobe people have an irrevocable right to the Kimsquit name Stälumx. These two prerogatives were transferred at the beginning of time. At present, anyone bestowing outright his family prerogatives would be considered weak-
[578] minded and the other members of the ancestral family would strenuously object. Considerations of this sort make it desirable to seek a wife within the ranks of the ancestral family.

During the period of engagement, Y's family may present a name, or names, to X's father, with the same conditions as those just described.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

old man came back to Bella Coola with his son, a man about twenty-five years of age. During his absence all his relatives had died, and he was forgotten. He went to the house of a man with whom his ancestors had intermarried generations ago, explained who he was, and was welcomed. The old man and his son have since lived there, although it is doubtful if the owner of the house had ever heard of their existence, and the son cannot even speak the Bella Coola language. 602 476

X and Y themselves are not entirely overlooked in the exchange of presents between their two families. If Y's father is well pleased with his son-in-law he may show this not only publicly, which redounds to his own credit, but by the communication of secret lore such as a special number of nights for ceremonial chastity. Conversely, if Y should not be a kusiut, her father-in-law often asks her father's permission to make her a member of that society. The woman's father is naturally pleased and makes no objections; so she is initiated, using a name and prerogative embodied in her husband's family. Commonly too, they give her one of their ancestral names at any convenient ceremony later than the wedding. In conformity with the rules already explained, if Y should die childless the names return to X's relatives, but if there are children they pass to them. It is said that susaok names can never be transferred in this manner. 606 431 425 [785] [575] [553] [575]

Y's father and other relatives continue to take an interest in her ceremonial welfare and in her personal comfort. If X beats or otherwise abuses her, they expostulate; and if his cruelty becomes unbearable they shelter their daughter when she runs away from her husband. If X should murder Y, she would be revenged by her family. Only one instance of this was known, when the murderer avoided his pursuers by fleeing from the country. As a rule a wife is fairly well treated, though this depends on the character of the husband, the importance of her relatives, and the amount of goods expended to validate the marriage. Among slaves and persons of no influence, it is assumed that a husband may sell his wife as a 593 [602] [627] [567] [432] [648]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

593 slave, and this is believed to have occurred on one occasion 567 to the daughter of a chief.

432 Once, many hundred years ago, the daughter of a Bella Coola chief
● 648 was married to the son of Ťaxlexwam, a Bella Bella chief, living at Łoqoyel. At the marriage, in Bella Coola, valuable presents were given by both families, and the girl went to live in Bella Bella with her husband. Some ten years later, Ťaxlexwam gave a large potlatch to which he had invited guests from all parts of the coast. As in duty bound, his daughter-in-law's relatives gave a certain amount of goods to rebuy her. They were not wealthy, so that the contribution was of small value. Ťaxlexwam had expected a larger present, and now found himself unable even to repay his debts to those who had assembled. He did not immediately show his resentment, but soon afterwards sold his daughter-in-law as slave to a Kitkatla chief. The Bella Coola were justly indignant, but could not make up their minds what to do in such an unprecedented case. The girl ultimately escaped and made her way home after lengthy wanderings (II, p. 505).

837 A husband demands faithfulness on the part of his wife, though he himself is often rather lax. Illicit intercourse is regarded, not as a deadly sin, but as an infringement of the husband's prerogatives. But if a woman should bear a child at a time when it was impossible for the husband to have been the father, due to absence, he would probably accept it as his [586] own and do no more than administer a beating, though some jealous men would divorce a wife for this. Bella Coola sentiment on such matters varies with the individual; it is universally considered to be a matter that concerns the husband [184] alone and he can do as he thinks fit. The daughters of chiefs are usually faithful to their husbands, whereas those of poorer persons, unrestrained by the valuables expended at their marriages, are more lax. If the husband should catch an adulterer, [682] he can, if bold, slay him on the spot and the exaction of blood revenge would be uncalled for. Usually a fight ends the matter, though the offender's family may give presents to the aggrieved husband, and his wife's relatives may also make donations to atone for their daughter's failings. A husband does not share his wife with anyone, and a question as to the lending of a wife

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

to a guest was regarded as amusing. In recent years, however, 837
some husbands have made a practice of renting their wives to [648]
white men. This is not considered creditable, but the Bella [548]
Coola do not strongly condemn breaches of the moral code, [183]
which are regarded as the affair of the husband alone. There is said to be a Bella Bella custom by which a wife takes as recognized paramour one of the friends of her husband who is thought not only to know of this but to receive the presents which the lover gives his wife. The two continue to be friends and often hunt together; in fact, their mutual interest in the woman is a bond between them. No trace of this practice [171] could be found in Bella Coola.

POLYGAMY

It has thus far been assumed that the Bella Coola are 595
monogamous, an assumption correct only since the period of 556
white dominance. Previous to that time it was quite common [177]
for wealthy men to have three, four, or more wives. Potlas, the important chief so often mentioned, had nine, ten, or eleven, the exact number is not known. A man wishing to take a second wife could do so in the manner already described, although the period of engagement was usually much shorter, and working for his parents-in-law was not expected. The reason for this was obvious to the Bella Coola. None but a chief of importance could afford more than a single wife, and such an one could not be expected to demean himself by working for anyone else. Besides, parents were glad to have their daughters married to a great chief, so willingly omitted the customary period of servitude. Few attained the distinction of having several wives. As far as could be learnt, [162]
the number of the sexes seems always to have been about equal, in itself a check to polygyny in a community where practically every adult had a wife. A number of males were always slain in war, and it is to be assumed that polygyny was made possible only through the surplus of women thus caused. The great majority of men had a single wife, some chiefs had

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

to force his attentions on a slave woman if she objected, 836 although her refusal would be most unusual on account of his [567] prestige. There were no professional prostitutes; a man [548] usually gave a small present to a girl from whom he had received favours, and she was expected to give him a little, dainty basket filled with undyed cedar-bark to use as a sponge. Such relations appear always to have been of common occurrence. Today, as formerly, a man's morality is considered to 836 be his own affair; laxity may lower his prestige, but no law is 522 broken, and his neighbours laugh and chaff him about it. In fact, sexual matters are discussed with the greatest freedom, and a person who has been caught is mocked mercilessly. When visiting a foreign tribe, a man sometimes lives with a woman and, on parting, composes and sings a song describing [648] her charms. One man did this after living with a Kitlobe woman, and on his return to Bella Coola found that some of his fellows had learnt it in some unexplained manner; they used to sing it to him, much to their amusement, in part to his own, and somewhat to the annoyance of his wife. This perhaps illustrates rather clearly the attitude of the Bella Coola to an infraction of morality—where no marriage rite has been broken; it is amusing rather than disgusting. There 836 are no times when the moral code ceases to function. At potlatches, and also at kusiut dances, there appears always to [834] have been a certain amount of laxity, although this was strictly prohibited within the house where the ceremony was taking place. Such behaviour is due to the excitement and stimulus of a large gathering, not to anything connected with the rites themselves.

Perverted sexual desires, like other matters connected with 839 the relations of the sexes, are regarded as concerning the individual alone. Sodomy appears to be unknown. Intercourse 836 by pre-adolescents is held to be disgusting, but carries with it no social ostracism. Incestuous union, however, is mildly anti- 835 social; it exposes the offender to secret contempt, but does not interfere with his attainment of whatever position his wealth 556

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

835 and influence may have won for him. One or two instances 556 are known of contact between parent and child, a matter in which it is the duty of no one to interfere; if a person thus flouts public opinion, it is his own affair.

648 In view of the firmness of the marriage bond and the ab-
167 sence of professional prostitutes, it is difficult to explain the wholesale exodus of Bella Coola women to Victoria in the last century. In some peculiar manner this came to be regarded as socially proper. The daughters both of chiefs and commoners trooped off for a varying period of months or years [164] and those who returned brought back venereal diseases which appear to have been unknown before that date. Few of them bore children afterwards, a factor of prime importance in estimating the reasons for the decline of the Bella Coola. The motives which led the women to the city seem to have been: (1) the desire for wealth; (2) the influence of strong liquor; (3) the lure of a strange environment; (4) the attraction of the white men, on account of their higher culture.

It is fortunate for the Bella Coola that this fatal custom has ceased to be considered estimable, although the harm already done may be irremediable.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

ning of time. The following speech was made by an elderly Bella Coola chief at the funeral of his great-granddaughter in June, 1922: 764 537

"Granddaughter![7] Go with your grandmother[8] to the mountain above Tcumotl where my first [patrilineal] ancestor came to earth. Go to the mountain across the river where Qeil[9] descended; go to the north where your ancestor found a copper house with a raven inside; go to the Skeena where another of your early ancestors found a whale; go to all the places where your forefathers experienced the incidents recorded in our myths; go and be happy.[10] I do not want these ever-recurring deaths in my family, but I am helpless. I hope that Sixsixqwtnam will cease hunting us." [773]

Turning to the Carrier Indians who were present, the old man continued: "Thank you for coming twice within two days to share our grief." [648]

Turning back towards the grave, he went on:

"I have made ready the road for you.[11] Your grandfather[12] and I are grieved; our families became united when your parents married, and the bond was cemented by your birth. Now it is lost. When you were born, I rejoiced; now I am sorry. You are all right; you cannot fall because you are supported[13] by the names and fame of your father and mother, your grandfather and grandmother, your uncles and aunts, and your other ancestors who have passed away here in Qomqo·ts. You rest with them in your own village where is located your power from the experiences of your forefathers.

[7]The term, slemts, was used, although the child was really a great-grandchild.

[8]The grandmother had been buried two days previously.

[9]One of the first people to reach this earth.

[10]The places and people mentioned were all described in the myths of the dead child's ancestral family.

[11]A reference to goods distributed by the speaker at a ceremony held a few days previously when it was certain that the child would soon die. [763]

[12]The child's mother's father. [431]

[13]Supported, kisiamotla, a word having the sense of physical support. The implication is that the deceased relatives are sitting in such a close circle that the pressure of their bodies is enough to prevent any one of them, including the dead child, from falling. [195]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

765 religious rites affecting the whole community. In spite of the prohibitions enforced, it is said that a widow or widower usually becomes fat after the death of a partner. This observation agrees with several instances known to the writer, but whether it is of universal application is doubtful, although the Bella Coola emphatically state that this is the case.

Memorial Rites

THE MEMORIAL POTLATCH

177 + 556 769 [622] The most important, as well as the most complicated, mourning rite is the memorial potlatch, skwanāt, for which so much wealth is required that it can be carried out by chiefs alone. This ceremony, being associated with sisaok rites, has altered enormously in form within recent years. Before the introduction of cone-shaped whistles and other foreign elements, it was almost indistinguishable from an ordinary potlatch and the two were occasionally combined, having as central feature the return of the deceased in the form of his crest. Among the tribes of the outer coast, especially the Bella Bella, the two types of ceremonial were apparently distinct, and as the Bella Coola adopted more and more of their neighbours' sisaok ritual, they followed their custom in this respect as well. It is said that a certain Noākila, uncle of a man about sixty years of age in 1922, was the last to combine both. The Bella Bella felt that he had thereby committed a ritual error for which he would be punished; within a few years he died, and the Bella Coola assumed that this was due to the unanimous expectation of his death on the part of the Bella Bella. From that time onwards, the Bella Coola were careful to separate features belonging to potlatches from those of memorial potlatches.

After a comparatively few years, the white man's domination had increased so enormously on the central coast that [648] the potlatch, including both types, was prohibited by law. Owing to the consequent difficulty of performing complicated

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

556*
769
[211]
[764]

by presents, and the greater the number of these, the greater the value of the memorial. Nothing need be added concerning this point, or other rites, to the detailed description given in vol. I, chap. IV.

Psychologically, the memorial potlatch is of tremendous importance. There may be a vague feeling that the ritual is of actual assistance to the deceased since grease burnt at it reaches him, and is of service to him, but such a belief is no more than an intangible sentiment of no weight in the lives of the people. Quite otherwise is its effect on the survivors, especially on the donor. A memorial potlatch is considered the fitting tribute of respect to a chief, and if none of his near relatives should hold one, they would brand themselves as unmindful of the fame of their dead kinsman. In recent years the white man's law has prohibited the potlatch, but chiefs [648] have often preferred to go to jail rather than to forgo this form of memorial. The reason for this cannot be explained better than in the words of an old man whose only daughter, a "Chieftainess," died in 1922. He determined to hold a memorial potlatch and expressed himself to the writer, as follows:

"If I should fail to do what is right under the circumstances, to do what my ancestors would have done, my heart would be dead, dead as my daughter. But if I call the people, if we sing mourning songs for my child, I will be able to bear my grief. I shall have done what is right, and will be able to hold up my head with anyone, knowing that the rites have been performed for my child which are due her as a chief. If I allow her to be neglected, I would be ashamed and miserable. Jim [another "chief"] warned me when I first told him of my intention that the law forbade such ceremonies. I cannot help that. If I am sent to jail, to jail shall I go. I would rather have that happen than that my daughter should not receive fitting treatment as a chief."

In this case, though only abbreviated rites were carried out, their performance unquestionably lessened the father's grief, a fact observed on several occasions. Not only does it comfort men had vanished. It is possible that in this particular case there was a belief that Alquntăm granted the wish when convinced that all had the same desire, but this element is often entirely lacking.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Belief in the power of thought is a concept which the investigator constantly meets in Bella Coola at the present day. For example, in 1921 a government official working in the valley, purchased a representation of a merganser which had been used in a ceremonial.[3] Although this should have been destroyed after use, no difficulty would have been raised if the transaction had remained a secret. Unfortunately, the buyer allowed the object to be seen by several Bella Coola and by some Carriers. This caused indignation throughout the community and news of it reached the Bella Bella, who concluded that the vendor would suffer disaster for allowing a secret object to be seen by the despised Indians of the interior. Within a year, his wife died. The Bella Bella believed that his sin had brought its own punishment, but the Bella Coola, who knew the details of the sale and did not consider the exposure of the article to have been the fault of the seller, attributed it to the power of the thoughts of the Bella Bella. They all expected that he would be punished; therefore he was punished; the expectation was sufficient to effect its own fulfilment. This incident was too fresh in the minds of several men to allow them to sell ceremonial objects to the writer.

The most common form taken by this conviction is with regard to death; if it is believed that a man will die, he is almost certain to do so. In June, 1922, a woman died in Bella Coola and her father claimed that she had been murdered by a certain man either with material poison or by magical means. He took no direct steps in revenge but stated emphatically that the man whom he suspected would die within a year. The threatened man knew of this, and more than once said that he

[3] The article, now in the National Museum of Canada, consists of a cloth and wood representation of a merganser canoe such as was used by Nusdzilc in the beginning of time.

754 would probably fall a victim. He became ill in May, 1923,
761 and, though treated by a white doctor, grew steadily worse
759 until he died in the latter part of June, three weeks after the 828 year had elapsed. All the Bella Coola firmly believe that this [622] was due to the power of thought. The father of the woman was a powerful chief whose thoughts were accordingly potent, and some consider that his concentrated desires and expectations were enough to kill the accused, while others believe that his expressed statements convinced others of the result, and that it was their combined thought that caused the death. It usually requires the thoughts of more than one individual to lead to this effect. The doctor who attended this man stated that his patient had shown symptoms of melancholy and resignation during his last sickness; it seems clear that the expectation of death must have lessened his chance of recovery.

771 A prominent theme in Bella Coola folk-lore is the belief
754 that a person cannot long survive who has made himself unpopular. It is sometimes stated that a magical means was 828 employed to remove him, and this was no doubt often the case;
[530] a person who learns that a "medicine" had been employed to kill him is in no fit mental condition to counteract the power of suggestion, particularly if he knows that others are aware of what has been done. His death is regarded as proof of the efficacy of the means employed and the belief of others grows stronger. As already stated, this conviction still survives. When this ethnological investigation was being conducted, a
[648] point under discussion was whether or not the Kimsquit people should be allowed to live in Bella Coola. One chief took the lead in objecting and everyone expected that having thus roused the ire of would-be immigrants, he would die. He did so soon afterwards, and it is universally believed that it was caused by the concentration of the hostile thoughts of the Kimsquit. Similarly, the potency of taboos is increased by the fact that since time immemorial the thoughts of everyone have been opposed [718] to any infraction. Consequently, an offender is liable to punishment both for breaking an injunction and because he

1:Mc:Dowalth E-5 (1922-1924)948
NES Bellacoola NES

by their owners for safety. Judas, an old Bella Coola believed to be a sorcerer, has been seen to scrape up the moist earth where a man has urinated; in former times anyone doing such a suspicious act would have been killed. The article obtained is hidden and kept for future use, and if the practitioner wishes to inflict pain or death, he places it in contact with some potent medicine. Human bones are frequently employed for this purpose, although the most powerful is said to be grease obtained by boiling flesh cut from the inner side of the thigh of a recently buried corpse. To obtain either of these, graves must be robbed, another reason for hating sorcerers. 754 [685]

Secrecy is essential, as a sorcerer is usually assisted by his children, and in this way he has a better chance of obtaining articles belonging to different people without arousing suspicion. The necessary knowledge can accordingly be transmitted from generation to generation, sometimes without the slightest inkling of it becoming known. Even if a man is found out, he may be able to bribe his discoverer to silence. [824]

Sometimes two from different tribes work in partnership to lessen the danger of practising their vices near the village of a victim. For example, a Bella Coola sorcerer may send an article to an accomplice in Bella Bella for placing in contact with strong medicine; this causes the victim to languish and die while the person responsible continues his usual routine of life around the village, suspected by no one. The commencement of such a partnership is a matter of great difficulty, since anyone who admits his crimes places himself in the power of his confidant. Sometimes, however, rumours that a certain individual is practising malevolent magic reach a foreign sorcerer who needs an accomplice. If he considers that the information is authentic, he may admit his own prowess and suggest that they work together. Such an arrangement is profitable to both parties, and a partnership so formed may continue for generations. 648 754

Sorcerers display considerable ingenuity in arranging that their skill shall bring them pecuniary benefits as well as the 754 756

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

he beats in the fire with his stick, and expresses the hope that the name of the marshal in the town where the error took place may be blackened unless he does better. 575* 628 203

As an individual ḋaxiat who errs is punished by a marshal, so is punishment meted out to the members of a village in which any serious accident occurs during a dance. Such disasters are fire, causing concealed ḋaḋaxiat to appear among the uninitiated, the breaking of a sidewalk on which a number of the members are dancing, or the capsizing of lashed canoes which are used in some of the performances. The obvious effect of such mishaps is to lower the prestige of the ḋaxiat society in the eyes of the uninitiated. The news travels from town to town, and to adjacent tribes. This is a casus belli for any village which wishes to attack the one where the disaster took place; in fact, a raid is considered meritorious. Owing to frequent marriages between the members of neighbouring villages, it usually happens that the inhabitants of adjacent settlements are unwilling to attack, but the news spreads until it reaches a town willing to take the lead. The marshals, aided by any other influential ḋaḋaxiat, discuss the matter and decide on war; uninitiated are called upon to take part, though they are told only that the foray is concerned with the rites of the ḋaxiat society which increases rather than decreases their awe. The threatened villagers, knowing that an attack is inevitable, send out sentinels and guards, and, if possible, flee at the last moment to neighbouring towns for safety, allowing the raiders to burn their village and carry off loot. If a fight takes place many people may be killed, but slaves are never taken. In the last century Ḋaxa attacked Alqaḋiut; the assailants were aided by a number of Chilkotin to whom they were related but who had not the slightest idea of the cause of the raid. Although an attacked town is usually helped by its neighbours, this is not the case when the assault is caused by error in ḋaxiat or xaxaxi ceremonial.

575* 628 688 921 [727] [567]

Not in punishment for error or disaster in ritual meted out [248]

#575 only by members of the same tribe. The Bella Coola firmly
648 believe that if, for example, there is a serious disaster at 688 Xemqo·ti, that village will be raided by the people of Bella
721 Bella, Fort Rupert, Kitkatla, or by tribes even farther away.
[628] News of the accident reaches Tăl·ło or Kimsquit and the inhabitants, themselves related by blood to the offenders and therefore unwilling to punish them, call upon the members of a foreign tribe to do so. On different occasions this statement, in practically identical terms, was made by six independent informants, so there appears to be not the slightest doubt as to the belief of the people in this law. But when specific cases were asked for, they could not be obtained. It therefore appears clear that the Bella Coola, probably owing to long teaching on the part of the ĕulxaiat, consider that an error in ritual is sufficient to bring punishment from an alien tribe. There must be some basis of truth in this conviction, and it is highly probable that the ĕulxaiat must have taken advantage of raids to explain to the uninitiated that these were caused by disasters in ritual. One informant was of the opinion that, following the collapse of a house at Kimsquit during a Cannibal dance, a Bella Coola chief called upon Tsĕłxa, chief of the Kitkatla, who raided Kimsquit in punishment. Quite apart from the belief inculcated in the uninitiated, it is obvious that tribes eager for war sometimes used an accident as pretext. The Bella Coola know of no case in which they raided a foreign tribe for this reason, although they state that if they had been called upon to act as punisher, they could not have refused.

#575 Leaving now the functions of the society as a whole, the 424 rights of an individual member can next be described. Each 425 ĕulxaiat has:
853

(1) A Kaoiat Name. Like every other prerogative, a name in this type can be acquired from father, uncle, grandfather, or other relative, or even by a son from his mother. As a rule a ĕulxaiat wills his designation or designations, for a man may [536] have several, before death and his wishes are observed. Al-

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

not considered necessary. With few exceptions, hereafter to be noted, kusiut masks are burnt at the conclusion of each ceremony, a practice which probably originated in order to avoid the possibility of their being seen by the uninitiated. The Bella Coola state that this is one of the most striking differences between their rites and those of the Bella Bella.

Next in importance to masks are whistles (see Plate 2).[1] The large, cone-shaped form used in susook ceremonial is replaced in kusiut dances by a smaller type consisting of portions of wood glued together, which can be blown with ease from beneath a concealing blanket. Another type has bellows consisting of a mountain goat bladder, which is held beneath the arm-pit so that it can be worked invisibly. During the summer the whistles are kept by one individual, usually a marshal. Specific information concerning the ownership of these whistles could not be obtained; it appears that any kusiut can make one, or have one made for him by a skilled carpenter, and that their retention by one person during the summer is merely for convenience. They are freely lent to anyone for use in a ceremony.

In some dances special objects are used in connection with dramatic performances, such as bull-roarers, wooden representations of animals, birds, or miniature human beings. One old man described a pipe formerly used at Tāl·io, which had a carved bowl as large as a tea-cup with three radiating stems. It was carved from a knotty excrescence on a beech bole. Little could be learnt of its history, except that it was supposed to have been carved by a chief with the design of his person and displayed through pride.

The usual guests at a performance of the type just summarized are the dancer's fellow-villagers and any strangers who happen to be present in the town. Great as is the desire of the kukusiut to impress their uninitiated tribesmen, they are still more eager to impress strangers, hence the presence of carriers adds piquancy to the rites. The writer believes that his presence and interest encouraged the Bella Coola to

[1] See category 116, p 84(B) ANALYCT]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 sively when the villages in which the dances are taking place 203 are adjacent or separated by such a short distance that envoys cannot meet en route.

*575 A word may be said about the attitude of the Bella Coola 177 to the dances of other coastal tribes. They know that the 829 Bella Bella, Rivers Inlet, Kwakiutl, and Kitkatla people have kusiut societies, but until recently their members were con-[648] sidered to be uninitiated, as Bella Coola were when they visited foreign tribes.[8] A few years ago the Bella Coola, Bella Bella, and Rivers Inlet people decided that their rites were sufficiently akin to permit membership in one tribe to carry with it membership in the others:

"We have now one repository," they say.

This development is due to ease of communication and diminution of population in the three tribes. None the less, the Bella Coola recognize differences between their own rites and those of their neighbours. They say that no other tribe [171] has repositories; also that in the other tribes the kusiut society is more intimately connected with the chiefs, in fact, that in Bella Bella and Fort Rupert the Cannibals are the chiefs, whereas in Bella Coola even a poor man, uninfluential in every other respect, can be one.

*575 Theorization is out of place in a descriptive monograph such as this, but the writer gives it as his personal opinion that 177 the Bella Coola have adopted much, if not all, of the kusiut [796] ceremonial from other coastal tribes, though they have profoundly altered it in respect to certain ancient beliefs connected with localized guardian spirits and the patrons of ancestral families. He further believes that it will be found that this Bella Coola technique has in its turn affected the Bella Bella and Rivers Inlet Indians. There seems little doubt that the [171] Bella Coola are correct in saying that the society is more im-[796] portant among them than among their neighbours, and the writer feels that dances and rituals of different types have certainly been adapted to the kusiut pattern of the Bella Coola.

[8] Except a few individuals who had inherited foreign prerogatives.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Cannibal Dance]

787 * 575 * 796 [424] in banning the rite if they do not think the dancer will be able to carry it out properly. When the call comes, the uninitiated are at once expelled from the Cannibal's house; later he rushes to the graveyard and exhumes one of the meat-filled frames previously buried. Non-members watch with horror as he sinks his teeth in the "flesh." Closely guarded, he is then taken to every house where, if they are bold, the uninitiated peer forth from their bedrooms and watch his performance. He carries part of the corpse in his arms and periodically sinks his teeth in the repulsive mass. As usual, apparent attempts are made to tie him to this earth, but in spite of them he escapes to the upper regions where he remains for an unusually long period. Great efforts are made to reduce him to a state of [824] emaciation, for which purpose he drinks large amounts of water in which cedar-wood has been boiled. When the Cannibal ultimately returns to earth, the cannibalistic incubus is expelled and he at length becomes normal. When dancing, a [535] corpse-eater constantly bends both hands towards the floor in front of him and upwards, as though raising some heavy object towards his face. Then his head sinks towards this, only to be thrown quickly upwards and to one side, with a wild expression in his eyes. The uninitiated are told that this represents the manner in which he lifts a corpse towards his mouth and bites, only to be revolted by its putrescence. He has, they hear, no actual liking for human flesh, but his incubus fills him with an irresistible craving for it. Frequently [532] he wears on his blanket wooden representations of skulls (see Plate 7), symbolic of the corpses devoured.

* 575 * 796 Rarely, a corpse-eating Cannibal kills a slave and pretends to devour his body as a means of impressing the uninitiated, but usually this is done only under the driving force of revenge 567 or jealousy. If a man hears that a near relative, slave of a 648 foreign tribe, has been killed, he often determines to wipe out blood with blood. He consults a corpse-eating Cannibal, and

Eating of corpses has long ceased among the Bella Coola; the present tense is used merely for consistency.

[see category 116, p 164(A) - ANALYST]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Cannibal Dance]

if the latter agrees to undertake the commission, he must next obtain a slave, a matter of no difficulty if he is at all wealthy. An effort is made to find a victim from the tribe that has committed the murder, though any alien will suffice. The details are worked out with great care so that the slave is sent to the river for water, or on some other errand at the time the call comes to the Cannibal. A shout is raised, and the uninitiated hurriedly run out of the house, followed by the dancer and a body of athletic kukusiut, who pounce on the unsuspecting foreigner. The Cannibal cuts his throat, and the corpse is carried back to his house, where all members of the society are assembling. Part of the body is cut off, then the kukusiut accompany the Cannibal to every house of the village. He carries the mutilated remains, and the uninitiated readily believe that he has devoured the missing portion. The corpse is later dismembered and the bloody pieces displayed, convincing proof of the gruesome meal. It is needless to say that they are carefully buried where there is no danger that they will be found. The rite then proceeds in the usual manner. 575* 796* 567 648

If two biting Cannibals, or their parents, quarrel, they may be shamed into killing and "eating" a slave. Angry words lead to insults, insults to scorn at each other's prowess, until one of the Cannibals throws a stone at the feet of the other, an action which has the significance of: 575* 796* 567 578

"Eat that!"

Since a stone is always symbolic of a slave, the Cannibal so taunted knows what is expected. If he accepts the challenge, he throws a stone at his adversary's feet, bidding him do likewise. The one challenged soon receives a call and kills a slave in the manner previously described; his rival must do the same unless he is willing to admit himself outdone. The occasional killing of a slave under such circumstances does not give to either the right of doing so habitually. Of course the challenged individual is not bound to accept, but if he declines the "dare," he sinks in popular estimation. This [558]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Breaker Dance]

they do not like. No compensation can be claimed, on the theory that supernatural beings do not have to pay for any damage they may do. Although the property of some kukusiut is destroyed, the chief sufferers are the uninitiated; this serves to increase their fear and respect for the society with which such all-powerful beings are in league. After visiting every house in the village, the party returns to X's, where the masks are burnt, the call sent back, and the proceedings conclude in the usual manner. 575* 796* 781 [578] [685]

A certain amount of information concerning the history of the Breaker dance was obtained from Sxek, the owner of the prerogative just described. He is a well-informed man, but the writer had no opportunity of comparing his beliefs with those of his associates, so the following must be regarded as unsubstantiated evidence. This man stated that the Breaker dance is the most important of all in Bella Bella, and that many Bella Coola prerogatives have been obtained from this source, although some of their first ancestors likewise enjoyed it. He further stated that the term, noltcista, by which the Bella Coola always designate a Breaker, is of Bella Bella origin, and that the ancient Bella Coola term was dirtia.[41] Sxek also told of an occasion when a number of Bella Bella, present on the qothm night of a Bella Coola ceremony, were disturbed when eating by the thud of a stone thrown, from outside, against the wall of the back-room. Out rushed a number of kukusiut, incensed at the disrespect shown to their gathering. They caught the offender, but released him when he was found to be a Bella Bella Breaker, foolishly demonstrating his prowess. The marshals decided to retaliate and arranged with two Bella Coola Breakers to exercise their rights and destroy the canoes and food-boxes of their guests. They did so, and later paid for the damage. The Bella Coola were thus able to demon- 575* 796* [115] [171] [177] 575* 796* 648 688

[41] Sxek and several of his children are the only Bella Coola known to the writer who habitually use the sound "r." For example, he says "Sxulert," instead of "Sxulek." He says that he is himself unable to distinguish any peculiarity in his own pronunciation, although other Bella Coola are aware of it. [197]

[The Breaker Dance]

*575 strate their own superiority; they had paid those who had wit-
*796 nessed their prerogative, whereas the Bella Bella Breaker had 648 merely cast a stone without solemnity. Speeches were made,
688 and it was decided that henceforth instead of waging true war
[921] in case of an error in ritual, it would be sufficient if the Breakers exacted punishment by destroying property. That is the explanation offered by this nan as to why foreign war-parties have not more frequently upleld the law by raiding. As before stated, the writer is uncertain whether such beliefs are generally held by the Bella Coola and of course the historical accuracy of the information is still more doubtful.

THE Kusiotem DANCES

*575 More awe-inspiring, though less terrifying, than the Can-
*796 nibal, Scratch, and Breaker dances, are the kusiotem dances.
424 In these the dancer undergoes mutilation and death, but his [975] supernatural power enables iim to return to life—at least so it appears to the credulous non-members. The five dances known as kusiotem are:

The Stomach-Cutting Dance;
The Beheading Dance;
The Drowning Dance;
The Burning Dance; and
The Swallowing of Hot Sones Dance.

Each of these comprises a distinct ceremonial of great complexity, but only one prerogative is required. That is, a man who has the kusiotem right may allow his stomach to be cut one year, and when he next performs will choose to display his ability to swallow hot sones. In this respect, it differs from all other kusiut ceremones. Although a kusiotem dancer is entitled to exercise his privilege as often as he wishes, provided his marshals consent, the rite is so difficult that it is rarely carried out.

[973] As far as could be learnt, he Bella Coola of today have no

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

CHAPTER III

WARFARE[1]

General Observations — Specific Accounts

General Observations

721 648 PRIOR to the establishment of British rule, there was considerable warfare among the coastal tribes of British Columbia. Long-continued struggles leading to the extermination of one or other of the participants were unknown, but there were constant raids, counter-raids, forays, and attacks. These were never as continuous as on the Plains, where martial achievements were regarded more highly than on the coast, but it appears probable that at least several villages of the Bella Coola were embroiled every few years. Nevertheless, [796] war was secondary in importance to ceremonial rites. During the winter, peace reigned and members of hostile tribes were [556] even received as guests at some dances. At potlatches they might be subjected to insult, later to be avenged in the same manner or by active hostility, but seldom was actual violence offered either to envoys or guests. The symbol of peace and 726 friendliness was eagle down; the occupants of a canoe who 825 bore an invitation to a potlatch, or who were guests them- 778 selves, used to blow this substance up into the air whenever [486] another craft approached, and it was incumbent on the latter [578] to veer over to the other side of the channel. Eagle down was considered to be so sacred that when two men were quarrelling [627] a chief could stop them by blowing some of it over their heads. 721 In winter, hostilities were prevented by ceremonies, and in summer the people were usually busy laying in supplies of food; consequently, it was only in the late spring that fighting was [575] at all common. Even then the dictates of ceremonial life were [622] not entirely forgotten; no kusiut novice went to war and

[1]Warfare having long been discontinued, the past tense is used throughout this chapter.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

seldom a chief who had given many potlatches. Successful raiders rarely slew such an one; his position placed him above the dangers to which lesser men were subject. [721] [575] [622]

Raids appear never to have been carried out solely for the purpose of giving warriors opportunities to display their prowess, or of permitting young men to prove their mettle. Scarcity of food was the commonest cause for forays when, of course, the victims were chosen for their accumulated supplies. The Kwakiutl especially, lacking abundance of salmon, often attacked the Bella Coola. Even more dreaded were the Kitkatla, the most warlike people of the central coast, who used to raid for many miles to carry off slaves whom they sold or traded for other commodities. Trespassing, too, was a source of friction which often led to hostility. In such a case, the offenders were usually held up to ridicule at potlatches, and the irritation gradually increased until wiped out in bloodshed. Members of a tribe which had suffered from a raid prompted by any of these motives would await a suitable opportunity for retaliation; this in turn would be avenged, and a vendetta often ensued lasting for generations. As already described, a ceremonial error brought punishment from a neighbouring tribe; this was the only motive which caused fighting between different Bella Coola villages. In the last century there was a struggle of this kind between the people of Stuix and Ałqäläxł in which the former were victorious and took many slaves who were later ransomed. When ill-luck had dogged a village or a group of villages for some time, the inhabitants sometimes endeavoured to wipe out their misfortunes by attacking another tribe.

[648] [685] [626] [556] [688] [628] [727] [777]

The teeming salmon at Bella Coola, Kimsquit, and Täl-io, made it unnecessary for the Bella Coola to wage aggressive war for which they were unfitted both on account of their unmilitary attitude and their lack of central authority. On the other hand, they were tempting victims for more belligerent neighbours. The narrow Bella Coola valley, however, far removed from the open sea, and densely populated, was difficult to attack.

[642] [648] [133] [161]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

721 to attack. It is said that the Fort Rupert people once raided
●648 it, but their hair became entangled in the thorns growing near the tide-flats and they were easily slain while struggling to free themselves. Two warriors escaped and hid in the branches
[727] of a huge spruce tree. They used to slip down at night and steal food, thus supporting themselves for several weeks, but
[628] were at last discovered and enslaved. On such occasions the villages of the lower and central valley usually rallied to the help of Qomqo·ts, the most exposed one, although there was no mechanism to enforce such assistance. The inhabitants of
[776] this town attributed their protection to Älquntäm, and used to claim that he had decreed that they should be immune owing to their close association with him. Though Bella Coola
[361] itself was comparatively free from molestation, Kimsquit and [162] Täl·io, with smaller populations and less strategic positions, were subject to frequent attacks. At least one of the villages at
712 the head of South Bentinck Arm was defended with a stockade of cedar trunks, set upright in a double row and entered by a water-gate with a drop-door.[1] This water-gate protected the
[648] residents on many occasions, and it is remembered that one
[726] Fort Rupert raiding-party was annihilated while endeavouring to batter down the door with a huge ram. The defenders, armed with muskets, picked off the attackers as they struggled in the open.

721 All the older men were emphatic in stating that most of their raids were in revenge for such attacks. Although such statements were partisan, they were confirmed in every way
[642] and were probably tolerably correct. Lack of a strong govern-
[623] ment was a serious handicap to the Bella Coola. After being assailed, the members of the town would discuss retaliation, [622] and if unanimity of opinion was reached, that course was decided upon. Public opinion alone selected the leader, usually [701] a man who had given a number of potlatches, especially one whose position had been made stronger by previous validation

[1] It is said that such stockades surrounded other villages, but definite information on this point was unavailable.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

as a warrior. Such a chief had no command over his followers. 721
If he were a man of great prestige, many would be willing to 701
serve under him, but he could not compel the services of any- 622
one except his own slaves. A few individuals often declined to [626]
follow their fellows to war, although the force of public opinion [628]
usually prevented a too individualistic course. Inhabitants of other towns used their own discretion whether or not to join the party. If some of their relatives had been slain in the previous attack, revenge influenced them to share in the retaliation, otherwise only the prestige of a mighty chief could attract them. No case is known in which all the Bella Coola [642] villages joined in a single expedition; there were often tem- [628]
porary alliances between neighbouring settlements, but complete lack of central organization. The course of events was similar when a chief wished to raid without the motive of avenging an attack. For example, if a Bella Coola had been [648]
enslaved by a foreign tribe and slain by his owner, a brother of the victim might decide on revenge. The usual course was to kill a slave belonging to the murderers, though sometimes he led a raiding party if he could gain the necessary support.

Each warrior provided his own weapons, frequently the 726
same as those used for hunting. Bows with obsidian-tipped 411
arrows were most relied upon for offence, though slings were also used from canoes. Every man carried a spear, pointed like an arrow, for hand-to-hand fighting, although there was relatively little of this, most of the combats being fought at a distance with much noise, boasting, and expletives, but few casualties. Spears were, however, useful if the attackers succeeded in surprising a village at night. Hostilities are a thing of the past, consequently it was impossible to obtain detailed information respecting offensive weapons. Armour consisted 714
of maple or birch slats reinforced with moosehide and worn 726
around the body and chest; this rendered quick movement
difficult but was effective against arrows. Muskets were intro- [411]
duced many years ago and armour consequently became use- [177]
less. Large shields of moosehide were carried in all canoes,

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

714 and one was held up by the bow paddler as the craft neared the
726 shore to protect him and those behind from arrows and stones cast by slings. When not in use, shields were laid away in boxes with some white substance resembling flour.[3] On the
[103] shore of the fiord below Bella Coola, opposite Winter Bay, there are some boulders of the same white tint; even now these are often spoken of as "The Shields of the Bela Coola." It is said that hostile raiders, seeing them, used to remark that they had reached the outposts of Bella Coola.

726 The same lack of leadership shown during preparations for a war was evident during hostilities. The so-called leader had
701 little authority over his men, who could desert and return home
703 at any time. Lack of martial ability among their own chiefs sometimes led the Bella Coola to place themselves under the [648] authority of a Bella Bella in a way which would be impossible
[642] for a war-like people. Frequently such divided leadership led to disaster, and is the surest proof that the Bella Coola were not as aggressive or bellicose as other coastal tribes

726 Except when attacking the Carriers, all raiding parties
[533] embarked in canoes and followed a definite order of procedure
[703] handed down from the past. In the stern of each craft sat the captain, a chief, who, as the craft was leaving, began to sing his xr-tla song, keeping time to it with the beats of his paddle; the recounting of the glories of their ancestors was supposed to encourage the warriors. Instead of leaving simultaneously, a rendezvous was often chosen down the fiord, and the expedition finally moved off from there when all the canoes had arrived. While still in friendly territory, a flotilla proceeded
726 openly. A small amount of dried salmon and water was car-
789 ried by a war party and morsels of the former were eaten at intervals. The bow-man took as much food and drink as he thought could be consumed at one sitting, put a fragment of dried salmon in his mouth, chewed it four times on the same side of his mouth as he was paddling, and swallowed it. Then

[3] These underground substances said to have had preservative or preservative qualities.

If the war had not been of long duration in which extremely bitter feelings had been aroused, captives were often ransomed by their relatives, who came unmolested for the purpose when the heat of battle had subsided. Failing this, prisoners remained as slaves, the children especially growing up virtually as members of their owner's family as far as food and clothing were concerned, though never sharing in the prowess of his ancestral family. Torture or killing of prisoners seems to have been a rare practice. One extremely old Kimsquit woman related that in her childhood she had seen a captive stretched out on the hot rocks at the side of the ocean, fastened there, his testes crushed with stones, and allowed to die. No other similar traditions could be obtained and it seems probable that this must have been an unusual case. It is true that hostilities have long ceased, but the Bella Coola have clear recollections of other long-abandoned customs, and it is unlikely that torture was ever a common occurrence. It is, of course, one about which reticence is to be expected, but information would have been obtainable if the custom had been common or if it had been one which played an important part in the lives of the Bella Coola. 727 [567]

Scalps were hung on a cord and dried like salmon, then suspended as valuable trophies in the taker's house. When setting out on a war expedition, he would often cover his head with one, holding it in position by weaving its hair into his own. At a man's death, they were either inherited by his heirs or, more often, burnt with his other possessions. It is said that the Fort Rupert people used to tie scalps in bundles to their masks. When the Bella Coola went to war to retaliate for a murder, instead of scalping a victim, they sometimes brought back his whole head and impaled it on a stake over the grave of the person avenged. [422] [714] [768] [721] [648] [682]

At this late period it is virtually impossible to form any opinion as to the amount of bloodshed in wars waged by the Bella Coola. Several of the older people spoke in gloating terms of the slaughter accomplished by their ancestors, but all 721

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15

B 721 these accounts seemed to be exaggerations, and the casualties were probably few. The Bella Coola did not have the same [554] admiration for the successful warrior as for the man who gave many potlatches, while everything indicates that their raids B [703] were on a small scale, rendered singularly ineffective by lack of discipline.

Specific Accounts

B 72 Active warfare has been so long discontinued on the coast that none of the living Bella Coola can describe conditions as 128 they existed during hostilities. It was possible to collect the *539 following accounts of raids and adventures which, though individually of small value, illustrate tactics and strategy, and recount incidents which throw light on the frame of mind of the participants.

Kitkatla War

B T 648 For many years there was animosity between the Bella 721 Coola and the Kitkatla who, with the advantage of strong government, used to sweep down from the north for salmon and slaves. Bella Coola itself was comparatively immune from attack, but the Kimsquit people suffered severely. The attackers were not always successful; one old man related how, when his mother's mother was an infant, they were driven off with the loss of four canoes and many men. The fact that this B incident had been remembered for so many years indicates that T it was unusual.

567 Slaves captured in this way were traded from tribe to tribe 439 and rarely escaped. When an elderly Bella Coola was a lad, there was considerable excitement in the community owing to [727] the return of Stukwala, a woman who had been carried off when a girl. She had been traded to a northern tribe among whom, she said, it was customary to crush captives beneath totem-poles and house-posts. Her diligence saved her from this fate, and she was passed on until she reached the far north, on the

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15

B
T 567
[434]

shore of a river where "the white men got money stone." Then Slukwala began to go south, and was finally sold to an important chief living north of Port Simpson. He used to beat her; in fact, she carried the scars with her to her grave. Slukwala's master had another slave, a male Bella Bella, with whom the woman was on friendly terms since she was related by blood to a Bella Bella family and could speak that language. Angered by her harsh treatment, Slukwala suggested to her companion in misfortune that they kill their master and escape. The man was at first unwilling, but she assured him that she knew the route southward. The conspirators awaited their opportunity which came when their master went halibut fishing, accompanied only by his two slaves. One evening Slukwala cooked a large meal for him which made him drowsy as he sat by the fire; then she stole behind him, picked up an axe, and killed him by hitting him over the head. The two murderers carefully scraped up all the blood, tied stones to the corpse, and sank it in deep water so that their master's friends would believe that he had been drowned with his slaves. Then the two, having stolen a canoe, paddled off, hiding by day, and subsisting on what shell-fish they could gather. After many perils they reached Bella Bella, whence Slukwala returned home.

She had been carried off as a mere girl, but was past the age of child-bearing when she returned and had almost forgotten her native language. The Bella Coola were keenly interested in the tale of her adventures, and especially in the way that slaves were buried in Alaska. It was assumed that some of their own captives must have been killed in that way, so a slave from the far north was crushed in revenge. It is said that this custom was common among the northern tribes from whom the Bella Coola adopted several practices, although this particular one was carried out but once.

B
[648]
[177]

The most famous Kitkatla chief, and the one most dreaded by the Bella Coola, was Trikza, who is said to have had almost despotic powers over his northern warriors. The name itself was transmitted from one holder to another, but the most

B
648
721
T 622
648
721

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bimshian NE15
Bella bella NE5

B
648 celebrated Tohsa was he who held sway between 1850 and 721 1870, a man of almost gigantic proportions, of tremendous phy-
T sical strength, and endowed with force of character and initi-
622 ative as well. Pitted against him, the Kimsquit people suf-648 fered even more than before; there were few direct assaults, 721 but Kitkatla canoes seemed always to be lurking in the vicinity, ready to kill or enslave heedless fishermen or those travelling between Kimsquit and Bella Coola or Tăl'ĭo. Friends of the victims repeatedly discussed counter-measures, but lack of leadership prevented them from coming to a decision for several years.

B
Bb One winter, about the middle of the last century,[1] the Kimsquit 648 determined to take the offensive in May. This plan was discussed both 721 at Bella Coola and Tăl'ĭo; at Ḫemqo'o the leading chief, Nuxmăx, gave his support and many men whose relatives had been killed or enslaved promised to join the Kimsquit raiders. Among others who took part in the conference was a certain Lo-qwa'i, an influential Bella Bella chief who chanced to be visiting relatives in Ḫemqo'o at the time. It was decided that the rendezvous should be Ḫutsalos, on Labouchere Channel.

B During the spring those who planned to take part in the expedition [70] busied themselves with their preparations. No one knew how large would be the force, since as usual, everyone used his own discretion whether or not to join it; some did so to avenge injuries to their relatives, some merely to display martial ability, whereas others declined to repay their wrongs. At last the appointed date came round, and some fifty
B canoes, each containing twenty to thirty men, gathered at the appointed
Bb place.[2] Thence they set out and encamped for the first night at Scrotch 648 River, Ḫăqlat, near Bella Bella. Lo-qwa'i knew the time of meeting and B the route that would be followed, so sent out two lads to hunt deer at [72] the spot, though, not wishing to circulate news of the raiders, he did not tell them what they were likely to find. The two hunters stumbled upon the encampment without being observed, and hurried home to report what they had seen. Lo-qwa'i had intended to join the party, so he now set out in a small canoe with the two paddlers, after warning them
Bb that they must say nothing at home of his movements. His war equip-[713] ment consisted of a musket and two palette-shaped boards with small
[77]

[1] The approximate date was judged from the fact that the old man who told of the expedition in 1922 said that his father was about five years of age at the time.
[2] The strength of the expedition was probably exaggerated.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bellabella NE5

divisions, each containing a loaded and measured charge; these were novelties recently obtained in trade from the white man and considered very valuable. On reaching the place where the Bella Coola canoes were drawn up, Lo·qua·t called out four times:

"Nazmâ·a, are you there?"

On being answered in the affirmative, Lo·qua·t leapt ashore, sent back his own canoe, and definitely joined the expedition.

The Bella Bella chief gave Nazmâ·a one of the prized palette-shaped boards, and the recipient repaid this overwhelming generosity with the gift of a marten-skin coat which he was wearing. A Kitsquit chief likewise gave Lo·qua·t a valuable blanket-coat. As usual, the war-party was suffering from lack of leadership. Lo·qua·t, a properly validated warrior, was a man who had given many potlatches, and though not a Bella Coola, was related to them by blood; in addition, he alone knew the route to Kitkatla, so he virtually assumed command, although many of the Bella Coola were unwilling followers. Lo·qua·t suggested an immediate move, and gained his point owing to the fact that no one had a definite counter-suggestion. After travelling seven miles in the darkness, Lo·qua·t massed the canoes to address his ill-disciplined and somewhat uncertain force. He pointed out that the way to Kitkatla was long and difficult and that it would be dangerous to attack their northern foe-men, but that the W'aya'a[1] near at hand would be an easy prey. The Bella Coola had no quarrel with these people, and were reluctant to attack them, especially as there had been inter-marriage between the two tribes. Lo·qua·t spoke fluently, saying that the W'aya'a had mocked him in their potlatches, and that many of their women, gathering sea-weed on lonely beaches at this season, would be easy victims. His arguments were given strength by the fact that he was a nawit chief and warrior; no one dared to stand against him, so it was decided to follow his wishes, though the Bella Coola stipulated that none of the W'aya'a were to be killed.

The flotilla continued and in the early dawn raided a small W'aya'a settlement and captured several slaves. Continuing their journey, they took prisoner a number of women who were gathering sea-weed, and destroyed the supplies which had been stored up. Lo·qua·t had joined the expedition merely in hope of getting revenge upon the W'aya'a; now that this end was accomplished, he was willing and eager to return home, but uncertain how to leave his followers.

With this in view, Lo·qua·t suggested an attack on a China Hat settlement, adding that he knew where some of their frames[2] used in Cannibal dances were stored, and that the China Hat people were too arrogant

[1] Probably one of the Bella Bella-speaking groups.
[2] Such as were covered with moss to represent human bodies.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bellabella NE5
Tsimshian NE15

B Bb 648 721 in their ceremonies. Again the Bella Coola were unwilling, but again their unformulated and uncertain wishes were overruled by the dominant chief, and the assault was made. The frames were stored in an unguarded shelter near the cemetery, into which the raiders broke, smashed them, and threw the debris into the water. While this was taking place, a Wawpi-a canoe rounded a point, and Lo-qwa-i took the opportunity to jump aboard, saying that he was escaping from a Bella Coola raiding-party. The canoe paddled away and the expedition was left leaderless. The usual discussion took place about what was to be done, but finally the raiders returned home. They had been diverted from their original objective, had been led to attack a friendly tribe, had been deserted by their leader, and the only spoils of the long-prepared expedition were a few slaves.

B 727 Among the prisoners were two daughters of a certain Olewa, who was hated because he had frequently been in partnership with Tsikoa. A few days after the return of the expedition, the father appeared to ransom his children. Some of the Bella Coola wanted to kill him, others demurred, and it was finally decided that a spear, fastened to a line, should be hurled against his canoe so that it would project outwards and lodge against an olachen stake, capsizing the craft and drowning the occupant. The spear was thrown, but clever handling prevented the intended disaster. Olewa was a validated warrior, one who never showed fear, so he calmly pulled out the missile and again paddled upstream. This time the Bella Coola fired shots close to either side of his head, but he sat unmoved and unarmed amid his boxes of presents. Finally, a Bella Coola tried to wrench off a tuft of hair from above one ear, but though he pulled with all his force, he did not succeed, and everyone on shore laughed at him. This restored good humour, and Olewa was allowed to land and ransom his daughters. When he left for home he was told to send his friends if they wished the return of their relatives. This was done and peace followed; if Olewa had waited a few days until the excitement of victory had cooled, he would have been able to land without molestation. The only other result of the expedition was that the China Hat Sakaxiw killed their own Cannibals for having allowed their frameworks to be exposed.

B T 648 [721] After this fiasco, the Kitkatla became even bolder and many years elapsed before another expedition was sent against them. This time, there was no Bella Bella chief to interfere with the arrangements and after the plans had been discussed for a winter, a flotilla from Bella Coola, Kimsquit and Tal-ia took the water one day in May.

B [722] Nothing of importance took place until, near Kitkatla, a canoe was captured containing a man and his wife. The former's face was marked with a vertical scar, and it was remembered that, four years earlier, when Tsikoa had been attacking Kimsquit, one of the defenders had shot an some distance from his station above the doorway so that its sharpened point pierced the foot of one of the ambushers. This was obviously the same man, so a Kimaqui chief promptly slew him as a fine mark of revenge. From the captive women it was learnt that Tuhoe himself was at Bulle Bulle. There was a golden opportunity, but the Bulle Coole wasted it through divided counsels. Some wanted to proceed to Bulle Bulle to capture Tuhoe himself, others to continue to Kitkatla and wreak during the absence of their warrior-chief. Either plan might have been successful, but as usual there was no central authority and days were wasted in idle talking. At length they determined to assault the village, and cautiously drew nearer for the purpose. The same futile discussion delayed matters, but at last one night some of the attackers lurked in the woods behind the unsuspecting town, while others guarded the canoes hidden at a distance.

Meanwhile Tuhoe, while at Bulle Bulle, had heard that a Bulle Coole raiding party had set out. He knew that no objection would be his own village, so he hurried home in a fast travelling canoe with relays of paddlers to obviate delay through camping at night. Under cover of darkness, he passed unnoticed into Kitkatla at the very time that the attackers were in ambush. Though unaware of this, Tuhoe acted with promptness. He called his followers together and told them what he had learnt at Bulle Bulle, and that from the time which had elapsed since he heard the news, the enemy must be at hand. Drums were beaten and all the community called together in conclave. The lurking Bulle Coole overheard the preparations, but could not make up their minds to attack immediately; some wanted to do so, others desired to wait for dawn, and once more lack of leadership caused an opportunity to slip by. Just as daylight the assault was launched. With a wild yell the Bulle Coole fell upon the town, but the Kitkatla were on the alert, their arms beside them, and the onslaught was a failure. The first rush was driven back, as the assault degenerated into a sporadic musketry duel which continued throughout the day with advantage to the ambushers although the casualties were heavy on both sides. Tuhoe owned a small brass cannon which he fired as a signal to other towns of the Kitkatla to rally to his assistance, and the Bulle Coole were forced to consider the possibility of hostile reinforcements arriving at any time. Some of the attackers tried to burn the village by crawling on the roofs and setting them alight, but the very defenders pulled them through the smoke-vents and killed them. In the afternoon several canoes came hurrying up, filled with allies summoned by the King of the canoes. As they sped past the place where the Bulle Coole canoes were concealed, they seized one of the warriors and took a few long-range shots at him. One struck him on the wrist, and the

D. McDermith E-5 (1929-1934) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA
Transfer NE 15

B PEL
L48

[illegible] pain caused him to shriek in agony. Judging by the sound that the guards had been overcome and were being killed, the raiders were thrown into confusion. With one accord they abandoned the attack and fled to their canoes, those who first reached them pushed off at once, abandoning their less fortunate comrades to their fate.

One of Tsakwi's wives was a Bella Bella who heard that a dearly loved relative, a certain Nuxmalnx, might be among the assailants. In the confusion that followed the war she called out to her native speech:

"Nuxmalnx, are you there?"

The Bella Coola had actually been accompanied by a number of Bella Bella volunteers including Nuxmalnx, but he had made good his escape. Another Bella Bella, her kinsman, realized that this was a chance for help and called back, imitating the voice of the man addressed. The woman was deceived and told him to drag one of the Kitkatla canoes into the water and that she would bring paddles as soon as she could do so unobserved. Alone forty of the attackers took possession of a large canoe, but their courage failed as they waited for the women with paddles and they shoved off, propelling the craft with their hands. Aided by an off-shore wind, they were able to send away from the coast and had almost reached a river when they saw another canoe coming to Tsakwi's assistance. A fight ensued, the refugees were driven ashore to the island and their canoe carried off. Even in their perilous position, the party continued to struggle. Some secured the needs for yellow cedar from the bark of which the Carriers used to make canoes, as we well know, although we generally procured by the coastal tribes. Five had crept over the island so that only two canoe were found, the discovery hastily pushed back from them. Informed in one safe canoe, and pushed off with their friends, having never been recovered. The two craft ultimately reached Bella Coola after various adventures.

Among the seven abandoned were two uncles of the father of the man from whom this account was obtained, as well as the grandfather of a middle-aged Kwakiutl man with whom the tale was also discussed. The two brothers were warriors, men whose bravery had been celebrated. One [illegible] the other:

"You are always boasting of your valour, now is your opportunity to display it. Swim across and steal a canoe from the village we attacked."

Thus urged, the man agreed to make the attempt, first requesting the others not to kill his brother, the originator of the scheme, in case of his non-return, though this was the usual penalty for proposing a plan which led to the death of another. But the Bella Bella who had intercept Nuxmalnx's voice insisted on risking his life. He stripped, tied a knife to his head, took a board for support, and swamp the chief. He had no

B
[illegible]

Schlesinger, R. S. (1922-1924) 1948
MSS. Collection MSS
Transkripsie MS 15

difficulty in getting near the village, but the dogs sniff his approach and their barking so demented him that he returned. Now is now the turn of the men to whom the scheme had first been suggested. We took the same fear and pushed off into the darkness. A celebration of victory was taking place, so that he was able to land unheard on the beach and mingle without suspicion among the many strangers who had assembled to Tshaka's aid. These included allies among whom were Zulus and others whose faces were unfamiliar to the residents of the village itself. After walking around for some time, the Sala Cafe noticed a house of suitable size at the end of the village. He joined a group walking in that direction, but detached himself by making some excuse when near the desired point. Once out of sight behind the house, he waited until he was unheard and moved the craft a few feet, again he waited, then shifted it once more, until he was ultimately able to launch it. By great good fortune, he was able to slip in unheard, and managed to return his companions although he had only his hands and a few pieces of wood with which to paddle. The seven remained on the site for two days more, making paddles and waiting until all suspicion of the proximity of the strangers had passed.

Then they launched their craft and moved homewards. Ignorant of what events thereof, they determined to follow the well-known coast, though this course exposed them to constant danger and necessitated travelling by night only. There was no little darkness, however, that they could neither ground nor approach their goal of land. On the eighth day, when lying near Hlatikulu Bay, they were almost starving. Tot Gwai, one of the warriors, said to his brother Ojambelungu:

'Do you want us to die of starvation? We cannot go on this way, let us camp for a few days and then, we marine when the danger.'

Ojambelungu agreed, and set off with a paddle, telling his companions not to worry even if he were absent four days since he did not know the country, and might have difficulty in finding game. Another hunter, Lumbumbumbu, went off with a paddle in the other direction but was returned unsuccessful and discouraged, though Tot Gwai cheered him by saying that he was sure his brother would succeed. Before night Ojambelungu and his mother brought back a fat buck which was divided among the starving wanderers. On that day we the far unwelcomed, but hunger so far down than to build a small fire and cook the meat in this way so that the minimum of heat and flame was required. Thus strengthened, they eventually reached home.

Even those who had fled on the arrival of the four wanderers had difficulties in reaching home owing to ignorance of the route. Some of the women reached Kokobe in safety, whence the occupants proceeded

J. McDermith R-5 (1911-1914) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

[illegible] overland to Kimsquit, and from there to Bella Coola. The crew of another craft lost their way among the islands and fiords and wandered around for days until their food was exhausted. They were then near China Hat where they could have landed in safety but, thinking that they were still in hostile territory, they feared to camp and hunt. In fact, spurred by hunger, they determined to catch some eagles, the only living creatures in sight. A rude shelter was built on the shore, a hook was placed before it, and one of the party gashed the fleshy part of his back until the blood was sufficiently freely to fill the vessel and serve as bait. A companion hid himself and clubbed the eagles as they swooped down to the fresh blood. Though the food was coarse and bad to be sure now, it enabled the refugees to continue their journey home.

[illegible] Another canoe was surprised at the entrance to Douglas Channel by a party of Kitimat who slew all the crew except a certain Tyi-t'ismoose who succeeded in escaping into the woods. Thinking that the survivor would be driven down to the beach by hunger, the Kitimat patrolled the shore for days, but he eluded them by travelling overland, though his only food was uncooked plums and a single gull, killed by a stone. Tyi-t'ismoose was a Kimsquit man whose wife was from Kitlope, but whenever, fearing of his plight, watched the shore of Gardner Canal, hoping that he might be able to reach that village. He managed to do so, though at the last gasp, and was taken to Kitlope whence he returned to Kimsquit. This was the first time that anyone had travelled overland from Douglas Channel to Gardner Canal.

Still another canoe actually landed at Kitimat where the crew was butchered except for five men who fled to the forest. One of them, Frank, uncle of a man whose seventy years old in 1900, had made several sealing expeditions into the interior and was familiar with part of the coast. He acted as guide, but soon lost his way and the five wandered for months through the rugged country, often in dire straits for food, and becoming more and more weary. Their journey began in May, and [illegible] by October they were all exhausted through hardship and lack of food. Frank himself was the first to give up the struggle, saying that he could go no further. He asked his companions to make him as comfortable as possible, and then to leave him, reputedly they laid him on some evergreen boughs, and covered off, expecting their own death within a few days. Soon after their departure, there was a violent thunderstorm and, at the moment of a tremendous clap, Thunder, himself, appeared to the dying wanderer. The supernatural one went to a near-by creek and dipped up water which he brought Frank to drink, when he had done this four times, the man felt as if he had had a hearty meal. Thunder then told Frank to close his eyes. He did so, then the supernatural one

: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15

body to his own house, preparatory to burying it. It was April, but hey were waiting, a violent thunderstorm blew up from the east, the time that such had ever occurred at that season. Thunder had mised to come to Xnalk's aid, but the latter had died too suddenly make any appeal; the supernatural one had just learnt of his pro-d's death and had come rushing to his assistance. Realizing the ger, the executioner and his friends hastily buried the corpse, throwing it a number of blood-stained cloths, and finally stamping down the th. There was a furious hurricane; trees were uprooted, houses shook, earth over the grave seethed as if in a whirlpool and chunks of it e carried up into the air. Only the potency of the blood on the the prevented the return to life of Xnalk.[9]

This second unsuccessful attack on the Kitkatla so disheartened the la Coola that they made no more raids on their northern foemen who, ched with victory, became even bolder than before. As usual, the nquit and Tsi'is people suffered more than the inhabitants of the n valley. On one of these forays, about 1835, the Kitkatla killed lowalind, a brother of Pudus, the leading chief of the Bella Coola at the e. This was contrary to all the rules of warfare since he was a member one of the leading families and the donor of many potlatches, a man e name was as well known as that of Pudus, Nekhpudum of Fort ppert, or Tsihoa himself. The fame of such chiefs was enough to protect em except during the actual heat of conflict, and the Bella Coola were ly angry.

A few years later a single canoe came paddling up North Bentinck m and was beached about half a mile from the head. Scouts investi-ted, and returned to Kimsquit with news that the occupants were katla, and that Tsihoa himself was among them. At once there was ted discussion among the people of the lower valley. Many who had t relatives in the protracted struggle wished to wipe out the party; ers, to see what they wanted. A few daring individuals stalked ough the forest and fired on the visitors at long range; they were swered, not with bullets, but by the four times holding aloft of a mouse-n, a sign of friendly intentions. If the strangers had fired on the scouts, a fight would have ensued, but this peaceful reception disarmed suspicion.

[9] This tale is a curious illustration of the manner in which supernatural elements become woven into accounts which have an historical basis. It is to be remembered that the wanderers were in a suggestible state owing to privation, and readily followed that supernatural powers must have assisted them. Xnalk was feared as a sorcerer, and probably boasted of a visitation from Thunder during his wanderings. This was accepted and the incorporation of impossible incidents followed in due course.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15

Tsihoo remained encamped for several days, during which time he sent word to the Bella Coola that he regretted the death of Kelowalist and had come to make peace. He added that his followers had tried to dissuade him, saying that he would be killed, but he had answered that he was too great a man to allow fear to influence his actions.

Having waited for several days, the party came up the Bella Coola River, their canoe loaded with presents and eagle down, while Tsihoo's brother, Nesulo'e, wore the mask of his tsesinam as further proof of friendly intentions. It was unusual to display one except in a tsesinam ceremonial, but this was an unprecedented event; he knew that he might soon be killed and he preferred to die while bearing the obvious mark of incorporation with some incident of an ancestral myth. The canoe was beached opposite the house of Pathe where the crew blew eagle down into the air to mark their peaceful mission. Men had gathered from all parts of the Bella Coola valley and several hot-heads wished to disregard the safe-conducts and slay their enemies, a course which they had recommended for several days and had tried to precipitate by overt acts against the Kitkatla. Pathe himself had not spoken, but he now appeared and advised the people not to harm Tsihoo, since overbearing hostility would result. Though his wishes did not entirely quiet the angry ones, they certainly ensured the Kitkatla of a welcome. Pathe brought forward a cause-skin, and told some of his people to hold it spread so that, when Tsihoo leaped from his canoe, he would land upon it, and could be carried to the house without putting foot to the ground. Tsihoo answered proudly that there was nothing on earth strong enough to support him, since his many protections had made him incomparably heavy. None the less, he accepted the honour, as assistance to landing shown only to mighty chiefs, and was carried into the house where he was seated in the far right-hand corner, an honourable location. Pathe invited all the people in the vicinity, slaves as well as Bella Coola, and the inner partitions of the house had to be removed to provide space for the throng.

Though Pathe had decided against the immediate killing of the Kitkatla, he had concocted a scheme to test their bravery and the sincerity of their desire for peace. No one knew of this except his nephew, Ne-emakai, who was to carry it out. When all were seated, the latter appeared, his face smeared with soot, and his hair tied up in a top-knot with wasal skins as is customary during war. Ne-emakai moved menacing around the house, brandishing a musket and repeatedly pointing it at Tsihoo in a threatening manner. If the Kitkatla had shown nervousness, particularly if one of them had fired his own musket, a massacre would have resulted. But they remained unmoved, confident in the prestige of their leader, while he knew that though his body might be

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5
Tsimshian NE15

B T 648 728

killed, his reputation would only be increased by the manner of his death. At length Nowakai fired into the air; not until a shower of eagle down was blown forth did anyone realize that his musket had been loaded with nothing more deadly. This marked the establishment of friendly relations.

B T [595] [481]

The Kitkatla had brought their own singers,[1] who now began to beat out time for Tsihoo to perform a cound dance. He was followed by several other chiefs, and then the strangers gave presents to influential Bella Coola on the most lavish scale. Pathe likewise performed a cound dance, and bestowed gifts on the guests to validate it; such were, of course, not returnable. A meal was then served, and after that Tsihoo made a speech of which the gist was that the Bella Coola had previously known his achievements as a warrior, they now knew his nobility and bravery in risking his life, and that the name Tsihoo could never be forgotten, irrespective of his own fate.

Tsihoo left soon afterwards. It was somewhat difficult fully to comprehend his motive in thus risking his life. Undoubtedly his main object was to display his valour and disregard of danger. Moreover, it gave him an opportunity to impress these qualities upon the Bella Coola, and thus to exhibit his prowess actually within the enemy's camp, which must have been a source of commendous gratification to him. The alleged motive, regret at killing a chief, may have been a contributory factor.

B T 648 556 574 [72]

Although this visit was an intimation from Tsihoo that the Bella Coola need have no further fear of him, the suspicions of years could not be immediately allayed; in fact, an occasional skirmish still took place although Tsihoo himself refrained from fighting. A few years after his visit to Bella Coola, Pathe prepared to give a potlatch at which he determined to invite the northern chief. Many of the Bella Coola doubted whether the Kitkatla warriors would respect the safe-conduct usually afforded to envoys, and no one was anxious to bear the invitation. At length six chiefs volunteered for the task and set out, though with many misgivings. They stopped en route at Bella Bella where a chief of that tribe, Omgai, joined the party; he thought that he would have influence with the Kitkatla and might add protection to the Bella Coola. Fearing to be seen by any small Kitkatla bands, the delegation travelled only by night until they could actually reach Tsihoo's village. As they paddled up, they indicated their mission by singing one of Pathe's cound songs. On hearing this, Tsihoo asked one of his Bella Coola slaves whose song it might be, and when he answered that it was one of Pathe's, Tsihoo despatched a chief, Kwiwan, to invite the guests to his house. Omgai was thankful when he saw this man approaching, were he felt that it heralded a friendly welcome. The party was conducted to Tsihoo's

[1] [i.e. to the peace negotiations – Analyst]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5
Tsimshian NE15

B
T 648
552 574

dwelling in spite of the fact that a Cannibal dance was taking place there. All the messengers were Ancient in Bella Coola, while three had Bella Bella rights as well; Tsakas allowed the latter to take part in the ceremony while the former were treated as uninitiated. They were greatly interested in the details of the Kitkatla rites, which were exceedingly strict and included the eating of a corpse. At the conclusion, the envoys received their share of the small presents which were distributed.

At this juncture one of the envoys, Xwaxwaxlaxla, fell seriously ill and was cured only through the attention and care of one of Tsakas's wives. This delayed their departure so that it was a long time before they and the invited guests finally set out, much to the envy of two Bella Coola slaves who greatly desired to return home.

Meanwhile the long absence of the messengers had filled the Bella Coola with fear that they had been massacred, and there was great rejoicing when a large flotilla was seen approaching. The guests landed on the shore at Sumpa where the customary ceremonious greetings were exchanged. Many of the Bella Coola, inflamed by ancient wrongs, endeavoured to break the canons of the guests and in other ways to threaten them, but Pudas finally succeeded in restraining them and establishing some kind of discipline. The ceremony that took place that night in the house of Pudas is said to have been the most spectacular ever witnessed in Bella Coola. One old man who, as a mere lad, had attended, grew eloquent as he spoke of the lavish display. Unfortunately, he had had no part in the rites and could remember none of the details except that his childish mind was amazed at a dance in which a masked performer, representing a whale, vomited grease on the fire to give light. Tsakas did not return home immediately, but remained in Bella Coola until spring when the weather was more suitable for travelling.

B
T
648
721

This exchange of hospitality virtually ended all hostility, although the Bella Coola and other tribes of the central coast still regard their northern neighbours with dislike and suspicion. Between 1880 and 1890 a party of Rivers Inlet people went to Kitkatla to prepare eulachon grease, for which purpose a number of Kitkatla had also camped there. Among them was Tsakas, a descendant of the warrior chief whose exploits have been mentioned, and his nephew. One day the latter was gambling with Mimsa-a, a Rivers Inlet youth who had recently been initiated into the Ancient society and was consequently decorated with a cedar-bark collar. Mimsa-a's luck was amazing and some of the Kitkatla's friends asked him why he continued to play with a man who was clearly in such close contact with the supernatural that he could not lose. Heedless of this advice, Tsakas's nephew continued until finally, losing his temper, he

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5
Tsimshian NE15

B
T 648
721

seized his adversary's decorations and threw them on the ground. It is well known that anyone who does so, even if it be the wearer, will be punished. Mauw-a was prevented from fighting by his recent initiation, but he shamed his opponent by returning his winnings. The next day the Rivers Inlet people left for home without stopping to collect grease, since Mauw-a's father, Pudu,[1] thought that it would be dangerous to linger in the neighbourhood of Tsdzu, who was angry at his nephew's defeat and the insult shown to him.

The Kitkatla remained at Kitkata for the chicken season and then returned home. Soon afterwards Tsdzu's nephew fell ill, and died in spite of the efforts of the most powerful shamans. They attributed his death to Mauw-a, and Tsdzu swore revenge on the Rivers Inlet people. The latter, hearing of this, avoided the Kitkatla as much as possible, although the establishment of British rule had made open warfare impossible.

One July, a number of years later, a party left Rivers Inlet to hunt sea-lions on Virgin Rocks. The captain of the canoe was a Newitin man who had married a Rivers Inlet woman, and with him were nine Bella Coola and several Rivers Inlet people including two female relatives of Mauw-a. In a heavy fog they passed their destination, and when, having realized their mistake, they turned back, they found a party of Kitkatla encamped on the rocks. The northerners made pronouncements of friendship and lent them tents. When they had settled down, the Kitkatla suggested target shooting as a recreation, although their real motive was to exhaust the ammunition of the Rivers Inlet people. When this sport began to pall, the two parties gambled till nightfall, when they cooked their numbers together as proof of mutual trust and went to bed. A Kitkatla half-breed, who had taken the lead in seeking amicable overtures, now learnt that his companions planned to slay the Rivers Inlet people; he tried to dissuade them, but was told that interference from him would only cause his own death. One of the Rivers Inlet men, Sp'ukis, suspicious of treachery, declined to sleep with his fellows and spent the night in the canoe, his musket and two shells beside him. His fears were well-founded; as dawn the Kitkatla cut down the tents of the Rivers Inlet people and clubbed them to death with axes as they were struggling under the folds. Sp'ukis was awakened by the turmoil and fired twice, each time killing a Kitkatla, but his ammunition was then exhausted and he was shot down. The murderers dug a large hole on the beach, threw in the corpses of their victims and rolled a heavy log over the top. Unknown to the others, the half-breed wrote on this in English that something lay below. The Kitkatla made an effort to hide the

[1] The relation of the Bella Coola chief with the same name.

2; McIlwraith E-3 (1922-124) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15

B
T 648
721

marks of the tragedy and then returned home, hoping that suspicion would not fall on them.

As time went on, the people in Rivers Inlet began to worry at lack of news from the hunters. A passing traveller reported having seen smoke on Virgin Rocks, and this reassured them temporarily, but when several months had passed a search-party was sent out. One of the crew was a Cariboo who had married a Rivers Inlet woman and had long resided there, but had not forgotten his knowledge of all that pertained to woodcraft. On arrival at the island, they found a canoe of the missing party drawn up on the beach above high tide, though there was no trace of their friends. The Cariboo went ahead to investigate, warning his comrades to remain at a distance. He found the marks of buck-shot, smoothed over as if to obliterate them, but so sufficiently effaced to hide them from his sharp eyes. This attempt at concealment indicated foul play, and the Cariboo called his companions and pointed out the signs to them. None of the sea-line hunters had used ammunition of this kind, but it was known that some Kitkatla had been in the vicinity about the time of the disappearance and were armed therewith. As a matter of fact, the marks were actually those of the shotgun which Ga'ddlis had been killed. The Cariboo next found potato patches, trodden into the earth by boots; none of the hunters had taken footwear with them, but it was known that such had been worn by the Kitkatla. Having made these discoveries, the search-party returned home. Foul play was suspected; everything indicated that it had not been a struggle between members of the same party, but there was too little evidence to convict the Kitkatla.

A few weeks later a Bella Bella chief happened to be in Rivers Inlet and told the people that he had seen Kitkatla canoe returning northwards with two coffins. He had told who were dead, but though they told him, he judged that the party had been engaged in some illegal operation from their reticence concerning the cause of death. Still later, a young Bella Coola travelled to Vancouver on the steamboat with a Kitkatla who told him of the slaughter, ignorant of his confidant's tribe. Finally, the Kitkatla half-breed, who had opposed the killing, began to drop hints of what had happened. In former times this would have led to war, but the evidence was not conclusive enough for a court of justice. The Kitkatla informed their Indian Agent that they feared an attack from the tribes which were hostile to them, and asked him to lead a peace delegation to the former's village. He did so,[*] much to the surprise of the missionary established there. The conference led to nothing; the Kitkatla denied all knowledge of the fate of the missing hunters, but the suspicions of the Rivers Inlet and Bella Coola were increased rather than

[*] An attempt was made to verify this statement from official documents.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15
Kwakiutl NE10

B T 648 721

lessened. This ill-will has continued up to the present time. In 1920 word reached Bella Coola that Tsilxa had approached a Quatsino chief and asked him to spread the rumour that the missing party had been drowned at sea, at the same time admitting what had taken place. A year later a half-breed Kwatcino, hunting on Virgin Rocks, happened to unearth the bones buried beneath the log. There the matter rests for the moment as far as the Bella Coola are concerned, but they express the opinion that the continued ill-will may cause bloodshed at any time.

It must be remembered that the above account of this recent friction with the Kitkatla is of a partisan nature. No attempt was made to learn the Kitkatla side of the matter, so that the version here given may or may not be the truth. It has been inserted as an illustration of Bella Coola attitude, and of the manner in which, formerly, doubts, fears and suspicions led to war. This would certainly have been the case in the present instance but for the restraining influence of the white man's rule.

KWAKIUTL WAR

B K 648 721 K [622]

Only slightly less feared than the Kitkatla were the Kwakiutl-speaking peoples, especially those inhabiting Knight's Inlet, Kingcome Inlet, and Blunder Harbour, who were known collectively as Djelldana. As Tsilxa was feared among the northern raiders, so was Sisiid among the southerners. Bella Coola itself was too difficult of access and too densely populated to be successfully attacked, but Tal'ia was subject to constant raids. Even more discouraging was the constant danger of lurking foemen; one year it would be a hunter who was surprised and killed, the next a party of women would be carried off while picking berries.

B [712]

The raiders became so bold that the inhabitants of one of the Tal'ia villages decided to defend themselves by building a stockade. Everyone assisted in the task, so that the fortification was soon completed. It consisted of a fence of vertical logs with a platform running around near the top, on the inner side, on which the defenders could stand, and a water-gate through which canoes could enter at high tide. It surrounded five or six houses and was planned as a place of refuge for all the Tal'ia villages. One of the tree-trunks brought for the stockade was hollow, and there was considerable discussion as to whether it should be used, but finally it was set up with the others. A Kwakiutl who was visiting Tal'ia at the time took notice of this weakness, but no one seems to have suspected that he would inform his friends of it when he went home.

B K [724]

The summer after the stockade had been completed the Kwakiutl discussed the usual raid on Tal'ia; one of the principal chiefs opposed an expedition on the ground of the reputed strength of the defence, but

[a famous Tsimshian chief - ANALYST]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
KwaKiutl NE10

he was over-ruled by the popular wish and the raiders set out. They had chosen an opportune time, since most of the people were absent hunting and fishing; in fact, three men and three children were the sole occupants of the fortified village. They saw the approaching marauders in the distance, closed all openings, and prepared to defend themselves. The Kwakiutl felled a large tree and with this as ram attempted to batter down the gate. It was too strongly built, and while struggling with it, the attackers offered excellent targets to those within. One of them, Iwung, was a good shot and took heavy toll. Convinced that the gate was too strong for them, the Kwakiutl turned their attention to the hollow log; their ram failed to shatter it and they again suffered heavy casualties. Nor had the defenders escaped scatheless. One of the three was struck by an enemy bullet, another fell from the fighting-platform and accidentally shot himself, while Iwung's powder began to fail. Fearing that all was lost, he told one of the little boys to open a concealed rear door* and flee into the woods with the two smaller children. The three managed to escape unobserved from the village and hid themselves under leaves. The Kwakiutl did not know how weakly the stockade was defended, and Iwung disguised the fact by rushing from one part of the platform to another and calling out in various tones as if a number of people were speaking. He could fire only occasionally on account of shortage of powder, but the ruse was effective and at last the raiders withdrew, carrying their dead with them. Two of them wandered into the forest instead of accompanying their comrades; they must have died of starvation, since their corpses were found in an emaciated condition several weeks later.

B K 648 726 [721]

Not content with defeating the raiders almost single-handed, Iwung embarked in a small canoe and cautiously followed the course which he knew they must have taken. His children had been slain by the Kwakiutl during a previous raid, a circumstance which had so embittered him that he regretted the escape of a single one of them, and was determined to treat even their dead with ignominy. At length he noticed a number of crows congregated on a sandy beach, and rightly judged that this indicated the spot where the vanquished had buried their slain. Iwung exhumed one of the corpses and impaled it on a stake in a crouching position.

B K 648 727

Meanwhile the relatives of the raiders, expecting the usual easy success, had gathered near their leader's house. They were filled with apprehension when they heard a mourning song from the returning canoes, and anxiously called out to learn the fate of different members

K 727

*Probably a mere chink in the stockade.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE5
KwaKiutl NE10

K 727 B K 721 648 K B 648 727 B 727

of the expedition. Some were able to answer for themselves, but to many queries the reply came that the one asked about had been slain.

This defeat did not by any means discourage the Kwakiutl, whose forays continued as before. On one occasion, as they were returning homewards, they noticed several canoes drawn up on the west side of South Bentinck Arm, not far from its junction with Burke Channel. The raiders cautiously landed and stalked the unsuspecting owners, Bella Coola who had landed to cut stakes for a salmon-weir. The Kwakiutl bore down upon them with a rush; unarmed and taken unaware, the Bella Coola could make no real resistance. One of them managed to flee into the deeper woods, but the rest were either killed or captured. Among the prisoners was a chief, SnêÎkum, who was wearing a handsome marten-skin cloak at the time. His captor promptly appropriated this, leaving the man naked.

Elated at this success, the Kwakiutl continued their return journey. When near Kwatna, they encountered a fierce southeast gale which made progress impossible; at this point cliffs rise so precipitously on either side of Burke Channel that there is not even the semblance of a harbour, and the only chance to weather the storm was by anchoring. There was considerable anxiety as to whether or not the weight would hold, but it did so, and the canoe remained tied, now carried to the full extent of the mooring-rope almost against the cliffs, now to the same distance far out in mid-channel. Towards night it began to rain and the cold grew bitter. The crew, assured that the anchor would hold and weary from their exertions, went to sleep, as did most of the prisoners. SnêÎkum, without covering of any kind, was too uncomfortable to follow their example. As the canoe was toussed near the cliff, he happened to notice a narrow ledge just above water, with a small cedar growing in a nearby cleft. Here was a possibility of escape and the chief became alert at once. When next the canoe was dashed near he examined the cliff more closely, and decided that it might be possible to scale it. At any rate death was better than captivity, and he determined to make the venture. As the craft came shorewards again, he plunged overboard into the rough water and succeeded in grasping the tree-root with the aid of which it was an easy matter to pull himself to the ledge. The surf was breaking over it and he was bitterly cold, but he managed to reach another root and to scramble up to a second ledge. From it he gained a wider projection where he could rest in comfort. His escape had been unobserved, and as SnêÎkum looked downward he could see the canoe tossing to and fro at the end of the cable; there was a large boulder near him, and he thought of tipping this over to sink the craft, but refrained out of consideration for the prisoners. From this point the climb upwards was comparatively simple,

2:McIlwraith K-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Kwakiutl NE10

B 727

and Sal'lacaw soon discovered a protected hollow where, having covered himself with leaves and cotton wood, he went to sleep. When he awoke in the morning the war-party had moved away.

Without clothing to protect him from thorny bushes, Sal'lacaw could not pass through the forest, so he climbed above the tree-line and made his way to the west side of South Bentinck Arm, not far from the place where he had been captured. With much difficulty and many scratches, he made his way down to sea-level and paddled across the fiord on a log. Then he climbed up once more, and crossed the mountains to Bella Coola above the tree limit. The one survivor of the attack had taken the same route when bearing the evil tidings. Women were wailing and weeping when a naked man was seen coming down the mountain-side; it was Sal'lacaw. They welcomed him as one returned from the dead; in earlier years he had boasted that, if ever captured, he would escape, and it was recognized that he had made good his promise.

B
K
641
726

The defeat at Tl'ii rankled in the mind of Sawid, who made another attack on the attackers a few years later. This time it was fully manned and the assailants suffered even more severely than before. As they advanced with a rush, one of the defenders fired a powerful charge and the bullet passed through the bodies of several of the raiders. This so discouraged them that they dragged away the bodies of the slain and departed, having killed only two Tl'ii men. As they were going homewards, they chanced to pass beneath a precipitous mountain on which two young Bella Coola were hunting. The latter fired on them at long range and were fortunate enough to engineer several hits.

After this second failure, Sawid decided to make Bella Coola itself his next objective. With this aim in view, a party of Kwakiutl raiders set out one year. As is customary, they hid during the daytime when in hostile territory, and happened to be in a small harbour below Green Bay when a party of Kitamaats, en route to Bella Coola, landed there for water. As one of them, the uncle of a man of Sky in 1923, was drinking at a stream he was fired upon, whereon he heavily concealed himself. A skirmish ensued in which the same man was wounded in the arm. By this time he was some distance from the sea, and he tried to crawl back over the crest of a low ridge to rejoin the shore. Suddenly he felt a sharp pain in the back and thought he had been hit once more, he continued his flight till he found that his back-wound had become infected, and was the cause of the second discomfort. He threw it off and succeeded in escape. Another Kitamaats man was wounded in the back but hid himself within a hollow tree.

After this trifling success, the marauders decided to return home. Early the next morning, when paddling down Burke Channel on the east of Kwatna, a woman called down to them from the upper slopes of the mountains on the south-east. She was one of a party of Kwatna people who were picking berries; their canoes were lying in a bay beneath, where the youths of the party were resting and sleeping, ready to climb up and carry down the baskets of berries as the women filled them. Islwalsk, the woman who had called out, had done so under the impression that those passing were Bella Coola, and though one of her companions recognized her error and bade her be silent, the information had been given. The raiders would have passed in mid-channel unaware that anyone was in the vicinity, but now they quickly crossed the bay and slew the few lads who were with the canoes. Next they endeavoured to capture the women and started climbing up to the purpose, but as soon as they entered the woods, they lost sight of the fugitives who were on the open slopes above. One of the canoes was paddled back to mid-channel, whence here was a clear view so that the crew could call out and direct their comrades' pursuit. Two of the women had started climbing as soon as they saw the warriors turn towards, they escaped over the mountains and reached Kwatna with word of the affray. With one exception, the others kept together and sought refuge in a narrow cave, the entrance of which they were able to defend; the attackers did not dare linger for a sign, so they too escaped. But Islwalsk, the cause of the whole disaster, was cut off from her companions and hurried from place to place as she strove frantically to get away. When finally brought to bay, she struggled furiously and refused to be taken alive, so her throat was cut and the body decapitated. She was a member of a chief's family, a woman who had been confirmed as a good one, so the murder was strongly contrary to all natural customs. If she had been taken prisoner, she would have been ransomed and the matter would have ended, but her death demanded revenge.

2: McIlwraith K-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NE6
KulaKicH NE10

When the two women who had fled overland reached Kwatna, a party of warriors set out immediately, but could do no more than bring back the women who had hidden in the cave. Meanwhile the Kwakiutl continued their voyage and encamped at Jacobsen's Bay where they watched a Bella Bella canoe pass up the channel towards Bella Coola. They concluded that the Kwatna people, whose canoes they had destroyed, would lay this passing craft and slay each Bella Coola [illegible] resident in the vicinity. So it campaigned, while almost [illegible] news came news from Kwatna of the woman's murder, but by [illegible] time the Kwakiutl had reached home waters.

Islwalsk's parents had been Kwatna people, but [illegible] was a Bella Bella, and she had Bella Coola ancestry as well, [illegible] members of these three tribes were all affronted by this killing of a [illegible]. At Bella

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
KwaKiutl NE10

B 726
787

For some time no one was willing to take the risk of hitting a comrade, but Kwalatal continued his request until a good shot took careful aim and fired. The bullet cut the knot and the warrior's scanty locks fell streaming over his face; he was partially bald so that his top-knot was thin and collapsed easily. Everyone was pleased at this incident as foretelling victory. Those whose courage had been established either by magical means or by the distribution of wealth, often deliberately took public risks of this kind to show their bravery.

B
K
648
726

Then the expedition continued, travelling only by night after leaving friendly waters. It was decided to attack the people of Kingcome Inlet, though it is unknown whether that objective had been decided upon before leaving Bella Coola or en route. When close to their goal, a scouting canoe was sent forward, guided by the slave. He led the party into one cove, then into another, without seeming to arrive anywhere; the scouts feared that he was deceiving them, so they landed, and while two or three lay in hiding, the others took Siwid back to the main party. One Bella Coola had a slight knowledge of the route, so he was sent forward to join the hidden scouts; their canoe was cautiously paddled forward in the darkness till the crew was able to land unobserved about a quarter of a mile from the objective. Kingcome Inlet is famous for its oolachen, which attract fishermen from all parts of the coast; on the day previous a canoe from the north had arrived for the spring run and reported the departure of the Bella Coola expedition. From the time which had elapsed, the Kingcome Inlet people knew that this must now be in the vicinity. Two canoes filled with men were sent out from the threatened village; they scoured the neighbouring coasts, but although one of the crews almost stumbled over the hidden scouts, they found no trace of them, and returned, reporting that no enemy was near. Having avoided those who were looking for them, the Bella Coola scouts returned to the main party and preparations were made to attack at dawn.

The warriors gained positions in ambush behind the village without being discovered, and just before daybreak the assault was launched. The Djaldzana, taken unawares, could offer no real resistance; many of them were killed or captured although Siwid, the chief, himself escaped. The Bella Coola suffered only one casualty, the captain of one of the canoes. During the journey, the warriors on one [illegible] the amounts of food and cedar-bark required, so that his leader, in the store, had received neither and was in no fit condition for fighting. Some of his friends advised him to remain with the canoes and promised to bring him prisoners to guard; the captain refused this offer, rushed into the fight and was slain. It was generally felt that lack of war decorations was responsible.

2; McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6 ●
Kwakiutl NE10

B
K
648 ●
926

As the attackers rushed into the village, the mother of the slave Siwid, suspecting who they might be, cried out in Bella Coola to ask their tribe. A chief replied and added that they had come for revenge. Her son, who had taken his full share in the attack, was told where to find his mother, so he rescued her and brought her to Bella Coola, where she was given an honourable position instead of being treated as a slave. As soon as all resistance was ended, the Bella Coola warriors gathered in the captured village to take stock of their victory. At this juncture someone noticed a canoe-load of Djaldkma trying to steal away unobserved; they had no weapons and the craft was promptly stopped. One of the leading warriors, Siatawkla, uncle of a man about sixty years of age in 1922, had lost several of his relatives during raids from the south, and had joined the expedition for revenge. He came rushing up and slew first one occupant of the canoe, and then another, slowly and deliberately; until, as he became frenzied with blood, he killed them all as quickly as possible. The mother of the Bella Coola slave told the raiders that there were other Djaldkma villages in the neighbourhood from which help would certainly be sent. So the victors seized as many boxes of eulachon grease, blankets, and other valuables as possible, and fled with their captives, not stopping even to fire the village.

B
[721]
[727]
B
[727]

Among the prisoners was a young woman whom the slave Siwid recognized as a chief. He determined to help her to escape and accordingly offered to aid her capture by guarding his prisoner, without telling him of her rank. The Bella Coola had retreated about two miles, their canoes strung out in a long line, when Djaldkma craft, hurrying up from other villages, appeared and a running fight ensued. In the rear Bella Coola canoe were two banners, both expert shots; two loaders kept handing them charges already measured out so that they were able to keep up a rapid and well-directed fire which kept the enemy at a distance. The pursuers being directly astern, several times a single bullet passed through the bodies of two warriors, and on one occasion this led to the capsizing of one of their canoes. While the Bella Coola were watching this manœuvre, Siwid whispered to the girl to dive overboard, that she would be picked up by her friends. By swimming underwater, she deceived the Bella Coola who, though several saw her, thought she was an animal, somewhat of a bullet from one of the marksmen. She reached her fellow-countrymen and was picked up by one of the chasing canoes. Soon afterwards Siwid abandoned the hopeless pursuit. Some of the Bella Coola wanted to camp and feast, but the majority thought it safer to push on and put a safe distance between them and their enemies. There is only one good harbour, Indian Cove, in that part of the coast, where they agreed to stop for a few hours if there were no recent footprints in the

2: McIlwraith K-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE5
Kwakiutl NE10
Bellabella NE5

B K L48 726

sand. None were to be seen, but after a short delay they proceeded homewards where they were welcomed with wild rejoicing. It was well that they had returned promptly since messengers had been sent immediately to Newitti, Fort Rupert, Alert Bay, and other Kwakiutl towns. A strong force was gathered as soon as possible and went straight to Indian Cove, knowing that the Bella Coola would be likely to camp there. When they found that the raiders had already gone by, they pursued no further.

B K L48 721

After this victory, the Bella Coola suffered less from the southern raiders. As before, occasional canoes came north to seize unprotected fishermen or berry-pickers, but the Kwakiutl had leaves a salutary lesson and were less bold than formerly. About four years later, they formed a large expedition to attack the Bella Coola, but the latter were forewarned enough to have it deflected by an accident.

B K B6 L48 726 B6

Some four years before the Bella Coola victory, a Bella Bella chief had decided to give an elaborate potlatch at which he would display an unusual prerogative consisting of twelve stripped platforms within his house. This meant that a large excavation had to be made, around which the uprights were built in receding tiers. The prerogative of building such a house was not unusual, but this was the largest ever known and eight years were spent in its construction. When at last it was finished, the owner prepared to invite guests from all the coastal tribes, including the Kwakiutl. As his envoys to them, heading southward, passed Trangate, near Kwaye River in Fitzhugh Sound, they met a canoe and promptly blew their whistles to make known their business. Instead of coming over to the other side of the channel, the craft was paddled alongside that of the potlatch messengers, who realized that the crew were warriors; it was, in fact, the advance guard of the Kwakiutl expedition against the Bella Coola. Before leaving, the men had sworn to kill every person whom they met, either forgetting or deliberately overlooking the possibility of encountering potlatch envoys.* Now that the time came to carry out their oath, the occupants of the leading canoe hesitated; they had failed to grant it right of way, but feared to begin killing, and while they dallied, the second craft ranged up on the other side. Its crew likewise hesitated to kill the messengers, and waited for the others to start the fray. [illegible] The second, the expedition had been travelling with the canoes in single file, three from each village together, with the leader in the rear craft of his detachment. Within a few minutes, the chief of the leading town came up to the Bella Bella messengers, but [124] [205]

*Omen of a coming potlatch was usually considered so that the Kwakiutl were probably aware of the possibility of meeting messengers, and seem to have deliberately agreed to break the law so each their passion for revenge.

Z:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5
Kwakiutl NE10
Bellabella NE5
B
Bb
K
648
726

he too delayed action until the foremost craft of the west town had arrived. This was continued until the whole flotilla, which had extended for nearly five miles, was ranged in an irregular mass around the canoes. The captain of the last canoe was Qwaqhilla, a Fort Rupert chief and celebrated warrior who had taken an unassuming position because he had Bella Coola blood in his veins and was unwilling to kill his kinsmen; he had been unable to dissuade his fellows from the expedition, but had determined to take little part in it himself. The reputation of this man was so great that it was decided by universal consent to leave the fate of the messengers in his hands. But when Qwaqhilla arrived, the canoes were massed so closely that he could not even see the cause for the delay. He secured a small craft and managed to make his way to the centre of the throng, where he quickly cured up the situation and bitterly upbraided those who had failed to keep their cards. Then he dressed his war accoutrements, killed a single Bella Bella cleanly and ceremoniously, then withdrew to the edge of the flotilla. Thus encouraged, an attack was made on the unfortunate messengers. One of them unshipped the mast, stood in the bow and offered a stout resistance by swinging this around like a heavy club, killing one of his foes. Another plunged overboard and in the confusion managed to swim ashore. When the massacre was over, Qwaqhilla called out in a loud voice:

"Sisq[a] will fall upon us for our sin. Take care. I am going home."

He turned and paddled homewards, followed by the other canoes from his own village. His real reason was to assist his Bella Coola kinsmen, but none of the Kwakiutl realized that. After some discussion, the whole expedition was abandoned.

The Bella Bella survivor eventually made his way home with the news which was received with great astonishment, disregard of a safe-conduct to peaceful messengers being virtually unknown. The ceremony itself was postponed and finally abandoned owing to the death of the intending donor. No punishment was meted out to the offenders by a third tribe, either because the crime was committed against a foreign tribe instead of among themselves, or because the offenders came from so many villages that it was impossible to isolate the guilty.

Bb 648 726 209

After this calamity, Sisq himself made no more efforts to raid the Bella Coola. About twenty-five years later, when he was an old man, he made a peaceful visit northward to establish friendly relations; he was welcomed and no more hostile acts were committed by his followers during their chief's lifetime. On his death, his son, who was also warlike in disposition, tried to stir up trouble but was restrained by the influence of the white men which had become dominant on the coast by that time.

B K 648 721 [728]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

WAR WITH THE CARRIERS

B C 648 721 B [186] B [484]

The only other people with whom the Bella Coola came into frequent conflict were the Carriers. Some of the latter used to spend the winter among the coastal tribes, and had even intermarried with them to a considerable extent, but their mode of life was so different that they were always viewed as foreign in thought and outlook. The Bella Coola despised them for their dirtiness, their fondness for unsavoury food, and, above all, for their ignorance of kusiut and nsask matters. This distrust was mutual and not infrequently led to bloodshed. Owing to the location of the Carriers, they could not be reached by canoes, and the Bella Coola had no liking for long overland journeys. The mobility and relative lack of permanent villages made it difficult to bring the Carriers to bay, so that warfare between them and the Bella Coola usually took the form of a killing followed by a raid for revenge; continued hostility was virtually unknown. The people of the lower villages were scarcely affected, but in former times there seems to have been a considerable amount of intermittent fighting between the inhabitants of the upper valley and the Carriers living east of them.

B C 648 726

The following account, claimed to be historical, describes what was said to be a typical raid, followed by a counter-attack.

On one occasion all the young people of Sɩ̂ɩ̂xɩ, Nakilɩ, Ăxăn-ăn-ɩ, and Ɩ̂xnɩlɩ went on a picnic to a large, clear tract of ground up the valley, where they spent their time, playing and singing. Towards nightfall two young men, who had not come with the others, drew near cautiously until they could call a girl who was a friend of one of the two. She slipped off quietly from her companions and passed the night with her lover and his comrade in the woods. Towards dawn a party of marauding Carrier Indians swooped down on the sleeping picnickers who, unarmed and unprepared, could make no resistance. With the exception of two pretty girls carried off as slaves, all were slain. The three who had been in the woods hurried back to the villages with the news.

The men of the four towns prepared for action. They went to the picnic ground and brought back the corpses for burial, thus learning for

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

B
C 648
926

the first time that two girls were missing. Then they set forth on the track of the Carriers. The raiders, knowing that their assault could not have been heard in any village, and unaware of the three young people hidden in the woods, took no precautions. The first night the pursuers reached the camp where the Carriers had built a long, narrow fire of some kind of wood which emitted no sparks, on either side of which they had placed a long tree-trunk on which to rest their feet as they dried their moccasins at the flames. One of the Bella Coola girls was placed near one end of the fire, the other at the other end on the opposite side. Neither could sleep, but kept watching silently in the hope of being able to escape. Towards dawn one of them was overjoyed to see a Bella Coola scout peering around a tree-trunk. He motioned her to keep silent and she nodded to show that she understood his signal; then he went away. He told his waiting companions how the Carriers were resting with their feet over logs beside the fire, and suggested that they prepare heavy clubs. Having done this, the Bella Coola stole up behind the drowsing enemy. Each selected a victim and broke his leg, or legs, with a crack of the club. Not one of the raiders escaped, the cripples being killed without difficulty. In some manner this event was made the theme of a canoe song.

B
C
648
921

The following unrelated incident is probably historically correct, in outline at least, since it is said to have taken place about 1860, and two of the participants were great-uncles of the man from whom the account was obtained.

One October a number of Carriers were staying at Nusdalt. Their chief was a certain Ṡtmālcow who was distantly related to the people of that village, though he had long since ceased to be regarded as anything but a Carrier. The river was running full and though there were many cohoe and dog salmon in it, they were difficult to catch on account of the roaring torrent. A Nusdalt man, Ṡpūwulīnt, had laid in an abundant store of fish for the winter, but his bad-tempered wife urged him to get her some fresh salmon and he ventured forth. A drifting log struck his canoe; he called out for help, but before it reached him, his craft capsized and he was drowned. Ṡpūwulīnt was a popular man and there was great grief at his untimely death.

B
[55]
[754]

As was so often the case, jealousy was rife in Nusdalt, where a certain Nūndāl had become wealthy. He was a good carpenter, and his riches had been amassed as rewards for making hamat masks, but of course such payments had been made in secret and many people wondered how he had acquired his fortune. This was enough to cause a certain amount of suspicion, and a rival determined to take advantage of it. This man approached Ṡtmālcow and said that he believed Nūndāl was responsible

B for Sqwemlaid's death, that he was sure the wealthy man was really a
C sorcerer, and had used some evil means to cause the fisherman's drowning.
648 Speaulkum was distantly related to the dead man and, thus incited, determined to kill Nuxalk in revenge. That evening, as he was lying playing 921 with his grandchild, the Carrier chief covered his lower and chosen a B weapon against the unsuspecting man's chest. Nuxalk quickly knocked [550] down the muzzle so that the bullet, instead of killing him, merely passed [754] through the fleshy part of his lips. Speaulkum made no attempt to run away. In such cases it rests with the relatives of the injured man whether or not to take revenge, and they usually avoid beginning a vendetta unless strongly driven to it. News of the affair spread down the valley, and two of Nuxalk's nephews, Tsi-kwai and Cpaulkung, came up to investigate. They were both men of considerable influence in the community, both valiant warriors who had taken prominent parts in the unsuccessful attack on Kitkatla a few years before. Realizing that their uncle was not seriously wounded, the two brothers carried him to their canoe, intending to take him home and to disarm the assailant.

During this time, the evil Sisqulis man had been working on Speaulaulkum's fears by telling him that Nuxalk was certain to kill him by magical means, until he decided that he could escape only by murdering the wounded man. His followers learnt of this and tried to dissuade him, B fearing the presence of the two famous warriors. As their canoe was C going downstream, it was caught in an eddy and capsized so that one 648 musket and both cartridge boxes were lost. This seemed to Speaulkum 926 the chance for which he had been waiting: he fired from the bank and Nuxalk fell dead, much to the consternation of his own followers as well as the Sisqulis people.

If Tsi-kwai and Cpaulkung had been ordinary men they would probably have fled downstream but, being fully validated men of valour, this course never occurred to them.* Cpaulkung, who had one charge left in his musket, consulted his brother as to their course of action.

"Nuxalk is dead," his brother replied. "It is probably time for us to die as well. You had better shoot."

Meanwhile Speaulkum had remained on the bank, laughing at the two warriors. Cpaulkung told him to be silent, then fired, instantly killing his uncle's murderer. The Carrier began to run to and fro on the shore, whence they could hear the two brothers talking to each other:

"Let us not think of escaping," said one. "We have displayed our B characters today. If we are to die, let us die."

[903] *The man from whom this account was obtained mentioned as a matter of course that undaunted warriors could never run away; when questioned further, he emphasized that the public validation of bravery made it utterly impossible for them to be from danger.

The other upward, as they paddled to and looked at the bottom of the village, bandfuls of the face that is was full of Carters. The Nuqalit people seem to have remained passive, but the angry Carters were making loud and Ugarikmy spoke proudly to them.

"You would be dead as was chief if we had not lost our weapons."

The two brothers walked slowly up the long sidewalk of the village, while the Carters skulked around, crawing drums, cooing songs and showing scores. Some of the lower stuck to their backs, but long previously both Tit-tmat and Ugarikmy had worn pair of a sutard which had rendered their bodies impervious to such wounds. Around to the upper end of the village, they stopped and waited, making no attempt to defend themselves, until they were killed. In inscrutable throughout the day the Carters caused the two bodies with ignominy, now throwing spears into them, now beating them, and all this time not a single Bella Coola dared even to protest, so much were they filled with fear of the Carters who, when round as they then were, fight like mad dogs. In the late afternoon one of the women threw a knife into the eyes of the fallen warrior. Even this insult did not cause the Nuqalit people themselves, but Wimlo, one of their chiefs, did called upon to take action. Before being captured, he had been a person of importance in his own house and the Bella Coola had allowed him to become a leading member of the Sacrat society; in the course of time he had become entirely reconciled to his fate, and even thought as a Bella Coola which gave him the necessary assurance to address the Carters.

"Wa, wa," he said. "Are the breasts of the sky? I have never seen, nor have I even heard of such a thing as you have done today. Truly you have equal your fate on all that is sacred and powerful."

This speech for the first time brought the severity of their offence home to the Carters. The actual killing of life did not affright them, but in their excitement they had overlooked what was to Wimlo the most obvious sin: they had passed and repassed on the sidewalk outside a house where a Sacrat dance was taking place. Thus reminded of the danger to which they had exposed themselves, the Carters withdrew.

Then the Nuqalit people buried the four victims. Tit-tmat had been a mighty chief and, being decently interred, they would normally have given him no dishonour funeral, but now they acted as if dead and unknown of his position. A man who caused a powerful medicine pass away is in the eyes of the one who had been mutilated by the Carters unknown; as the bodies began to decompose, those who had killed them began to suffer from eye-trouble, and the women became blind. Believing that their sin had caused their misfortune, the Carters fled home.

We will attention to this one in the benefit of the mission series with a the explanation that it will fail to crush those who have broken a sacred law.

[illegible]
Carter NE7
Cuskett NE15
Bellabella NE5

"This account was obtained from a descendant of Tatlenai and Qaaskay who emphatically vouched for its accuracy. Some of the incidents have doubtless been exaggerated, but there is probably a basis of truth, though the passivity of the Nuxalk people is difficult to explain. The killing is said to have taken place about seventy years before 1901, so colourfully accurate traditions of it are not impossible. No punishment was meted out to the Nuxalk behavior since the usual cause, the passing of uncontrolled outside the house where a ceremony was taking place, was committed by strangers, not by inhabitants of the town itself.

[illegible]

The tribes of the natural coast, Bella Coola, Bella Bella, and Rivers Inlet, were frequently engaged with enemies to north or south, but there was seldom serious bloodshed between one another. The following account, however, describes a conflict between the Bella Bella and Rivers Inlet people in which the Bella Coola were not embroiled.

Two favorite foods of the Rivers Inlet people are eulachon oilcake which have become soft after spawning and wild carrots, eaten without grease. Their neighbors, the Bella Bella, consider both these articles of diet to be disgusting, although they are fond of one seaweed which the Rivers Inlet people regard as filthy. As already described, it was customary on gathering of the tribes of the west coast for the hosts to build up their guests in rubbish. On one occasion the Bella Bella did so with reference to what they considered the objectionable food of their guests. A medial dancer, representing a stranger, entered the house and the host enquired whence he came.

"Are you from Fort Rupert?" he asked.

"No."

"From Bella Bella?"

"No."

The dancer pointed to the north as if to indicate the next question.

"Are you from Rivers Inlet?"

"Yes."

"What do you eat here?"

Instead of answering verbally, the dancer dove from beneath his cape

[illegible] ally used but the older people even that beards were by no [illegible] means rare in former times. Careful inquiries were made [illegible] concerning the ancestry of a man, about seventy years of age in 1922, whose curly beard suggests that he must be a half-breed, as indeed he is assumed to be by the white settlers of the valley. His father was Pielo, the most influential chief of recent years, his mother was herself the daughter of an important chief. None of the older men had ever heard the slightest rumour of faithlessness on her part. There were white traders on the coast at the time of his birth, and intercourse with [illegible] alien women and others of low family was not uncommon, but it would have been difficult for a chief's wife to miscondu[illegible] herself, and still more difficult for her to conceal all knowledge of it in view of the open life which prevailed at that period. Moreover, it is said that Pielo himself had a similar beard, as did also the parents of several men who in 1922 were fifty or sixty years of age.

[illegible] Although the possibility of white mixture cannot be overlooked in the case of this one individual, one must not disregard the opinion of the people themselves as between [illegible] general. They are proud of it and regard beards and moustaches as marks of virility given to them by Hyomtsa, baldness and lack of facial hair are considered a sign of weakness. They aver that their fathers and grandfathers were even more hairy than they. Furthermore, they point out with pride that this is a difference between themselves and the tribes of the interior, who are, as they say it seems, "hairless like Chinamen." Finally, it is noteworthy that the hair on the head of many Bella Coola is wavy, or even curly (see Plate [illegible]), instead of straight as among the majority of Indian tribes.*

Character

[illegible] It is an almost impossible task to describe briefly the characteristics of a people. Those of the Bella Coola have

* This characteristic has led the writer to wonder if it could possibly have been [illegible] by the Nootka settlers.

© McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NZS Bellacoola NZS

ally until complete confidence was established, simplifying work in the field to an enormous extent. Equal trust could be placed on these men in other respects; articles of value were repeatedly left in their houses with the absolute certainty that they would be guarded with care. Some few individuals there were, however, who were neither honest nor trustworthy. Bella Coola religion is not concerned with ethics, but public opinion demands honour in dealing with relatives or friends. In former times, for example, debts incurred by an individual were considered a liability by his relations. If a man died after buying goods on credit for a potlatch, his family were disgraced if they failed to pay his bills; now, unfortunately, nothing constrains the younger people, many of whom try to avoid settling even their own debts, much less those of dead relatives. Individual conscience has not replaced the tribal and, more specifically, family influence. Dishonesty in small matters is not uncommon, particularly in dealing with white people who, according to the Bella Coola, were the first to transgress. The older people bitterly lament the lack of morality of the younger and state, probably with entire justification, that they would have been prevented by the open life which prevailed when several families shared a single house. On the whole, however, the average Bella Coola is probably no less honest than the average white man.

Individuals vary enormously in mental ability. In making this investigation, it was necessary to interview all the older people of the tribe. Disregarding those unwilling to provide information, it was found that some absolutely lacked the ability to explain matters with which they were familiar; some did not have sufficient patience to be good teachers; some were so forgetful that they would omit necessary points in a story or account; some were downright stupid, whereas others displayed mental ability of no mean order. In reading ethnological literature, one is apt to think of the troubles experienced by the author, and to overlook the fact that natives have as

[7]
[7a]
[7b]
[7c]
[7d]
[7e]
[7f] [7g]
[7h]

hair with white eagle-down. Warriors who on a war party could not drink more than four mouthfuls of water, she they would be killed. A watchman was appointed to each canoe, who sat in the bow. On landing near the village of their enemies they divided themselves into a number of parties, one house of the village being assigned to each. Then, early in the morning, when all were asleep, they rushed up to the village-stating their war cry "ooo!" They took a stand at the fire which burns in the center of the house, and if any one of the enemies succeeded in taking up his arms and came out of his bedroom they killed him. Then they entered the bedrooms, killed the men, and took the women and children along as slaves. The heads of the dead were cut off, the house burnt, and they returned home singing war-songs. The heads which they had taken along were then washed, and the scalps tied to each end of a pole. When they approached their village one man stood up in the bow of each canoe and swung the pole to which the scalps were attached, and they all sang songs, in which their deeds were recounted. The scalps were raised the higher the longer and fuller the hair. They were used to the dance.

The following tales of war expeditions offer some points of interest. About thirty or forty years ago there was a house at Bella Coola. The people were overland to Knight Inlet, which belongs to the Tsimshian, a tribe of the Kwakiutl, to fall down. The Tsimshian made fun of them, took from them the fish they sought, tore the blankets from the backs of the women, and enslaved many of them. Finally the Bilqula returned home. There they held a council and resolved to make war upon the Tsimshian. The Tsimshian joined them in this expedition. They covered the mountains in two days. When they approached Knight Inlet they sent two spies in advance, who were to avoid the center of houses in the village of the Tsimshian. Early in the morning they attacked the houses and killed a great many men. The Tsimshian could not escape, as they were hemmed in by the river. The Bilqula slew them with knives, lances, and stone axes. They took away the children of the women, leaving them naked, and adjusted them to shameful tasks to revenge for the disgrace put upon their wives and daughters. Then they burnt the village.

About thirty-five years ago the Tsilx'ut were attacked by the Kwakiutl. Originally they intended to attack Nuqa'ltx, but the warrior, according to the narrator, changed their mind, as he always protects the village of Nuqa'ltx. They came in many canoes, with most of the Tsilx'ut were at the lake, which is situated above their town, fishing. Men were were in charge of the village, and a number of old men and women had also remained at home. The father of Ts'ak'ulx'ila, who still is one of these people, happened to be out picking berries, accompanied by his wife. He saw the canoes passing by and kept himself hidden. The village of Tsilx was at that time surrounded by a strong stockade, which consisted of a double row of palisades covered with boards. At each corner there was a strong box fastened on the stockade like a tower. Here watchmen were stationed, who were able to shoot at the enemy while being themselves protected. At that time the Tsilx'ut had only bow guns. The Kwakiutl sent out two spies, who reported that the village was well fortified. The Tsilx'ut had seen the canoes coming and were on their guard. The Kwakiutl thought that they would not be able to enter the village until after the stockade had been destroyed.

[illegible]
NEA Deliverable NEA

They resolved to make an attempt to have it and to break upon the foes. On the following day they came up to the village, but the guard on the towers said their plan to seek guard effect that the enemy had to retreat with severe losses. They made still another attempt, but with no better success. They had lost many men, while only two old men of the Tukrivs, Tuvaldayar and Ulkiss by name, and one woman had been hurt. The latter had been killed. When the Kwakiutl found such a contingent was at once sent up to the lake to call the young men, who then went to Kwakiu to ask for help. The Kwakiutl passed close to Tuk-Ulrivs's father's house, but they were so terrified by the losses they had sustained that they passed by without so much as calling it. Two of their number died they passed by without so much as calling it. Two of their number were so ashamed of their defeat that they would rather remain in the enemy's country than return with their friends, and they stayed where Kwanulis the Tukrivs and the Hilgals were pursuing the fugitives. They had reached the outlet of Sooktoch Arm, without overtaking them. Then their chiefs resolved to return, as they believed that their morning had a long start upon them. Later on they heard that the Kwakiutl were at this moment only a few miles from them, about to continue their homward journey, after having encamped at the outlet of the channel. Afterwards the Tukrivs found the two men who had remained behind. They called them and promised to send them back to their friends, saying that the way had ended, and that they had no foreign against them. The two men, however, too much afraid, and finally starved to death.

Later on the Tukrivs and Hilgals organized an expedition against the Kwakiutl to take revenge for the unprovoked attack. A chief named Kwanilis, whose father was a Tukrivs, while his mother was a Kwakiutl, was their leader. They intended to attack the Lekwiltoks and the Kwakiutl here. When they approached the village of the latter they sent a scouts ahead to search for the village, and to report the number of houses. The two days they were unable to find the village, which lies in a labyrinth of islands, but finally they found it, and saw that it consisted of eleven houses. On the next morning they attacked it. The attack was entirely taken by surprise and almost all of them were killed. Kwanilis's mother lived at this place, and when she heard the Hilgals coming she called at once for her son, and was taken care of by him. Only five men and four women escaped. The Hilgals allowed them to run away, as they had killed as many as they desired. Kwakiutlaula, a chief of the Kwakiutl, was the only man of the Hilgals who was wounded. He died on the way home. They returned, but in the country of the Kwakiutl they were overtaken by four Kwakiutl canoes which pursued them. The Hilgals were overtaken, but Kwanilis induced them to make peace. During the fight two of the women, whom they had taken as slaves, and one big pangolt overboard, and were rescued by the Kwakiutl.

Remarks.

Dolls are treated by medicinemen with dry bark or with pomegranates. Sometimes a series of parallel cuts is made over southwest of bells. Kwakiutl house are, and lapsed between spheres of cedar bark.

Dances of chiefs are in shadow of are given by means of a long robe with a semicircular middle of the wing form of an eagle. Shade pieces is collected and held as a pattern. Women wear light aprons to prevent [illegible]

[illegible] MAGIC AND WITCHCRAFT AMONG THE BELLACOOLA

By [illegible]

MOST OF the Bellacoola Indians today believe in sympathetic magic and witchcraft, after over a hundred years of contact with white men. Most of them live within hearing of the bells of the mission church, and the government school. Not a few of the men take logging contracts, some of them build and operate motor boats, many of them join the fishing fleets for the salmon canneries, most of the women work in the canneries, and all deal in the white man's money.

The Bellacoola lived at the heads of the long inlets full way up the Pacific Coast of Canada and in the tributary Bella Coola valley. Now, numbering perhaps two hundred and fifty, they, with the exception of a few families, are concentrated on one reservation at the mouth of the Bella Coola river. The Bella Coola valley has been called the Norway of Canada. This was where Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the first white man to cross Canada overland, reached the sea.

Originally, the Bellacoola were of the North Pacific Coast culture of Boas, which is characterized by the extensive use of red cedar and its products, particularly salmon, the making of graceful, sea-going canoes, each hewn from a single cedar, the erection of large rectangular houses made of cedar planks, with carved house posts and totem poles, both of pottery, and superiority in sculpture work, carving, and painting. This culture belongs to the hundred area, but the Bellacoola were secondary in a certain sense. The art of the area was that best known from the paintings and carvings of the totem poles, largely of semi-conventionalized animal forms. The life carried around a very highly developed social organization, an extensive and powerful financial system, and property rights to canoes, fishing and hunting. The Bellacoola language is one of the Salish linguistic stock. They 423 [illegible] that ten is the largest number of traps possible at that 644 weir. Those who have the right to that weir are the members of the ancestral family with the names of those first users. At [773] this point the logic of the Bella Coola fails to uphold the mythe-[224] logical pattern. No salmon-weir has remained in existence since the beginning of time; when one breaks, owners were sometimes inferred, and those who repaired the break became regarded as the rightful possessors. The system of ownership prevailing at the time of abandoning the weir, was that indi- [428] viduals, not groups, had rights to certain sections of the weir which were willable like other personal property. In most [481] cases this right was transmitted with a name, marking the section of weir, which had to be duly validated by possession.

[428] In other cases, the intangible ownership was willed without any mark whatever.* Unless bequeathed in this way, disputes were frequent. Rights of this kind were never sold although [427] an owner often loaned his section for a night, or longer period, receiving goods in return, and not forfeiting his ownership [431] thereby. This was particularly common when the owner was planning to give a potlatch. No case was heard of in which the right to a certain section of salmon-weir was given to a non-member of the ancestral family. Theoretically, this was possible, but practically it would be so inconvenient that it is most unlikely ever to have occurred, since the Bella Coola is [671] never such a slave to legal privileges that he fails to be guided by common sense.

826 Although individual ownership is thus recognized with [428] regard to sections of salmon-weirs and suitable places for [579] stacking nets, the owner is bound to share his haul. When he [624] catches a large number of fish, anyone, whether related to him or not, can demand some. He cannot refuse, since to do so would brand him as selfish. The effective check on this system

[128] Great difficulty was experienced in learning about the distribution of rights to sections of salmon-weirs. The evidence is conflicting, and though every effort was made to verify and check the above, there may be further explanations which were not known.

Schlesinger, E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellevoir NEA

as far as incest rules are concerned. In this particular instance the woman did not show any interest in her new relatives, failed to visit them, or to take part in their ceremonies, so that the adoption, though still legal, has practically lapsed. When this man dies his children will not consider the claims of their father's "sister" to inherit any of his possessions, as they would have done if she had showed herself appreciative of her adoption.

It will thus be seen that the size and composition of the family vary according to the wealth and influence of the father. The duties of the members are difficult to define since they concern almost entirely the routine of life. The father, head of the family, directs the gathering of firewood, repair of the house, obtaining of food supplies, and other matters of the same sort. If he gives a potlatch his children must help him, which they do willingly since they gain from the ceremony. If a father is too autocratic, his older, especially his married children, simply move away. Nor is his power over his younger children unbounded, since their mother's relations take great interest in their welfare and would cause any ill-treatment.

If a person is killed or wounded, revenge is the affair of his family. Just how many individuals are involved depends on the composition of the family. In the case of the killing of a child, living with his parents alone, none but the father would feel it incumbent to retaliate. If an adult person is murdered, his or her brothers feel and revenge the insult. But should an important member of the community be slain, an old man surrounded by a numerous family, it is the affair of all. Every effort is made to slay the murderer, but if he should escape from the country, the injured group is satisfied by killing one of his family. Here again the same interest composition is found. A man's son, brother, or father are the only persons actually liable, and even here the common sense of the Bella Coola outweighs their theoretical laws. A murderer's brother, living in another village, would not be held liable, but more distant relatives living with the offender and considered as his family are liable

2: McDowelth NEA Bellacosia NEA
●441

/For information on sanctions employed to discipline members of the kusiut society see category 116, pp. 1-266./

1:56:Dorsey:Bk-5 (1922-1924)948
NES Bellacoola NES

or dilish himself with the traditions of his new home. This is another illustration of the patrilineal tendency of the whole organization. 621 614 553

Politically, the village is the most important Bella Coola unit. Usually, though not always related to one another, the inhabitants are always friends. If an attack is made on a village by a hostile war-party, all the inhabitants suffer equally. On the other hand, if the residents decide to attack another settlement, there is no compulsion for anyone to share the burden. Each individual, with the exception of slaves, follows his own inclination. In the case of murder or other wrong inflicted by an individual, the responsibility rests on his immediate family, not the village. Factions within the village seem to have been unimportant; individual jealousies were common, and often led to murder, but if a family became unpopular or considered itself aggrieved, it usually moved to another village. Neighbouring settlements were generally on friendly terms and often assisted each other in war, but this was not compulsory. Indeed, cases are known in which a war-party from the outer coast, about to attack Ilwad, passed within a quarter of a mile of Ilwaqa'a without its inhabitants even warning their threatened neighbours. 628 689 578 627 628

As far as internal organization is concerned, the village is as fluid a unit as are most Bella Coola groupings. If one individual has attained a position of eminence through the potlatch system (vol. I, chap. vi), he is "chief" of the village, and his advice is generally followed. If several men have approximately the same importance, there is no dominating figure. In any case, a chief lacks executive authority, and such obedience as he receives is due to his personal influence. Some slight deference is paid to the man who uses the name of the eldest of the first group of settlers, the first chief, but this is not sufficient to warrant the title of "chief" with the significance usually attached to the term. The important members of the village are accustomed to meet for the discussion of ceremonial mat- 622 554 536 621 623 535 996

L:Mc:Dowell: R-5 (511-514)948
NEA Bellecrete NEA

as far as incest rules are concerned. In this particular instance the woman did not show any interest in her new relatives, failed to visit them, or to take part in their ceremonies, so that the adoption, though still legal, has practically lapsed. When this man dies his children will not consider the claims of their father's "sister" to inherit any of his possessions, as they would have done if she had showed herself appreciative of her adoption. 597 [428]

It will thus be seen that the size and composition of the family vary according to the wealth and influence of the father. The duties of the members are difficult to define since they concern almost entirely the routine of life. The father, head of the family, directs the gathering of firewood, repair of the house, obtaining of food supplies, and other matters of the same sort. If he gives a potlatch his children must help him, which they do willingly since they gain from the ceremony. If a father is too autocratic, his older, especially his married children, simply move away. Nor is his power over his younger children unbounded, since their mother's relatives take great interest in their welfare and would resent any ill-treatment. 592 [431] [402]

If a person is killed or wounded, revenge is the affair of his family. Just how many individuals are involved depends on the composition of the family. In the case of the killing of a child, living with his parents alone, none but the father would feel it incumbent to retaliate. If an adult person is murdered, his or her brothers feel and avenge the insult. But should an important member of the community be slain, an old man surrounded by a numerous family, it is the affair of all. Every effort is made to slay the murderer, but if he should escape from the country, the injured group is satisfied by killing one of his family. Here again the same inexact composition is found. A man's son, brother, or father are the only persons strictly liable, and even here the common sense of the Bella Coola outweighs their theoretical laws. A murderer's brother, living in another village, would not be held liable; but more distant relatives living with the offender and considered as his family are liable. 595 627 682 [671]

Rockefeller Fund (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

family are liable. It is very rare for a woman to be killed in a blood feud. A death is answered by a death; if two persons should be slain for one murder the family which has suffered the double loss endeavours to kill another of their enemies. In case of wounding, an effort is made to wound the offender, but if he should be killed his family would try to avenge him. More often, one of the offender's family takes the initiative of offering goods to the injured family, "to cure the wound." If the offer is accepted, and the goods delivered properly, the matter is at an end. If a murder be committed within the ranks of the immediate family, for instance, if a brother kill a brother, revenge, if exacted, must be meted out to the actual offender. If requested to do so, the leading chief of a village may offer his advice, but it is always considered that revenge concerns only the immediate family.

Revenge is a topic which shows clearly the essential fluidity of the family. There are no well-defined degrees of relationship within which responsibility rests. Instead, everyone knows, in the open life of the community, how many persons share the family life of the individual, and they alone are held to account, or they alone demand compensation. From its very nature, the family must be a bilateral unit which, when powerful, stretches out to absorb members of the ancestral families of both mother and father.

Not only does the family thus appear constantly to be attracting to itself members of the ancestral family of either parent, but these relatives themselves are deeply interested in the affairs of the family. This is most clearly shown in the case of children who, of course, are members of the ancestral family of both their mother and father. A few days after birth some relative is expected to call together the people of the village where the child is born for the bestowal and validation of an ancestral name. It is considered an evidence of poverty if this is done by the father, as if his child were only supported by his parents, not by a larger circle of relatives. It is immaterial whether this gathering be called by a relative

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

all that he sits in an enviable spot, irrespective of its location in the house. 554 556*

In precisely the same manner a man may take for himself a seat in the central part of the row behind the fire, but he is laughed at for endeavouring to assume a dignity, unworthily, unless he can validate his position by lavish presents. The Bella Coola are always ready to make fun of a person who fails to maintain his seat. On the death of the occupant of the central position it is taken for granted that whoever inherits his name will assume that location and give the essential presents, but it is not incumbent upon him to do so. He may choose to establish his new name at his old station, beside, instead of behind, the fire. Thus it has come to pass that the seat of the most important chief of a village is often at the side of the house. When all are seated the chiefs may be widely separated, and a parent may have obtained for his son a seat in a better part of the house than his own. But as a rule the chiefs sit in a row at the back of the fire, the most influential one in the middle. There must have been feuds when two men desired to seat themselves in the central position at the same time, but disputes about this were uncommon, because a man's seat was, and still is, primarily regarded as the intangible goods wherewith he is clothed, rather than his right to sit at any particular spot. It is these non-material coverings that enable a man to be bold and assertive in argument or suggestion, in fact to be a chief. A young man may have had conferred on him one of the noblest names, but his influence depends on the value of the goods expended on his behalf, subject of course to the universal characteristic that a man of forceful character may have more influence than his actual position warrants. [424] [428] [622] [424]

Jealous feuds are common when the man who owns the name of the first chief, first ancestor of a village, has duly validated it, but is being eclipsed in the giving of potlatches by a man whose name is of less intrinsic importance. Such a complication recently arose at Kimsquit, and the Bella Coola [578] [682]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

554 ascribe two murders which took place there in 1915 to jealousy
* 556 engendered by rivalry.

A chief who desires to have his son, or other near relative, [578] succeed to his actual seat may validate for him a position at • 682 his feet. If several potlatches be given, with distribution of goods for this purpose, it becomes recognized that the son shall [622] take his father's seat. None the less, he will not have his father's influence or prestige unless he can himself continue to give away goods, because the power of a chief rests on this, not on his ancient name or the location of his seat.

553 Further evidence that a man's influence rests less on his
* 556 actual name than on the wealth distributed with reference to
it is found in the lack of uniformity in the type of names validated. Those of highest potential importance are the ones brought to the earth by the first-comers, yet in many cases a man prefers to elevate his position with respect to a name of later origin. It is not uncommon for a man to validate several ancestral designations, and choose one of them to be his most important by valuable gifts for the seat which he occupies with respect to it; or in other cases a name of modern origin is selected and elevated. Thus, a certain Bella Coola chief who is the legal owner of the names Q̣ṣil and Xemlaix, two of the first people to settle this earth, has based his greatness on the goods expended for a seat with reference to the name Siäkvelāx, of more modern origin. It is accordingly clear that any Bella Coola can rise to a position of importance, even though he lacks the right to one of the most ancient names. Moreover, some chiefs prefer to validate several names rather than concentrate on one alone.

[622] Furthermore, a powerful chief can create a name. In this case the "power" of the designation rests, not in any supernatural origin, but in the actual wealth distributed. Two examples will serve to illustrate this point. Between 1880 and 1890 a chief was preparing to give a potlatch at which his nephew was to receive a name, when fire destroyed the village with the exception of his house. This added to the value of

McDowell E-5 (1922-1924) 1968
NEB Bellacoola NEB

622 there is such dread of the supernatural powers possessed by 623 members of the kwaiat society that none would dare go there.
778 If an uninitiated person should do so, he would formerly have been either killed or initiated into the society. The meeting-[575] place of the Kwaqa-ti chiefs is on a ledge of rock jutting out over a waterfall about a quarter of a mile from the village.
The stream winds down a narrow cleft of the mountain side, screened by dense vegetation, and suddenly falls into a cauldron, so hemmed in by cliffs that no sunlight can enter. The ledge is immediately above the brink of the falls, one of the most awe-inspiring places imaginable. The meeting-places of other villages lack such natural settings, though all are at the bases of cliffs, or near some easily distinguished feature. Some 178 of them are decorated with rude carvings, pecked into the 582 stone. The meaning of the designs is not known to any of 778 the present inhabitants. Some of them were made, long ago, by chiefs when they were composing tunes; they picked out the rock in time to the music forming in their minds. Others
[211] were mere memorials of certain events. If a chief gave an important ceremony, he, or one of his friends, carved a figure, perhaps that of a man, perhaps of some animal connected with the rite, to recall the occasion. No carvings have been made within the life-time of any Bella Coola, so it is probable that they had further significance, now unknown.

622 When a chief wishes to summon his fellows for a meeting
623 he visits each and notifies him by a simple pressure of the foot, 201 in many cases unobserved even by those sitting near. The person so called slips away, unostentatiously, to the meeting-place.

578 The position of chief was not without disadvantages in the 622 old days. The Bella Coola are so jealous that anyone who 682 succeeded in elevating himself to a position above his fellows [152] became an object of envy. Their mythology contains many examples of the murder of some powerful chief by rivals of his own village, and informants of today state that these records are true. One intelligent man asserted that his father had

[illegible] Seventh E-5 ([illegible])[illegible]
NEW Bellacoola NEW

thus been data about seventy years earlier. It appears that 571 sympathetic magic, and it is quite possible that such sympathetic 682 682
[154]

WEALTH

Since wealth is so important in chieftainship, it would be 114 desirable at this point to consider the concepts of wealth. Unfortunately, it is impossible to give a satisfactory treatment of 177 556*
this subject. The coming of the white man altered the economic aspects of Bella Coola life so radically, and at such an early period, that concrete examples of economic interdependence, so useful in a thorough study, could not be obtained in the field. It is possible that greater attention to this subject might have produced more satisfactory results, but I am doubtful of this.

In the old days, "wealth" was of two categories: (a) Prerogatives, tangible or intangible, which could be shown, pictorially or dramatically, or could be expounded in words; and (b) Goods which could be distributed for validating such prerogatives. Individual possessions, unsuited for distribution, were hardly considered as wealth; a sewing-machine, a bottle of whiskey, a bed, or some other luxury might give satisfaction to the owner, but did not increase his importance in the eyes of his fellows. The value of objects was only for their use in ceremonial distribution; indeed, prior to such distribution, they were only of potential value. This attitude controlled Bella Coola economics in the early days of contact, and still influences their behaviour. A native store-keeper once ruefully commented on the fact that he would gain no advantage from the goods on his shelves, since he hoped merely to sell them, not to give them away.

556*
[122]
[177]

A man's relatives were expected to help him in the acquisition of goods, but the extent of their contributions was never 184
476
556*

[701] difficult to estimate the former influence of such warriors. The belief of all in their ability must have given them some prestige, although the requirements of practical qualifications in fighting must often have prevented them from functioning as military leaders. In other words, a man may be, socially, a warrior, even though he lacks ability as a fighting man.

[701] [693] The functions of warriors are not limited to fighting with enemies of other tribes. Each has the power to kill and must exercise it when requested. If a mistake is made in a ceremonial Sacred dance, the offender must be killed, and one way [688] in which this is accomplished is by the senior members of the society requesting a professional warrior to act as executioner. [575] One of these men, who lived at Ăsăn-de-i, always used a stone club which had been handed down from generation to gener- [428] [411] ation, becoming the property of each new incumbent of the name and prerogative. In other cases, the killing is said to [754] have been done with the aid of magic. The power of the Ăsăn-de-i warrior had been confirmed with so much goods that he was the most powerful professional killer known to the Bella Coola. He acted on instructions from the senior members of the Sacred society or when called upon by anyone. If, for example, a man found that his wife had been faithless and [684] wished to kill her lover, it was only necessary to tell the professional warrior, who was bound to act in accordance with his prerogative. He received no pay, since he was merely exercising his right. The relatives of the murdered person [682] never took revenge on the slayer, realizing that he was powerless in the matter, though they frequently requested him to slay the person who had asked him to kill the first victim. He could never refuse to do so, even if the victim were his own brother, or if he knew that the person he was to kill was guiltless. The underlying principle was that this man's power had been increased to such a pitch by the distribution of presents [761] that if he failed to exercise it on demand, it would react upon himself and cause his own death. This Ăsăn-de-i warrior began in time to have an aversion for his vocation, since he name is not returned, the donors may be offended at its being kept; if it is returned, they may be offended that it has not been kept.

The following examples will help to explain this rather complex point.

Since 1900 the sister of a man who was middle-aged in 1952 was married to a Sidi Cuda to whom she was not related. At the wedding, her father being dead, her brother expounded one of the family's origin myths, and she took her husband's name from it. It was said to have been "hooked across," the word used being the same as that signifying the dragging of a heavy timber, suggesting, of course, the importance and dignity of the designation in question. On two later occasions the woman's family gave valuable presents to the man's, thus doing their part to ensure the union, the strength which comes to both families by an interchange of presents marking the dignity of marriage, in fact, its basic principle. Unfortunately, there were no children. If the husband had wished to retain these names for his family, he should have arranged a further marriage between one of his own relatives and one of his wife's, to return the value of gifts he had received. He did not do so, and thus lost all legal claim to the designations in question. Since the loss, he was indignant when his wife's brother duly exhibited one of these names for himself as a patronym, as if it had been dormant.

The accompanying diagram-pedigree shows another instance of the same kind. Swanee's daughter, Swaleheart, was married to Westwanlain, and at the wedding her father presented his name for any offspring. Six children were born, but Westwanlain illegally used the designation, Swanee, for King George, his son by another wife. This naturally incensed the relatives of the first Swanee, especially as the debt could not be adjusted by the marriage of one of Westwanlain's daughters to one of their family, since there were no daughters. To make matters worse, King George passed the name on to his son, Jack King George, and again there were no daughters to compliate the debt. Finally, Jack King George married Sweet, a relative of the first Swanee, without the usual lengthy period of engagement, and while she was still immature for the year that follows puberty. Six children resulted, by which part of the debt could have been repaid. Thus, not only did Jack King George violate the customary ideas of decency, but in the course of three generations two women were obtained from the Swanee family without any compensation. Bitter feelings arose, and a few years ago one of the descendants of the first Swanee took the name for himself as a patronym as if it had been dormant, thus crossing the ire of Jack King George. In 1913 [182]

McGavin, E.-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

[581] [582] [583] [584] [585] [586] sons of his female relatives were murdered at Kimsquit. The slayer was never detected, but most of the Bella Coola believe that it was done by one of Snaneet's relatives, and that the dispute about women was quite sufficient to furnish an excuse for the deed.

It is hoped that these two instances will serve to emphasize why the Bella Coola prefer marriages within the ranks of the ancestral family. When this takes place, names are usually given outright, and not merely promised for the use of the future children.

Snaneet = ♀
|
Nistwanlaic = Snalkaalic = another woman
|
King George = ♀
|
Jack King George = Spookal

[587] After this digression, to return to the marriage of X and Y: The ceremony is taking place in the house of Y's father, and the parents of each participant have expounded parts of their origin myths, and promised names for the resultant children.

Then Y's relatives give numerous presents to X's family, in each case including those who are associating themselves with the contract. Canoes, slaves, blankets, and other articles of great worth are given; they are said to be "bed covering" for Y. The greater their value, the greater her prestige. Her father asks a fluent chief to address the assemblage, speaking as though he were Y. He says in effect:

"My father, my mother, my brothers, my uncles, and their associates have given me my bed covering."

These presents are the binding feature of the wedding. They are said to lock the girl in her husband's house, and accordingly are sometimes called, "rope fastenings." This is only done when a woman is married for the first time.

Another orator now holds forth on behalf of Y's father:

"What we do today is no small matter. We have done today what was done in former times, and what shall be done in the future."

543 above, and this is believed to have occurred on one occasion
527 to the daughter of a chief.

432 Once, many hundred years ago, the daughter of a Bella Coola chief 448 was married to the son of Tsaskwanem, a Bella Bella chief, living at [illegible]. At the marriage, in Bella Coola, valuable presents were given by both families, and the girl went to live in Bella Bella with her husband. Some ten years later, Tsaskwanem gave a large potlatch to which he had invited guests from all parts of the coast. As is duty bound, his daughter-in-law's relatives gave a certain amount of goods to reboy her. They were not wealthy, so that the contribution was of small value. Tsaskwanem had expected a larger present, and now found himself unable even to repay his debts to those who had assembled. He did not immediately show his resentment, but soon afterwards sold his daughter-in-law as slave to a Kitkatla chief. The Bella Coola were justly indignant, but could not make up their minds what to do in such an unprecedented case. The girl ultimately escaped and made her way home after lengthy wanderings (II, p. 80).

837 A husband demands faithfulness on the part of his wife, though he himself is often rather lax. Illicit intercourse is regarded, not as a deadly sin, but as an infringement of the husband's prerogatives. But if a woman should bear a child at a time when it was impossible for the husband to have been the father, due to absence, he would probably accept it as his [582] own and do no more than administer a beating, though some jealous men would divorce a wife for this. Bella Coola sentiment on such matters varies with the individual; it is universally considered to be a matter that concerns the husband [184] alone and he can do as he thinks fit. The daughters of chiefs are usually faithful to their husbands, whereas those of poorer persons, unrestrained by the valuables expended at their marriages, are more lax. If the husband should catch an adulterer, [482] he can, if bold, slay him on the spot and the exaction of blood revenge would be uncalled for. Usually a fight ends the matter, though the offender's family may give presents to the aggrieved husband, and his wife's relatives may also make donations to atone for their daughter's failings. A husband does not share his wife with anyone, and a question as to the lending of a wife 569 588 ceremony usually consisted simply of the man and woman living together. In theory, this prevented the children from ever obtaining a name or other prerogative embodied in the ancestral myth of the free-born parent, and an effort was always made to conceal from them the details of the ancestral family's origin myth. But, as already described in the section dealing with slaves, the expenditure of valuable presents served as a substitute, or at least to cover, the blot. If the child succeeded in giving many potlatches, the stain was generally forgotten. On the other hand, if the child of a slave married to a free man was not "washed," he could always be shamed by a reminder of the disgrace of his parents' wedding.

[554]

682 In case of murder, the son or other near relative of the victim sometimes accepts a daughter or other member of the offender's family instead of exacting blood revenge. The bride is delivered to her husband with valuable goods "to wash away the blood," but these never suffice entirely to remove the disgrace from her or her children. The latter may inherit names and prerogatives from their father, but even if they attain to the position of chiefs, they can always be put to shame by reference to their mother's marriage as an atonement for murder. Of course the influence of a great chief makes it impolitic to refer to his ancestry, and there are a few instances of men having reached such a position of eminence that the blot has been practically forgotten. The wife's family must continue to give presents to the husband for years after marriage, otherwise her lot is unenviable indeed, and her children have the status of the unwashed offspring of a slave and a free-man. In some cases a marriage of this type is entered upon years after a murder, if a son or other descendant wishes to end the anxiety of constantly expecting blood revenge.

[583] [627] [554]

REPURCHASE OF THE WIFE

556 583 Repurchase of a wife is the necessary consequence of every reputable Bella Coola marriage. It is assumed that the pre-

in a skirmish by the Carriers, one of their women mutilated a body by poking out the eyes. The corpses were rescued and a Bulla Coola with secret knowledge dropped into the eye sockets some potent medicine. As the corpses rotted, the murderers began to suffer pains, and the woman who had poked out the eyes lost her sight. As a blind, old woman, she had been seen by several men with whom the matter was discussed.

To Cause the Death of a Murderer (three means)

(1) Two women were murdered at Kimsquit in 1915. Before they were buried, an elderly Bulla Coola put a secret medicine on the back of the neck of each so that the murderer would die from a disease located there. Within eight months, a Rivers Inlet man succumbed to a deep sore on the back of the neck, and it was assumed that he must have visited Kimsquit women and perpetrated the double murder.

Medicines like this and the preceding are widely known, but it is sorcerers who specialize in using them.

(2) When a man dies suddenly and murder is suspected, although the perpetrator is unknown, place the corpse within an old, hollow spruce log. As it rots, needles and dirt enter the flesh and at the same time the body of the murderer becomes lacerated and full of sores. This method was employed during the lifetime of an informant and caused the death of the suspected murderer, whose guilt was thereby accepted as proved.

(3) Bury the victim's body with a toad in its mouth and the murderer will soon die.[1]

To Kill

Lift a corpse from the ground and point it at one or more individuals. This causes their death in the near future.

[1] This information was obtained from one informant only; details were unavailable, and confirmation from others could not be secured.

with such power that they killed one another in their performances. Consequently, they decided to dance only in the winter months, and merely to imitate the actions which had been previously carried out.

There are other traditions, probably with no historical basis, describing conflicts with the a'ak. The Bella Coola say that long, long ago there were not enough Dzoxur women for more than the old people to be admitted to the society, and that though members were regarded as having supernatural powers, yet the a'ak, confident in their numbers and strength, used frequently to assail the supremacy of the Dzoxur. On one occasion, when the latter had prepared an elaborate feast of smoked goat flesh for themselves, the a'ak collected their weapons and demanded a share of the feast. The Dzoxur, furiously angry, felt compelled to yield, though later they took revenge through the destruction wrought by many Cannibals and Sorcerers when frenzied. It is said that even recently if the Dzoxur did not invite the a'ak to one of their dances, they were always careful to placate them by sending half of the food as a present.

Sometimes the a'ak, collectively, were bold enough to kill a Dzoxur, particularly if something had gone amiss in a dance house. On other occasions might be strong enough to outweigh respect for a member of the society. On one occasion a chief, who was not a member of the society, was told that his wife, who was, had been in the habit of prowling off at night with a Cannibal. The jealous husband prepared his bear-spear and slew the Cannibal when next he entered his house during a frenzied rampage of the village. Kakaxiut, both from that village and others in the vicinity, combined to cause the murderer's death with the aid of a member of the society who was a professional killer.

Sorcery did not always come to the Dzoxur in quarrels between members of the two societies. Long ago, the a'ak were invited to a potlatch in a village in the upper Bella Coola valley. One of their own dances was taking place, but they

If the war feast and feast of t latter feelings had been owned by their relatives, who when the heart of bereft had restored as slaves, the children as members of their owner's were concerned, though never ancestral family. Torture as been a rare practice. One referred that in her childhood met on the bow rocks in the his canoe crowded with women similar conditions could to this man have been an unusu
been long owned, but the Bell of other long-abandoned custo was over a common occasion which entrance is to be expe been abominable if the custom been one which played an im
Bella Coola.

Scalps were hung on a suspended as valuable trophi serving men on a war expedition with one, holding it in position
At a man's death, they were more often, buried with his o
the Fort Rupert people their cranks. When the Bella for a murder, instead of scal brought back his whole head the grave of the person avenge

At this late period it is opinion as to the amount of Bella Coola. Several of the terms of the slaughter accompa

g duration in which extremely 727 und, captives were often resome ennobled for the purpose uded. Failing this, prisoners re-especially growing up virtually [527] mily as far as food and clothing sharing in the prowess of his illing of prisoners seems to have xtremely old Kimsquit woman he had seen a captive stretched e of the ocean, fastened there, and allowed to die. No other ioned and it seems probable that case. It is true that hostilities s Coola have clear recollections s, and it is unlikely that torture
e. It is, of course, one about d, but information would have had been common or if it had portant part in the lives of the d and dried like salmon, then [422] s in the taker's house. When , he would often cover his head [714]

by weaving its hair into his own.
either inherited by his heirs or, [768] er possessions. It is said that d to tie scalps in bundles to Coola went to war to retaliate [721] ping a victim, they sometimes [648] and impaled it on a stake over [682] ed.
irtually impossible to form any 721 bloodshed in wars waged by the older people spoke in gloating lished by their ancestors, but all

Schoolcraft R-5 (1851-1854) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB
Bellabella NES

B 539*
682

A MURDERER AND HIS PUNISHMENT

For many generations, the name Sokokmin-a has been remembered among the Chilkoots. It seems to embody an inheritable tendency to lawlessness and killing, for almost all who have been so designated have been murderers. About 1860 or 1870, a certain Sokokmin-a married a Bella Coola woman, which brought his activities to the attention of her relatives. He used to do considerable trading at the Hudson's Bay Company's post, although his manner of obtaining furs was extremely pernicious. He had a wide knowledge of the interior and of the routes by which hunters were likely to bring pelts to Bella Coola. If he could learn that a stranger was likely to be travelling along a trail, it was Sokokmin-a's custom to set out, unarmed, to meet him. He would explain to the hunter that he had come to buy furs and the hunter would always make him welcome. The price was argued in a friendly manner and the two would prepare to camp together for the night. Then Sokokmin-a would say:

"Perhaps you do not know what a dangerous place Bella Coola is? Even now I am running away. I do not think I will be pursued, though I wish I had a musket to lay beside me as I sleep."

An unsuspicious hunter would usually offer to lend his to Sokokmin-a who, promising his gratitude, would lend it and go to sleep with it beside him. Early in the morning he would rise, shoot his sleeping companion, steal his furs and sell them at the trading post. Sometimes he would murder two or even three hunters on a single trip; thus in course of time he had amassed great riches, but had also made enemies over a wide area. Whenever it became too dangerous for him in the interior he would retreat to Bella Coola and live with his wife's relatives. People sometimes asked him why he continued his nefarious work, but he always answered that it was involuntary, his parents having smeared him with ashes from a wasp's nest when an infant.

On one occasion, Sokokmin-a set out for Salmon House, on the Dean River, where there was always an encampment of Carriers. He travelled up the valley of the Nechestacunnay and had just reached the open lands above the timber-line when he met two Carriers, bound for Bella Coola with furs. At once he began scheming to kill them and steal the pelts. Sokokmin-a greeted the two by saying:

---

with the details, though the old man from whom the account was obtained discussed it with his wife and with several of his friends who were confident that it was related in the same form as it had been told to them by a Bella Bella many years before. Since it is not the type of theme to be invented as a story, it must be left as an unexplained incident, half-buried in the mists of tradition.

Bb
539
B 539*
177

Z:\Mc\Dawson E-9 (1922-1926) 1968
NEB Bella Coola NEB

"I was on my way to visit you, but that will be unnecessary now that I have been fortunate enough to meet you."

The two hunters, ignorant of Sekalmūn-a's reputation, were willing to do business without having to journey to Bella Coola, and suggested that he turn back to a favourite camping-place within the timbered zone. He agreed, and they soon reached a spot which he had quitted half an hour previously. Sekalmūn-a at once went off to gather firewood, and soon returned with a load; this was not sufficient, but he told one of the Carriers that more was available in the direction he indicated, and that he would remain to help the other build a fire. The remaining Carrier lit some of the wood which had been broken up, but carelessly threw on too much so that the fire was choked. As he knelt to blow it up, Sekalmūn-a was given the opportunity for which he had been looking, and slew his companion with a single blow of his axe on the back of the head. Without waiting to conceal the body, the murderer hurried off to meet the other Carrier. He was returning without any fuel and inquired:

"Where did you get the wood? I could not find the place."

Sekalmūn-a guided him to the spot and suggested that they cut long stakes which they could carry between them. This they did, but as the Carrier bent to lift his end of the burden, he too was felled with a blow. Sekalmūn-a dragged the corpse under a fallen tree and covered it with bark, then returned to the fire and heaped stones over the body of his first victim. Having thus achieved his purpose, he camped for one night on the spot and then returned to Bella Coola with the stolen furs. It was plain to all that these must have been obtained illegally since sufficient time had not elapsed for him to take a trip to Salmon House. Moreover, he had blackened his face and tied his hair into a top-knot as is done by all warriors after killing people.

Two days after the unfortunate hunters left Salmon House, another party left for Bella Coola by the same route. They reached the usual camping-ground at dusk and looked for traces of their friends, but, to their surprise, found the remains of one bed only. A few minutes later one of the women happened to stumble on the corpse hidden beneath the tree. Torches were prepared and a careful investigation made, leading to the discovery of the other body. Taking into account the fact that the two had been carrying rich loads of furs, the Carriers suspected that it must have been Sekalmūn-a who had slain their friends.

Meanwhile Sekalmūn-a was at Qempe-ts where a Cannibal dance was taking place. During this, he fired upon and seriously wounded a young Bella Coola, Nazwalsta, who was employed at the Hudson's Bay Company's post. The assault was committed in the presence of the factor, who handed his gun to an elderly Bella Coola and told him to shoot the

[illegible] 539[illegible] 542

[illegible]. The man, a much elder, took careful aim at Sekakwate-a's temple, but the musket had a flatter trajectory than he suspected, so the bullet, instead of dropping and killing the man, flew straight and neatly cut down the left ear cup of his hood. Sekakwate-a ran off to the village and Nazudzie was carried to the house of one of his relatives on the north bank of the river.

Conflicting reasons are given for this assault. Some state that Sekakwate-a's uncontrollable temper led him to fire; others that he did so at the instance of Pathe, who was offended because Nazudzie had disobeyed an order to carry food home to his wife. It is whispered that on several occasions Pathe had used Sekakwate-a to get rid of those who had displeased him.

If the assault had been committed during the summer, revenge would have been an affair of the injured youth's relatives, but it occurred during the kuriar season so all members of the society were affected. A party was organized to arrest the offender with the aid of six Americans who happened to be at the Hudson's Bay Company's post at the time. Sekakwate-a was in the rear part of one of the houses at Symgo to whom his enemies entered and stood hesitating at the door. As he faced them, an old man, related to Nazudzie, crept behind and leapt on him, wrapping his arms and legs around him. The murderer drew a knife and struggled furiously before he was overcome, bound and carried to Aldalitat where his victim lived. Sekakwate-a pleaded that he had mistaken Nazudzie for one of his Chilkotin relatives, but when no attention was paid to this, he said that he had acted under orders from Pathe. This was likewise disregarded, nor was there any suggestion of revenge on the alleged instigator since he, being a chief, could do as he liked. It is said that Pathe endeavoured to help his henchman by sending a message to some Chilkotin who were camped in the vicinity and inviting them to rescue their kinsman. [522]

Meanwhile it was obvious that Nazudzie was seriously wounded. His relatives said that if he lived, they would be willing to accept compensation for the assault, so Sekakwate-a was kept, bound hand and foot, in a house where a kuriar dance was taking place. During the night he almost succeeded in freeing himself from his bonds, but this was discovered and he was again tied up; it is possible that an accomplice assisted him in the attempt to escape. Towards dawn Nazudzie died and it was decided that his murderer should be killed at once.

The kukuriat all helped to take him outside and make preparations for shooting him, but no one desired the task of executioner. Meanwhile the Chilkotin were gathering; a fight seemed imminent and the excite[illegible] man was [illegible]. One of the chiefs told two boys who were [illegible] shoot to fire, but another encouraged, saying:

"This is our weapon; a means for more bale."

He himself covered Sokalmate-a and made ready to press the trigger. The members, owing to fellow-relatives in the vicinity, cried to wait for time.

"Please do not shoot me," he called out. "I have always been terrified to die that way, please use a knife."

"Some of those you shot were probably terrified of mankind too," the self-appointed executioner gravely replied.

"Wait just a moment," Sokalmate-a pleaded. "I want to speak to my kinsmen."

"So probably did several of those you shot," came the terse answer.

Then the chief fired and Sokalmate-a fell dead. The Chilkotin were armed and massed on the point of rushing forward to avenge their relatives, but the chief took another member, brandished it in their direction, and said:

"All right. The dogs will eat your too."

A Chilkotin chief pointed out that the Bella Coola were armed and in overwhelming numbers, so advised his angry followers to withdraw. Thus the incident closed without further bloodshed. Some years then Sokalmate-a's corpse was given to his relatives, where then it was buried by the Sokalmate alone in a large grave, beneath the body of Nayudzin.

A SUCCESSFUL HUNT

One September, between 1840 and 1850, a certain Sinaxomdzem was preparing for a potlatch. Taking twenty men with him as packers, he set out for mountain goats up the valley of the Sidlyomain, which flows into the main Bella Coola from the north, nearly opposite Mount Nuxalkin. They camped at a suitable spot, and for several days Sinaxomdzem hunted with fair success. On one occasion, when out with his son, he happened to notice a number of female goats on a narrow point of rock, beneath which there was a sheer drop to a jagged pile of boulders. Quickly realizing that there was only one approach to the point where the animals were standing, Sinaxomdzem told his son to remain below while he climbed up to stalk his quarry. With extreme caution, he succeeded in getting between the goats and the only line of escape; then he knew they were his, and stood up boldly. He shot two or three, and stampeded the rest into plunging over the precipice where they were crushed to death on the rocks far beneath. The successful hunter climbed down to where his son had remained and the two carried one of the carcasses out to the trail where

By laying their hands on the nape of a person they are able, to tell whether he will be present or whether he has left the body. If the soul should become weak, they are able to restore it to its former vigour. If a person swoons it is believed that his soul has flown away, without breaking its shell. The shaman leaves its hovering wings, which give a sound like those of a mosquito. He may catch and replace it in the nape of its owner. If the soul leaves the body without breaking its shell the owner becomes crazy.

774
756
[828]
753
[828]

The art of shamanism is bestowed by fate. It is impossible to obtain it by means of fasting and praying, as is the case among the neighbouring tribes, but it is a free gift from the deity. A person who is to become a shaman will fall sick, and, during his illness, deity will give him a song which must be kept a deep secret. After this he is able to cure diseases. If a person falsely pretends to have received the gift of shamanism, and tries to cure our diseases from a patient, he will fall sick himself.

156
776

When asked more closely about the various differences between this method of obtaining the power and that of the neighbouring tribes our informant said: "When an Ostyak's wife wishes to become a shaman he may go to the mountains where the deity of their shamans resides (probably Mt. Ural) who will initiate him. The Ostyaks use shamans the art in such a way."

[71]

Sickness is caused by a disease entering the body or by witchcraft (see p. 417). The shaman is able to extract the disease by sucking. A peculiar method of witchcraft, somewhat similar to the "ch'a" of the Kwakiutl (see Sixth Report of the Committee, p. 112), was described to me as follows: The person who wants to bewitch his enemy endeavours to obtain some of his old clothing, portions soaked by perspiration being considered especially effective. After it is obtained a wolf is killed, and the clothing is put into its mouth, which is then tied up. Then the wolf is placed in a box. This procedure is called ooot. Sometimes the clothing or some hair is inclosed in the bones of a wolf or of a dead person. No shaman can counteract these charms.

753
755 759
[825]

If a person has been murdered, and a string is tied firmly around the neck of the corpse, the murderer's neck will become diseased and he will be unable to breathe and will die. If sand is strewn in the corpse's eyes and the hole closed over it the murderer will die. If a person has been killed with a knife or arrow, or another weapon, to which some of his blood adheres, the latter is brought into contact with a wolf's head, dog's head, or anything else that is bad, and then thrown into the fire or put into a frog's or snake's mouth; then the murderer will die.

682
754
[825]

I add here a few current beliefs:—

Humming indicates that people are talking about me. 827

Slight ringing of the ears indicates rain, loud ringing good weather.

Twitching of the muscles of the left side of the body is unlucky; of the right side lucky. Twitching of the skin under the eyes indicates that one will cry. [777]

If a dog dreams and howls in its sleep its owner will die. 825

The breaking of a box without an apparent cause is unlucky. 763

777

Wars.

When a war party was organized the warriors did not paint their faces, but they put on headbands of white cedar-bark and strewed their 726 714

McDougall E-5 (1922-1924) 1968
NEA DeGroote NEA

593 family are liable. It is very rare for a woman to be killed in 627 a blood feud. A death is answered by a death; if two persons 682 should be slain for one murder the family which has suffered the double loss endeavours to kill another of their enemies. In [562] case of wounding, an effort is made to wound the offender, but
[683] if he should be killed his family would try to avenge him. More often, one of the offender's family takes the initiative of offering goods to the injured family, "to cure the wound." If the offer is accepted, and the goods delivered properly, the matter is at an end. If a murder be committed within the ranks of the immediate family, for instance, if a brother kill a brother, revenge, if exacted, must be meted out to the actual [622] offender. If requested to do so, the leading chief of a village may offer his advice, but it is always considered that revenge concerns only the immediate family.

612 Revenge is a topic which shows clearly the essential fluidity
614 of the family. There are no well-defined degrees of relationship within which responsibility rests. Instead, everyone
[627] knows, in the open life of the community, how many persons
[682] share the family life of the individual, and they alone are held to account, or they alone demand compensation. From its very nature, the family must be a bilateral unit which, when powerful, stretches out to absorb members of the ancestral families of both mother and father.

Not only does the family thus appear constantly to be attracting to itself members of the ancestral family of either parent, but these relatives themselves are deeply interested in the affairs of the family. This is most clearly shown in the case of children who, of course, are members of the ancestral family of both their mother and father. A few days after 553 birth some relative is expected to call together the people of 612 the village where the child is born for the bestowal and validation of an ancestral name. It is considered an evidence of 614 poverty if this is done by the father, as if his child were only [558] supported by his parents, not by a larger circle of relatives. It is immaterial whether this gathering be called by a relative

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

754 members, and delegated the task to a man who was known to be skilled in such matters. The latter stole some shreds of the offender's clothing, placed them in a human skull which he fastened to a long rope and threw into a swift stretch of the river. As the rapids tossed the skull to and fro, the person whose clothing was within began to feel uneasy; first he experienced a jumping pain in his head, but as the wild movements continued, he became light-headed and finally delirious. At this juncture, it was decided to pull back the skull, but the rope broke and it was carried away downstream. Nothing could save the man and he died within a few hours. This particular incident occurred among the Bella Bella, but it is agreed that it might have happened in Bella Coola.

[554] The mingled fear of, and aversion to, a person who knows some such secret method of killing, fades into insignificance compared to the extreme loathing of every Bella Coola for sorcerers. Their methods of killing may be similar to the ones just described, but they are evil creatures who practise secretly, working entirely to gratify their own personal desires. Not [683] only is the murder of a sorcerer a virtuous act, but the relatives of one should be put to death without mercy. There is no single factor which has caused so much hatred, bitterness, and suspicion as belief in the activities of sorcerers. Conversion to [797] Christianity has scarcely altered it, and men who have been members of the church for ten to twenty years remain fully convinced that some of their associates have loathsome abilities as sorcerers. In many parts of the world, belief in black magic and witchcraft is one of the last native convictions to pass away, and it seems probable that this will be the case in Bella Coola although, of course, it will become increasingly difficult to obtain information about the subject.

The actual methods used by different sorcerers vary, although most of them require an article which has been in contact with their intended victim. Consequently, they seek pieces of soiled clothing, nail parings, hair clippings, spittle, and other objects of the same type which are usually concealed

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

by their owners for safety. Judas, an old Bella Coola believed to be a sorcerer, has been seen to scrape up the moist earth where a man has urinated; in former times anyone doing such a suspicious act would have been killed. The article obtained is hidden and kept for future use, and if the practitioner wishes to inflict pain or death, he places it in contact with some potent medicine. Human bones are frequently employed for this purpose, although the most powerful is said to be grease obtained by boiling flesh cut from the inner side of the thigh of a recently buried corpse. To obtain either of these, graves must be robbed, another reason for hating sorcerers. 754 [683]

Secrecy is essential, so a sorcerer is usually assisted by his children, and in this way he has a better chance of obtaining articles belonging to different people without arousing suspicion. The necessary knowledge can accordingly be transmitted from generation to generation, sometimes without the slightest inkling of it becoming known. Even if a man is found out, he may be able to bribe his discoverer to silence. [424]

Sometimes two from different tribes work in partnership to lessen the danger of practising their rites near the village of a victim. For example, a Bella Coola sorcerer may send an article to an accomplice in Bella Bella for placing in contact with strong medicine; this causes the victim to languish and die while the person responsible continues his usual routine of life around the village, suspected by no one. The commencement of such a partnership is a matter of great difficulty, since anyone who admits his crimes places himself in the power of his confidant. Sometimes, however, rumours that a certain individual is practising malevolent magic reach a foreign sorcerer who needs an accomplice. If he considers that the information is authentic, he may admit his own prowess and suggest that they work together. Such an arrangement is profitable to both parties, and a partnership so formed may continue for generations. 648 754

Sorcerers display considerable ingenuity in arranging that their skill shall bring them pecuniary benefits as well as the 754 756

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

in a compartment of his box containing a bear's bladder tied into sections; this caused his enemy to suffer stricture and soon to die in agony. 539 754

Following the usual custom, the relatives of the dead man smeared their faces with ashes which they left in position for a year. The widow, who had loved her husband very dearly, allowed this indication of mourning to remain even longer than the customary period. On several occasions Tsika made somewhat slighting remarks about her excessive grief, and when one of his sons also commented upon it, she became suspicious and told her relatives. One of them was a chief of the village where Tsika was then living and where he was already regarded with distrust. This man visited the home of his bereaved kinswoman and called the chiefs of her village together to discuss the matter, and to inform them of the suspicions which his conduct had aroused in his new home. Three days later, Tsika happened to come to the village and was at once summoned to the house where the chiefs had assembled to interrogate him. Tsika sat on a box in the centre of the group and denied, slowly and positively, that he had any knowledge of sorcery, adding that his poverty confirmed his statement. At this moment Awaxikxaixxaix-dis came rushing into the house, furiously brandishing a rifle, and exclaiming that it was scandalous the way in which unjust accusations were being levelled at Tsika. One of the chiefs quietly slipped behind the shaman, knocked his fire-arm upwards so that it exploded harmlessly in the air, and threw him to the ground where he threatened him with a large knife.

"I will not brook any interference from you in this matter," he said.

This so frightened Awaxikxaixxaix-dis that he blurted out that he knew Tsika was a sorcerer and that he had seen his box containing a decayed human body. Tsika was less excited than anyone else, and slipped out of the house in the confusion, merely pausing to ask:

"What are you going to do about it?"

He returned to his new village where, of course, the news soon followed of what had been discovered. The chiefs decided that he must be killed, and that the most convenient occasion would be at a feast of seals which was to take place in the near future. Tsika accepted an invitation to this and was slain while he was busy handling his spoon. One of his sons was killed with him, another who escaped through a hole in the floor was slaughtered near the village. His two brothers were absent on a hunting expedition, but a party tracked them and slew them in their camp before they knew that their evil deeds had been found out. Tsika's two daughters were allowed to live, but were given to a famous warrior who kept them practically as prisoners. Awaxikxaixxaix-dis, who seems to have escaped all punishment for his share in the affair, guided a party to the sorcerer's box. It was found to be old and moss-covered, obviously

539 754 683

539 754

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

spit upon his own hands and rubbed them over the patient's head, his arms, his trunk, his legs, and finally his feet, as if massaging him. Xwatli's strength began to return at the first touch of Thunder's hands, and, when the treatment was finished, he felt entirely rejuvenated. Thunder told him to overtake his friends and to massage them in the same way and they would be revived. He explained that they had been travelling in circles of ever-decreasing radius which was the reason that they had neither reached their destination nor recrossed their own tracks. He added that they must think constantly of their first objective, Ulkatcho, Nadäco in the Bella Coola language, and that at night Xwatli must sleep on the side of the five nearest that goal. 727 787

Soon afterwards the four wanderers were surprised to see a stalwart man swinging along the trail behind them, and their amazement was intense when they realized that it was Xwatli whom they had left at the point of death. He bade three of his comrades hide, and massaged the fourth as Thunder had done to him; this restored his strength exactly as in his own case. The one so cured then concealed himself, while Xwatli treated another of his comrades, and finally the third and fourth. This was not the end of the assistance so obtained. Within a few minutes of their recovery, they found the trail they had so long been seeking and reached Ulkatcho before night, though under normal circumstances the same distance would have required four days of travel. There were several Bella Coola at the settlement who were overjoyed at the safety of those for whom all hope had long been abandoned. They rested for four days, then set out for home. Xwatli told his comrades to fix their minds upon their objective, and as a result they were able to make the journey with phenomenal rapidity. 727

Thunder had granted Xwatli the boon of sakwalajat on this occasion, and had promised that he would come to his help whenever called upon. Xwatli was a sorcerer, a profession which had been practised for generations in his family, and he now performed more openly than ever, assured that Thunder would be able to protect him. The malefactor killed more and more people, until he became an object of universal hatred and fear. At last the principal chief of the village, confident in the power which the giving of many potlatches had bestowed upon him, ordered an expert shot to slay Xwatli. The man so deputed had himself lost several relatives and gladly watched an opportunity. This came when the sorcerer was paddling across the Bella Coola near the old Hudson's Bay Company's post; he took careful aim from ambush, fired, and the evil man fell dead. A medicine can be made from the corpse of a murdered person, which, when used by the relatives, causes the killer's death. To prevent this, the executioner called his friends and they took 754 [776] [685]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

701 difficult to estimate the former influence of such warriors. The belief of all in their ability must have given them some prestige, although the requirements of practical qualifications in fighting must often have prevented them from functioning as military leaders. In other words, a man may be, socially, a warrior, even though he lacks ability as a fighting man.

701 The functions of warriors are not limited to fighting with enemies of other tribes. Each has the power to kill and must 693 exercise it when requested. If a mistake is made in a cere-[688] monial kusiut dance, the offender must be killed, and one way [575] in which this is accomplished is by the senior members of the society requesting a professional warrior to act as executioner. [428] One of these men, who lived at Ăsăn·ăn·i, always used a stone [411] club which had been handed down from generation to generation, becoming the property of each new incumbent of the [754] name and prerogative. In other cases, the killing is said to have been done with the aid of magic. The power of the Ăsăn·ăn·i warrior had been confirmed with so much goods that he was the most powerful professional killer known to the Bella Coola. He acted on instructions from the senior members of the kusiut society or when called upon by anyone. If, [684] for example, a man found that his wife had been faithless and wished to kill her lover, it was only necessary to tell the professional warrior, who was bound to act in accordance with his prerogative. He received no pay, since he was merely [682] exercising his right. The relatives of the murdered person never took revenge on the slayer, realizing that he was powerless in the matter, though they frequently requested him to slay the person who had asked him to kill the first victim. He could never refuse to do so, even if the victim were his own brother, or if he knew that the person he was to kill was guiltless. The underlying principle was that this man's power had [761] been increased to such a pitch by the distribution of presents that if he failed to exercise it on demand, it would react upon himself and cause his own death. This Ăsăn·ăn·i warrior began in time to have an aversion for his vocation, since he

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

names are also willed, but since their value depends on the 578
goods expended to validate them, there is seldom bitterness 614
about their allotment. Indeed, a chief who is the legal owner 553 of a designation which came from above in the beginning of time, will in many cases choose to elevate his position with [428] respect to a title of comparatively recent date. But if any person who is not a member of the ancestral family should [685]
dare to use an ancestral name, all the members rise to avenge
the theft, for such they feel it to be. [178] In recent years, however, this practice has become comparatively common. In such cases a man, eager to share in the glories of a myth and able to give a potlatch, has validated an ancestral name to which he has no right. The presence of the white man alone restrains the injured ancestral family. Names are sometimes lent or hired to those who are not members of the group for [426] definite sums; the recipient recompenses the individual. If [427]
such names are not returned for several generations quarrels
are apt to arise since the recipient claims to be the real owner and not the temporary possessor. During his tenancy of the name he is entitled to any prerogative attached to it, but he is not considered a bona fide member of the ancestral family.

Instances have occurred in which an old man or woman, [428]
believing himself to be the last survivor of an ancestral family, has donated his names and myth to those who have befriended him, or these have been taken by those who buried him. Some individuals are constantly watching to conduct the funerals of [557] friendless old people in the hope of so obtaining names. But in almost every case this leads to friction, since it is virtually impossible for an ancestral family to die out. Perhaps in the next generation, perhaps in the following one, some youth will claim descent from the first ancestors of the supposedly defunct family, and claim the myth and names embodied therein. This [628] leads to a feud with the person, or his descendants, who has received the names through aid given to the "last" of the family.

Such instances of an ancestral family becoming practically 614
621

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

553
* 556 A man may receive so many prerogatives with regard to house
425 painting that he has to continue the designs on the sides of his
[606] dwelling, or he may receive so many figures for a totem-pole
[532] that he can erect one of composite pattern. X may acquire prerogatives not only from his father-in-law, but from his mother-in-law, and if he is the husband of several wives, the family of each may contribute something. If, for some inexplicable reason, X is not given any prerogative from the family of his wife, he uses one of his own ancestral myths with the names belonging thereto. A man who gives many potlatches can choose to validate numerous family names for himself, or to concentrate on one alone, elevating it to a position of great importance. But any names he validates must belong to his [615] family; it is contrary to custom for a Bella Coola to steal a name to which he has no right.

*556 At this, or some other suitable time, X prays for assistance
782 in the complicated rites that are to follow. Taking four pieces of pounded and dyed cedar-bark, and four pieces of undyed bark, he places on each a small quantity of food and throws the eight into the fire. Likewise he may throw in four small pieces of any kind of goods. As he does so he appeals to the supreme god:

"Please strengthen my spirit for the many duties which are before me."

Instead of praying himself, X may ask a shaman to do so [756] for him, in the belief that the latter's supplication will be more efficacious.

*556 The necessity for supernatural assistance lies in the fact
688 that any serious error or disaster in the performance of potlatch
628 rites calls for summary punishment, since X has allowed ceremonial sisaok knowledge to reach the uninitiated. In such a case the duty of meting out a penalty falls upon the members of a foreign tribe. Nothing is said at the time, but the departing guests take away with them information of what has happened. Great latitude is allowed as to who shall be the chastisers. The guests may be related to X and the members

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

556 performance of rites of this kind. But sociological and ethical [182] concepts, shown at their highest development in the potlatch, are not limited to a few weeks of the year, or to any class of the community. Generosity on a large scale can be publicly [577] displayed by chiefs alone, but to a lesser degree this virtue must be practised by everyone, since avarice is considered a 576 major sin. Anyone who happens to pass a house in which a meal is taking place must be invited to share it; to do other-
574 wise would be considered rude. The person summoned must take at least a trifle to show that he is not churlish and too proud to eat with his host, while if he is hungry, he shares [177] whatever is being served as a matter of course. The head of the family should be the first to taste any wine[14] as proof that [273] it is not poisoned, but otherwise he fares little, if any, better [342] than his guests. This custom is now rapidly falling into disuse through the construction of individual family houses with doors [414] and locks. The fisherman who has exclusive rights to a suit-476 able place for netting olachen or salmon must give some of his catch to anyone who asks him. If he has landed four salmon, [226] the first solicitor is given one, later comers, none at all. When a net is set in the river, anyone passing is allowed to raise it and take some of the contents; if there are two fish, he may remove one, if many, three or four. To take all would be a [685] despicable theft, sufficient to brand the transgressor as greedy;
[626] hence public opinion prevents the system from being carried to excess. A hunter who brings back several mountain goats [224] or other large game is expected to invite his neighbours to a feast, which virtually means that he must share his takings.

556 Presents of this kind increase the prestige of the donor who has thus acted in accordance with Bella Coola ethics, and are 431 advantageous investments since others must reciprocate. The system is carried to such lengths that, until recent years, it was more profitable to give away goods than to sell them. In the case of a sale, the purchaser endeavours to give as little as possible, whereas the recipient of a gift returns as much as [14]This is a modern practice, dating from the introduction of home-brew.

[The Breaker Dance]

*575 lsaix. X is one of the few kukusiut having the prerogative of *796 using supernatural singers. The evening's ceremony concludes [424] in the usual fashion.

Until the departure of his call, X is liable to fits of frenzy so that on both qothm and nebusam he often visits every house and breaks utensils, though his guardians appear to be making every effort to restrain him. Breakers, irrespective of their [424] exact prerogative, are enabled to act in any unusual manner they desire, and strive to excel in peculiar behaviour. A favourite trick is to smear themselves with excrement, either real or imitation. It is difficult to over-estimate the enormous [554] prestige which such actions call forth in the eyes of the unini-
[787] tiated, to whom it appears that the coming of a call entirely [828] alters the mentality of the recipient, a belief which the kukusiut make every effort to maintain. Nothing further need be said of either qothm or the preliminaries of nebusam, both of which follow the usual pattern.

*575 When the uninitiated are admitted to X's house on nebusam
*796 evening, they are filled with wonder at the sight of the masked singers, of Sänoltxmulelts Älquntäm, and of the four super-781 natural Breakers who move wildly to and fro as the songs are sung, as if only the eagle down which the kukusiut blow upon them restrains them from destroying property. The fluent Änoºlikwolsaix makes the most of her opportunity to describe the wonders which are before their eyes. Then the uninitiated are told that it will be safer for them to withdraw, and hurry out. Presently they are startled to hear the sound of people moving, and the four supernatural Breakers, followed by all the kukusiut, leave the house and proceed to the lowest one in the village. Around the fire go the masked four, picking up stones and hurling them at any destructible property. Most [252] houses contain a number of stones which have been used in [578] boiling liquids, so that there is no lack of missiles. Kukusiut who are wise take care to hide or remove valuable property [685] before this inroad begins, since the wearers of the masks take advantage of the opportunity to destroy the goods of those

[The Breaker Dance]

they do not like. No compensation can be claimed, on the theory that supernatural beings do not have to pay for any damage they may do. Although the property of some kukusiut is destroyed, the chief sufferers are the uninitiated; this serves to increase their fear and respect for the society with which such all-powerful beings are in league. After visiting every house in the village, the party returns to X's, where the masks are burnt, the call sent back, and the proceedings conclude in the usual manner. 575* 796* 781 [578] [685]

A certain amount of information concerning the history of the Breaker dance was obtained from Sxek, the owner of the prerogative just described. He is a well-informed man, but the writer had no opportunity of comparing his beliefs with those of his associates, so the following must be regarded as unsubstantiated evidence. This man stated that the Breaker dance is the most important of all in Bella Bella, and that many Bella Coola prerogatives have been obtained from this source, although some of their first ancestors likewise enjoyed it. He further stated that the term, noltcista, by which the Bella Coola always designate a Breaker, is of Bella Bella origin, and that the ancient Bella Coola term was dirtia.[64] Sxek also told of an occasion when a number of Bella Bella, present on the qothm night of a Bella Coola ceremony, were disturbed when eating by the thud of a stone thrown, from outside, against the wall of the back-room. Out rushed a number of kukusiut, incensed at the disrespect shown to their gathering. They caught the offender, but released him when he was found to be a Bella Bella Breaker, foolishly demonstrating his prowess. The marshals decided to retaliate and arranged with two Bella Coola Breakers to exercise their rights and destroy the canoes and food-boxes of their guests. They did so, and later paid for the damage. The Bella Coola were thus able to demon- 575* 796* [115] [171] [177] 575* 796* 648 688

[64] Sxek and several of his children are the only Bella Coola known to the writer who habitually use the sound "r." For example, he says "Snulsri," instead of "Snulsli." He says that he is himself unable to distinguish any peculiarity in his own pronunciation, although other Bella Coola are aware of it. [197]

*533 B Sàaststnagwuo | olàsulx | skà'alpsdulsdai | dirmàt·ampdjx
Go within | my house, | I am giving food | to my friends.

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

C The third part of this song has been forgotten.

[614] [424] [685] [609] (a) Recorded as song VII D 28b, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard. It is said that this song has been handed down for generations in an ancestral family; they now regard it as a family possession and would consider its use by others to be stealing.

(b) Many years ago a solitary Bella Bella used to paddle to Kimsquit almost every year. He was dressed like a chief and had the mien of one, so that his hosts assumed him to be a person of importance. It was later found that he was a poor man. The mocking of foreigners is a common theme of a'alk songs.

am'kl·a Song Used for Ximsimlaix(a)

*533 575 578 A Nulwulukàstamqualsan | sìlxwosmaikila
He has fallen so that his buttocks are uppermost, | Hail(b)!

Damunmulsan·imut | skusiutdas
He has come to hurt, | that kusiut(c).

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

B and C. The second and third parts have been forgotten.

(a) Recorded as song VII D 3c, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.

(b) A mockingly deferential salutation used in a'alk songs describing the kukusiut.

(c) Ximsimlaix was an a'alk who is said to have seen a Cannibal kusiut when the latter was supposed to be in the land above. A song was composed about the incident, and the above fragment has been remembered for many years. Ximsimlaix was initiated into the kusiut society; see vol. II, p. 265.

*533 575 796 203 As already described, whenever a dancer is performing, the women utter a peculiar high-pitched drone and the heralds call out remarks suitable to the occasion. A phonograph record[3] was made of the drone, followed by a cry suitable for either sisaok or a'alk dances. The following words are virtually sung:

Yelosàldimut | stàhmpakais
Do not err, | chiefs.

[3]Recorded as song VII D 29c, National Museum of Canada.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

seldom a chief who had given many potlatches. Successful raiders rarely slew such an one; his position placed him above the dangers to which lesser men were subject.

Raids appear never to have been carried out solely for the purpose of giving warriors opportunities to display their prowess, or of permitting young men to prove their mettle. Scarcity of food was the commonest cause for forays when, of course, the victims were chosen for their accumulated supplies. The Kwakiutl especially, lacking abundance of salmon, often attacked the Bella Coola. Even more dreaded were the Kitkatla, the most warlike people of the central coast, who used to raid for many miles to carry off slaves whom they sold or traded for other commodities. Trespassing, too, was a source of friction which often led to hostility. In such a case, the offenders were usually held up to ridicule at potlatches, and the irritation gradually increased until wiped out in bloodshed. Members of a tribe which had suffered from a raid prompted by any of these motives would await a suitable opportunity for retaliation; this in turn would be avenged, and a vendetta often ensued lasting for generations. As already described, a ceremonial error brought punishment from a neighbouring tribe; this was the only motive which caused fighting between different Bella Coola villages. In the last century there was a struggle of this kind between the people of Stuix and Ałqäläxl in which the former were victorious and took many slaves who were later ransomed. When ill-luck had dogged a village or a group of villages for some time, the inhabitants sometimes endeavoured to wipe out their misfortunes by attacking another tribe.

The teeming salmon at Bella Coola, Kimsquit, and Täl·io, made it unnecessary for the Bella Coola to wage aggressive war for which they were unfitted both on account of their unmilitary attitude and their lack of central authority. On the other hand, they were tempting victims for more belligerent neighbours. The narrow Bella Coola valley, however, far removed from the open sea, and densely populated, was difficult to attack.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

553 * 556 425 [606] [532] A man may receive so many prerogatives with regard to house painting that he has to continue the designs on the sides of his dwelling, or he may receive so many figures for a totem-pole that he can erect one of composite pattern. X may acquire prerogatives not only from his father-in-law, but from his mother-in-law, and if he is the husband of several wives, the family of each may contribute something. If, for some inexplicable reason, X is not given any prerogative from the family of his wife, he uses one of his own ancestral myths with the names belonging thereto. A man who gives many potlatches can choose to validate numerous family names for himself, or to concentrate on one alone, elevating it to a position of great importance. But any names he validates must belong to his [685] family; it is contrary to custom for a Bella Coola to steal a name to which he has no right.

*556 782 At this, or some other suitable time, X prays for assistance in the complicated rites that are to follow. Taking four pieces of pounded and dyed cedar-bark, and four pieces of undyed bark, he places on each a small quantity of food and throws the eight into the fire. Likewise he may throw in four small pieces of any kind of goods. As he does so he appeals to the supreme god:

"Please strengthen my spirit for the many duties which are before me."

[756] Instead of praying himself, X may ask a shaman to do so for him, in the belief that the latter's supplication will be more efficacious.

*556 ●688 628 The necessity for supernatural assistance lies in the fact that any serious error or disaster in the performance of potlatch rites calls for summary punishment, since X has allowed ceremonial nsaok knowledge to reach the uninitiated. In such a case the duty of meting out a penalty falls upon the members of a foreign tribe. Nothing is said at the time, but the departing guests take away with them information of what has happened. Great latitude is allowed as to who shall be the chastisers. The guests may be related to X and the members of his village, hence they will not feel it incumbent upon them to intervene. But news travels, and in course of time the sisaok members of some other tribe will decide to send a raiding party against X's village. All informants agreed most emphatically that this custom prevailed among the coast people from the Tsimshian country to Alert Bay, but specific examples could not be obtained. The Bella Coola regard such a raid as the proper course to pursue, and belligerent tribes may have used an irregularity in the potlatch rites as an excuse for an assault. It is clear, however, that this custom never attained such prominence that it could be called a law. 556* 688 628

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The following is an instance of the Bella Coola outlook on the question: 556* 688

The father of an informant had had such success in giving potlatches that his neighbours were jealous. On one occasion he prepared a representation of a whale, an elaborate wooden frame, fifteen feet long, operated by men concealed within and carrying passengers; this was a figure which entered into his ancestral myth. One of the carpenters who made it, bribed by a jealous rival of the donor of the potlatch, arranged that the lower jaw of the whale should fall to the floor during the proceedings. This revealed the mechanism of the structure. White influence on the coast prevented an incursion of foreign raiders, but according to this informant, the chiefs determined that his father should die, and they employed a sorcerer for this purpose. His father and eleven other relatives died soon afterwards. This man, the sole survivor, ascribes his escape to his adoption of Christianity. [578] [532] [578] [177] [754]

Another instance of the penalty which follows errors in potlatch ritual occurred a few years ago, when a number of young men used the cone-shaped whistles openly, as if they had been toys. The presence of the white man prevented any open steps towards punishment, but before long all the youths died. No one knows what caused their deaths, though probably they were due to an expert in black magic acting on the instructions of a senior sisaok. [534] [177] [754]

After the prayer, X and his family give more food to their guests, whose boxes containing what they are to carry away are increasing in number. By his lavishness, X increases his prestige in the eyes of his fellow-villagers. 556*

If he can afford to build a new house embodying the form [335]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

a man, ux·unaisa, with the prerogative of enforcing obedience 424 to river taboos. Ever since, the owner of this name, when it 463 has been duly legalized, has had the right to perform this function. In some cases, such as carpenters and singers, the valid- 551
ation of a prerogative has not brought with it the necessary 693 ability, so that the incumbent remains a properly ratified, but [773] non-functioning, craftsman. No mechanical skill is required by a River Guardian, hence the owner of the name ux·unaisa has always been able to perform his duties.

From time immemorial certain restrictions have been en- 784 forced concerning the river: No refuse may be thrown in, 825 otherwise the olachen would remain in the ocean. For the 226 same reason, women at certain periods are not allowed to bathe lest a speck of blood should blind the fish and prevent them [515] from seeing the route. Occasionally an olachen with red eyes 841 is caught; this is caused by some heedless woman. When the [562] fish are running in the river, women are not allowed on the bank, nor to repair the nets. At high tide, it is forbidden to drive stakes for olachen nets.

The number of prohibitions increases during the critical period of the salmon run. Then no freshly hewn planks can be set afloat, and even a canoe which has just been completed [502] must be kept for ten days before launching. No one whose [765] husband or wife has died within the last year can embark at the village, but must proceed to a landing-place at the head of the fiord. Most important of all, refuse of salmon must be deposited in the woods; if thrown into the river, the fish would smell it and avoid the stream. Even accidents such as the upsetting of a canoe, or the spilling of olachen grease, are considered to be offences.

Disregard of any of these injunctions is displeasing to the 688
salmon and it is the duty of the River Guardian to punish the 693 offender, irrespective of his rank. In case of slight infringements, he beats the guilty person or throws him into the river. The guilty person usually scrambles out, but should he be swept away and drowned, no recompense can be claimed by

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

688 his relatives. This punishment is customary in cases of the 693 upsetting of a canoe. Death is the penalty for throwing refuse into the river, particularly during the summer, and until the [177] coming of the white man the River Guardian exacted it without hesitation.

THE PROFESSION OF UTTERING A DRONING CRY

424 At the appearance of masked figures representing super-551 natural beings, whether in tsaak or kusiut dances, many of the women repeatedly utter a peculiar, high-pitched, droning cry
[575] which adds considerably to the weirdness and impressiveness [463] of the occasion. Ability to do this depends on an ancestral prerogative duly confirmed by the distribution of presents.
[431] Many ancestral myths describe how some of the first women
[773] were given by Alqustäm, or acquired in other ways, the right to drone, and mention is made of the name used by each with respect to this prerogative. Unlike the one previously described, many of the first women possessed this privilege, which is accordingly common at the present time. A name [553] of this type is usually confirmed in girlhood, sometimes even in infancy, and being of relatively slight importance may be validated at a ceremony of less dignity than a potlatch. One of these names is Nunuqwelslaiqu-a, which has reference to [773] the blue-green sheen of some abalone-shell brought from the east by Raven in the beginning of time, as described in the ancestral myth in which this name is included. For many [178] years there has been considerable laxity with regard to this prerogative, and women lacking it have even been urged to drone in order to add to the solemnity of the occasion and to increase the wonder of the uninitiated.

424 There is another similar prerogative, enabling the incum-767 bent to drone at mourning ceremonies. In the beginning of time, Smaoan of Kimsquit married Tlakwaitl, the daughter of 463 a Bella Bella chief, who had this right. It has since been 773 transmitted from one of her descendants to another at Kimsquit.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

quit. Details of this prerogative were not obtainable, but it seems to follow the general type. 424 767 463

THE PROFESSION OF FIRST BERRY PICKER

All women can pick berries, but in every village there is at least one who has the prerogative of picking the first of every kind. The origin of this right is lost in dim antiquity, but, like all others, each first berry picker has a special professional name embodied in her ancestral myth which must be duly validated before she can function. One of these is Stlruarwak-simân-a, another is Ła'ya. Though normally reserved for women, one of these names is occasionally given to a male child, in which case it is said to have been hermaphroditized. No one would dare to pick berries until the legal picker has paraded up and down the sidewalk carrying on her back her picking basket decorated with a representation of the sun, an act which is believed to ripen the berries. 222 424 463 551 562 532 789

"Get ready to pick red elderberries [or whatever species is ripe] tomorrow," she keeps calling out.

The berries may then be picked by anyone. This is repeated for every variety. As far as could be learnt, there was no social mechanism to punish a woman who picked berries before the announcement of the official picker; obedience seems to have been so universal that infractions are said to have been unknown though formerly there may have been some penalty of which even the memory has disappeared. 688 183

THE PROFESSION OF WARRIOR

The profession of warrior is another prerogative handed down from the distant past and requiring validation before it can be used. As with other rights of this type, magical means are in many cases employed to make any young man brave and successful, but there are a number of warriors confirmed as such by the distribution of presents at the time of bestowal on them of professional names. At the present time, it is 701 424 463 431 551

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

701 difficult to estimate the former influence of such warriors. The belief of all in their ability must have given them some prestige, although the requirements of practical qualifications in fighting must often have prevented them from functioning as military leaders. In other words, a man may be, socially, a warrior, even though he lacks ability as a fighting man.

701 The functions of warriors are not limited to fighting with 693 enemies of other tribes. Each has the power to kill and must exercise it when requested. If a mistake is made in a cere-
[688] monial kusiut dance, the offender must be killed, and one way
[575] in which this is accomplished is by the senior members of the society requesting a professional warrior to act as executioner.
[428] One of these men, who lived at Ăsăn·ăn·i, always used a stone
[411] club which had been handed down from generation to generation, becoming the property of each new incumbent of the
[754] name and prerogative. In other cases, the killing is said to have been done with the aid of magic. The power of the Ăsăn·ăn·i warrior had been confirmed with so much goods that he was the most powerful professional killer known to the Bella Coola. He acted on instructions from the senior members of the kusiut society or when called upon by anyone. If,
[684] for example, a man found that his wife had been faithless and wished to kill her lover, it was only necessary to tell the professional warrior, who was bound to act in accordance with his prerogative. He received no pay, since he was merely
[682] exercising his right. The relatives of the murdered person never took revenge on the slayer, realizing that he was powerless in the matter, though they frequently requested him to slay the person who had asked him to kill the first victim. He could never refuse to do so, even if the victim were his own brother, or if he knew that the person he was to kill was guiltless. The underlying principle was that this man's power had [761] been increased to such a pitch by the distribution of presents that if he failed to exercise it on demand, it would react upon himself and cause his own death. This Ăsăn·ăn·i warrior began in time to have an aversion for his vocation, since he

Ickelwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

534 one used by some of Triks's ancestors. It was brought to the ocean and 754 thrown in.

Taboos

784 The Bella Coola regard as taboos those injunctions that are observed in the belief that their neglect would cause automatic punishment. The mechanism of enforcement is frequently not understood; it is enough to know that an unpleasant result would follow disobedience. Some taboos are in force at all times, others only during certain seasons of the year, and still others at critical periods of life. Since the psychology of such [789] beliefs is essentially magical rather than religious, they could justifiably be grouped at this point. Unfortunately, to do so would destroy the continuity of accounts of birth, adolescence, death, ceremonial chastity, and many other aspects of Bella Coola life subject to taboo. The injunctions enforced by the River Guardian, the restrictions observed by a girl after puberty, the continence required after different medicines, all are taboos, disregard of which brings certain punishment. These and many others have already been described in connection with the activities to which they pertain. It is doubtful whether the Bella Coola have a single word to describe taboos [783] in general, though they are all regarded as sxaiâx, that is, as something which is ceremonially unclean.

Scarcely to be distinguished from taboos are ceremonial errors, yun-imut or kân-imut. Failure to give presents to heralds when a seat breaks beneath a chief or a dancer stumbles, or unnecessary activity during the year's waiting for the fruition of supernatural good fortune are ritual mistakes of this type. Neglect of such regulations brings punishment, though of a lesser kind than the breaking of taboos. If the [688] error has been in connection with a ceremony, the offence can [203] be wiped out by presents to heralds, and the terms yun-imut and kân-imut are likewise applied to some of their prerogatives such as the ability to claim clothing during the marriage of a chief's child.

Most taboos and errors can best be described with other

2; McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 untranslatable word with the significance of "One who has 778 suffered loss through faulty concealment [of his repository]."
425 Some of these vaults[1] are said to be dangerous to the uninitiated who avoid them and in this way the sanctity of some [784] chiefs' meeting-places is guarded.

*575 According to Kimsquit belief, Ano'likwolsaix has a husband, Almoqlaikila, who dwells with her in every repository.
778 If an uninitiated person should chance to find a vault, he falls 776 dead before the power emanating from Ano'likwolsaix. Her husband then restores the dead by blowing violently on the back of the victim's neck, accompanying this with cries of hoip. When a person is initiated into the kusiut society, the uninitiated hear the songs used, in many of which are references to the experiences of the novice with this supernatural pair.

*575 Turning now to the manner in which the kukusiut regard their own society, it is evident that the most important duty of each member is to aid in impressing and deceiving the uninitiated. The prestige of the organization depends upon the ability of its members to inspire awe, hence any weakness in fulfilling this obligation is an anti-social act. For this purpose the society acts as a whole. Many kukusiut have, for example, [424] Cannibal prerogatives, and on occasion the Cannibals, having the same functions, work together, but they do not form a separate organization of their own.[2] Many of the means employed to deceive and impress the uninitiated have already been described. Mythology records, and it appears to be a [773] fact, that long ago the ascendancy of the kukusiut was often [178] challenged by the a'alk and other uninitiated, but when the white man came the society had reached a position of such eminence that the powers of its members were unquestioned. Moreover, the combined strength of virtually all the seniors of the tribe was so great that an uninitiated person could not assert himself even if he was suspicious.

• [688] Although members of the society exert every effort to con-

[1] The Bella Coola state that such sub-societies are found among the Kwakiutl.

[2] [i.e. - a repository of supernatural power - ANALYST]

Z:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

ceal their subterfuges, it sometimes happens that an uninitiated 575* person sees or hears something which he should not know. The 688 simplest way to deal with this situation is to kill the observer. ●
It is said that as late as 1900 a young man, impelled by curiosity, wandered up a valley into which he had been warned not to penetrate, and met a Cannibal whom he believed had vanished into the upper realms. Almost dumbfounded, he accepted the latter's invitation to sit down, and was slain by him. More often, and especially if the observer is the child of a kusiut, he is initiated into the ranks of the society. If this happens at any time of year except the actual cere- 575* monial season, he cannot perform immediately, but he is taken to the secret meeting place of the village chiefs, and there the mysteries of the organization are explained to him. The uninitiated are told that the observer has had a shaman's experience. With the aid of the older kukusiut he then performs a dance and conjuring feat of the type already described (I, p. [292] 564), and is secluded until the next autumn, meanwhile [756] wearing the distinctive collar of a shaman. In the songs used on this occasion no mention is made of a wash-basin, so of course the lad only performs ceremonially. When winter comes he is formally initiated into the society.

It is somewhat difficult to understand and explain the 575* sentiments which lead a young man to obey rigidly the dictates 781 of the senior kukusiut in deceiving his former friends. If 626 it becomes known that a youth has seen something which should have been concealed, the senior kukusiut of his village meet in their ceremonial spot and decide that he must be put [688] through the shaman's rite. Some relative of the youth is always ready to provide the necessary kusiut prerogative; otherwise he would have to be killed. Two or three members are then sent to catch the young man. On some pretext they lure him into the woods and then carry him away, struggling in fear, to the holy of holies, the place which he had been told to avoid since he would die if he penetrated to it. Here he finds all the seniors of his village, seated with grave expressions on

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Not knowing where to go nor what to do, he hid himself on a small island within sight of the village whence he could see and hear the people seeking him. At times some of his kukusiut friends came close, calling his name; but not till he was driven to do so by hunger did he reveal his hiding-place. Then he answered the shouts of two men who at first pretended they were merely seeking him because of the worry his prolonged disappearance was causing his parents. Once the lad was within their grasp they carried him swiftly to the house of one of the chiefs, where he found himself seated among the most influential men of his village with the door barred behind him. The fear which any youth would feel in like circumstances was increased greatly by the awe with which he, as an uninitiated person, regarded the kukusiut, especially on this occasion when he knew that he had roused their anger. 575* [781]

"What did you hear?" asked one of the marshals. The lad was too terrified to lie, so he blurted out all the gossip he had overheard, including the news of the death of the Rivers Inlet Cannibal.

"You have heard too much, you must join us," continued his questioner.

The same man then asked one of his relatives whether he would "buy" the lad from them, that is, whether they would provide the necessary goods to have him initiated. It was understood that through his improper knowledge he had come under the jurisdiction of the kukusiut and that, unless made one of them, they would kill him. The lad was the protégé of his uncle who at the time was initiating him into the susaok ceremonial, and who accordingly was most unwilling to have his nephew made a kusiut. [688]

"Let him be a spy," said the uncle.

After much discussion this proposition was agreed to; the decision was facilitated by the fact that one of the lad's ancestors had been a spy. All night he was kept sitting in the centre of a group of elders who revealed to him the mysteries of the organization and showed him the whistles and other regalia. For twenty years this man remained a spy, dutifully informing upon any over-inquisitive, uninitiated person.

The informant was more than sixty years of age when he related this incident, but the passage of time had not caused him to forget the utter terror and feeling of inferiority experienced when he was taken into the presence of the senior kukusiut. [781]

Although every kusiut assists in preserving the dignity and awe of the society, this duty is especially the function of those members who are regarded as the earthly representatives of 575* 424 776

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 Ano°likwolsaix. They may be termed marshals of the society.
[424] Each must have an ancestral prerogative for this, duly vali-[776] dated by presents to the kukusiut, in addition to a kusiut prerogative of some kind. In each village there are four or five of these men. Whenever food is being served at a kusiut dance, the marshals receive theirs first and then one or other of them addresses the audience in slow and impressive style, beating on the floor with a stick to add emphasis to his words. He admonishes his fellows to safeguard the ancient rites of the society, to be bold, to be secretive, and he pays honour to the member who has given the dance. It is they who take the leading part if a youth is dragged away to the meeting-place for initiation, and it is they who arrange matters when a spy reports that a *575 non-member is over-inquisitive. If any member of the society 688 should break one of its laws at a time when no uninitiated are present, the marshal is expected to seize a burning stick from the fire and strike the offender with it. If death should result, revenge is unthinkable, since the criminal had broken the law. The same fate is unhesitatingly meted out to any kusiut who should dare to betray any of the mysteries to the uninitiated. Moreover, it is the marshals who decide whether any improper act lowers the dignity of a dance, and punish accordingly. Not many years ago a kusiut woman gave birth to a child while a dance was taking place and the infant was slain by one of the [761] marshals. The usual explanation made to the uninitiated for a death within the dance-house is that a supernatural being caused the roof to fall and kill the victim.

*575 Each marshal has, in connection with his prerogative of 551 this vocation, a professional name, used only within the house where a kusiut dance is taking place and carefully concealed [424] from the uninitiated. Some designations were obtained from Ano°likwolsaix by an ancestor of the possessor, others were created on this earth with reference to some specific event, and [553] duly made valid by presents to the kukusiut alone. Some of these names are:

Xwolsekmis, "The Destroyer," so given on account of an

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575*
551 elaborate kusiut ritual which failed;

Namulsta, meaning unknown;

"The One who Guards the Ritual by Gripping with his Teeth";

"The Terrifier";

"The Dog-Toothed One."

When a kusiut acts contrary to the interests of the society the marshals gather in the sacred meeting-place of the village, with other senior kukusiut. There is no definite order respecting who shall, or shall not, be summoned. The matter is discussed until unanimity of opinion is reached, although a marshal, particularly if he is also a rich and influential chief, is the guiding spirit. In Nusqulxwaista the supernatural being Sikiliktnum kills any supernatural kusiut who errs, so in this world it is always said that a verdict of death has been given by this being. Several of those at the meeting are sent out to lure the victim who, brought before the group, is told that he is to die. He is seized, thrown on his back, and a pole laid across his neck; two men sit on each end until the man is dead.[3] Sometimes less drastic punishments are meted out. About 1880, when the influence of the white man had become evident on the coast, a dancer who had been, theoretically, disembowelled and was supposed to remain for months within his house to recover from the operation, insisted on fleeing to Kimsquit to a woman with whom he was in love. When he returned to Bella Coola a meeting was held to decide whether or not he should be killed. Fear of the white men prevented summary punishment, but the marshals insisted that the offender submit himself to periodic scratching on the stomach with a nail so that it would appear to the uninitiated that he was suffering from a deep wound. The offender was thankful to escape thus lightly.

575* 688

177
575*
688

[3]Occasionally the relative of a condemned person saves him by saying that he must not be killed. This means that the speaker is willing to die as a substitute; he is executed in due course, but the mechanism by which the diffusion of information is stopped is not clear.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 688 Frequently the marshals and associated kukusiut depute others to act as their executioners. Sometimes a shaman who is also a kusiut is asked to slay the offender, or a kusiut in whose ancestral family a knowledge of means for secret murder has been handed down for generations may be called upon. The executioner is told that if he fails he will himself be killed. Although no Bella Coola would admit that a person so charged had committed murder by other than magical means, it appears highly probable that such was the case. It is believed that long ago the kukusiut were able to kill an offending uninitiated person by drawing forth his spirit, wrapping it in undyed cedar-bark and casting it into the fire. The victim would die within a short time. [761] [754]

*575 203 628 The desire to carry out kusiut ceremonials with proper dignity and ritual not only acts as a strong bond of union among members of the society in a single village, but between those in different towns and even in different tribes. When a marshal has struck a kusiut, the ceremony, whatever it may be, is at once stopped. Two kukusiut are sent off to bear the tidings to the nearest village up the valley, and two more to the one below. The messengers go beneath the house in which a dance is taking place and knock on the floor of the back-room. Someone presently hears them and a kusiut goes out to investigate. When the envoys have told their tale he returns, whispers to the singers, and the ceremony concludes for that night. As soon as the uninitiated, if any are present, have been ejected, the messengers enter with blankets almost covering their faces and seat themselves between the fire and the back-room where the senior members crowd around to listen. From this village two more kukusiut are despatched with the news which is thus transmitted with remarkable speed from end to end of the valley. When next the marshals are admonishing the kukusiut of their respective villages, they do not fail to draw attention to the way in which the law has been upheld. Conversely, if a marshal hears indirectly that there has been a flaw in the ritual of a neighbouring village,

Z: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

he beats in the fire with his stick, and expresses the hope that the name of the marshal in the town where the error took place may be blackened unless he does better. 575* 628 203

As an individual kusiut who errs is punished by a marshal, so is punishment meted out to the members of a village in which any serious accident occurs during a dance. Such disasters are fire, causing concealed kukusiut to appear among the uninitiated, the breaking of a sidewalk on which a number of the members are dancing, or the capsizing of lashed canoes which are used in some of the performances. The obvious effect of such mishaps is to lower the prestige of the kusiut society in the eyes of the uninitiated. The news travels from town to town, and to adjacent tribes. This is a casus belli for any village which wishes to attack the one where the disaster took place; in fact, a raid is considered meritorious. Owing to frequent marriages between the members of neighbouring villages, it usually happens that the inhabitants of adjacent settlements are unwilling to attack, but the news spreads until it reaches a town willing to take the lead. The marshals, aided by any other influential kukusiut, discuss the matter and decide on war; uninitiated are called upon to take part, though they are told only that the foray is connected with the rites of the kusiut society which increases rather than decreases their awe. The threatened villagers, knowing that an attack is inevitable, send out sentinels and guards, and, if possible, flee at the last moment to neighbouring towns for safety, allowing the raiders to burn their village and carry off loot. If a fight takes place many people may be killed, but slaves are never taken. In the last century Stuux attacked Ältqäläxl; the assailants were aided by a number of Chilkotin to whom they were related but who had not the slightest idea of the cause of the raid. Although an attacked town is usually helped by its neighbours, this is not the case when the assault is caused by error in kusiut or swaok ceremonial. 575* 628 688 721 [727] [567]

Nor is punishment for error or disaster in ritual meted out [648]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 648 688 721 [628] only by members of the same tribe. The Bella Coola firmly believe that if, for example, there is a serious disaster at Ḷomqo·ts, that village will be raided by the people of Bella Bella, Fort Rupert, Kitkatla, or by tribes even farther away. News of the accident reaches Täl·io or Kimsquit and the inhabitants, themselves related by blood to the offenders and therefore unwilling to punish them, call upon the members of a foreign tribe to do so. On different occasions this statement, in practically identical terms, was made by six independent informants, so there appears to be not the slightest doubt as to the belief of the people in this law. But when specific cases were asked for, they could not be obtained. It therefore appears clear that the Bella Coola, probably owing to long teaching on the part of the kukusiut, consider that an error in ritual is sufficient to bring punishment from an alien tribe. There must be some basis of truth in this conviction, and it is highly probable that the kukusiut must have taken advantage of raids to explain to the uninitiated that these were caused by disasters in ritual. One informant was of the opinion that, following the collapse of a house at Kimsquit during a Cannibal dance, a Bella Coola chief called upon Tcabsa, chief of the Kitkatla, who raided Kimsquit in punishment. Quite apart from the belief inculcated in the uninitiated, it is obvious that tribes eager for war sometimes used an accident as pretext. The Bella Coola know of no case in which they raided a foreign tribe for this reason, although they state that if they had been called upon to act as punisher, they could not have refused.

*575 424 425 553 Leaving now the functions of the society as a whole, the rights of an individual member can next be described. Each kusiut has:

(1) A Kusiut Name. Like every other prerogative, a name of this type can be acquired from father, uncle, grandfather, or other relative, or even by a son from his mother. As a rule a kusiut wills his designation or designations, for a man may [556] have several, before death and his wishes are observed. Al-

[Kusiut Society Initiation]

*575 791 796 [774] [781] some ashes which he puts into his mouth and chews. Of course he masticates only the ashes but X, unaware of this, is concerned for the fate of his spirit. At last it is restored to him and he is told that the siki has altered it from that of an uninitiated person to that of a kusiut.[11] The psychological effect of this act on the mind of a young man who has not had time to adjust himself to his new knowledge and who is firmly convinced of the powers of the siki is tremendous.

The first siki now instructs two kukusiut sitting on either side of X to lie down to serve as a seat for him. They do so, irrespective of who they may be. If the novice is still ignorant of the full mysteries of the society, the siki announces that he is going to get a call for X. He walks around the house, peering here and there as if seeking something, and then pounces as if he had caught an object between his hands. A whistle [534] is heard, such as the novice knows accompanies the coming of every call; but he does not know that the noise is made by compressing a goat or bear bladder-whistle between two sticks held beneath the armpit. This is the "mystery" of the strange noises.

*575 796 "Do you know what makes that noise?" ask the two kukusiut on whom X is sitting.

● [688] If X denies all knowledge, the mystery is explained to him, and he is warned that he will be killed if he communicates the information to uninitiated persons. If he answers that he knows the cause, he is asked who has told him. Perhaps some lad has been peeking and has told X of what he has seen; in that case the over-inquisitive youth is at once initiated to prevent further leakage of information. As soon as X has learnt the great secret he moves to one side and the singers take their positions behind the fire. His father, or whoever it [425] may be from whom he is to obtain his name, then stands up [553] and unfolds its origin, telling which supernatural being is his patron, and the locality of his repository. X sometimes re-

[178] [11]This part of the rite has been omitted for so many years that many of the middle-aged kukusiut have forgotten it.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[Kusiut Society Initiation]

*575 781 796 a woman about sixty years of age, vividly recalled her fears when she, a young woman, gave her first performance. It was the Dance of Winwina (II, p. 187), in which she had to call out loudly when a large number of uninitiated persons, including Carrier Indians, were present. One of the marshals was her great-uncle and he had carefully taught her what she was to say. A few minutes before the time for her announcement he came to where she lay hidden in an enclosure behind the fire:

"Do you see your relatives here?" he said. "Look at your father, your mother, and your uncles. If you fail to say what you are expected to say, they will all die in a few weeks, and so will you. Be bold!"

The woman asserted that it was the most terrifying experience in her whole life because, though she knew there was [688] deception in the rites, she also knew the power of the society and that the threat of death in case of error was no idle one. She was so frightened that she forgot the carefully learnt words and it required the prompting of the hidden marshal to get her through the ordeal.

But once the first rite has been successfully negotiated, it is a proud day for the novice. He feels himself a real kusiut and glories in his superiority over his former associates. For the rest of the season he, like everyone else who has performed a dance, must attend every rite. Energetic novices sometimes give their dances on two, or even three, successive years, though usually a man allows five or six to elapse between displays.

*575 766 If X should die during the year's interval between his initiation and his first dance, he is secretly buried by his fellow kukusiut without the customary mourning rites, and with no [533] uninitiated persons present at the grave. His song, if one has been composed for him, is sung softly, and he is interred adorned with his collar of dyed cedar-bark. During the next ceremonial season, that at which he should have danced, it is necessary for a brother, or other near relative, to receive a call since it is felt that a dance once begun must be completed, attend every kusiut dance. Usually all kukusiut do so in any case, but the attendance of all novices and those who have had calls is obligatory. If the dancer's face has been blackened, it must be kept so during this period. At every qotlim he dances to his eight songs, and throughout the ceremonial season has the power of attracting to himself the spirit of an uninitiated person. He sleeps in whatever house a dance is taking place, but is forbidden to hold sexual intercourse except in his own, which, of course, is possible only when a call comes to another housemate. Failure to obey this injunction was formerly punished by the marshals with death. These rules apply to every dancer.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575* 796* [302] [292] [774] [834] [688]

Ałquntäm enters Nusqulxwaista at the winter solstice, and at that time calls come to those kukusiut of whom he is patron. It is uncertain whether or not this entails the regular ceremony of four nights' duration. On the entry of the supreme being, Noäkxnım seizes his paddle (or pole?), returns to Smaien·a, and then descends the Bella Coola River. It is believed by the uninitiated that X can see him as he passes, and the singers compose a ninth song for him. The words describe how the departing Noäkxnım empties a large number of olachen into the river.[28] X dances to it, but no call comes to him. This final episode of the complicated ritual occurs, of course, after calls have come to other kukusiut.

575* 796* 787 773 825

It sometimes happens that no kusiut of whom Noäkxnım is patron has enough food to give the lengthy dance just described, but some type of ritual is necessary to inaugurate the ceremonial season. Accordingly, someone with the proper prerogative is asked by the marshals to see Noäkxnım when at the mouth of the river; then, when he passes upstream four days later, a call can come to any kusiut. This abbreviated ceremony, termed Imältındjutqwlsan, is carried out in the manner described above, except that it is completed in four days with only two songs.

575* 796* 787

[28] Noäkxnım is accordingly often called Nuälulsnım.

[776]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Dance of Wil·a]

*575 *796 houses. The night's ceremony concludes with a meal and the admonitions of the marshals.

No further description is needed of the rites taking place the next day, that of nusiutälsap, when a second song is composed, again dealing with X's patrons, and wood for masks is cut. The evening's ceremonial does not last as long as that of lsuxtämem.

[532] [302] [515] The next day, qothm, the carpenters work at the masks, some of which must be finished by nightfall. Late in the evening both kukusiut and uninitiated prepare themselves by painting and washing; at this time the young men provide pans of warm water for their female friends. As already described, the kukusiut are the first to enter, followed by the uninitiated when all is ready. In Kimsquit they see the masks [184] of at least some of X's supernatural patrons suspended by cords of dyed cedar-bark from a sloping pole that stretches from the floor at the base of the back-room to the cross-beam behind the fire. It is said, although the informant could not guarantee the truth of the statement, that long ago masks had to be displayed at this dance, though it was optional at others. It is a serious and sacred time, one at which frivolity is quite out of place, and the marshals are in readiness to punish any [688] offender. One very old informant told of having seen a marshal strike down and kill a kusiut from another house for holding intercourse with a woman on this night. The heralds *[203] [537] stay near the door, repeating and enlarging on the remarks of the marshals; the fluency of these functionaries always adds appreciably to the success of any Bella Coola rite. On this occasion X and the dancer of Noäkynm must perform, followed by those who have danced in former years, according to the desire of the singers; later in the season, when many kukusiut have performed, the rite may continue almost till dawn, for all must dance. After the departure of the uninitiated the kukusiut eat leisurely, while a marshal addresses them, commenting on the ritual and, perhaps, asking a man

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Cannibal Dance]

*575 among the Bella Bella, Fort Rupert, and Rivers Inlet people.
*796 Indeed, in Bella Coola a poor man may be the most dreaded Cannibal of all, if he has been able duly to validate and per-[171] form his right in this respect. Nor is the dance carried out [622] with the same rigour in Bella Coola as among the tribes of the outer coast.

[424] The ritual of different prerogatives varies to such an extent that several accounts must be given, in spite of the repetitions
[184] that this form of presentation entails. On account of the length of time necessary, a Cannibal dance usually begins early in the season. The following describes the manner in [115] which Kämätslaks of Kimsquit, who can bite the living, carried out his rite; it was obtained from his brother, who is thoroughly conversant with the details. It will be convenient to refer to Kämätslaks as X, and to use the present tense throughout.

A meeting is held at which the marshals and others choose, in agreement with X and his relatives, a day suitable for him to commence his performance. Under normal circumstances [787] it is on some qotlum that a marshal announces that he can hear X's call, and on the following evening, when the ritual has been completed, the uninitiated are startled to hear continuous whistling from the slopes of the mountains near the village.
[534] The instruments used are of the usual bladder type, but the [776] long-drawn-out sound, termed Aiiläxa, is said to be the voice of the kindly supernatural woman, Snitsmän·a.[42]

[42] The sole function of this being seems to be the restoring to life of those who appear to have been killed in the performance of kusiut rites. The Bella Coola are uncertain whether or not she is identical with Tlitäpliläw·a. The noise which heralds her coming is produced by the whistles of four kukusiut who throughout the night range the forests and mountains within ear-shot of the village. By bending their heads up and down, they are able to increase the weirdness and apparent elusiveness of the sound. The four travel in single file; the leader blows, and when his breath is nearly exhausted he presses the hand of the second man, who starts whistling forthwith, while the original leader drops to the rear. As the second becomes weary, he signals in the same way to the third, and so on; in this way the whistling is continuous, and the uninitiated are convinced that it cannot be caused by mortals, even if such an idea should occur to them. If a non-member [688] should meet the four, they would at once kill him or make him a prisoner, keeping him out of sight until he could be initiated into the society.

[The Cannibal Dance]

The most feared of all Cannibals are those who have the unusual prerogative of eating corpses. At present (1922), there is only one man with this right, whereas at least seven can bite the living. His prerogative was recently obtained from the people of Rivers' Inlet, although the ritualistic devouring of corpses was well known to the Bella Coola in former days. All informants agreed, however, that the actual eating of a body was practically unknown.[10] Even when one was provided and the Cannibal dragged it from house to house, accompanied by an escort of kukusiut, though he sank his teeth into the flesh and pulled forth morsels of the carcass, he invariably disposed of them as soon as he was out of sight of the uninitiated, as in the case of the dog. Of course, blood and small pieces of flesh must have been swallowed inadvertently, but the rite was always essentially ritualistic, not real. More often, the "corpse" consisted of a wooden frame-work, shaped like a human body, and covered with the scraped skins of deer or dogs. The interior was filled with the flesh of an animal, and the whole buried in the graveyard until the meat had become foul. The uninitiated, from a distance, watched the exhuming of this object and concluded that it really was a long-buried body. Fear prevented them from making a close inspection, so that the defects of the imitation were not apparent. The frames were kept hidden from year to year; an inquisitive non-member who chanced to stumble upon one would have to be initiated or die.

575* 796* [424] [177] [688]

On account of the long time that has elapsed since a complete corpse-eating Cannibal dance was carried out, it was found impossible to obtain a detailed account of the ritual. This deficiency is unimportant since all informants agreed that it closely resembled other Cannibal dances.

Like other Cannibals, one who has the prerogative of eating dead human flesh can perform as often as he desires, subject only to the approval of the marshals, who have no hesitation

[424] [787] [266]

[10] Apart from this ceremonial eating, no trace of cannibalism was found among the Bella Coola.

2

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Breaker Dance]

they do not like. No compensation can be claimed, on the theory that supernatural beings do not have to pay for any damage they may do. Although the property of some kukusiut is destroyed, the chief sufferers are the uninitiated; this serves to increase their fear and respect for the society with which such all-powerful beings are in league. After visiting every house in the village, the party returns to X's, where the masks are burnt, the call sent back, and the proceedings conclude in the usual manner. 575* 796* 781 [578] [685]

A certain amount of information concerning the history of the Breaker dance was obtained from Sxek, the owner of the prerogative just described. He is a well-informed man, but the writer had no opportunity of comparing his beliefs with those of his associates, so the following must be regarded as unsubstantiated evidence. This man stated that the Breaker dance is the most important of all in Bella Bella, and that many Bella Coola prerogatives have been obtained from this source, although some of their first ancestors likewise enjoyed it. He further stated that the term, noltcista, by which the Bella Coola always designate a Breaker, is of Bella Bella origin, and that the ancient Bella Coola term was dirtia.[44] Sxek also told of an occasion when a number of Bella Bella, present on the qothm night of a Bella Coola ceremony, were disturbed when eating by the thud of a stone thrown, from outside, against the wall of the back-room. Out rushed a number of kukusiut, incensed at the disrespect shown to their gathering. They caught the offender, but released him when he was found to be a Bella Bella Breaker, foolishly demonstrating his prowess. The marshals decided to retaliate and arranged with two Bella Coola Breakers to exercise their rights and destroy the canoes and food-boxes of their guests. They did so, and later paid for the damage. The Bella Coola were thus able to demon- 575* 796* [115] [171] [177] 575* 796* 648 688

[44] Sxek and several of his children are the only Bella Coola known to the writer who habitually use the sound "r." For example, he says "Snulori," instead of "Snulili." He says that he is himself unable to distinguish any peculiarity in his own pronunciation, although other Bella Coola are aware of it. [197]

[The Breaker Dance]

*575 strate their own superiority; they had paid those who had wit-
*796 nessed their prerogative, whereas the Bella Bella Breaker had 648 merely cast a stone without solemnity. Speeches were made,
688 and it was decided that henceforth instead of waging true war
[721] in case of an error in ritual, it would be sufficient if the Breakers exacted punishment by destroying property. That is the explanation offered by this man as to why foreign war-parties have not more frequently upheld the law by raiding. As before stated, the writer is uncertain whether such beliefs are generally held by the Bella Coola and of course the historical accuracy of the information is still more doubtful.

THE Kusiotem DANCES

*575 More awe-inspiring, though less terrifying, than the Can-
*796 nibal, Scratch, and Breaker dances, are the kusiotem dances.
424 In these the dancer undergoes mutilation and death, but his [775] supernatural power enables him to return to life—at least so it appears to the credulous non-members. The five dances known as kusiotem are:

The Stomach-Cutting Dance;
The Beheading Dance;
The Drowning Dance;
The Burning Dance; and
The Swallowing of Hot Stones Dance.

Each of these comprises a distinct ceremonial of great complexity, but only one prerogative is required. That is, a man who has the kusiotem right may allow his stomach to be cut one year, and when he next performs will choose to display his ability to swallow hot stones. In this respect, it differs from all other kusiut ceremonies. Although a kusiotem dancer is entitled to exercise his privilege as often as he wishes, provided his marshals consent, the rite is so difficult that it is rarely carried out.

[773] As far as could be learnt, the Bella Coola of today have no

[The Stomach- Cutting Dance]

*575 dangerous. Unless he is restored to life before dawn we will *796 slay you."

The other uninitiated marvel that any of their number should be bold enough to taunt the kukusiut, ignorant of the fact that those who do so are really spies whose part in the performance has long since been arranged by the marshals. Instances are remembered when the wooden or copper frame [688] was defective and the performer was killed; in such a case the spies actually slew one or more kukusiut to preserve the prestige of the society. Exact details were unobtainable, but it seems clear that the victims were selected with the aid of the marshals during the night; they were, of course, men of little importance in the community.

The spies prevent anyone from leaving the house and gradually the din subsides, except for the constant wailing of the women, particularly X's relatives. The kukusiut, granted a respite until dawn, allow some of the uninitiated to come forward and pass sunwise around the fire to see the corpse of X with the bloody entrails exposed. At this juncture, the old *575 women selected for the purpose sing the mourning song, of *796 which the words and tune never vary; they are believed to 533 have been handed down from time immemorial. The theme 539 is of Snitsmän a, a kindly supernatural woman[70] who restores to life kukusiut killed in the performance of their rites. The singer in the upper, eastern, rear corner of the house sings the following words:

Nunuxwḑam·ixwakotsk'	yao disiaiyäkmidjutnu	siyalaqailaoals
Perhaps you[71] saw correctly[72]	hence you did so;[73]	it is too much sawanutciyekelisi that has been given to you.[74]

[70]Some informants state that there are several of these beings.
[71]Referring to X.
[72]Each vertical line marks the limit of a word or word-cluster, emphasized in singing, and the translation of it.
[73]That is: "You performed your dance in accordance with what you saw."
[74]That is: "You have received power that is too great and too dangerous." The specific reference is to the knife.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Stomach-Cutting Dance]

and must never gossip or mingle casually with the outsiders. 575* In addition to a band of dyed cedar-bark on his head he wears 796* one around his stomach.

A number of years ago, when the influence of the white man 575* had become strong enough to undermine the old ritual, a Bella 796* Coola kusiotem dancer, instead of remaining in seclusion after 688 the dance, ran away to Kimsquit where lived a young woman 177 with whom he was in love. In the old days this would have led to punishment by a third tribe. When the offender wished to return to Bella Coola he was afraid of the wrath of the marshals, but plucked up courage to come back after several months. The marshals seized him and scratched his stomach with a metal nail so that the uninitiated, seeing the wound, might be led to believe that the man had been severely cut. Periodically the scabs were pulled off to re-enflame the injury and make it appear that a deep gash was slowly healing. The offender, of course, could not protest, since he was a kusiut who had broken the law and was fortunate in escaping so lightly.

The Beheading Dance

Another of the dramatic dances which can be performed by 575* a kusiotem is that of having his head pulled off. Like the 796* Stomach-Cutting dance, it is the prerogative of a Kimsquit [424] man named Onixwaltcua. He carried out the rite a few years after he had performed the one just described. The main points of ritual being identical for all kusiotem dances, minor points already recorded can be omitted. As before, it will be convenient to term Onixwaltcua X, and to describe the dance in the present tense.

Early in the summer X informs one of the marshals of his desire to have his head pulled off the following winter. The one consulted discusses the matter with his fellows; in this case no objections were raised as Onixwaltcua had already performed a kusiotem dance and it was felt that he was reliable. As soon as permission is granted, the would-be dancer asks the [532] best carpenters to meet him in a lonely place in the forest and

21 McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 575 kukusiut send back X's call in the usual manner. Then, two
* 796 by two, the masks are cast on to the fire and the ceremonial is over.

THE DANCE OF THE TALLY POSTS

[773] As previously described, a tally post is erected in the land [777] above for every Bella Coola at birth. As long as this memorial [753] is upright and firm, the individual to whom it refers enjoys health and prosperity, but if it becomes crooked he falls ill.
[424] The uninitiated believe that several kukusiut have the prerogative of climbing to the land above during the ceremonial season and straightening leaning tally posts. This is such a
[178] useful ability that it must have exercised great influence on the uninitiated in early days, but the rite has not been properly [164] carried out since the smallpox epidemic in the last century.
[115] The following account was obtained from two old men who remembered the manner in which a certain Onikotl of Tsmotl performed a year or two before "The Great Sickness." Neither of the informants was a kusiut at the time, but they were able to supplement their recollections of the dance with what they afterwards learnt when initiated, so the following account is probably accurate in outline though deficient in detail. It will be convenient to refer to the dancer as X, and describe the ceremony in the present tense. It was also performed at Kimsquit many years ago.

The rite resembles kusiotem dances in many respects. X must obtain the consent of the marshals during the preceding summer, and their permission is refused unless the prospective dancer is a man of proved discretion. If they agree, X asks a [283] number of kukusiut women to help him by making a very long and strong rope of nettle fibre. At intervals the work-women gather for the purpose in the back-room of X's house, taking [688] care that no uninitiated see what they are doing. Every effort is made to ensure that there is no flaw in the rope as a break would be a serious matter, punishable by death.

Near the winter solstice the marshals choose a suitable time

[The Dance of the Tally Posts]

one is permitted to leave, and the uninitiated gaze in amazement as the seemingly endless rope continues to be drawn up through the roof, although the rattle itself can no longer be heard as if X had passed beyond earshot. They do not know that he has merely stepped from the ladder to the roof of the house, and thence to the ground, taking care to loop the cord over a projection so that he can continue drawing it out steadily. He has carefully practised rattling so that he can gradually lessen the intensity as if he were passing beyond ear-shot. One of the marshals describes the dangers to which X is exposed on his journey aloft, and calls on the kukusiut to sing his two songs to aid him. They are sung several times, but no others are used during the long night, nor are puppet-patrons employed as in kusiotem rites. The rope is being drawn from a large coil on the floor near the fire, and when the carpenters notice that it is nearly exhausted one of their number slips out to tell X to stop his climb. Presently, one or two yards of rope are quickly pulled through the hole in the roof and then all movement stops. 575* 796*

"He has jumped," cry the kukusiut.

A fluent kusiut explains to the uninitiated that the roof of the land above has opened before X's ever-lengthening ladder, that he has leapt from it to the ground above and tied his rope to something. On one occasion, a malicious rival cut the cable hoping that no one would notice the break, but luckily one of the watchful carpenters noticed it in time to knot the two ends. The kukusiut always explain that the rope is X's point of contact with the lower world, and that if it is severed, he cannot return. Accordingly, if the broken end had been drawn up through the roof, X could never have come back, and only his secret death would have served to maintain the reputation of the society. [772] 575* 796* 578 618

The rope remains stationary for some time, and then is seen to be coming back through the aperture. 575* 796*

"X is returning," whisper the kukusiut to one another and the excitement becomes intense.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

the one that takes place at a thunder-storm, is said to "make good the path" of the patron. It would formerly have been a very serious offence for a Sun dancer not to perform at an eclipse; his failure would probably have been punished with death by the marshals. One informant vividly recalled his fears when he failed to perform at an eclipse soon after his conversion to Christianity, and reiterated that he had been in deadly peril from the marshals in spite of the white man's law.

575* 796* 821 [688] [177]

THE MOON DANCE

The Sun is not the only heavenly body that acts as patron to kusiut dancers, the Moon also has many human protégés. Among them is Nulwimăx, "The Moon When It Is Unobscured," of Tcmoxl, from whom the following account of the Moon dance was obtained. As usual, he can be spoken of as X.

[776] [551] [424]

The Moon dance can take place at any time during the ceremonial season, subject, of course, to X's wishes and the consent of the marshals. The coming of the call is heralded in the usual manner and the kukusiut presently assemble to learn the song just composed. It describes the following supernatural beings:

Asiutănem:[97] A woman who lives in the moon and who can be seen in certain of its phases, always carrying a bucket of water.

575* 796*

The two Aiquaiut: These two beings are able periodically to blacken the Moon's face, thus causing an eclipse.

821 776

The two Suitsmăx-a:[98] These kindly women clean the Moon's face after it has been blackened. It is these beings who come to earth to assist stricken kukusiut.

The song also describes how no supernatural being dares to pass the Moon's house during an eclipse, a prohibition similar to that obeyed by uninitiated with regard to passing outside a house where a kusiut ceremony is taking place.

[784]

[97] Asiutănem is the usual term for ghost; no reason was given for the application of the same designation to the woman living in the moon.

[98] There is difference of opinion among the Bella Coola as to whether or not there is more than one of these beings.

[775] [192]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575 tively that such is not the case among the Bella Coola. At 796 the present time both drunkenness and vice are rampant, but neither of these practices is apparent on the nights when dances 577 are taking place. The writer was present at many kusiut
273 dances, in each case attended by practically every resident, [834] and during them he saw only two drunken men. With regard to these, the sentiment of the influential members of the society was one of regret that the marshals could no longer exercise their prerogatives and punish the offenders. As several Bella Coola expressed it:

"Our dances are sacred and ceremonial, a drunken man spoils them."

As a rule they do not regard drunkenness as a serious vice, if a vice at all, hence this attitude was illuminating. It is more 575 difficult to speak with certainty about morality; no breaches 796 of it could have occurred at the ceremonies witnessed, nor was there any evidence that the excitement led to any licentious 577 actions. On the whole, the dances are desirable since they 834 provide a source of tremendous interest and importance. Vice flourishes with lassitude and boredom; anything that stimulates the people reduces it, and when the Bella Coola are engaged in ceremonial rites, the sentiment of the seniors of the community is strongly opposed to anything that interferes with the solemnity of the occasion.

There is no reason to suppose that these factors were not present in former times, more potent than now when belief in the supernatural powers of the kukusiut has passed away. The whole question of sexual morality at kusiut dances was investigated with considerable care.

One point emphasized by all Bella Coola was that no kusiut was allowed to have relations with an uninitiated person, whether his wife or not, during the period that his face was blackened and he was wearing a ceremonial collar. The reason for this prohibition seems to have been one not of morality, but of the necessity for preserving the dignity and secrecy of [688] the kusiut society. An offender was punished by being struck

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

by a marshal with a billet of firewood; such a blow was never repeated and might or might not cause death. The woman with whom the member had misdemeaned himself was either initiated at once or killed if her relatives could not provide a name and prerogative. 575* 796* 577 834 [688]

Restrictions between members of the society were less severe. Particularly during the long nights of lsuxtämem and nusiutälsap, when only kukusiut were present and when men and women, often scantily clad, were closely associated, there seems to have been a certain amount of immorality. It was by no means a time of licence, nor was laxity encouraged by the marshals; intercourse between members of the society did not conflict with kusiut regulations, and was accordingly a matter that concerned the individuals alone.

Relations between the actual dancers and members of the other sex were formerly governed by strict rules, rigidly enforced by the marshals. After the coming of a call, a man could hold intercourse with a kusiut, provided that he did so in his own home, but in no other. But after nebusam, when he left his house, continence was demanded until the end of the season and the burning of the enclosure-platform. The only exception to this rule was that if a second dancer received a call in the same house, the restrictions placed on the first were raised while the call was actually upon the second; that is, between lsuxtämem and nebusam. After that both were subject to strict continence, unless a third call came to the same dwelling. The Bella Coola of today offer no explanation for this law, save that disregard of it was displeasing to the supernatural beings. An offender in this case was likewise punished by being struck once by a marshal. [688]

The religious aspects of the dances, as exemplified by the attitude of the Bella Coola to the masked figures and other phenomena, was described in the early part of this chapter, but additional observations may now be made. The writer realizes that the reader must find it difficult to understand how the uninitiated can be deluded into thinking that masked 575* 796* 781

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 long ago the kusiut society was composed of individuals re-
*796 garded as having supernatural endowments, and who perhaps 178 believed this themselves. In course of time their influence 184 increased to such an extent that they were able to convince [532] non-members of the supernatural origin of objects used in their ceremonial.

[115] Unfortunately, information from Kimsquit was obtained almost exclusively from one old man, who, though a marshal well informed in kusiut matters and in many ways an almost ideal informant, had long since realized that the dances could be nothing more than representations, and it is possible that his remarks were coloured by this knowledge. Though he tended to minimize the attitude of belief with which the un-
[781] initiated regarded masked figures, yet he fully agreed with every statement made by the Bella Coola themselves with regard to the firm belief of non-members concerning the supernatural powers of the dancers. He also confirmed statements
[688] respecting punishment if an error should occur, and mentioned the shooting of a Bella Bella dancer who had allowed his mask to fall during a susook dance. As far as actual ritual is concerned, the differences in procedure between Bella Coola and Kimsquit are unimportant, and differences in belief are less than they appear at first sight. The Bella Coola kukusiut [781] seem to have perfected their organization and to have been able to impress the uninitiated to a greater extent than their Kimsquit fellows, but the fundamentals of the society are identical.

*575 Traditions concerning the early history of the society are *796 probably of little value historically, but they are important as 173 indicating the mental attitude of the Bella Coola. Considering the importance of the society there are relatively few accounts of what took place long ago; the Bella Coola know that it exists, believe that the rites are identical with those carried out by their ancestors for generations, and theorize no further. It was only in the beginning of time that things were radically different; it is believed that then all the people were endowed

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

seldom a chief who had given many potlatches. Successful raiders rarely slew such an one; his position placed him above the dangers to which lesser men were subject.

Raids appear never to have been carried out solely for the purpose of giving warriors opportunities to display their prowess, or of permitting young men to prove their mettle. Scarcity of food was the commonest cause for forays when, of course, the victims were chosen for their accumulated supplies. The Kwakiutl especially, lacking abundance of salmon, often attacked the Bella Coola. Even more dreaded were the Kitkatla, the most warlike people of the central coast, who used to raid for many miles to carry off slaves whom they sold or traded for other commodities. Trespassing, too, was a source of friction which often led to hostility. In such a case, the offenders were usually held up to ridicule at potlatches, and the irritation gradually increased until wiped out in bloodshed. Members of a tribe which had suffered from a raid prompted by any of these motives would await a suitable opportunity for retaliation; this in turn would be avenged, and a vendetta often ensued lasting for generations. As already described, a ceremonial error brought punishment from a neighbouring tribe; this was the only motive which caused fighting between different Bella Coola villages. In the last century there was a struggle of this kind between the people of Stuux and Ałqäläxł in which the former were victorious and took many slaves who were later ransomed. When ill-luck had dogged a village or a group of villages for some time, the inhabitants sometimes endeavoured to wipe out their misfortunes by attacking another tribe.

The teeming salmon at Bella Coola, Kimsquit, and Täl·io, made it unnecessary for the Bella Coola to wage aggressive war for which they were unfitted both on account of their unmilitary attitude and their lack of central authority. On the other hand, they were tempting victims for more belligerent neighbours. The narrow Bella Coola valley, however, far removed from the open sea, and densely populated, was difficult to attack.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

The other agreed, so they paddled in and landed at the bottom of the village, heedless of the fact that it was full of Carriers. The Nusq̓alst people seem to have remained passive, but the angry Carriers came rushing forth and Oq̓mikumx spoke proudly to them:

"You would be dead as your chief if we had not lost our weapons."

The two brothers walked slowly up the long sidewalk of the village, while the Carriers skulked around, uttering threats, casting stones and shooting arrows. Some of the latter stuck in their backs, but long previously both Ts̓ā·kmai and Oq̓mikumx had eaten part of a sisiutl which had rendered their bodies impervious to such wounds. Arrived at the upper end of the village, they stopped and waited, making no attempt to defend themselves, until they were killed. At intervals throughout the day the Carriers treated the two bodies with ignominy, now thrusting spears into them, now beating them, and all this time not a single Bella Coola dared even to protest, so much were they filled with fear of the Carriers who, when roused as they then were, fight like mad dogs. In the late afternoon one of the women thrust a knife into the eyes of the fallen warriors. Even this insult did not rouse the Nusq̓alst people themselves, but Winäs, one of their slaves, felt called upon to take action. Before being captured, he had been a person of importance in his own home and the Bella Coola had allowed him to become a leading member of the kusiut society; in the course of time he had become entirely reconciled to his fate, and even thought as a Bella Coola which gave him the necessary assurance to address the Carriers.

"Wa, wa," he said. "See the breadth of the sky.[13] I have never seen, nor have I even heard of such a thing as you have done today. Truly you have wiped your feet on all that is sacred and powerful."

This speech for the first time brought the enormity of their offence home to the Carriers. The actual taking of life did not affright them, but in their excitement they had overlooked what was to Winäs the most obvious sin: they had passed and repassed on the sidewalk outside a house where a kusiut dance was taking place. Thus reminded of the danger to which they had exposed themselves, the Carriers withdrew.

Next day the Nusq̓alst people buried the four victims. Q̓ämälxem had been a mighty chief and, being distantly related, they would normally have given him an elaborate funeral, but now they acted as if dazed and unaware of his prowess. A man who owned a powerful medicine put some of it in the eyes of the two who had been mutilated by the Carrier woman; as the bodies began to decompose, those who had killed them began to suffer from eye-trouble, and the woman became blind. Believing that their sin had caused their misfortunes, the Carriers fled home.

[13] To call attention in this way to the breadth of the universe carries with it the implication that it will fall to crush those who have broken a sacred law.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Kwakiutl NE10
Bellabella NE5

B C 648 726 This account was obtained from a descendant of Tsä·kmai and Oḑmikuṁx who emphatically vouched for its accuracy. Some of the incidents have doubtless been exaggerated, but there is probably a basis of truth, though the passivity of the Nusḑalst people is difficult to explain. The killing is said to have taken place about seventy years before 1922, so tolerably accurate traditions of it are not impossible. No punishment was meted out to the Nusḑalst kukusiut since the ritual error, B [688] the passing of uninitiated outside the house where a ceremony was taking place, was committed by strangers, not by inhabitants of the town itself.

A WAR BETWEEN THE PEOPLE OF BELLA BELLA AND RIVERS INLET

K Bb 721 648 B [721] [648] The tribes of the central coast, Bella Coola, Bella Bella, and Rivers Inlet, were frequently engaged with enemies to north or south, but there was seldom serious bloodshed between one another. The following account, however, describes a conflict between the Bella Bella and Rivers Inlet people in which the Bella Coola were not embroiled.

K Bb [186] [262] [556] Two favourite foods of the Rivers Inlet people are sockeye salmon which have become soft after spawning, and wild currants, eaten without grease. Their neighbours, the Bella Bella, consider both these articles of diet to be disgusting, although they are fond of raw mussels which the Rivers Inlet people regard as filthy. As already described, it was not uncommon at potlatches of the tribes of the outer coast for the hosts to hold up their guests to ridicule. On one occasion the Bella Bella did so with reference to what they considered the objectionable food of their guests. A masked dancer, representing a stranger, entered the house and the host enquired whence he came.

"Are you from Fort Rupert?" he asked.

"No."

"From Bella Bella?"

"No."

The dancer pointed to the south as if to indicate the next question.

"Are you from Rivers Inlet?"

"Yes."

"What do you eat there?"

Instead of answering verbally, the dancer drew from beneath his cape

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

nixobäxta: Intangible kusiut prerogative consisting of the insertion of some object into the digestive tract. [424]

Nixps: Expert supernatural dancer; to his associates he is a yearling mountain goat.

nmlg or nmlgämut: First complete dance given by a kusiut initiate.

nmnmk: Mammal, any kind. [825]

Nnixwanaix: One of the names of Great Blue Heron as chief.

Noäkila: 1—One of the first men to settle on the upper Dean in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Snuiäli in the beginning of time.

Noäkynm: Supernatural being who brings the salmon.

Noamtäxaik: Name given to his grandson by one of the first settlers at Siskiut in the beginning of time.

nolcista: Kusiut prerogative as a Breaker; this is said to be a Bella Bella term.

nolxäkta: Sloping stick extending from floor to roof behind the fire on which, at Kimsquit, kusiut masks are hung.

nomwak: The making and use of hand nets for olachen.

Nonodjonostum: 1—"The Adviser": One of the names of the supreme god. [622]
2—Chiefs of a village, collectively; virtually, "The Sages."

no'onätlum: 1—Ceremony at which susook names are validated in the eyes of the fellow-villagers. [553]
2—Any ceremony at which all kinds of dances are performed.

no'ondjut: Assemblage of the kukusiut to practise difficult rites. [796]

No-qwna, "The One with Thick Pubic Hair": Tlaiyäkam name given to a deserting wife.

Nowakila: One of the names of Raven as chief.

nowlxikelum: Sentence of death passed by the kukusiut on one of their fellows as punishment for an error. [688]

nuaiyao: A loan, especially of an ancestral right. [426]

Nuälulsnum: Synonym for Noäkynm, the supernatural being who brings the salmon.

Nu'aos, "Inhospitable": Name taken by a woman in consequence of slights received from her husband's relatives.

nuäpsulta: Toilet-hole.

nuaska: Birth.

Nucälcäqos: Anthropomorphized evil cold wind. [821]

nudak-an: Rhetorical term of respect for aged dead. [769] nudak-an du lhmsta: 1—High tide.

2—Long life. [823]

nudjiqasta: Cross-piece tied to canoe to hold olachen-net post steady while being driven.

Nu'exmäq, "Place of Foul Water": Village in the lower Bella Coola valley.

Nuk:* 1—Village at head of South Bentinck Arm, on the east side.
2—River flowing into head of South Bentinck Arm from the east.

Nuxkmälsaix: Synonym for Sximsximlt, an immoral supernatural woman.

nuqal: The achievement of success against supernatural odds; the term is used with reference to the solutions of the riddles of the Mystery dance.

nuksmälsnäxnum: Any non-sacred dance held at the conclusion of the kusiut season. [535]

Nukso-ss: An influential Kwakiutl chief.

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

out by the strong breeze blowing in the higher regions. He is quite naked, and bites everyone whom he can lay hold of. If he cannot catch anyone he will bite his own arm. It is believed that he has lost his soul, which fled from the body when the spirit came to him. Therefore the shamans must try for four days to recapture his soul. The night after they have recovered it the ƛlaqō'tla dances clothed in a bear-skin and wearing a large headring, heavy bracelets and anklets, all made of red and white cedar-bark. Some ƛlaqō'tla do not bite people, but merely devour raw salmon, or tear dogs to pieces and devour them. Those who bite people will also eat corpses. The ƛlaqō'tla has to observe a number of regulations. For four years after his initiation he must not gamble. He must stay away from his wife for one year, but this period is being reduced to one month. For two or three months he must not leave his house. 575 [774] [756] [292] [301]

The Ō'lƛq (= the laugher) and the Dā'tia (= the thrower) do not go into the woods to be initiated, but both must fast three days before their first dance. The Ō'lƛq 'makes fun of everything' and scratches people with his nails. The Dā'tia carries stones and sticks, and breaks household goods and canoes. If he has destroyed some object during the day he pays for it at night when he dances. The Ōlƛq and the Dā'tia must stay for one month, after they have danced, in their houses. [785]

If a person transgresses the laws of the Kū'siūt, for instance when the ƛlaqō'tla gambles, or when a man performs a dance to which he has no right, also when a person derides the ceremonies or makes a mistake in dancing, his punishment is death. The chiefs assemble in council and the offender is called before the court. After his offence has been proved he is asked whether he is willing to suffer the penalty of death. If he is not willing, and one of his relatives is found willing to take the penalty on himself, the guilty party is spared, and the substitute is killed in his stead. The execution of the judgment is entrusted to the shaman, who bewitches the condemned person by throwing disease into him, or by poisoning him in some other (supernatural?) way. The object thrown by the shaman is a shell, bone, or finger-nail, around the middle of which objects a human hair is tied. If this object strikes the offender he will fall sick. Blood collects in his stomach, and if it so happens that he vomits this blood, and with it the disease-producing object, he will recover, and is not molested any further. The masks (not the whistles and other ornaments) used in the Kū'siūt are burnt immediately at the close of each dancing season. Novices must wear a necklet of red cedar-bark over their blankets for a whole year. The masks used in the dances represent mythical personages, and the dances are pantomimic representations of myths. Among others the thunder-bird and his servant Atlqulā'tƛnum, who wears a mask with red and blue stripes over the whole face from the right-hand upper side to the left-hand lower side, and a staff with red and blue spiral lines, appear in the dances. Prominent masks are also Qē'mtsioa and his brothers and his sister (see p. 412), Masmasalā'niq and his fellows, the raven and the Nusqē'mta, and many others. 575 688 575 532 796 [776]

Customs regarding Birth, Puberty, Marriage, and Death.

When the time of delivery approaches, the woman leaves the house and resorts to a small hut built for the purpose. She is assisted by pro- 844

8:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1897
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575 to him and takes him up to the sun, where he is initiated. Early one [785] morning he returns, and is heard outside the houses. He has lost all [787] his hair, which, it is believed, has been torn out by the strong breeze
[152] blowing in the higher regions. He is quite naked, and bites everyone [774] whom he can lay hold of. If he can not catch anyone he will bite his [756] own arm. It is believed that he has lost his soul, which fled from the [292] body when the spirit came to him. Therefore the shamans must try [301] for four days to recapture his soul. The night after they have recovered it the ELAXŌ'LA dances, clothed in a bearskin and wearing a large head ring, heavy bracelets and anklets, all made of red cedar bark. Sometimes he appears wearing the mask of the S'ā'LPsta (fig. 200), the spirit which initiated him. This mask corresponds exactly to that [532] of BaxbakuālanuXsī'wasē of the Kwakiutl. Some ELAXŌ'LA do not [171] bite people, but merely devour raw salmon or tear dogs to pieces and [266] devour them. Those who bite people will also devour corpses. The ELAXŌ'LA has to observe a number of regulations.
[525] For four years after his initiation he must not [834] gamble. He must stay away from his wife for one year, but this period is being reduced to one month. For two or three months he must not leave his house.

Fig. 200.
MASK OF THE S'Ā'LPSTA.
Bi'xula.
Cat. No. 77608, U. S. N. M.
Collected by F. Boas.

The ō'lEX (the laugher) and the dā'tia (the thrower) do not go into the woods to be initiated, but both must fast three days before their first dance. The ō'lEX "makes fun of everything" and scratches people with his nails. The dā'tia carries stones and sticks and breaks household goods and canoes. If he has destroyed some object during the day, he pays for it at night when he dances. The ō'lEX and the dā'tia, after they have danced, must stay in their houses for one month.

575 If a person transgresses the laws of the kū'siut, for instance, when 688 the ELAXŌ'LA gambles, or when a man performs a dance to which he has no right, also when a person derides the ceremonies or makes a mistake in dancing, his punishment is death. The chiefs assemble in [692] council and the offender is called before the court. After his offense has been proved, he is asked whether he is willing to suffer the penalty of death. If he is not willing and one of his relatives is found willing 575 to take the penalty on himself, the guilty party is spared and the sub-688 stitute killed in his stead. The execution of the judgment is intrusted
754 to the shaman, who bewitches the condemned person by throwing dis-
756 ease into him or by poisoning him in some other (supernatural?) way. The object thrown by the shaman is a shell, bone, or finger nail, around

8;Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1897
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575
688
754
756
575
532
796

the middle of which objects a human hair is tied. If this object strikes the offender, he will fall sick. Blood is believed to collect in his stomach, and if it so happens that he vomits this blood, and with it the disease-producing object, he will recover, and is not molested any further. The masks (not the whistles and other ornaments) used in the kū'siut are burnt immediately at the close of each dancing season. Novices must wear a necklace of red cedar bark over their blankets for a whole year. The masks used in the dances represent mythical personages, and the dances are pantomimic representations of myths. Among others, the thunder bird and his servant, ALxnlā'tsnum (who wears a mask with red and blue stripes over the whole face from the right-hand upper side to the left-hand lower side, and carries a staff with red and blue spiral lines), appear in the dances. Prominent masks are also Xē'mtsioa and his brothers and his sisters; Masmasalā'nix and his fellows, the raven and the nusxē'mta, and many others.[1]

Fig. 201.
HEADDRESS OF ÖLALA'.
Haida.
Cat. No. [illegible], U. S. N. M. Collected by J. G. Swan.

000

THE TSIMSHIAN, NĪSQA', HAIDA, AND TLINGIT.

The tribes of this group learned the ceremonial avowedly from the Hē'iltsuq. Although I have not witnessed any part of their ceremonials, the descriptions which I received bring out with sufficient clearness its similarities to the winter ceremonial of the Kwakiutl. The ceremonials seem to be almost identical among all these tribes. It is most complete among the southwestern Tsimshian tribes, particularly the G·itxā'LA, but has been adopted by all the tribes of the coast. It is said that it reached the Haida not more than a hundred years ago.

I will tell here what I learned from the Nisqa'. They have six societies, which rank in the following order: The sEmhalai't, mēiLa', LōLE'm, ölala', nanēstā't, hönana'L, the last being the highest. The sEmhalai't is really not confined to the winter ceremonial, but is obtained when a person acquires the first guardian spirit of his clan and performs the ceremony belonging to this event. The tradition of the origin of these ceremonies localizes the events at Bellabella, and it

[1] See "Indianische Sagen von der Nord-Pacifischen Küste Amerikas," page 241, by F. Boas.

8:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1897
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575 to him and takes him up to the sun, where he is initiated. Early one [785] morning he returns, and is heard outside the houses. He has lost all
[787] his hair, which, it is believed, has been torn out by the strong breeze blowing in the higher regions. He is quite naked, and bites everyone [152] whom he can lay hold of. If he can not catch anyone he will bite his own arm. It is believed that he has lost his soul, which fled from the [774] body when the spirit came to him. Therefore the shamans must try
[756] for four days to recapture his soul. The night after they have recovered it the ELAXŌ'LA dances, clothed in a bearskin and wearing a large [292] head ring, heavy bracelets and anklets, all made of red cedar bark.
[301] Sometimes he appears wearing the mask of the S'Ä'LPSTA (fig. 200), the spirit which initiated him. This mask corresponds exactly to that [532] of BaxbakuälanuXsi'waē of the Kwakiutl. Some ELAXŌ'LA do not [171] bite people, but merely devour raw salmon or tear dogs to pieces and [266] devour them. Those who bite people will also devour corpses. The ELAXŌ'LA has to observe a number of regulations.
[525] For four years after his initiation he must not [834] gamble. He must stay away from his wife for one year, but this period is being reduced to one month. For two or three months he must not leave his house.

Fig. 200.
MASK OF THE S'Ä'LPSTA.
Bi'lxula.
Cat. No. 77600, U. S. N. M.
Collected by F. Boas.

The ō'LEX (the laugher) and the dä'tia (the thrower) do not go into the woods to be initiated, but both must fast three days before their first dance. The ō'LEX "makes fun of everything" and scratches people with his nails. The dä'tia carries stones and sticks and breaks household goods and canoes. If he has destroyed some object during the day, he pays for it at night when he dances. The ō'LEX and the dä'tia, after they have danced, must stay in their houses for one month.

575 If a person transgresses the laws of the kū'siut, for instance, when 688 the ELAXŌ'LA gambles, or when a man performs a dance to which he has no right, also when a person derides the ceremonies or makes a mistake in dancing, his punishment is death. The chiefs assemble in ● [592] council and the offender is called before the court. After his offense has been proved, he is asked whether he is willing to suffer the penalty of death. If he is not willing and one of his relatives is found willing 575 to take the penalty on himself, the guilty party is spared and the sub-
688 stitute killed in his stead. The execution of the judgment is intrusted
754 to the shaman, who bewitches the condemned person by throwing dis-
756 ease into him or by poisoning him in some other (supernatural?) way. The object thrown by the shaman is a shell, bone, or finger nail, around

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

424 as possible, a potlatch is the most suitable occasion. Goods distributed for this purpose are not returnable; they have 463 "become nothing" in the acquisition. The value of presents so
* 556 bestowed differs enormously; a man who is proud of his prerogative validates it lavishly until he is strong in his vocation, whereas another establishes himself on a lesser scale. The origin [773] of professional rights, like so many of other kinds, is lost in antiquity and ascribed to the wishes of Ałquntām as expressed to the first people. Some of the early settlers came to earth [551] with definite duties and vocations, each indicated by a special name; others, lacking these, created them through their own enormous power. At the death of one of these incumbents, 424 his name passed to one of his relatives who acted in the same 463 manner as his predecessor after duly validating the name in 553 question. Ever since that time, the owner of a confirmed professional name has been able to perform the functions of the
* 556 prerogative. This is never a man's sole designation, but merely [551] an addition to those of ancestral, kusiut, sisaok, and other types. Like them, professional names are usually willed by their owners, though if this is neglected, one can be revived by any member of the deceased's ancestral family. In such a case, the older people usually decide on a suitable incumbent and suggest the matter to him; if he does not accept, the opportunity is given to another. If a member of the group is eager to validate the name, it is unlikely that anyone would try to [789] forestall him. Ability in certain respects can also be obtained by magical means (I, p. 701), and a member of the ancestral family so endowed is the natural choice for the prerogative in question.

Prerogatives of this kind can be grouped according to the types of vocation included.

THE PROFESSION OF RIVER GUARDIAN

424
463 In the beginning of time, Ałquntām is said to have sent 551 down with Ło̧il, who landed on the mountain behind Ło̧mqo·ts,
• 693
773

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

a man, ux·winaisa, with the prerogative of enforcing obedience 424 to river taboos. Ever since, the owner of this name, when it 463 has been duly legalized, has had the right to perform this func- 551 tion. In some cases, such as carpenters and singers, the valid- 693
ation of a prerogative has not brought with it the necessary ability, so that the incumbent remains a properly ratified, but [773] non-functioning, craftsman. No mechanical skill is required by a River Guardian, hence the owner of the name ux·winaisa has always been able to perform his duties.

From time immemorial certain restrictions have been en- 784
forced concerning the river: No refuse may be thrown in, 825 otherwise the olachen would remain in the ocean. For the 226 same reason, women at certain periods are not allowed to bathe lest a speck of blood should blind the fish and prevent them [515] from seeing the route. Occasionally an olachen with red eyes 841 is caught; this is caused by some heedless woman. When the [562] fish are running in the river, women are not allowed on the bank, nor to repair the nets. At high tide, it is forbidden to drive stakes for olachen nets.

The number of prohibitions increases during the critical period of the salmon run. Then no freshly hewn planks can be set afloat, and even a canoe which has just been completed [502] must be kept for ten days before launching. No one whose husband or wife has died within the last year can embark at [765] the village, but must proceed to a landing-place at the head of the fiord. Most important of all, refuse of salmon must be deposited in the woods; if thrown into the river, the fish would smell it and avoid the stream. Even accidents such as the upsetting of a canoe, or the spilling of olachen grease, are considered to be offences.

Disregard of any of these injunctions is displeasing to the 688
salmon and it is the duty of the River Guardian to punish the 693 offender, irrespective of his rank. In case of slight infringements, he beats the guilty person or throws him into the river.
The guilty person usually scrambles out, but should he be swept away and drowned, no recompense can be claimed by

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

688 his relatives. This punishment is customary in cases of the 693 upsetting of a canoe. Death is the penalty for throwing refuse into the river, particularly during the summer, and until the [177] coming of the white man the River Guardian exacted it without hesitation.

THE PROFESSION OF UTTERING A DRONING CRY

424 At the appearance of masked figures representing super-551 natural beings, whether in sisaok or kusiut dances, many of the women repeatedly utter a peculiar, high-pitched, droning cry
[575] which adds considerably to the weirdness and impressiveness [463] of the occasion. Ability to do this depends on an ancestral prerogative duly confirmed by the distribution of presents.
[431] Many ancestral myths describe how some of the first women
[773] were given by Ālquntäm, or acquired in other ways, the right to drone, and mention is made of the name used by each with respect to this prerogative. Unlike the one previously described, many of the first women possessed this privilege, which is accordingly common at the present time. A name [553] of this type is usually confirmed in girlhood, sometimes even in infancy, and being of relatively slight importance may be validated at a ceremony of less dignity than a potlatch. One of these names is Nunuqwełełslaiżen·a, which has reference to [773] the blue-green sheen of some abalone-shell brought from the east by Raven in the beginning of time, as described in the ancestral myth in which this name is included. For many [178] years there has been considerable laxity with regard to this prerogative, and women lacking it have even been urged to drone in order to add to the solemnity of the occasion and to increase the wonder of the uninitiated.

424 There is another similar prerogative, enabling the incum-767 bent to drone at mourning ceremonies. In the beginning of time, Smaoan of Kimsquit married Ťläkwaitl, the daughter of 463 a Bella Bella chief, who had this right. It has since been 773 transmitted from one of her descendants to another at Kimsquit.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

701 difficult to estimate the former influence of such warriors. The belief of all in their ability must have given them some prestige, although the requirements of practical qualifications in fighting must often have prevented them from functioning as military leaders. In other words, a man may be, socially, a warrior, even though he lacks ability as a fighting man.

701 The functions of warriors are not limited to fighting with enemies of other tribes. Each has the power to kill and must 693 exercise it when requested. If a mistake is made in a cere- [688] monial kusiut dance, the offender must be killed, and one way [575] in which this is accomplished is by the senior members of the society requesting a professional warrior to act as executioner. [428] One of these men, who lived at Äsän·än·i, always used a stone [411] club which had been handed down from generation to generation, becoming the property of each new incumbent of the [754] name and prerogative. In other cases, the killing is said to have been done with the aid of magic. The power of the Äsän·än·i warrior had been confirmed with so much goods that he was the most powerful professional killer known to the Bella Coola. He acted on instructions from the senior members of the kusiut society or when called upon by anyone. If, [684] for example, a man found that his wife had been faithless and wished to kill her lover, it was only necessary to tell the professional warrior, who was bound to act in accordance with his prerogative. He received no pay, since he was merely [682] exercising his right. The relatives of the murdered person never took revenge on the slayer, realizing that he was powerless in the matter, though they frequently requested him to slay the person who had asked him to kill the first victim. He could never refuse to do so, even if the victim were his own brother, or if he knew that the person he was to kill was guiltless. The underlying principle was that this man's power had [761] been increased to such a pitch by the distribution of presents that if he failed to exercise it on demand, it would react upon himself and cause his own death. This Äsän·än·i warrior began in time to have an aversion for his vocation, since he was being feared and hated by all. Yet his prerogative was so strong that he could not cease to act. He found by chance a cave near the top of precipitous Mount Nusimusta, not far from his village, and told everyone that he would die there, where no one would ever be able to spit or tread upon his grave. One autumn, when an old man, he disappeared, and although search parties scoured the woods for him, they were unsuccessful. Next spring, some young men visited the cave in which they found his badly decomposed corpse; the warrior had kept his promise. 701 693

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The profession of warrior carries with it prohibitions and requirements other than with regard to killing. Such men are thought always to be so wild and restless that they cannot sleep at night, but prowl around the village watching for possible foes. In actual fact, warriors seldom sleep quietly throughout the night. They have one restriction of a social nature, in that they can never be confined in the back-room as initiates into the susaok society. Consequently, no tutwinam ever comes to one of them. When one gives a potlatch, a rather boastful song is sung for him as he remains in the central part of the house. What affiliation this brings him with the susaok society is obscure. 701 [575]

It is difficult to say to what extent a professional warrior believes in his own powers, since there is, and must always have been, great individual variation. The white man finds it difficult to understand the psychology of a man who considers himself bound to kill on request, simply because presents have been distributed to make him a warrior. It must be remembered that this is one of the most pervasive features of Bella Coola life; functions of all kinds depend upon validated prerogatives, and there is no doubt that a man who has one of this kind is actually influenced to such an extent that he begins to believe in his own prowess. It was unusual for a warrior to exercise his powers as freely as did the Ǎsän·än·i man, but the Bella Coola have no difficulty in explaining this:—his prerogative had been confirmed with more lavish expenditure 156 701

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 756 called out to him, and then remembered no more. It was 775 obvious that she had seen a ghost.

[787] It is over diseases caused by ghosts that a shaman from the dead has power. If a person picks up and eats any morsels
753 which he has dropped he will usually suffer, because, though
* 756 he thinks the crumbs have fallen, they have really been pulled
775 from his hands by a hungry ghost, who thus showed his desire for food. By picking up and eating the fragments, the man
[264] thwarts a dead person who retaliates by forcing some sickness into him. Ghosts may visit this land of the living and ask their relatives for food or clothing, but mortals, unable to hear the speech of the dead, are unaware of the requests of their deceased relatives, and so do not answer them. The irritated ghosts respond by causing sickness. In such cases a shaman
755 from the dead is able to suck out the cause of the ill, and some-
* 756 times to display it as a bone, twig, or other small object and at the same time to tell the sufferer what it was that his relatives desired. Like ordinary shamans, a shaman from the dead uses his own discretion whether or not to employ the violent beating of sticks, and like his fellow-practitioner re-[465] ceives payment from those whom he has helped. There are no fixed charges, but a successful shaman is always wealthy.

* 756 The intimate contact of ghosts with shamans has already 787 been mentioned in connection with the ability of the latter to learn from the ghost of a murdered person whom he believes
● 694 to be his slayer.

There is one method of sacrificial curing practised by 755 shamans from the dead alone. If the sickness refuses to yield
* 756 to ordinary methods, the practitioner makes ten cedar-bark 782 vessels, fills these with grease and places them near the fire, one between it and the door, one on the inner side, and four on either side of it, parallel to the side walls of the house. By each vessel are placed two small wooden figures, roughly carved to represent men, and decorated with dyed and undyed cedar-bark. After endeavouring to suck forth the disease, with or without the assistance of the frenzied beating of sticks, the

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

754 in a skirmish by the Carriers, one of their women mutilated a body by poking out the eyes. The corpses were rescued and [727] a Bella Coola with secret knowledge dropped into the eye sockets some potent medicine. As the corpses rotted, the murderers began to suffer pains, and the woman who had poked out the eyes lost her sight. As a blind, old woman, she had been seen by several men with whom the matter was discussed.

To Cause the Death of a Murderer (three means)

(1) Two women were murdered at Kimsquit in 1915. 754 Before they were buried, an elderly Bella Coola put a secret 682 medicine on the back of the neck of each so that the murderer [766] would die from a disease located there. Within eight months, a Rivers Inlet man succumbed to a deep sore at the back of the neck, and it was assumed that he must have visited Kimsquit unseen and perpetrated the double murder.

Medicines like this and the preceding are widely known, but it is sorcerers who specialize in using them.

(2) When a man dies suddenly and murder is suspected, [766] although the perpetrator is unknown, place the corpse within an old, hollow spruce log. As it rots, needles and dirt enter the flesh and at the same time the body of the murderer becomes lacerated and full of sores. This method was employed [695] during the lifetime of an informant and caused the death of the suspected murderer, whose guilt was thereby accepted as proved.

(3) Bury the victim's body with a toad in its mouth and [766] the murderer will soon die.*

To Kill 754

Lift a corpse from the ground and point it at one or more individuals. This causes their death in the near future.

*This information was obtained from one informant only; details were unavailable, and confirmation from others could not be secured.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

grave. When, presently, he feels sick and believes that the ghost has caused the malady, he throws the object he has obtained on a fire and allows the smoke to drift over his body. It is not known how this destroys the power of the dead victim. 755 775

At present (1922), in case of unexpected death in which murder is suspected, the relatives keep the body under lock and key and watch carefully to see whether anyone tries to gain access to it. To endeavour to do so would be considered proof of guilt. For the same reason, they may place boards over the grave and watch it for several weeks. As already described, a middle-aged woman died unexpectedly in 1922. Her father, believing that she had been murdered, expressed the opinion that a certain man was the criminal and that he would die within a year. He outlived this period by three weeks and it was generally agreed that the power of thought had been sufficient to cause the death. Apparently, the father shared this view and expected the ghost of the alleged murderer to be hostile, for he made two efforts to enter the shed where the body was lying, but the relatives of the deceased foiled him by locking all doors and windows. When he himself died a few weeks later, it was taken for granted that the ghost had exacted vengeance. [695]

To Cure a Malady Caused by a Sorcerer

The most complicated medicine about which information was obtained was one employed by an elderly Bella Coola who had incurred the enmity of a sorcerer. The latter had succeeded in breaking a triangular bone in the man's chest which would have caused his death if his mother had not consulted an old woman who knew the proper remedy for such an ailment. This knowledge had been handed down in her family for generations and she was rewarded lavishly for her services. It will be convenient to refer to the patient as X and the old woman who treated him as Y. 755 [424]

X's mother requested the services of Y who agreed to assist and called upon her husband to help her. They scoured the

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

quit. Details of this prerogative were not obtainable, but it seems to follow the general type. 424 767 463

THE PROFESSION OF FIRST BERRY PICKER

All women can pick berries, but in every village there is at least one who has the prerogative of picking the first of every kind. The origin of this right is lost in dim antiquity, but, like all others, each first berry picker has a special professional name embodied in her ancestral myth which must be duly validated before she can function. One of these is Stlxwaxwak-nimăn·a, another is Łe'ye. Though normally reserved for women, one of these names is occasionally given to a male child, in which case it is said to have been hermaphroditized. No one would dare to pick berries until the legal picker has paraded up and down the sidewalk carrying on her back her picking basket decorated with a representation of the sun, an act which is believed to ripen the berries. 222 424 [463] [551] [562] [532] [789]

"Get ready to pick red elderberries [or whatever species is ripe] tomorrow," she keeps calling out.

The berries may then be picked by anyone. This is repeated for every variety. As far as could be learnt, there was no social mechanism to punish a woman who picked berries before the announcement of the official picker; obedience seems to have been so universal that infractions are said to have been unknown though formerly there may have been some penalty of which even the memory has disappeared. [688] [183]

THE PROFESSION OF WARRIOR

The profession of warrior is another prerogative handed down from the distant past and requiring validation before it can be used. As with other rights of this type, magical means are in many cases employed to make any young man brave and successful, but there are a number of warriors confirmed as such by the distribution of presents at the time of bestowal on them of professional names. At the present time, it is 701 [424] [463] [431] [551]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

701 difficult to estimate the former influence of such warriors. The belief of all in their ability must have given them some prestige, although the requirements of practical qualifications in fighting must often have prevented them from functioning as military leaders. In other words, a man may be, socially, a warrior, even though he lacks ability as a fighting man.

701 The functions of warriors are not limited to fighting with 693 enemies of other tribes. Each has the power to kill and must exercise it when requested. If a mistake is made in a cere-
[688] monial kusiut dance, the offender must be killed, and one way
[575] in which this is accomplished is by the senior members of the society requesting a professional warrior to act as executioner.
[428] One of these men, who lived at Ǎsän·än·i, always used a stone
[411] club which had been handed down from generation to generation, becoming the property of each new incumbent of the
[754] name and prerogative. In other cases, the killing is said to have been done with the aid of magic. The power of the Ǎsän·än·i warrior had been confirmed with so much goods that he was the most powerful professional killer known to the Bella Coola. He acted on instructions from the senior members of the kusiut society or when called upon by anyone. If,
[684] for example, a man found that his wife had been faithless and wished to kill her lover, it was only necessary to tell the professional warrior, who was bound to act in accordance with his prerogative. He received no pay, since he was merely
[682] exercising his right. The relatives of the murdered person never took revenge on the slayer, realizing that he was powerless in the matter, though they frequently requested him to slay the person who had asked him to kill the first victim. He could never refuse to do so, even if the victim were his own brother, or if he knew that the person he was to kill was guiltless. The underlying principle was that this man's power had [761] been increased to such a pitch by the distribution of presents that if he failed to exercise it on demand, it would react upon himself and cause his own death. This Ǎsän·än·i warrior began in time to have an aversion for his vocation, since he was being feared and hated by all. Yet his prerogative was so strong that he could not cease to act. He found by chance a cave near the top of precipitous Mount Nusimusta, not far from his village, and told everyone that he would die there, where no one would ever be able to spit or tread upon his grave. One autumn, when an old man, he disappeared, and although search parties scoured the woods for him, they were unsuccessful. Next spring, some young men visited the cave in which they found his badly decomposed corpse; the warrior had kept his promise. 701 693

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The profession of warrior carries with it prohibitions and requirements other than with regard to killing. Such men are thought always to be so wild and restless that they cannot sleep at night, but prowl around the village watching for possible foes. In actual fact, warriors seldom sleep quietly throughout the night. They have one restriction of a social nature, in that they can never be confined in the back-room as initiates into the sisaok society. Consequently, no tutwinam ever comes to one of them. When one gives a potlatch, a rather boastful song is sung for him as he remains in the central part of the house. What affiliation this brings him with the sisaok society is obscure. 701 [575]

It is difficult to say to what extent a professional warrior believes in his own powers, since there is, and must always have been, great individual variation. The white man finds it difficult to understand the psychology of a man who considers himself bound to kill on request, simply because presents have been distributed to make him a warrior. It must be remembered that this is one of the most pervasive features of Bella Coola life; functions of all kinds depend upon validated prerogatives, and there is no doubt that a man who has one of this kind is actually influenced to such an extent that he begins to believe in his own prowess. It was unusual for a warrior to exercise his powers as freely as did the Ǎsän·än·i man, but the Bella Coola have no difficulty in explaining this:—his prerogative had been confirmed with more lavish expenditure 156 701

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

701 than that of anyone else. The Bella Coola do not rationalize 156 in a scientific manner; if a man holds a belief firmly, he acts on it without questioning its logic. Moreover, if a professional warrior functions a number of times, this in itself is enough to strengthen his conviction that he must act henceforth in the same way. It can be said with confidence that the owner of [463] a professional prerogative has considerable belief in his own powers, that this acts on himself to render him proficient, and that the majority of the community have respect for his capabilities.

555 THE PROFESSION OF SINGER

424 Singing is one of the professions open to a Bella Coola 533 either through natural ability or an ancestral prerogative. There is a constant need for men able to sing and compose [463] songs for every kind of ceremonial, so a young man of talent has little difficulty in gaining admittance to the choir. He may even win great distinction and become recognized as the leading authority on musical matters. None the less, his success is considered to be accidental and unsubstantial, lacking the foundation that comes from the possession of a duly validated professional prerogative. A person made a singer by the latter means may be entirely unable to compose; in this case he is not a member of the choir, although he enjoys the social distinction which he has won by distributing goods to confirm his professional name. The singer most respected is he who combines with natural ability a confirmed prerogative to give substance and power to his position and composi-
[553] tions. At the death of such an one, an effort is always made [428] by the members of his ancestral family to transmit the name to a youth who has shown musical promise. Arguments and [578] differences of opinion are common among the members of the choir and in such cases the self-assurance and influence of a man whose position has been made strong by the distribution of presents often outweighs that of one who can rely only on his actual ability.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

533*

Fragment of a Song Used for Sinxälotla, a Man of Salmon House(a)

Wikelqwlkslaix	wammg
Whence came those(b)	who were too late?

No more of this song is remembered.

(a) Recorded as song VII D 9e, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.
(b) Refers to guests at the potlatch.

Fragment of a Song Used for Łäloxman·a of Kimsquit(a)

Xatiqwoiye	xatiqwoiye	kunslai
I am happy at seeing you(b),	I am happy at seeing you,	good-bye(c).

No more of this song is remembered.

(a) Recorded as song VII D 31b, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.
(b) Presumably refers to the dancer's tutwinam, Beaver, obtained from his mother's mother, a Kitlobe woman. [424]
(c) This word is said to be in the Haida language.

Song(a) Used for Laxaiyao·k'(b) of Kimsquit(c)

A Känunulnusämdimutdjmalsan	Qo'owai(d)
I make two of myself(e),	Raven(f),
skäqundjakaiyasinndja	Qo'owai
I make a huge whale of myself,	Raven,

ahas·ultänusudax	Känixnikdinitsmälsin	skäqundjakaiyasinndja
at the place of lucky finds (g).	People will dismember me,	I make a huge whale of myself(h).

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

B Känuilmlgsitsk$^{w'}$	dets·ultatslaix	skäqoog$^{w'}$ stulsdai
I stand upon	my point(i);	I cry out loudly(j)

distälumgsdai with respect to my position as chief.

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

C Kästixwäkapk'a	Skilaiyoodjudap	Olaqwiämsimals	wasulakasls
Go yourselves!	Pick out what you want!	My house	is open(k).

(a) It is doubtful whether or not this song should be included in this section. It was used by a professional warrior at a potlatch but, like all others with his [701] [575] [424]

*533 prerogative, he was debarred from seclusion in the back-room and consequent [701] initiation as a sisaok. The exact relationship between warriors and members of [575] the sisaok society is obscure.

[424] (b) Laxaiyao·k' is a Kitkatla name from the north. The first owner moved to Kitlobe where he married, and the designation was transmitted to his descendants.
[177] One of the latter migrated to Kimsquit, where the name has since been handed down from generation to generation though its original source has not been forgotten.

(c) Recorded as song VII D 36, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard. This song is said to have been used about 1870.

(d) Vocative form.

(e) That is: I double my importance. This kind of expression is popular among chiefs.

[424] (f) Qowi is one of the ancestral names of Raven, the dancer's crest. In thus addressing the bird, he called attention to his ancestral history.

[262] (g) The home of the first Laxaiyao·k' was near a point where dead whales often drifted ashore. The dancer likens himself to a whale on which people will dine.

(h) Such repetition is not uncommon. The dancer implies that his wealth will be divided in a manner similar to the cutting up of a whale's carcass.

(i) A promontory owned by the first Laxaiyao·k'.

(j) That is: I summon people [to a feast.]

(k) An invitation not to be taken too literally.

Xe·tla Songs

The tunes of xe·tla songs are believed to have been handed down, unaltered, for many generations. The words, too, are frequently ancient although the singers sometimes make slight changes so that they will be more suitable for the chief in whose honour they are being sung. Owing to the decline of cere-[796] monials in which they were used, few xe·tla songs are now remembered.

Xe·tla Song Used by Sinugwil of Kimsquit(a)

[727]

A Alinaywao	Ahlxwal'alpdai	Di stałtaimydai	dänuilmik
Come!	See!	The chief	a man stands in the bow(b)

di yälxwtsal'aikdai
of those who travelled everywhere.

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

B Alaiqwalnxgaosts	dä'änänuskilsdax	aiyatätyämätlalsdax
He did so,	my pattern(c),	whence I came(d);

721 to attack. It is said that the Fort Rupert people once raided
648 it, but their hair became entangled in the thorns growing near the tide-flats and they were easily slain while struggling to free themselves. Two warriors escaped and hid in the branches
[727] of a huge spruce tree. They used to slip down at night and steal food, thus supporting themselves for several weeks, but
[628] were at last discovered and enslaved. On such occasions the villages of the lower and central valley usually rallied to the help of Q̓omqo·ts, the most exposed one, although there was no mechanism to enforce such assistance. The inhabitants of [776] this town attributed their protection to Ätquntäm, and used to claim that he had decreed that they should be immune
[361] owing to their close association with him. Though Bella Coola itself was comparatively free from molestation, Kimsquit and [162] Täl·io, with smaller populations and less strategic positions, were subject to frequent attacks. At least one of the villages at
712 the head of South Bentinck Arm was defended with a stockade of cedar trunks, set upright in a double row and entered by a water-gate with a drop-door.[3] This water-gate protected the
[648] residents on many occasions, and it is remembered that one
[726] Fort Rupert raiding-party was annihilated while endeavouring to batter down the door with a huge ram. The defenders, armed with muskets, picked off the attackers as they struggled in the open.

721 All the older men were emphatic in stating that most of their raids were in revenge for such attacks. Although such statements were partisan, they were confirmed in every way
[642] and were probably tolerably correct. Lack of a strong govern-
[623] ment was a serious handicap to the Bella Coola. After being assailed, the members of the town would discuss retaliation, [622] and if unanimity of opinion was reached, that course was decided upon. Public opinion alone selected the leader, usually [701] a man who had given a number of potlatches, especially one whose position had been made stronger by previous validation

[3]It is said that such stockades surrounded other villages, but definite information on this point was unavailable.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

as a warrior. Such a chief had no command over his followers. 721
If he were a man of great prestige, many would be willing to 701
serve under him, but he could not compel the services of any- 622
one except his own slaves. A few individuals often declined to [626]
follow their fellows to war, although the force of public opinion [628]
usually prevented a too individualistic course. Inhabitants of other towns used their own discretion whether or not to join the party. If some of their relatives had been slain in the previous attack, revenge influenced them to share in the retaliation, otherwise only the prestige of a mighty chief could attract them. No case is known in which all the Bella Coola [642] villages joined in a single expedition; there were often tem- [628]
porary alliances between neighbouring settlements, but complete lack of central organization. The course of events was similar when a chief wished to raid without the motive of avenging an attack. For example, if a Bella Coola had been [648]
enslaved by a foreign tribe and slain by his owner, a brother of the victim might decide on revenge. The usual course was to kill a slave belonging to the murderers, though sometimes he led a raiding party if he could gain the necessary support.

Each warrior provided his own weapons, frequently the 726
same as those used for hunting. Bows with obsidian-tipped 411
arrows were most relied upon for offence, though slings were also used from canoes. Every man carried a spear, pointed like an arrow, for hand-to-hand fighting, although there was relatively little of this, most of the combats being fought at a distance with much noise, boasting, and expletives, but few casualties. Spears were, however, useful if the attackers succeeded in surprising a village at night. Hostilities are a thing of the past, consequently it was impossible to obtain detailed information respecting offensive weapons. Armour consisted 714
of maple or birch slats reinforced with moosehide and worn 726
around the body and chest; this rendered quick movement
difficult but was effective against arrows. Muskets were intro- [411]
duced many years ago and armour consequently became use- [177]
less. Large shields of moosehide were carried in all canoes,

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

714 and one was held up by the bow paddler as the craft neared the
726 shore to protect him and those behind from arrows and stones cast by slings. When not in use, shields were laid away in boxes with some white substance resembling flour.[8] On the
[103] shore of the fiord below Bella Coola, opposite Winter Bay, there are some boulders of the same white tint; even now these are often spoken of as "The Shields of the Bella Coola." It is said that hostile raiders, seeing them, used to remark that they had reached the outposts of Bella Coola.

726 The same lack of leadership shown during preparations for a war was evident during hostilities. The so-called leader had ●701 little authority over his men, who could desert and return home
703 at any time. Lack of martial ability among their own chiefs
[648] sometimes led the Bella Coola to place themselves under the authority of a Bella Bella in a way which would be impossible
[642] for a war-like people. Frequently such divided leadership led to disaster, and is the surest proof that the Bella Coola were not as aggressive or bellicose as other coastal tribes.

726 Except when attacking the Carriers, all raiding parties
[533] embarked in canoes and followed a definite order of procedure
[703] handed down from the past. In the stern of each craft sat the captain, a chief, who, as the craft was leaving, began to sing his xe·tla song, keeping time to it with the beats of his paddle; the recounting of the glories of their ancestors was supposed to encourage the warriors. Instead of leaving simultaneously, a rendezvous was often chosen down the fiord, and the expedition finally moved off from there when all the canoes had arrived. While still in friendly territory, a flotilla proceeded
726 openly. A small amount of dried salmon and water was car-
789 ried by a war party and morsels of the former were eaten at intervals. The bow-man took as much food and drink as he thought could be consumed at one sitting, put a fragment of dried salmon in his mouth, chewed it four times on the same side of his mouth as he was paddling, and swallowed it. Then

[8]Some undetermined substance said to have had protective or preservative qualities.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15
Bellabella NE5

B 648 721 celebrated Tcubsa was he who held sway between 1850 and 1870, a man of almost gigantic proportions, of tremendous physical strength, and endowed with force of character and initiative as well. T 622 648 721 Pitted against him, the Kimsquit people suffered even more than before; there were few direct assaults, but Kitkatla canoes seemed always to be lurking in the vicinity, ready to kill or enslave heedless fishermen or those travelling between Kimsquit and Bella Coola or Täl·io. Friends of the victims repeatedly discussed counter-measures, but lack of leadership prevented them from coming to a decision for several years.

B Bb 648 721 One winter, about the middle of the last century,[4] the Kimsquit determined to take the offensive in May. This plan was discussed both at Bella Coola and Täl·io; at Ḷomqo·ts the leading chief, Nusmäs·a, gave his support and many men whose relatives had been killed or enslaved promised to join the Kimsquit raiders. Among others who took part in the conference was a certain Lo·qwa·t, an influential Bella Bella chief who chanced to be visiting relatives in Ḷomqo·ts at the time. It was decided that the rendezvous should be Ḷotlnalos, on Labouchere Channel.

B [701] During the spring those who planned to take part in the expedition busied themselves with their preparations. No one knew how large would be the force, since as usual, everyone used his own discretion whether or not to join it; some did so to avenge injuries to their relatives, some merely to display martial ability, whereas others declined to repay their wrongs. At last the appointed date came round, and some fifty B Bb 648 canoes, each containing twenty to thirty men, gathered at the appointed place.[5] Thence they set out and encamped for the first night at Scratch River, Ḷeldjut, near Bella Bella. Lo·qwa·t knew the time of meeting and B [724] the route that would be followed, so sent out two lads to hunt deer at the spot, though, not wishing to circulate news of the raiders, he did not tell them what they were likely to find. The two hunters stumbled upon the encampment without being observed, and hurried home to report what they had seen. Lo·qwa·t had intended to join the party, so he Bb [713] [177] now set out in a small canoe with the two as paddlers, after warning them that they must say nothing at home of his movements. His war equipment consisted of a musket and two palette-shaped boards with small [4]The approximate date was judged from the fact that the old man who told of the expedition in 1922 said that his father was about five years of age at the time.

[5]The strength of the expedition was probably exaggerated.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bellabella NE5

divisions, each containing a loaded and measured charge; these were novelties recently obtained in trade from the white man and considered very valuable. On reaching the place where the Bella Coola canoes were drawn up, Lo·qwa·t called out four times:

"Nusmāt·a, are you there?"

On being answered in the affirmative, Lo·qwa·t leapt ashore, sent back his own canoe, and definitely joined the expedition.

The Bella Bella chief gave Nusmāt·a one of the prized palette-shaped boards, and the recipient repaid this overwhelming generosity with the gift of a marten-skin coat which he was wearing. A Kimsquit chief likewise gave Lo·qwa·t a valuable blanket-coat. As usual, the war-party was suffering from lack of leadership. Lo·qwa·t, a properly validated warrior, was a man who had given many potlatches, and though not a Bella Coola, was related to them by blood; in addition, he alone knew the route to Kitkatla, so he virtually assumed command, although many of the Bella Coola were unwilling followers. Lo·qwa·t suggested an immediate move, and gained his point owing to the fact that no one had a definite counter-suggestion. After travelling seven miles in the darkness, Lo·qwa·t massed the canoes to address his ill-disciplined and somewhat uncertain force. He pointed out that the way to Kitkatla was long and difficult and that it would be dangerous to attack their northern foe-men, but that the Waoyel·a[8] near at hand would be an easy prey. The Bella Coola had no quarrel with these people, and were reluctant to attack them, especially as there had been inter-marriage between the two tribes. Lo·qwa·t spoke fluently, saying that the Waoyel·a had mocked him in their potlatches, and that many of their women, gathering sea-weed on lonely beaches at this season, would be easy victims. His arguments were given strength by the fact that he was a numitl chief and warrior; no one dared to stand against him, so it was decided to follow his wishes, though the Bella Coola stipulated that none of the Waoyel·a were to be killed.

The flotilla continued and in the early dawn raided a small Waoyel·a settlement and captured several slaves. Continuing their journey, they took prisoner a number of women who were gathering sea-weed, and destroyed the supplies which had been stored up. Lo·qwa·t had joined the expedition merely in hope of getting revenge upon the Waoyel·a; now that this end was accomplished, he was willing and eager to return home, but uncertain how to leave his followers.

With this in view, Lo·qwa·t suggested an attack on a China Hat settlement, adding that he knew where some of their frames[7] used in Cannibal dances were stored, and that the China Hat people were too arrogant

[8]Probably one of the Bella Bella-speaking groups.
[7]Such as were covered with meat to represent human bodies.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

714 and one was held up by the bow paddler as the craft neared the
726 shore to protect him and those behind from arrows and stones cast by slings. When not in use, shields were laid away in boxes with some white substance resembling flour.[3] On the
[103] shore of the fiord below Bella Coola, opposite Winter Bay, there are some boulders of the same white tint; even now these are often spoken of as "The Shields of the Bella Coola." It is said that hostile raiders, seeing them, used to remark that they had reached the outposts of Bella Coola.

726 The same lack of leadership shown during preparations for a war was evident during hostilities. The so-called leader had 701 little authority over his men, who could desert and return home
703 at any time. Lack of martial ability among their own chiefs
[648] sometimes led the Bella Coola to place themselves under the authority of a Bella Bella in a way which would be impossible
[642] for a war-like people. Frequently such divided leadership led to disaster, and is the surest proof that the Bella Coola were not as aggressive or bellicose as other coastal tribes.

726 Except when attacking the Carriers, all raiding parties
[533] embarked in canoes and followed a definite order of procedure
[703] handed down from the past. In the stern of each craft sat the captain, a chief, who, as the craft was leaving, began to sing his xe·tla song, keeping time to it with the beats of his paddle; the recounting of the glories of their ancestors was supposed to encourage the warriors. Instead of leaving simultaneously, a rendezvous was often chosen down the fiord, and the expedition finally moved off from there when all the canoes had arrived. While still in friendly territory, a flotilla proceeded
726 openly. A small amount of dried salmon and water was car-
789 ried by a war party and morsels of the former were eaten at intervals. The bow-man took as much food and drink as he thought could be consumed at one sitting, put a fragment of dried salmon in his mouth, chewed it four times on the same side of his mouth as he was paddling, and swallowed it. Then

[3]Some undetermined substance said to have had protective or preservative qualities.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15

B 721 these accounts seemed to be exaggerations, and the casualties were probably few. The Bella Coola did not have the same [554] admiration for the successful warrior as for the man who gave many potlatches, while everything indicates that their raids B were on a small scale, rendered singularly ineffective by lack [703] of discipline.

Specific Accounts

B 72 Active warfare has been so long discontinued on the coast that none of the living Bella Coola can describe conditions as 128 they existed during hostilities. It was possible to collect the *539 following accounts of raids and adventures which, though individually of small value, illustrate tactics and strategy, and recount incidents which throw light on the frame of mind of the participants.

B T 648 721

Kitkatla War

For many years there was animosity between the Bella Coola and the Kitkatla who, with the advantage of strong government, used to sweep down from the north for salmon and slaves. Bella Coola itself was comparatively immune from attack, but the Kimsquit people suffered severely. The attackers were not always successful; one old man related how, when his mother's mother was an infant, they were driven off with the loss of four canoes and many men. The fact that this B incident had been remembered for so many years indicates that T it was unusual.

567 Slaves captured in this way were traded from tribe to tribe *39 and rarely escaped. When an elderly Bella Coola was a lad, there was considerable excitement in the community owing to [727] the return of Stukwala, a woman who had been carried off when a girl. She had been traded to a northern tribe among whom, she said, it was customary to crush captives beneath totem-poles and house-posts. Her diligence saved her from this fate, and she was passed on until she reached the far north, on the

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

B for Qolxwelioti's death, that he was sure the wealthy man was really a
C sorcerer, and had used some evil means to cause the fisherman's drowning.
648 Qāmālxem was distantly related to the dead man and, thus incited, deter-721 mined to kill Nānātl in revenge. That evening, as he was lying playing
B with his grandchild, the Carrier chief entered his house and thrust a musket against the unsuspecting man's chest. Nānātl quickly knocked [556] down the muzzle so that the bullet, instead of killing him, merely passed [754] through the fleshy part of his hips. Qāmālxem made no attempt to run away. In such cases it rests with the relatives of the injured man whether or not to take revenge, and they usually avoid beginning a vendetta unless virtually driven to it. News of the assault spread down the valley, and two of Nānātl's nephews, Ṭsā·kmai and Oḑmikuṃ, went up to investigate. They were both men of considerable influence in the community, both validated warriors who had taken prominent parts in the unsuccessful attack on Kitkatla a few years before. Realizing that their uncle was not seriously wounded, the two brothers [illegible] canoe, intending to take him home and to disregard the assault.

During this time, the evil Nusḑalst man had been working on Qāmāl-xem's fears by telling him that Nānātl was certain to kill him by magical means, until he decided that he could escape only by murdering the wounded man. His followers learnt of this and tried to dissuade him, B fearing the presence of the two famous warriors. As their canoe was
C going downstream, it was caught in an eddy and tipped so that one 648 musket and both cartridge boards were lost. This seemed to Qāmālxem
the chance for which he had been waiting: he fired from the bank and 726 Nānātl fell dead, much to the consternation of his own followers as well as the Nusḑalst people.

If Ṭsā·kmai and Oḑmikuṃ had been ordinary men they would probably have fled downstream but, being duly validated men of valour, this course never occurred to them.[14] Oḑmikuṃ, who had one charge left in his musket, consulted his brother as to their course of action.

"Nānātl is dead," his brother replied. "It is probably time for us to die as well. You had better shoot."

Meanwhile Qāmālxem had remained on the bank, laughing at the two warriors. Oḑmikuṃ told him to be silent, then fired, instantly killing his uncle's murderer. The Carriers began to run to and fro on the shore, whence they could hear the two brothers talking to each other:

"Let us not think of escaping," said one. "We have displayed our B characters today. If we are to die, let us die."

[703] [14]The man from whom this account was obtained mentioned as a matter of course that confirmed warriors could never run away; when questioned further, he emphasized that the public validation of bravery made it utterly impossible for them to flee from danger.

177 fathers. Inherited beliefs are too deep-rooted to pass away 771 entirely within a few generations. Even those who claim to have adopted the new faith remain convinced of the potency [181] of magic, and of the existence of those supernatural creatures which do not actively conflict with the white man's creed.
Such lack of consistency is a world-wide trait, particularly intelligible among the Bella Coola whose philosophy abounds in contradictions, dependent upon statements handed down in the origin myths of different families.

626 The Bella Coola are constrained not only by the omnipresence of supernatural beings; they are constantly subjected [181] to the influence of their fellows. They are far less individualistic than white people. A chief may boast that he can do as [622] he pleases, that he can disregard the restrictions of lesser men; he often does so, but only because public opinion recognizes that he has reached a position of eminence by giving many potlatches. The duly validated warrior is brave because he [703] feels that everyone is aware of his valour. The man who performs some ceremony in accordance with an ancestral myth [769] incorporates himself with his forbears, and is strengthened by the conviction that he has gained their support and approbation. In every phase of life, a person is profoundly affected 177 by the approval or disapproval of his neighbours. At present 626 the construction of small houses, each occupied by a single 342 family, makes it possible for a man to hide himself, or to do work unknown to the rest of the community. This lessens the force of public opinion, although it is even now more potent than conscience in checking anti-social acts. Formerly, in communal houses, every action was fully known, making individual freedom of thought and act virtually impossible. A man [602] is chiefly influenced by his relatives who take a great share in what the white man would consider purely family affairs. The effect of the group upon the individual must not be overlooked, nor can it be over-stressed in a study of these people.

177 The education and conversion of the younger men have 626 enormously lessened their reliance upon their fellows. In former 182
561

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

133 on the northern side of the Bella Coola valley, east of the Necleetsconnay. Before merging their waters with North Bentinck Arm the three flow more slowly and there are extensive tide-flats (see Plate 8). Several villages formerly clustered 361 around their mouths.

(1) Ẽmax: on the west bank of the Necleetsconnay about three-quarters of a mile from the sea. Nothing is known of this long-abandoned village of which even the name is uncertain. The mountain that rises behind its site is called Ẽmax, and it is supposed that the village had the same designation. Some of the older people state that there was no town, only a temporary hunting station, at this spot.

(2) Tsisklmy, "Short Feet" (?) on the very shore of North Bentinck Arm, west and north of the mouth of the Necleetsconnay. The fiord terminates in a tolerably square end, running north and south, and this town was at the northern edge. It was built on piles and the inhabitants could step to the ground only at low tide. This is the explanation given of the peculiar name, a reference to the curtailed walking space. Long ago it was a large town, but was probably occupied only [166] during the winter. In summer the people are believed to have moved to Namdmoc, "The Place of Flies," on the north side of North Bentinck Arm, about one mile from its head.

[712] *(3) Ilpklkul, "The Fenced Town," so called because it was stockaded: near the south bank of the Fe-xsb, about a quarter of a mile from the sea, near the site of the present mission church. It was inhabited until about 1870. According to one informant this village was founded by a certain Tsisdewum, a descendant of Tsisdwuis, who decided to move close to the river.

(4) Tlsqo-ol, "Small Mound," so called from the knoll on which it was situated: above Ilpklkul, and about one-half mile to the north of the present Bella Coola River. Its site is crossed by the road connecting the Indian village of Bella Coola with the white settlement of the same name.

721 to attack. It is said that the Fort Rupert people once raided
648 it, but their hair became entangled in the thorns growing near the tide-flats and they were easily slain while struggling to free themselves. Two warriors escaped and hid in the branches
[727] of a huge spruce tree. They used to slip down at night and steal food, thus supporting themselves for several weeks, but
[628] were at last discovered and enslaved. On such occasions the villages of the lower and central valley usually rallied to the help of Kimsquit, the most exposed one, although there was no mechanism to enforce such assistance. The inhabitants of [774] this town attributed their protection to Algantun, and used to claim that he had decreed that they should be immune owing to their close association with him. Though Bella Coola
[561] itself was comparatively free from molestation, Kimsquit and [162] Talio, with smaller populations and less strategic positions, were subject to frequent attacks. At least one of the villages at
712 the head of South Bentinck Arm was defended with a stockade of cedar trunks, set upright in a double row and secured by a water-gate with a drop-door.[1] This water-gate protected the
[648] residents on many occasions, and it is remembered that one
[724] Fort Rupert raiding-party was annihilated while endeavouring to batter down the door with a huge ram. The defenders, armed with muskets, picked off the attackers as they struggled in the open.

721 All the older men were emphatic in stating that most of their raids were in revenge for such attacks. Although such statements were partisan, they were confirmed in every way [642] and were probably substantially correct. Lack of a strong government was a serious handicap to the Bella Coola. After being [628] assailed, the members of the town would discuss retaliation, [622] and if unanimity of opinion was reached, that course was decided upon. Public opinion alone selected the leader, usually
[701] a man who had given a number of potlatches, especially one whose position had been made stronger by previous validation

[1] It is said that such stockades surrounded other villages, but definite information on this point was unavailable.

Tsimshian NE5
Kwakiutl NE10

learned. This ill-will has continued up to the present time. In 1920 word reached Bella Coola that Tsakoe had approached a Quatsino chief and asked him to spread the rumour that the missing party had been drowned at sea, at the same time admitting what had taken place. A year later a hell-bound Kwakiutl, hunting on Virgin Rocks, happened to uncover the bones buried beneath the log. There the matter rests for the moment so far as the Bella Coola are concerned, but they express the opinion that the continued ill-will may cause bloodshed at any time.

It must be remembered that the above account of this recent history with the Kitkatla is of a partisan nature. No attempt was made to have the Kitkatla side of the matter, so that the version here given may or may not be the truth. It has been inserted as an illustration of Bella Coola attitude, and of the manner in which, formerly, deaths, fears and suspicions led to war. This would certainly have been the case in the present instance but for the moderating influence of the white man's rule.

[illegible] WAR

Only slightly less feared than the Kitkatla were the Kwakiutl speaking peoples, especially those inhabiting Knight's Inlet, Kingcome Inlet, and Blunden Harbour, who were known collectively as Dzelkanoe. As Tsakoe was feared among the northern raiders, so was Siwid among the southerners. Bella Coola itself was too difficult of access and too densely populated to be successfully attacked, but Pa'a was subject to numerous raids. Even more disconcerting was the constant danger of lurking foemen; one year it would be a hunter who was surprised and killed, the next a party of women would be carried off while picking berries.

The raiders became so bold that the inhabitants of one of the Pa'a villages decided to defend themselves by building a stockade. Everyone assented to the task, so that the fortification was soon completed. It consisted of a fence of vertical logs with a platform running around near the top, on the inner side, on which the defenders could stand, and a water-gate through which canoes could enter at high tide. It accommodated five or six houses and was planned as a place of refuge for all the Pa'a villages. One of the two chiefs brought for the stockade was Ielkwa, and there was considerable discussion as to whether it should be used, but finally it was set up with the others. A Kwakiutl who was visiting Pa'a at the time took notice of this weakness, but no one seems to have suspected that he would inform his friends of it when he went home.

The summer after the stockade had been completed the Kwakiutl discussed the usual raid on Pa'a; one of the principal chiefs opposed an expedition on the ground of the reported strength of the defence, but hair with white eagle-down. Warriors who on a war party used not drink more than four mouthfuls of water, else they would be killed. A watchman was appointed in each canoe, who sat in the bow. On landing near the village of their enemies they divided themselves into a number of parties, one house of the village being assigned to each. Then, early in the morning, when all were asleep, they rushed up to the village uttering their war cry 'wu!'. They took a stand at the fire which burns in the centre of the house, and if any one of the enemies succeeded in taking up his arms and came out of his bedroom they killed him. Then they entered the bedrooms, killed the men, and took the women and children along as slaves. The heads of the dead were cut off, the houses burnt, and they returned home singing war-songs. The heads which they had taken along were then scalped, and the scalps tied to each end of a pole. When they approached their village one man stood up in the bow of each canoe and swung the pole to which the scalps were attached, and they all sang songs, to which their deeds were recounted. The scalps were valued the higher the longer and fuller the hair. They were used in the dances.

[a powerful Tsimshian chief = Anthropol]

6:Boas E-5 (1886--ca. 1890):1892
NEA Bellacoola NEA

The following tales of war expeditions offer some points of interest. About thirty or forty years ago there was a freshet at Bella Coola. The people went overland to Knight Inlet, which belongs to the Tsonqua, a tribe of the Kwakiutl, to fish there. The Tsonqua made fun of them, took from them the fish they caught, tore the blankets from the backs of the women, and ordered many of them. Finally the Bilqula returned home. There they held a council and resolved to make war upon the Tsonqua. The Tsimsh joined them in this expedition. They ordered the mountains to turn down. When they approached Knight Inlet they sent two spies in advance, who were to count the number of houses in the village of the Tsonqua. Early in the morning they attacked the houses and killed a great many men. The Tsonqua could not escape, as they were hemmed in by the river. The Bilqula slew them with knives, bows, and stone axes. They took away the children of the women, having them tattooed, and adopted them as shameful hostile to revenge for the disgrace put upon their wives and daughters. Then they burnt the village.

About thirty-five years ago the Tsilx'ten were attacked by the Kwakiutl. Originally they intended to attack Nuqa'lks, but the seers, according to the narrators, changed their mind, as he always protects the village of Nuqa'lks. They came in many canoes, while most of the Tsilx'ten were at the lake, which is situated above that town, fishing. Four men were in charge of the village, and a number of old men and women had also remained at home. The father of Pax'ts'ts, who told one of these events, happened to be out picking berries, accompanied by his wife. He saw the canoes passing by and kept himself hidden. The village of Tsilx'ten was at that time surrounded by a strong stockade, which consisted of a double row of palisades covered with thorns. At each corner there was a strong box fastened on the stockade like a tower. Here watchmen were stationed, who were able to shoot at the enemy while being themselves protected. At that time the Tsilx'ten had only bows guns. The Kwakiutl sent out two spies, who reported that the village was well fortified. The Tsilx'ten had seen the canoes coming and were on their guard. The Kwakiutl thought that they would not be able to enter the village until after the stockade had been destroyed.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Dance of the Murdered Slave]

* 575 * 796 women drone, then she leaves the house, ostensibly to return to her repository up the valley.

The singers at once begin to compose a new song, describing X's visitor and something of her history. The ritual that follows is that of the ordinary lsuxtāmem and requires no special description. On the night of nusiutālsap a large number of masks are ordered, including one series representing wasps, another of young lads, and still another of the latter with swollen faces. The only other part of the dance with a distinctive ritual is that of nebusam. [532]

In the early evening the kukusiut assemble in X's house to inspect the enormous wasps' nest which the carpenters have erected behind the fire. In recent years this has been made of canvas, taking the place of matting. Within are several stages, on which the defenders stand, each a kusiut wearing a wasp's mask and carrying a miniature bow and arrow. The attackers are other members of the society chosen for their small stature and armed with clubs and branches; each wears a boy's mask and each carries a second, representing the same individual with badly swollen face. Considerable time is required to perfect the arrangements and select the performers, but at last all is in readiness and the uninitiated are called in. [532] [178]

They marvel at the enormous wasps' nest and presently witness an assault on it. The attackers, protected by armour, valiantly beat on the structure with clubs as they swing their branches as if brushing away the angry insects; this is the way that boys normally attack a wasps' nest. The defenders discharge their arrows and at intervals one of the attackers calls out in pain and falls down, presently rising with badly swollen face. The uninitiated do not realize that he has slipped the second mask from beneath his blanket to his face. X stands at one side, throwing his arm with a sweeping motion in the direction of the combat, while Awe'likwelsair gives her customary explanations. At last the nest is beaten down whereupon one of the Cannibals begins to growl and the uninitiated rush away. The ritual concludes in the usual way. [714] [825]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

as a warrior. Such a chief had no command over his followers. 721
If he were a man of great prestige, many would be willing to 701
serve under him, but he could not compel the services of any- 622
one except his own slaves. A few individuals often declined to [626]
follow their fellows to war, although the force of public opinion [628]
usually prevented a too individualistic course. Inhabitants of other towns used their own discretion whether or not to join the party. If some of their relatives had been slain in the previous attack, revenge influenced them to share in the retaliation, otherwise only the prestige of a mighty chief could attract them. No case is known in which all the Bella Coola [642] villages joined in a single expedition; there were often tem- [628]
porary alliances between neighbouring settlements, but complete lack of central organization. The course of events was similar when a chief wished to raid without the motive of avenging an attack. For example, if a Bella Coola had been [648]
enslaved by a foreign tribe and slain by his owner, a brother of the victim might decide on revenge. The usual course was to kill a slave belonging to the murderers, though sometimes he led a raiding party if he could gain the necessary support.

Each warrior provided his own weapons, frequently the 726
same as those used for hunting. Bows with obsidian-tipped 411
arrows were most relied upon for offence, though slings were also used from canoes. Every man carried a spear, pointed like an arrow, for hand-to-hand fighting, although there was relatively little of this, most of the combats being fought at a distance with much noise, boasting, and expletives, but few casualties. Spears were, however, useful if the attackers succeeded in surprising a village at night. Hostilities are a thing of the past, consequently it was impossible to obtain detailed information respecting offensive weapons. Armour consisted 714
of maple or birch slats reinforced with moosehide and worn 726
around the body and chest; this rendered quick movement
difficult but was effective against arrows. Muskets were intro- [411]
duced many years ago and armour consequently became use- [177]
less. Large shields of moosehide were carried in all canoes,

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

714 and one was held up by the bow paddler as the craft neared the
726 shore to protect him and those behind from arrows and stones cast by slings. When not in use, shields were laid away in boxes with some white substance resembling flour.[1] On the
[103] shore of the fiord below Bella Coola, opposite Winter Bay, there are some boulders of the same white tint; even now these are often spoken of as "The Shields of the Bella Coola." It is said that hostile raiders, seeing them, used to remark that they had reached the outposts of Bella Coola.

726 The same lack of leadership shown during preparations for a war was evident during hostilities. The so-called leader had
701 little authority over his men, who could desert and return home
703 at any time. Lack of martial ability among their own chiefs sometimes led the Bella Coola to place themselves under the
[648] authority of a Bella Bella in a way which would be impossible
[642] for a war-like people. Frequently such divided leadership led to disaster, and is the surest proof that the Bella Coola were not as aggressive or bellicose as other coastal tribes.

726 Except when attacking the Carriers, all raiding parties
[533] embarked in canoes and followed a definite order of procedure
[703] handed down from the past. In the stern of each craft sat the captain, a chief, who, as the craft was leaving, began to sing his xe-tla song, keeping time to it with the beats of his paddle; the recounting of the glories of their ancestors was supposed to encourage the warriors. Instead of leaving simultaneously, a rendezvous was often chosen down the fiord, and the expedition finally moved off from there when all the canoes had arrived. While still in friendly territory, a flotilla proceeded
726 openly. A small amount of dried salmon and water was car-
789 ried by a war party and morsels of the former were eaten at intervals. The bow-man took as much food and drink as he thought could be consumed at one sitting, put a fragment of dried salmon in his mouth, chewed it four times on the same side of his mouth as he was paddling, and swallowed it. Then

[1] Some undetermined substance said to have had protective or preservative qualities.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

he took a sip of water, followed by another piece of dried fish, 726 chewed it four times, and washed it down as before. This was 789 four times repeated so that the provender consumed consisted of four morsels of salmon, each chewed four times, and four sips of water; it was most important that no more should be taken into the mouth than could be swallowed at a single gulp. Having eaten, the bow-man passed the food which he had taken from the store to the paddler behind him who ate and drank in the same manner, except that he chewed with the other side of his mouth, corresponding to the fact that he paddled on the other side of the canoe from the man in the bow. So the food and drink was passed down to the captain. If possible, he was required to eat whatever was left, though if there was too much, he threw the remains over his shoulder into the water. He was also expected to swallow whatever water was passed to him, but if there was too much he would lie back, his head projecting over the stern, and pour it out over his face so that it fell into the ocean. As the food and drink were completely consumed, so it was believed the enemy would be annihilated. If the bow-man had failed to take out enough salmon and water, the captain received none of it, since no second portion could be served.

Each captain took with him a supply of dyed and undyed 726 cedar-bark which was stored in the bow of the canoe. During 714 the course of the day, the party would land and the chief decide upon some decoration made by combining strands of the two 824 colours of bark to serve as a distinguishing mark for members of the same canoe. He took out as much bark as he thought would suffice, and the bow-man was the first to don the symbol. The second paddler followed, and each in turn did the same in order of his position in the canoe. If too much had been taken, the captain had to wear collars of whatever was left over; if too little, he had to do without. Having thus arrayed them- 726 selves, the party continued until nightfall when a secluded spot 784 was chosen for camping. Wood was collected and fires laid, 722 but no light was ever struck and the warriors lay around the

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

If the war had not been of long duration in which extremely bitter feelings had been aroused, captives were often ransomed by their relatives, who came unmolested for the purpose when the heat of battle had subsided. Failing this, prisoners remained as slaves, the children especially growing up virtually as members of their owner's family as far as food and clothing were concerned, though never sharing in the prowess of his ancestral family. Torture or killing of prisoners seems to have been a rare practice. One extremely old Kimsquit woman related that in her childhood she had seen a captive stretched out on the hot rocks at the side of the ocean, fastened there, his testes crushed with stones, and allowed to die. No other similar traditions could be obtained and it seems probable that this must have been an unusual case. It is true that hostilities have long ceased, but the Bella Coola have clear recollections of other long-abandoned customs, and it is unlikely that torture was ever a common occurrence. It is, of course, one about which reticence is to be expected, but information would have been obtainable if the custom had been common or if it had been one which played an important part in the lives of the Bella Coola. 727 [567]

Scalps were hung on a cord and dried like salmon, then suspended as valuable trophies in the taker's house. When setting out on a war expedition, he would often cover his head with one, holding it in position by weaving its hair into his own. At a man's death, they were either inherited by his heirs or, more often, burnt with his other possessions. It is said that the Fort Rupert people used to tie scalps in bundles to their masks. When the Bella Coola went to war to retaliate for a murder, instead of scalping a victim, they sometimes brought back his whole head and impaled it on a stake over the grave of the person avenged. [422] [714] [768] [721] [648] [682]

At this late period it is virtually impossible to form any opinion as to the amount of bloodshed in wars waged by the Bella Coola. Several of the older people spoke in gloating terms of the slaughter accomplished by their ancestors, but all 721

2:McIlwraith E-3 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bella:oola NE6
Tsimshian NE15

Tsúksa remained encamped for several days, during which time he sent word to the Bella Coola that he regretted the death of Łólxwelioti and had come to make peace. He added that his followers had tried to dissuade him, saying that he would be killed, but he hadanswered that he was too great a man to allow fear to influence his actions.

Having waited for several days, the party came up the Bella Coola River, their canoe loaded with presents and eagle down, while Tsúksa's brother, Ne·xlo·s, wore the mask of his tsúwinam as futher proof of friendly intentions. It was unusual to display one except in a sisaok ceremonial, but this was an unprecedented event; he knewthat he might soon be killed and he preferred to die while bearing the olvious mark of incorporation with some incident of an ancestral myth. The canoe was beached opposite the house of Pútlas where the crew blew egle down into the air to mark their peaceful mission. Men had gatheredfrom all parts of the Bella Coola valley and several hot-heads wished todisregard the safe-conducts and slay their enemies, a course which thy had recommended for several days and had tried to precipitate by overt acts against the Kitkatla. Pútlas himself had not spoken, but he nowappeared and advised the people not to harm Tsúksa, since everlasting hostility would result. Though his wishes did not entirely quiet the angry ones, they virtually assured the Kitkatla of a welcome. Pútlas brought forward a moose-skin, and told some of his people to hold it spread so that, when Tsúksa leapt from his canoe, he would land upon it, and could be carried to the house without putting foot to the ground. Tsúksa answered proudly that there was nothing on earth strong enough tosupport him, since his many potlatches had made him incomparably heavy. None the less, he accepted the honour, an assistance to landing sown only to mighty chiefs, and was carried into the house where he waseated in the far right-hand corner, an honourable location. Pútlas invited all the people in the vicinity, slaves as well as Bella Coola, and the inner partitions of the house had to be removed to provide space for the throng.

Though Pútlas had decided against the immediate illing of the Kitkatla, he had concocted a scheme to test their bravery and the sincerity of their desire for peace. No one knew of this except his nephew, Ne·xwudai, who was to carry it out. When all were seated, the latter appeared, his face smeared with ashes, and his hair tied upon a top-knot with weasel skins as is customary during war. Ne·xwudai moved sunwise around the house, brandishing a musket and repeatedly pointing it at Tsúksa in a threatening manner. If the Kitkatla had shown nervousness, particularly if one of them had fired his own muskt, a massacre would have resulted. But they remained unmoved, confident in the prestige of their leader, while he knew that though his body might be

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Coola the important men of Sınxł, Tcımotł, and Äłqäläxł met at Q̓omqo·ts and discussed the matter stormily. Potłes was the leading Bella Coola chief at the time, but he alone did not attend the meeting at which all the others were present, though he sent a man to search a storehouse owned by the murdered woman on the south side of the mouth of Bella Coola River, near the former Hudson's Bay Company's post. Bılxwalaks had a large amount of ammunition stored within, and this was brought to the house of Potłes. Next morning, the chief himself appeared, his face smeared with ashes and his hair tied in a top-knot with a weasel-skin. This is done by anyone who has killed a man, and it was a clear intimation that Potłes had decided on war. He seated himself in the doorway of his house, a cocked musket in either hand, and intimated that he would shoot anyone who passed on the sidewalk before him. For four days he sat there, neither speaking nor eating: he was numitł, so no one disregarded his wishes and the inmates even of his own house used the refuse holes for egress during that period. No other case is known of such an action, but Potłes could do as he liked, and he manifested his grief and determination in this spectacular manner. On the fifth day, he ordered drums to be beaten, and the inhabitants of the adjacent villages gathered; Potłes wasted no words:

"Bılxwalaks has been murdered," he said. "She was a chief and my relative.[12] I am going to war. We shall use her own powder and shot."

The ammunition was distributed and the Bella Coola prepared for the expedition.

Owing to the prestige of Potłes, volunteers came swarming in, not only from Bella Coola itself, but from Kimsquit and Täl·io as well. No one was thoroughly acquainted with the geography of the Kwakiutl territory except a slave named, like the Kwakiutl warrior chief, Siwid, though not, however, related to him. This man had lived among the Bella Coola for so long that he was thought reliable; he readily agreed to act as guide, only asking that his old mother be spared, a request which was granted.

After the usual delays, the expedition set out and spent the first night at Kwatna. Next morning, Kwalsänł, one of the leading warriors, tied his hair into a top-knot and smeared his face with ashes. He was a man whose bravery had been firmly established by the distribution of valuable presents. To show his valour, he stood up on the beach within easy musket range and called out:

"Please fire at my top-knot. If you hit it and make it fall, so will we lay low our foes."

---

[12] It is doubtful whether she was a kinswoman, but Potłes used the term figuratively in speaking of one who, like himself, was a person of importance.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

qālikw: Omen of death, generic term. [787]
qālka: One of the berries, probably raspberry.
qāmā, vocativ, qāmaa: Mother, term used by child. [824] Qāmālxem: Celebrated Carrier chief.
Qāmaxe: 1—Village on west bank of the Necleetsconnay, about three-quarters of a mile from the sea. [601]
2—Mountain behind the village.
Qāmspoxtāmem: am'lel·a name of a Kimsquit man.
qāmxāmila, vocativ, qāmxāmilaa: 1—Term used for spring salmon during the ritual following the first taking of the fish. [825]
2—Term used by smmq to human beings, who are like salmon to them.
3—Salmon, in the language of supernatural beings. [198]
qaoxta, "Rope Fastenings," i.e., something binding: The function of the "Bed Covering" and other presents given with a wife which bind her to her husband. [585]
qa·luks: Unidentified species of duck. [431] Qaominoukw: Kwakiutl term for "The Weeper," a female supernatural being.
Qapātus: Kusiut name of a Stuax man. [825]
Qā·pxaok: ustāmq chief living soon after the beginning of time.
Qāqā^{a}li: Herald who came with the first settlers to the Dean River in the beginning of time.
Qāqos: Carrier pronunciation of Tcaqos, one of the first men to settle on the upper Dean in the beginning of time.
qāānm: Kusiut with ability to produce a puppet-patron, cf. nnnayanum.
qāitsta: Sweat-bath. [515] Qāimus: Slave mentioned in an ancient story.
qātsq': Star-fish. [825]
qāx: Rabbit.
qā·s: Salmon-berry. [824]
Qāxlwāls: One of the first men to settle at Schooner Pass in the beginning of time.
qāxmāts: Unidentified plant.
qahm: Black cod. [825]
qam, "A Wiping of the Feet upon the Ground of Chiefs": Term applied to a deadly insult offered to persons of importance. [578] qamia: Wooden armour.
Qanhlit: 1—Village on east side of South Bentinck Arm. [714]
2—Island off Rivers Inlet.
3—Island.
Qay·ārwila: One of the names of Raven as chief.
Qeil: 1—One of the first men to settle at Sistiut in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Stuax in the beginning of time.
qe·ka: Unidentified migratory bird, black in colour. [825] Qeldjut: Scratch River, near Bella Bella. qi'aqa: One of the a'alt dances.
Qīqia, "Head": Stuax repository named from part of a supernatural creature.
qoiqoiqāwestleizymam: A verbal exposure of what should have remained concealed, such as comments upon the slave ancestry of a person whose blot in this respect has been covered over by lavish giving. [578] qlaholitsia: Presents distributed by a wife to strengthen her husband's seat, and thus prevent him from "wobbling." [431] [556]

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

By laying their hands on the nape of a person they are able to tell whether his soul is present or whether it has left the body. If the soul should become weak they are able to restore it to its former vigour. If a person swoons it is believed that his soul has flown away without breaking its shell. The shaman hears its buzzing wings, which give a sound like those of a mosquito. He may catch and replace it in the nape of its owner. If the soul leaves the body without breaking its shell the owner becomes crazy. 774 756 [828] [753] [828]

The art of shamanism is bestowed by Snq. It is impossible to obtain it by means of fasting and praying, as is the case among the neighbouring tribes, but it is a free gift from the deity. A person who is to become a shaman will fall sick, and, during his illness, Snq will give him a song which must be kept a deep secret. After this he is able to cure diseases. If a person falsely pretends to have received the gift of shamanism, and tries to suck out diseases from a patient, he will fall sick himself. 756 [776]

When asked more closely about the curious difference between this method of obtaining the power and that of the neighbouring tribes my informant said: 'When an Awiky'ö'noq wishes to become a shaman he may go to the mountain where the deity of their shamans resides (probably Mä'tem) who will initiate him. No Bilqula can obtain the art in such a way.' [171]

Sickness is caused by a disease entering the body or by witchcraft (see p. 417). The shaman is able to extract the disease by sucking. A peculiar method of witchcraft, somewhat similar to the 'ek'a' of the Kwakiutl (see Sixth Report of the Committee, p. 612), was described to me as follows: The person who wants to bewitch his enemy endeavours to obtain some of his old clothing, portions soaked by perspiration being considered especially effective. After it is obtained a wolf is killed, and the clothing is put into its mouth, which is then tied up. Then the wolf is placed in a box. This procedure is called snak. Sometimes the clothing or some hair is inclosed in the bone of a wolf or of a dead person. No shaman can counteract these charms. 753 755 754 [825]

If a person has been murdered, and a string is tied firmly around the neck of the corpse, the murderer's neck will become diseased and he will be unable to breathe and will die. If sand is strewn in the corpse's eyes and the lids closed over it the murderer will die. If a person has been killed with a knife or arrow, or another weapon, to which some of his blood adheres, the latter is brought into contact with a wolf's head, dog's hair, or anything else that is bad, and then thrown into the fire or put into a frog's or snake's mouth; then the murderer will die. 682 754 [825]

I add here a few current beliefs:— 827

Sneezing indicates that people are talking about one.

Slight ringing of the ears indicates rain, loud ringing good weather.

Twitching of the muscles of the left side of the body is unlucky; of the right side lucky. Twitching of the skin under the eyes indicates that one will cry. [777]

If a dog dreams and howls in its sleep its owner will die. 825

The breaking of a box without an apparent cause is unlucky. 763 777

WARS.

When a war party was organised the warriors did not paint their faces, but they put on headbands of white cedar-bark and strewed their 726 714

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

726 hair with white eagle-down. Warriors when on a war party must not [714] drink more than four mouthfuls of water, else they would be killed. A [271] watchman was appointed in each canoe, who sat in the bow. On landing near the village of their enemies they divided themselves into a number of parties, one house of the village being assigned to each. Then, early in the morning, when all were asleep, they rushed up to the village uttering their war cry 'ɛsi!' They took a stand at the fire which burns in the centre of the house, and if any one of the enemies succeeded in taking up his arms and came out of his bedroom they killed him. Then 727 they entered the bedrooms, killed the men, and took the women and children along as slaves. The heads of the dead were cut off, the houses burnt, and they returned home singing war-songs. The heads which they had taken along were then scalped, and the scalps tied to each end of a pole. When they approached their village one man stood up in the bow of each canoe and swung the pole to which the scalps were attached, and they all sang songs, in which their deeds were recounted. The scalps were valued the higher the longer and fuller the hair. They were used in the Sisan'ku.

648 The following tales of war expeditions offer some points of interest.
726 About thirty or forty years ago there was a famine at Bella Coola. The [73] people went overland to Knight Inlet, which belongs to the Tenaqtaq, a tribe of the Kwakiutl, to fish there. The Tenaqtaq made fun of them, took from them the fish they caught, tore the blankets from the backs of the women, and seduced many of them. Finally the Bilqula returned home. There they held a council and resolved to make war upon the Tenaqtaq. The Tinneh joined them in this expedition. They crossed the mountains in four days. When they approached Knight Inlet they sent two spies in advance, who were to count the number of houses in the village of the Tenaqtaq. Early in the morning they attacked the houses and killed a great many men. The Tenaqtaq could not escape, as they were hemmed in by the river. The Bilqula slew them with knives, lances, and stone axes. They took away the clothes of the women, leaving them naked, and subjected them to shameful insults in revenge for the disgrace put upon their wives and daughters. Then they burnt the village.

About thirty-five years ago the Talio'mx were attacked by the Kwakiutl. Originally they intended to attack Nɛqa'lku, but the raven, according to the narrator, changed their mind, as he always protects the village of Nɛqa'lku. They came in many canoes, while most of the Talio'mx were at the lake, which is situated above that town, fishing. Four men were in charge of the village, and a number of old men and women had also remained at home. The father of Nɛak'alu'sta, who told me of these events, happened to be out picking berries, accompanied by his wife. He saw the canoes passing by and kept himself hidden. The [712] village of Talio was at that time surrounded by a strong stockade, which consisted of a double row of palisades crowned with thorns. At each corner there was a strong box fastened on the stockade like a tower. Here watchmen were stationed, who were able to shoot at the enemy while being themselves protected. At that time the Talio'mx had only four guns. The Kwakiutl sent out two spies, who reported that the village was well fortified. The Talio'mx had seen the canoes coming and were on their guard. The Kwakiutl thought that they would not be able to enter the village until after the stockade had been destroyed.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15

B 721 these accounts seemed to be exaggerations, and the casualties were probably few. The Bella Coola did not have the same [554] admiration for the successful warrior as for the man who gave many potlatches, while everything indicates that their raids B [703] were on a small scale, rendered singularly ineffective by lack of discipline.

Specific Accounts

B 72 Active warfare has been so long discontinued on the coast 128 that none of the living Bella Coola can describe conditions as they existed during hostilities. It was possible to collect the *539 following accounts of raids and adventures which, though individually of small value, illustrate tactics and strategy, and recount incidents which throw light on the frame of mind of the participants.

Kitkatla War

B T 648 For many years there was animosity between the Bella 721 Coola and the Kitkatla who, with the advantage of strong government, used to sweep down from the north for salmon and slaves. Bella Coola itself was comparatively immune from attack, but the Kimsquit people suffered severely. The attackers were not always successful; one old man related how, when his mother's mother was an infant, they were driven off with the loss of four canoes and many men. The fact that this B incident had been remembered for so many years indicates that T it was unusual.

567 Slaves captured in this way were traded from tribe to tribe 439 and rarely escaped. When an elderly Bella Coola was a lad, [727] there was considerable excitement in the community owing to the return of Shukwala, a woman who had been carried off when a girl. She had been traded to a northern tribe among whom, she said, it was customary to crush captives beneath totem-poles and house-posts. Her diligence saved her from this fate, and she was passed on until she reached the far north, on the

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

423 is no doubt that a man tends to lose those rights in property
614 which are strictly his, if they are located at a distance. Thus several men claim that they are legally entitled to hunt at Kitlobe, but from mere difficulty of access neither they nor their fathers have exercised the right, and it would have been lost in the course of a few generations, even without the utter decay of custom which has followed the advent of the white man. Practically, a man hunts only in the grounds of those ancestral families in whose origin myths he has names, though, theoretically, he is entitled to hunt on any hunting-ground of any ancestral family of which he is a member whether or not he holds a duly validated name from its origin myth. It is not necessary to confirm the right to property as with a name, though a validated ancestral name is the usual mark of a man's right to that area of the ancestral family to which that designation belongs. Although the ownership of land in distant regions is of little practical importance, it is, none the less, a [554] matter of great pride to a man to feel that he has rights in many places. The efforts of an individual to make good those [721] claims has often led to bloodshed; in fact, one intelligent old man stated that property disputes were the principal cause for war in British Columbia. A person who lacks hunting-grounds
[554] is little better than a slave, whereas one who has much land is important.

The Bella Coola regard land as almost inalienable. Though a man does not own the land of his wife's ancestral family, he can use it and his children have full rights to it. Conversely, a wife can gather berries on her husband's land, though it is not hers. A guest at a village may be allowed to use the [574] territory of his hosts, but it does not become his. In the old
727 days wars between the coastal tribes were common, but though slaves were taken freely, land was never seized; such is un-
423 thinkable to a Bella Coola. In fact, several of the older people [567] inquired how it had been possible, in the first world war, for the allies, whose cause they believed to be righteous, to annex territory from Germany. If the victors had killed or enslaved

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

the Germans it would have been moral and proper according to Bella Coola ethics, but to take land was unheard of. 423 [727]

Since land is only valued for hunting or collecting purposes, it is not divided into small areas. Any man can build his house at will near the village. It is said that at Kitlobe the crab-apple trees are the property of different ancestral families, themselves members of different tribes, but this is unknown in Bella Coola. It may be mentioned that the Bella Coola somewhat naïvely assume that all other coastal tribes have [829] ancestral families similar to their own, although they recognize that some of them also have a clan system which has no counterpart in their social organization. Since the concentration of the tribe on a small reserve and the beginning of [177] agriculture, a system of individual ownership of cultivated land has sprung up. It is realized that if a man clears and cultivates a field, the produce is his own, and he can will this [428] land to whomsoever he pleases. Likewise a man who rings a tree to kill it for firewood is the sole owner. The Bella Coola regard uncultivated land in the reserve as being at the disposal of anyone, a concept which appears not to have been taught them by any white administrator. Its origin seems rather to lie in the old belief that any unpreëmpted land, far removed from a village, can be used by anyone. It is recognized that the reserve cannot be considered as a sa'alam belonging to any ancestral group, hence it is free to all. One corner of it, however, includes the lower part of a side-valley formerly used by the people of Tsmail. An old man, whose ancestral family lived in that village for generations, has set his bear-traps in [614] this corner of the reserve for a number of years without interference from other hunters, who go far afield with their traps. Even within the limits of the reserve it is felt that this man has the prime right to that area for the use of himself and his family.

Theoretically an ancestral family may die out. Several 614 accounts were received of old men who, believing themselves 428 to be the sole survivors of their family, bequeathed their names 921

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bella bella NE5

BC 614 428 721

and hunting-grounds to those who had helped them in their old age. But in every case the gift turned out to be of doubtful value, since young men grew up who claimed membership in the supposedly defunct ancestral family and combatted the right of those to whom it had been given. This always led to war.

BB BC 423 648

The following is an instance of a feud which arose from the bestowal of a hunting-area.

It is said that about 1850 the people of Tcawat (probably Bute Inlet) captured a Bella Bella woman as a slave. She escaped and fled up the Tcawat River, hoping to come in contact with the Bella Coola, who often hunted in that area. The woman was found by the mother's father of an informant who carefully looked after her while he was hunting beaver and brought her back to Bella Coola, thence sending her to Bella Bella. In gratitude her father, a Bella Bella chief, gave her rescuer the hunting-area known as Nulam, near Kwatna Inlet, with the consent of the members of his ancestral family. The land so alienated should have remained permanently in possession of the Bella Coola ancestral family, but was too far removed from Bella Coola to be used regularly by the new owners. After the death of the Bella Bella chief, a number of individuals who claimed membership in his ancestral family asserted their rights to it. Many years later, after white traders had made their appearance on the coast, a Bella Coola went to Nulam and killed a large number of beaver. As he was leaving with their pelts he was murdered by some Bella Bella, ostensibly as a trespasser. But for the restraining influence of the white man this incident would undoubtedly have led to war. The informant still feels that he is entitled to hunt at Nulam, and did so several times when he was a young man; but his sons have never exercised the right, and it has practically lapsed.

BB [425]

BB BC 423 622

It is unfortunate that the above incident is drawn from Bella Bella, where the power of chiefs is much greater than among the Bella Coola. Consequently it is impossible to say

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

he beats in the fire with his stick, and expresses the hope that the name of the marshal in the town where the error took place may be blackened unless he does better. 575* 628 203

As an individual kusiut who errs is punished by a marshal, so is punishment meted out to the members of a village in which any serious accident occurs during a dance. Such disasters are fire, causing concealed kukusiut to appear among the uninitiated, the breaking of a sidewalk on which a number of the members are dancing, or the capsizing of lashed canoes which are used in some of the performances. The obvious effect of such mishaps is to lower the prestige of the kusiut society in the eyes of the uninitiated. The news travels from town to town, and to adjacent tribes. This is a casus belli for any village which wishes to attack the one where the disaster took place; in fact, a raid is considered meritorious. Owing to frequent marriages between the members of neighbouring villages, it usually happens that the inhabitants of adjacent settlements are unwilling to attack, but the news spreads until it reaches a town willing to take the lead. The marshals, aided by any other influential kukusiut, discuss the matter and decide on war; uninitiated are called upon to take part, though they are told only that the foray is connected with the rites of the kusiut society which increases rather than decreases their awe. The threatened villagers, knowing that an attack is inevitable, send out sentinels and guards, and, if possible, flee at the last moment to neighbouring towns for safety, allowing the raiders to burn their village and carry off loot. If a fight takes place many people may be killed, but slaves are never taken. In the last century Stuix attacked Alpâlâsl; the assailants were aided by a number of Chilkotin to whom they were related but who had not the slightest idea of the cause of the raid. Although an attacked town is usually helped by its neighbours, this is not the case when the assault is caused by error in kusiut or nusal ceremonial.

575* 628 688 721 [727] [567]

Nor is punishment for error or disaster in ritual meted out [648]

575 only by members of the same tribe. The Bella Coola firmly 641 believe that if, for example, there is a serious disaster at 618 Sowqa'a, that village will be raided by the people of Bella Bella, Fort Rupert, Kitkatla, or by tribes even further away.
921 News of the accident reaches Tal'u or Kimsquit and the [628] inhabitants, themselves related by blood to the offenders and therefore unwilling to punish them, call upon the members of a foreign tribe to do so. On different occasions this statement, in practically identical terms, was made by six independent informants, so there appears to be not the slightest doubt as to the belief of the people in this law. But when specific cases were asked for, they could not be obtained. It therefore appears clear that the Bella Coola, probably owing to long teaching on the part of the kulaxiat, consider that an error in ritual is sufficient to bring punishment from an alien tribe. There must be some basis of truth in this conviction, and it is highly probable that the kulaxiat must have taken advantage of raids to explain to the uninitiated that these were caused by disasters in ritual. One informant was of the opinion that, following the collapse of a house at Kimsquit during a Cannibal dance, a Bella Coola chief called upon Tsakas, chief of the Kitkatla, who raided Kimsquit in punishment. Quite apart from the belief displayed in the uninitiated, it is obvious that tribes eager for war sometimes used as accident as pretext. The Bella Coola know of no case in which they raided a foreign tribe for this reason, although they state that if they had been called upon to act as punisher, they could not have refused.

575 Leaving now the functions of the society as a whole, the 424 rights of an individual member can next be described. Each 425 kulaxiat has:
553

(1) A Kaxiat Name. Like every other prerogative, a name in this type can be acquired from father, uncle, grandfather, or other relative, or even by a son from his mother. As a rule a kulaxiat wills his designation or designations, for a man may [556] have several, before death and his wishes are observed. Al-

[The Breaker Dance]

[175] [176] [177] [178] [179] [180] [181] [182] [183] [184] [185] [186] [187] [188] [189] [190] [191] [192] [193] [194] [195] [196] [197] [198] [199] [200] [201] [202] [203] [204] [205] [206] [207] [208] [209] [210] [211] [212] [213] [214]

WARFARE*

General Observations — Specific Accounts

General Observations

PRIOR to the establishment of British rule, there was considerable warfare among the coastal tribes of British Columbia. Long-continued struggles leading to the extermination of one or other of the participants were unknown, but there were constant raids, counter-raids, feuds, and scuffles. These were never so continuous as on the Plains, where martial achievements were regarded more highly than on the coast, but it appears probable that at least several villages of the Bella Coola were unlinked every few years. Nevertheless, war was secondary in importance to economical ones. During the winter-longer raiders and members of hostile tribes were more secured as guests or some fashion. As protection they might be subjected to insult, loss or be avenged in the same manner as by active hostility, but seldom was actual violence offered either to envoys or guests. The symbol of peace and friendliness was eagle down; the occupiers of a canoe who bore an invitation to a potlatch, or who were guests themselves, used to blow this substance up into the air whenever another craft approached, and it was incumbent on the latter to row over to the other side of the channel. Eagle down was considered to be so sacred that when two men were quarrelling a chief could stop them by blowing some of it over their heads. In return, hostilities were prevented by ceremonies, and in summer the people were usually busy laying in supplies of food; consequently, it was only in the late spring that fighting was at all common. Even then the division of ceremonial life were not entirely forgotten; an burial cairns were to war and

* Whether having long been discontinued, the past tense is used throughout this chapter.

721

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

2: 9th Twelfth E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

to attack. It is said that the Fort Rupert people once raided it, but their hair became entangled in the thorns growing near the tide-flats and they were easily slain while struggling to free themselves. Two warriors escaped and hid in the branches of a huge spruce tree. They used to slip down at night and steal food, thus supporting themselves for several weeks, but were at last discovered and enslaved. On such occasions the villages of the lower and central valley usually rallied to the help of Ilpuwis, the most exposed one, although there was no mechanism to enforce such assistance. The inhabitants of this town attributed their protection to Alpuntém, and used to claim that he had decreed that they should be immune owing to that close association with him. Though Bella Coola itself was comparatively free from molestation, Kimsquit and Talio, with smaller populations and less strategic positions, were subject to frequent attacks. At least one of the villages at the head of North Bentinck Arm was defended with a stockade of cedar trees, set upright in a double row and covered by a water-gate with a drop-door.[9] This water-gate protected the residents on many occasions, and it is remembered that one from Rupert raiding-party was annihilated while endeavouring to burst open the door with a huge ram. The defenders, armed with muskets, picked off the attackers as they struggled in the open.

All the older men were emphatic in stating that most of their raids were in revenge for such attacks. Although such statements were partisan, they were confirmed in every way and were probably tolerably correct. Lack of a strong government was serious handicap to the Bella Coola. After being insulted, the members of the town would discuss retaliation, and if unanimity of opinion was reached, that course was decided upon. Public opinion alone selected the leader, usually a man who had given a number of potlatches, especially one whose position had been made stronger by previous validation

[9] It is said that such stockades surrounded other villages, but definite information on this point was unavailable.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

as a warrior. Such a chief had no command over his followers. 721
If he were a man of great prestige, many would be willing to 701
serve under him, but he could not compel the services of any- 622
one except his own slaves. A few individuals often declined to 626
follow their fellows to war, although the force of public opinion 628 usually prevented a too individualistic course. Inhabitants of other towns used their own discretion whether or not to join the party. If some of their relatives had been slain in the previous attack, revenge influenced them to share in the retaliation, otherwise only the prestige of a mighty chief could attract them. No case is known in which all the Bella Coola 642
villages joined in a single expedition; there were often tem- 628
porary alliances between neighbouring settlements, but complete lack of central organization. The course of events was similar when a chief wished to raid without the motive of avenging an attack. For example, if a Bella Coola had been 648 enslaved by a foreign tribe and slain by his owner, a brother of the victim might decide on revenge. The usual course was to kill a slave belonging to the murderers, though sometimes he led a raiding party if he could gain the necessary support.

Each warrior provided his own weapons, frequently the 926
same as those used for hunting. Bows with obsidian-tipped 411 arrows were most relied upon for offence, though slings were also used from canoes. Every man carried a spear, pointed like an arrow, for hand-to-hand fighting, although there was relatively little of this, most of the combats being fought at a distance with much noise, boasting, and explosives, but few casualties. Spears were, however, useful if the attackers succeeded in surprising a village at night. Hostilities are a thing of the past, consequently it was impossible to obtain detailed information respecting offensive weapons. Armour consisted 914
of maple or birch slats reinforced with moosehide and worn 926 around the body and chest; this rendered quick movement difficult but was effective against arrows. Muskets were intro- 411
duced many years ago and armour consequently became use- 177
less. Large shields of moosehide were carried in all canoes,

2;McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

If the war had not been of long duration in which extremely bitter feelings had been aroused, captives were often ransomed by their relatives, who came unmolested for the purpose when the heat of battle had subsided. Failing this, prisoners remained as slaves, the children especially growing up virtually as members of their owner's family as far as food and clothing were concerned, though never sharing in the prowess of his ancestral family. Torture or killing of prisoners seems to have been a rare practice. One extremely old Kimsquit woman related that in her childhood she had seen a captive stretched out on the hot rocks at the side of the ocean, fastened there, his testes crushed with stones, and allowed to die. No other similar traditions could be obtained and it seems probable that this must have been an unusual case. It is true that hostilities have long ceased, but the Bella Coola have clear recollections of other long-abandoned customs, and it is unlikely that torture was ever a common occurrence. It is, of course, one about which reticence is to be expected, but information would have been obtainable if the custom had been common or if it had been one which played an important part in the lives of the Bella Coola.

Scalps were hung on a cord and dried like salmon, then suspended as valuable trophies in the taker's house. When setting out on a war expedition, he would often cover his head with one, holding it in position by weaving its hair into his own. At a man's death, they were either inherited by his heirs or, more often, buried with his other possessions. It is said that the Fort Rupert people used to tie scalps in bundles to their masks. When the Bella Coola went to war to revenge for a murder, instead of scalping a victim, they sometimes brought back his whole head and impaled it on a stake over the grave of the person avenged.

At this late period it is virtually impossible to form any opinion as to the amount of bloodshed in wars waged by the Bella Coola. Several of the older people spoke in glowing terms of the slaughter accomplished by their ancestors, but all

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES
Tsimshian NES

these accounts seemed to be exaggerations, and the casualties were probably few. The Bella Coola did not have the same admiration for the successful warrior as for the man who gave many potlatches, while everything indicates that their raids were on a small scale, rendered singularly ineffective by lack of discipline.

Specific Accounts

Active warfare has been so long discontinued on the coast that none of the living Bella Coola can describe conditions as they existed during hostilities. It was possible to collect the following accounts of raids and adventures which, though individually of small value, illustrate tactics and strategy, and recount incidents which throw light on the frame of mind of the participants.

Kitkatla War

For many years there was animosity between the Bella Coola and the Kitkatla who, with the advantage of strong government, used to sweep down from the north for salmon and eulachon. Bella Coola itself was comparatively immune from attack, but the Kimsquit people suffered severely. The attackers were not always successful; one old man related how, when his mother's mother was an infant, they were driven off with the loss of four canoes and many men. The fact that this incident had been remembered for so many years indicates that it was unusual.

Slaves captured in this way were traded from tribe to tribe and rarely escaped. When an elderly Bella Coola was a lad, there was considerable excitement in the community owing to the return of Sladwala, a woman who had been carried off when a girl. She had been traded to a northern tribe among whom, she said, it was customary to crush captives beneath totem-poles and house-posts. Her diligence saved her from this fate, and she was passed on until she reached the far north, on the

2;McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEb Bellacoola NEb
Tsimshian NE15

B
T 527
[234]

shore of a river where "the white men got money stone." Then Sîdewale began to go south, and was finally sold to an important chief living north of Port Simpson. He used to beat her; in fact, she carried the scars with her to her grave. Sîdewale's master had another slave, a male Bella Bella, with whom the woman was on friendly terms since she was related by blood to a Bella Bella family and could speak that language. Angered by her harsh treatment, Sîdewale suggested to her companion in misfortune that they kill their master and escape. The man was at first unwilling, but she assured him that she knew the route southward. The conspirators awaited their opportunity which came when their master went halibut fishing, accompanied only by his two slaves. One evening Sîdewale cooked a large meal for him which made him drowsy as he sat by the fire; then she stole behind him, picked up an axe, and killed him by hitting him over the head. The two murderers carefully scraped up all the blood, tied stones to the corpse, and sank it in deep water so that their master's friends would believe that he had been drowned with his slaves. Then the two, having stolen a canoe, paddled off, hiding by day, and subsisting on what shell-fish they could gather. After many perils they reached Bella Bella, whence Sîdewale returned home.

She had been carried off as a mere girl, but was past the age of child-bearing when she returned and had almost forgotten her native language. The Bella Coola were keenly interested in the tale of her adventures, and especially in the way that slaves were buried in Alaska. It was assumed that some of their own captives must have been killed in that way, or a slave from the far north was crushed in revenge. It is said that this custom was common among the northern tribes from whom the Bella Coola adopted several practices, although this particular one was carried out but once.

B
[646]
[177]

The most famous Kitkatla chief, and the one most dreaded by the Bella Coola, was Tsîkos, who is said to have had almost despotic powers over his northern warriors. The name itself was transmitted from one holder to another, but the name

B
648
721
T 622
648
721

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 ellacoola NE6
Simshian NE15
Bella bella NE5

B 648
721
T 622
648
721

celebrated Tsilcoz was he who held sway between 1850 and 1870, a man of almost gigantic proportions of tremendous physical strength, and endowed with force of character and initiative as well. Pitted against him, the Kimsquit people suffered even more than before; there were few direct assaults, but Kitkatla canoes seemed always to be lurking in the vicinity, ready to kill or enslave heedless fishermen or those travelling between Kimsquit and Bella Coola or Tsio. Friends of the victims repeatedly discussed counter-measures, but lack of leadership prevented them from coming to a decision for several years.

B
648
721

One winter, about the middle of the last century,[1] the Kimsquit determined to take the offensive in May. This act was discussed both at Bella Coola and Tsio, as Kwaqa'a the leading chief, Nazmk'a, gave his support and many men whose relatives had been killed or enslaved promised to join the Kimsquit raiders. Among here who took part in the conference was a certain Ka-qaw'a, an influential Bella Bella chief who happened to be visiting relatives in Kwaqa at the time. It was decided that the rendezvous should be Qalmaitx, Labouchere Channel.

B
[70]

During the spring those who planned to support in the expedition busied themselves with their preparations. None knew how large would be the force, since as usual, everyone of his own discretion whether or not to join in, some did so to avenge wrongs to their relatives, some merely to display martial ability, whereas here declined to repay their wrongs. At last the appointed date approached, and some fifty canoes, each containing crews to thirty men, gathered at the appointed place.[2] Thence they set out and encamped for a few nights at Scotch River, Kwaqa, near Bella Bella. Ka-qaw'a became aware of meeting and the route that would be followed, so sent word to Inda to hunt deer at the spot, though, not wishing to overtake some the raiders, he did not hold them when they were likely to find. The canoeists assembled upon the rendezvous, without being observed, returned home to report what they had seen. Ka-qaw'a had intended join the party, so he now set out in a small canoe with the two as pilots, after warning them that they must say nothing on home of his movements. His war equipment consisted of a weather and two plaited-cloth boards with small

B
648
721
[72]
B [71]
[77]

[1] The approximate date was judged from the fact that the old man who told of the expedition in 1922 said that his father was about 1 years of age at the time.
[2] The strength of the expedition was probably exaggerated.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bellabella NE5

divisions, each containing a loaded and measured charge; these were novelties recently obtained in trade from the white man and considered very valuable. On reaching the place where the Bella Coola canoes were drawn up, Lo-qua-t called out four times:

"Nuxmăt-a, are you there?"

On being answered in the affirmative, Lo-qua-t leapt ashore, sent back his own canoe, and definitely joined the expedition.

The Bella Bella chief gave Nuxmăt-a one of the prized paletto-shaped boards, and the recipient repaid this overwhelming generosity with the gift of a marten-skin coat which he was wearing. A Kitselas chief likewise gave Lo-qua-t a valuable blanket-coat. As usual, the war-party was suffering from lack of leadership. Lo-qua-t, a properly validated warrior, was a man who had given many potlatches, and though not a Bella Coola, was related to them by blood; in addition, he alone knew the route to Kitkatla, so he virtually assumed command, although many of the Bella Coola were unwilling followers. Lo-qua-t suggested an immediate move, and gained his point owing to the fact that no one had a definite counter-suggestion. After travelling seven miles in the darkness, Lo-qua-t massed the canoes to address his ill-disciplined and somewhat uncertain force. He pointed out that the way to Kitkatla was long and difficult and that it would be dangerous to attack their northern foe-men, but that the Wa-ya'-a[1] near at hand would be an easy prey. The Bella Coola had no quarrel with these people, and were reluctant to attack them, especially as there had been inter-marriage between the two tribes. Lo-qua-t spoke bluntly, saying that the Wa-ya'-a had mocked him in their potlatches, and that many of their women, gathering sea-weed on lonely beaches at this season, would be easy victims. His arguments were given strength by the fact that he was a nuxmăt chief and warrior; no one dared to stand against him, so it was decided to follow his wishes, though the Bella Coola stipulated that none of the Wa-ya'-a were to be killed.

The flotilla continued and in the early dawn raided a small Wa-ya'-a settlement and captured several slaves. Continuing their journey, they took prisoner a number of women who were gathering sea-weed, and destroyed the supplies which had been stored up. Lo-qua-t had joined the expedition merely in hope of getting revenge upon the Wa-ya'-a; now that this end was accomplished, he was willing and eager to return home, but uncertain how to leave his followers.

With this in view, Lo-qua-t suggested an attack on a China Hat settlement, adding that he knew where some of their frames[2] used in Cannibal dances were stored, and that the China Hat people were too arrogant

[1] Probably one of the Bella Bella-speaking groups.
[2] Such as were covered with sewn to represent human bodies.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bellabella NE5
Tsimshian NE15

in their ceremonies. Again the Bella Coola were unwilling, but again their unformulated and uncertain wishes were overruled by the dominant chief, and the assault was made. The frames were stored in an unguarded shelter near the cemetery, into which the raiders broke, smashed them, and threw the debris into the water. While this was taking place, a Wa-yal-a canoe rounded a point, and Lo-gua-i took the opportunity to jump aboard, saying that he was escaping from a Bella Coola raiding-party. The canoe paddled away and the expedition was left leaderless. The usual discussion took place about what was to be done, but finally the raiders returned home. They had been diverted from their original objective, had been led to attack a friendly tribe, had been deserted by their leader, and the only spoils of the long-prepared expedition were a few slaves.

Among the prisoners were two daughters of a certain Glowa, who was hated because he had frequently been in partnership with Tsakoa. A few days after the return of the expedition, the father appeared to ransom his children. Some of the Bella Coola wanted to kill him, others demurred, and it was finally decided that a spear, fastened to a line, should be hurled against his canoe so that it would project outwards and lodge against an obstacle under, capsizing the craft and drowning the occupant. The spear was thrown, but clever handling prevented the intended disaster. Glowa was a validated warrior, one who never showed fear, so he calmly pulled out the missile and again paddled upstream. This time the Bella Coola fired shots close to either side of his head, but he sat unmoved and unwound amid his boxes of presents. Finally, a Bella Coola tried to wrench off a tuft of hair from above one ear, but though he pulled with all his force, he did not succeed, and everyone on shore laughed at him. This restored good humour, and Glowa was allowed to land and ransom his daughters. When he left for home he was told to send his friends if they wished the return of their relatives. This was done and peace followed; if Glowa had waited a few days until the excitement of victory had cooled, he would have been able to land without molestation. The only other result of the expedition was that the Chiton Hot Sakaxoe killed their own Cannibals for having allowed their frameworks to be captured.

After this fiasco, the Kitkatla became even bolder and many years elapsed before another expedition was sent against them. This time, there was no Bella Bella chief to interfere with the arrangements and after the place had been discussed for a winter, a flotilla from Bella Coola, Kimsquit and Tsi'ts took the water one day in May.

Nothing of importance took place until, near Kitkatla, a canoe was captured containing a man and his wife. The former's face was marked with a vertical scar, and it was remembered that, four years earlier, when Tsakoa had been attacking Kimsquit, one of the defenders had shot an

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15

B 754 the body to his own house, preparatory to burying it. It was April, but [796] as they were waiting, a violent thunderstorm blew up from the east, the only time that such had ever occurred at that season. Thunder had promised to come to Xwalt's aid, but the latter had died too suddenly to make any appeal; the supernatural one had just learnt of his protégé's death and had come rushing to his assistance. Realizing the
B [719] danger, the executioner and his friends hastily buried the corpse, throwing over it a number of blood-stained cloths, and finally stamping down the earth. There was a furious hurricane; trees were uprooted, houses shook, the earth over the grave swirled as if in a whirlpool and chunks of it
B [784] were carried up into the air. Only the potency of the blood on the cloths prevented the return to life of Xwalt.[1]

This second unsuccessful attack on the Kitkatla so disheartened the
B Bella Coola that they made no more raids on their northern foemen who,
T flushed with victory, became even bolder than before. As usual, the 448 Kimsquit and Tal'ts people suffered more than the inhabitants of the main valley. On one of these forays, about 1835, the Kitkatla killed [721] Bakwalisal, a brother of Pathe, the leading chief of the Bella Coola at the [722] time. This was contrary to all the rules of warfare since he was a member
[622] of one of the leading families and the donor of many potlatches, a man whose name was as well known as that of Pathe, Nakkjaxlem of Fort Rupert, or Tsakoe himself. The fame of such chiefs was enough to protect them except during the actual heat of conflict, and the Bella Coola were justly angry.

B A few years later a single canoe came paddling up North Bentinck
T Arm and was hailed about half a mile from the beach. Scouts investi-
448 gated, and returned to Kimsquit with news that the occupants were 728 Kitkatla, and that Tsakoe himself was among them. At once there was heated discussion among the people of the lower valley. Many who had
B close relations in the preceding struggle wished to wipe out the party,
T others, to see what they wanted. A few daring individuals shouted [724] through the forest and fired on the visitors at long range; they were unscathed, not with bullets, but by the four cinnamon-bedding shell of a mouse-skin, a sign of friendly intentions. If the strangers had fired on the scouts, a fight would have ensued, but this powerful suspicion discovered suspicion.

B [787]

[1] This tale is a curious illustration of the manner in which supernatural elements become woven into accounts which have an historical basis. It is to be assumed that the southerners were in a suspicious state owing to privation, and readily believed that supernatural powers must have assisted them. Xwalt was found on a mission, and probably boasted of a visitation from Thunder during his own damage. This was accepted and the incorporation of supernatural incidents followed as the course.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1947
Nuxalk Bellacoola NEIS
Tsimshian NEIS

B T 648 728

killed, his reputation would only be increased by the manner of his death. At length Ne-mokai fired into the air; not until a shower of eagle down was blown forth did anyone realize that his musket had been loaded with nothing more deadly. This marked the establishment of friendly relations.

B T 639 431

The Kitkatla had brought their own singers, who now began to beat out time for Tsibou to perform a scout dance. He was followed by several other chiefs, and then the strangers gave presents to influential Bella Coola on the most lavish scale. Pielo likewise performed a scout dance, and bestowed gifts on the guests to validate it; such were, of course, not returnable. A meal was then served, and after that Tsibou made a speech of which the gist was that the Bella Coola had previously known his achievements as a warrior, they now know his nobility and bravery in risking his life, and that the name Tsibou could never be forgotten, irrespective of his own fate.

Tsibou left soon afterwards. It was somewhat difficult fully to comprehend his motive in thus risking his life. Undoubtedly his main object was to display his valour and disregard of danger. Moreover, it gave him an opportunity to impress these qualities upon the Bella Coola, and thus to exhibit his prowess actually within the enemy's camp, which must have been a source of tremendous gratification to him. The alleged motive, rapor to killing a chief, may have been a contributory factor.

B T 648 552 576 [72]

Although this visit was an intimation from Tsibou that the Bella Coola need have no further fear of him, the suspicions of years could not be immediately allayed; in fact, an occasional skirmish still took place although Tsibou himself refrained from fighting. A few years after his visit to Bella Coola, Pielo prepared to give a potlatch to which he determined to invite the northern chief. Many of the Bella Coola doubted whether the Kitkatla warriors would respect the safe-conduct usually afforded to envoys, and no one was anxious to bear the invitation. At length six chiefs volunteered for the task and set out, though with many misgivings. They stopped en route at Bella Bella where a chief of that tribe, Gaspa, joined the party; he thought that he would have influence with the Kitkatla and might add prominence to the Bella Coola. Fearing to be seen by any small Kitkatla bands, the delegation travelled only by night until they could actually reach Tsibou's village. As they approached it, they indicated their mission by singing one of Pielo's scout songs. On hearing this, Tsibou asked one of his Bella Coola slaves whose song it might be, and when he answered that it was one of Pielo's, Tsibou dispatched a chief, Eaiton, to invite the guests to his house. Gaspa was doubtful when he saw this man approaching, since he felt that it heralded a friendly welcome. The party was conducted to Tsibou's

[i.e. to the peace negotiations - Analyst]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA ●
Tsimshian NE15

B
T 648
552 574

dwelling in spite of the fact that a Cannibal dance was taking place there. All the messengers were Bella Coola, while there had Bella Bella rights as well; Tsakoe allowed the latter to take part in the ceremony while the former were treated as uninvited. They were greatly concerned in the details of the Kitkatla rites, which were exceedingly strict and included the eating of a corpse. At the conclusion, the envoys received their share of the small presents which were distributed.

At this juncture one of the envoys, Xwaxwaiakala, fell seriously ill and was cured only through the attention and care of one of Tsakoe's wives. This delayed their departure so that it was a long time before they and the invited guests finally set out, much to the envy of two Bella Coola slaves who greatly desired to return home.

Meanwhile the long absence of the messengers had filled the Bella Coola with fear that they had been massacred, and there was great rejoicing when a large flotilla was seen approaching. The guests landed on the shore at Qwaqa to where the customary ceremonious greetings were exchanged. Many of the Bella Coola, influenced by ancient wrongs, endeavored to break the canoes of the guests and in other ways to threaten them, but Paiko finally succeeded in recovering them and establishing some kind of discipline. The ceremony that took place that night in the house of Paiko is said to have been the most spectacular ever witnessed in Bella Coola. One old man who, as a mere lad, had attended, grew eloquent as he spoke of the lavish display. Unfortunately, he had had no part in the rites and could remember none of the details except that his childish mind was amazed at a dance in which a masked performer, representing a whale, vomited grease on the fire to give light. Tsakoe did not return home immediately, but remained in Bella Coola until spring when the weather was more suitable for travelling.

B
T
648
P21

This exchange of hospitality usually ended all hostilities, although the Bella Coola and other tribes of the central coast still regard their northern neighbours with dislike and suspicion. Between 1880 and 1890 a party of Rivers Inlet people went to Kitkata to prepare chicken grease, for which purpose a number of Kitkatla had also camped there. Among them was Tsakoe, a descendant of the warrior chief whose exploits have been mentioned, and his nephew. One day the latter was gambling with Mamaq, a Rivers Inlet youth who had recently been initiated into the Hamatsa society and was consequently decorated with a cedar-bark collar. Mamaq's back was smarting and some of the Kitkatla's friends asked him why he continued to play with a man who was clearly in such close contact with the supernatural that he could not lose. Shrdless of this advice, Tsakoe's nephew continued until finally, losing his temper, he

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15

B
T 648
721

seized his adversary's decorations and threw them on the ground. It is well known that anyone who does so, even if it be the wearer, will be punished. Matsw-a was prevented from fighting by his recent initiation, but he shamed his opponent by returning his winnings. The next day the Rivers Inlet people left for home without stopping to collect grease, since Matsw-a's father, Pathe,[1] thought that it would be dangerous to linger in the neighbourhood of Trahoa, who was angry at his nephew's defeat and the insult shown to him.

The Kitkatla remained at Kitlobe for the olachen season and then returned home. Soon afterwards Trahoa's nephew fell ill, and died in spite of the efforts of the most powerful shamans. They attributed his death to Matsw-a, and Trahoa swore revenge on the Rivers Inlet people. The latter, hearing of this, avoided the Kitkatla as much as possible, although the establishment of British rule had made open warfare impossible.

One July, a number of years later, a party left Rivers Inlet to hunt sea-lions on Virgin Rocks. The captain of the canoe was a Newitti man who had married a Rivers Inlet woman, and with him were nine Bella Coola and several Rivers Inlet people including two female relatives of Matsw-a. In a heavy fog they passed their destination, and when, having realized their mistake, they turned back, they found a party of Kitkatla encamped on the rocks. The northerners made protestations of friendship and lent them tents. When they had settled down, the Kitkatla suggested target shooting as a recreation, although their real motive was to exhaust the ammunition of the Rivers Inlet people. When this sport began to pall, the two parties gambled till nightfall, when they stacked their muskets together as proof of mutual trust and went to bed. A Kitkatla half-breed, who had taken the lead in making amicable overtures, now learnt that his companions planned to slay the Rivers Inlet people; he tried to dissuade them, but was told that interference from him would only cause his own death. One of the Rivers Inlet men, Ts'ukkiz, suspicious of treachery, declined to sleep with his fellows and spent the night in the canoe, his musket and two shells beside him. His fears were well-founded; at dawn the Kitkatla cut down the tents of the Rivers Inlet people and clubbed them to death with axes as they were struggling under the folds. Ts'ukkiz was wakened by the turmoil and fired twice, each time killing a Kitkatla, but his ammunition was then exhausted and he was shot down. The murderers dug a large hole on the beach, threw in the corpses of their victims and rolled a heavy log over the top. Unknown to the others, the half-breed wrote on this in English that something lay below. The Kitkatla made no effort to hide the

[1] The relatives of the Bella Coola chief with the same name.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15

B
T 648
921

marks of the tragedy and then returned home, hoping that suspicion would not fall on them.

As time went on, the people in Rivers Inlet began to worry at lack of news from the hunters. A passing traveller reported having seen smoke on Virgin Rocks, and this reassured them temporarily, but when several months had passed a search-party was sent out. One of the crew was a Carrier who had married a Rivers Inlet woman and had long resided there, but had not forgotten his knowledge of all that pertained to woodcraft. On arrival at the island, they found the canoe of the missing party drawn up on the beach above high tide, although there was no trace of their friends. The Carrier went ahead to investigate, warning his comrades to remain at a distance. He found the marks of buck-shot, smoothed over as if to obliterate them, but not sufficiently effaced to hide them from his sharp eyes. This attempt at concealment indicated foul play, and the Carrier called his companions and pointed out the signs to them. None of the sea-lion hunters had carried ammunition of this kind, but it was known that some Kitkatla had been in the vicinity about the time of the disappearance and were armed therewith. As a matter of fact, the marks were actually those of the shot with which Ga'ahlis had been killed. The Carrier next found potato peelings, trodden into the earth by boots; none of the hunters had taken foot-wear with them, but it was known that such had been worn by the Kitkatla. Having made these discoveries, the search-party returned home. Foul play was suspected; everything indicated that it did not have a struggle between members of the same party, but there was too little evidence to convict the Kitkatla.

A few weeks later a Bella Bella chief happened to be in Rivers Inlet and told the people that he had met a Kitkatla canoe returning northwards with two coffins. He had asked who were dead, but though they told him, he judged that the party had been engaged in some illegal operation from their reticence concerning the cause of death. Still later, a young Bella Coola travelled to Vancouver on the steamboat with a Kitkatla who told him of the slaughter, ignorant of his confidant's tribe. Finally, the Kitkatla half-breed, who had opposed the killing, began to drop hints of what had happened. In former times this would have led to war, but the evidence was not conclusive enough for a court of justice. The Kitkatla informed their Indian Agent that they feared an attack from the Rivers Inlet and Bella Coola, and asked him to lead a peace delegation to the former's village. He did so,[*] much to the surprise of the missionary established there. The conference led to nothing; the Kitkatla denied all knowledge of the fate of the missing hunters, but the suspicions of the Rivers Inlet and Bella Coola were increased rather than

[*]No attempt was made to verify this statement from official documents.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES
Tsimshian NE15
Kwakiutl NE10

B T 641 721

lessened. This ill-will has continued up to the present time. In 1920 word reached Bella Coola that Tsakus had approached a Quatsino chief and asked him to spread the rumour that the missing party had been drowned at sea, at the same time admitting what had taken place. A year later a half-breed Kwatsino, hunting on Virgin Rocks, happened to unearth the bones buried beneath the log. There the matter rests for the moment so far as the Bella Coola are concerned, but they express the opinion that the continued ill-will may cause bloodshed at any time.

It must be remembered that the above account of this recent friction with the Kitkatla is of a partisan nature. No attempt was made to learn the Kitkatla side of the matter, so that the version here given may or may not be the truth. It has been inserted as an illustration of Bella Coola attitude, and of the manner in which, formerly, doubts, fears and suspicions led to war. This would certainly have been the case in the present instance but for the restraining influence of the white man's rule.

KWAKIUTL WAR

B K 641 721 K [522]

Only slightly less feared than the Kitkatla were the Kwakiutl-speaking peoples, especially those inhabiting Knight's Inlet, Kingcome Inlet, and Blunder Harbour, who were known collectively as Djelikum. As Tsakus was feared among the northern raiders, so was Sisiutl among the southerners. Bella Coola itself was too difficult of access and too densely populated to be successfully attacked, but Tal'o was subject to constant raids. Even more disconcerting was the constant danger of lurking foemen; one year it would be a hunter who was surprised and killed, the next a party of women would be carried off while picking berries.

B [712]

The raiders became so bold that the inhabitants of one of the Tal'o villages decided to defend themselves by building a stockade. Everyone assisted in the task, so that the fortification was soon completed. It consisted of a fence of vertical logs with a platform running around near the top, on the inner side, on which the defenders could stand, and a water-gate through which canoes could enter at high tide. It surrounded five or six houses and was planned as a place of refuge for all the Tal'o villages. One of the tree-trunks brought for the stockade was hollow, and there was considerable discussion as to whether it should be used, but finally it was set up with the others. A Kwakiutl who was visiting Tal'o at the time took notice of this weakness, but no one seems to have suspected that he would inform his friends of it when he went home.

B K [724]

The summer after the stockade had been completed the Kwakiutl discussed the usual raid on Tal'o; one of the principal chiefs opposed an expedition on the ground of the reported strength of the defences, but

[a famous Tsimshian chief - ANALYST]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEb Bellacoola NEb
KwaKiutl NE10

B K 648 726 [721]

he was over-ruled by the popular wish and the raiders set out. They had chosen an opportune time, since most of the people were absent hunting and fishing; in fact, three men and three children were the sole occupants of the fortified village. They saw the approaching marauders in the distance, closed all openings, and prepared to defend themselves. The Kwakiutl felled a large tree and with this as ram attempted to batter down the gate. It was too strongly built, and while struggling with it, the attackers offered excellent targets to those within. One of them, Iwang, was a good shot and took heavy toll. Convinced that the gate was too strong for them, the Kwakiutl turned their attention to the hollow log; their ram failed to shatter it and they again suffered heavy casualties. Nor had the defenders escaped scotheless. One of the three was struck by an enemy bullet, another fell from the fighting-platform and accidentally shot himself, while Iwang's powder began to fail. Fearing that all was lost, he told one of the little boys to open a concealed rear door* and flee into the woods with the two smaller children. The three managed to escape unobserved from the village and hid themselves under leaves. The Kwakiutl did not know how weakly the stockade was defended, and Iwang disguised the fact by rushing from one part of the platform to another and calling out in various tones as if a number of people were speaking. He could fire only occasionally on account of shortage of powder, but the ruse was effective and at last the raiders withdrew, carrying their dead with them. Two of them wandered into the forest instead of accompanying their comrades; they must have died of starvation, since their corpses were found in an emaciated condition several weeks later.

B K 648 727

Not content with defeating the raiders almost single-handed, Iwang embarked in a small canoe and cautiously followed the course which he knew they must have taken. His children had been slain by the Kwakiutl during a previous raid, a circumstance which had so embittered him that he regretted the escape of a single one of them, and was determined to treat even their dead with ignominy. At length he noticed a number of crows congregated on a sandy beach, and rightly judged that this indicated the spot where the vanquished had buried their slain. Iwang exhumed one of the corpses and impaled it on a stake in a crouching position.

K 727

Meanwhile the relatives of the raiders, expecting the usual easy success, had gathered near their leader's house. They were filled with apprehension when they heard a mourning song from the returning canoe, and anxiously called out to learn the fate of different members

*Probably a mere chink in the stockade.

2; McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Kwakiutl NE10

K 727

of the expedition. Some were able to answer for themselves, but to many queries the reply came that the one asked about had been slain.

B K 921 648

This defeat did not by any means discourage the Kwakiutl, whose forays continued as before. On one occasion, as they were returning homewards, they noticed several canoes drawn up on the west side of South Bentinck Arm, not far from its junction with Burke Channel. The raiders cautiously landed and stalked the unsuspecting owners, Bella Coola who had landed to cut stakes for a salmon-weir. The Kwakiutl bore down upon them with a rush; unarmed and taken unaware, the Bella Coola could make no real resistance. One of them managed to flee into the deeper woods, but the rest were either killed or captured. Among the prisoners was a chief, Sunk'luxam, who was wearing a handsome marten-skin cloak at the time. His captor promptly appropriated this, leaving the man naked.

K B 648 727

Elated at this success, the Kwakiutl continued their return journey. When near Kwatna, they encountered a fierce southeast gale which made progress impossible; at this point cliffs rise so precipitously on either side of Burke Channel that there is not even the semblance of a harbour, and the only chance to weather the storm was by anchoring. There was considerable anxiety as to whether or not the weight would hold, but it did so, and the canoe remained tied, now carried to the full extent of the mooring-rope almost against the cliffs, now to the same distance far out in mid-channel. Towards night it began to rain and the cold grew bitter. The crew, assured that the anchor would hold and weary from their exertions, went to sleep, as did most of the prisoners. Sunk'luxam, without covering of any kind, was too uncomfortable to follow their example. As the canoe was tossed near the cliff, he happened to notice a narrow ledge just above water, with a small cedar growing in a nearby cleft. Here was a possibility of escape and the chief became alert at once. When next the canoe was dashed near he examined the cliff more closely, and decided that it might be possible to scale it. At any rate death was better than captivity, and he determined to make the venture. As the craft came shorewards again, he plunged overboard into the rough water and succeeded in grasping the tree-root with the aid of which it was an easy matter to pull himself to the ledge. The surf was breaking over it and he was bitterly cold, but he managed to reach another root and to scramble up to a second ledge. From it he gained a wider projection where he could rest in comfort. His escape had been unobserved, and as Sunk'luxam looked downward he could see the canoe tossing to and fro at the end of the cable; there was a large boulder near him, and he thought of tipping this over to sink the craft, but refrained out of consideration for the prisoners. From this point the climb upwards was comparatively simple,

B 727

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Kwakiutl NE10

B K 641 726

of Kwatna, a woman called down to them from the upper slopes of the mountains on the south-east. She was one of a party of Kwatna people who were picking berries; their canoes were lying in a bay beneath, where the youths of the party were resting and sleeping, ready to climb up and carry down the boxes of berries as the women filled them. Bilwalakt, the woman who had called out, had done so under the impression that those passing were Bella Coola, and though one of her companions recognized her error and bade her be silent, the intimation had been given. The raiders would have passed in mid-channel unaware that anyone was in the vicinity, but now they quickly entered the bay and slew the few lads who were with the canoes. Next they endeavoured to capture the women and started climbing up for the purpose, but as soon as they entered the woods, they lost sight of the fugitives who were on the open slopes above. One of the canoes was paddled back to mid-channel, whence there was a clear view so that the crew could call out and direct their comrades' pursuit. Two of the women had started climbing as soon as they saw the warriors turn inwards; they escaped over the mountains and reached Kwatna with word of the affray. With one exception, the others kept together and sought refuge in a narrow cave, the entrance of which they were able to defend; the attackers did not dare linger for a siege, so they too escaped. But Bilwalakt, the cause of the whole disaster, was cut off from her companions and harried from place to place as she strove frantically to get away. When finally brought to bay, she struggled furiously and refused to be taken alive, so her throat was cut and the body decapitated. She was a member of a chief's family, a woman who had been confirmed on a good seat, so the murder was entirely contrary to all coastal customs. If she had been taken prisoner, she would have been ransomed and the matter would have ended, but her death demanded revenge.

B K [727] [721]

When the two women who had fled overland reached Kwatna, a party of warriors set out immediately, but could do no more than bring back the women who had hidden in the cave. Meanwhile the Kwakiutl continued their voyage and encamped at Jacobson's Bay where they watched a Bella Bella canoe pass up the channel towards Bella Coola. They concluded that the Kimsquit people, whose canoes they had destroyed, would hail this passing craft and thus reach Bella Coola with news of raiders in the vicinity. So it transpired, while almost simultaneously came news from Kwatna of the woman's murder, but by this time the Kwakiutl had reached home waters.

B 721

Bilwalakt's parents had been Kwatna people, her husband was a Bella Bella, and she had Bella Coola ancestry as well, so the members of these three tribes were all affronted by this killing of a chief. At Bella

2:McDowell: E-5 (1922-1924) 1968
NEA DeGuerrola NEA

Coola the important men of Land, Tomad, and Sighted met at Sengo and discussed the matter secretly. Parko was the leading Sulu Coola chief at the time, but he alone did not attend the meeting at which all the others were present, though he sent a man to search a crowdhouse owned by the murdered woman on the south side of the mouth of Sulu Coola River, near the former Hudson's Bay Company's post. Rokwalski had a large amount of ammunition stored within, and this was brought to the house of Parko. Next morning, the chief himself appeared, his face smeared with ochre and his hair tied in a top-knot with a wound skein. This is done by anyone who has killed a man, and it was a clear intimation that Parko had decided on war. He seated himself in the doorway of his house, a cocked musket in either hand, and intimated that he would shoot anyone who passed on the sidewalk before him. For four days he sat there, neither speaking nor eating: he was starved, as no one disregarded his wishes and the inmates even of his own house used the refuse holes for egress during that period. No other case is known of such an action, but Parko could do as he liked, and he manifested his grief and determination in this spectacular manner. On the fifth day, he ordered drums to be beaten, and the inhabitants of the adjacent villages gathered; Parko wasted no words.

"Rokwalski has been murdered," he said. "He was a chief and my relative.* I am going to war. We shall use his own powder and shot."

The ammunition was distributed and the Sulu Coola prepared for the expedition.

Owing to the prestige of Parko, volunteers came swarming in, not only from Sulu Coola itself, but from Kimapuit and Tiri as well. No one was thoroughly acquainted with the geography of the Kwakiutl territory except a slave named, like the Kwakiutl warrior chief, Sisaxi, though not, however, related to him. This man had lived among the Sulu Coola for so long that he was thought reliable; he readily agreed to act as guide, only asking that his old mother be spared, a request which was granted.

After the usual delays, the expedition set out and spent the first night at Kwatsa. Next morning, Kwakiutl, one of the leading warriors, tied his hair into a top-knot and smeared his face with ochre. He was a man whose bravery had been freely established by the distribution of valuable presents. To show his valour, he stood up on the bench within easy musket range and called out:

"Please fire at my top-knot. If you hit it and make it fall, we will we lay low our foes."

---

* It is doubtful whether she was a kinswoman, but Parko used the term figuratively in speaking of one who, like himself, was a person of importance.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

D. McIntosh E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB
Carrier NE?

WAR WITH THE CARRIERS

The only other people with whom the Bella Coola came into frequent conflict were the Carriers. Some of the latter used to spend the winter among the coastal tribes, and had even intermarried with them to a considerable extent, but their mode of life was so different that they were always viewed as foreign in thought and outlook. The Bella Coola despised them for their dirtiness, their fondness for unnecessary food, and, above all, for their ignorance of hsaiat and nuxnit matters. This disunion was carried and not infrequently led to bloodshed. Owing to the location of the Carriers, they could not be reached by canoes, and the Bella Coola had no liking for long overland journeys. The mobility and relative lack of permanent villages made it difficult to bring the Carriers to bay, so that conflicts between them and the Bella Coola usually took the form of a killing followed by a raid for revenge; continued hostility was virtually unknown. The people of the lower villages were centrally affected, but in former times there seems to have been a considerable amount of intermittent fighting between the inhabitants of the upper valley and the Carriers living east of them.

The following account, claimed to be historical, describes what was said to be a typical raid, followed by a counter-attack.

On one occasion all the young people of Lowi, Nuhlit, Kuta-ne-i, and Nuxlit went on a picnic to a large, clear town of ground up the valley, where they spent their time, playing and singing. Towards eighteen two young men, who had not come with the others, were seen continually until they could tell what who was a friend of one of the two. She dipped off quietly from her companions and passed the night with her lover and his comrade in the woods. Towards dawn a party of marauding Carrier Indians stealthily knew on the sleeping participants who, unarmed and unprepared, could take no resistance. With the exception of two young girls, carried off to slavery, all were slain. The three who had been in the woods hurried back to the villages with the news.

The men of the four towns prepared for action. They went to the place quietly and brought back the corpses for burial, then hurrying for

[illegible] E-5 ([illegible]) [illegible]
[illegible]
Carrier NET

the first time that two girls were missing. Then they set forth on the track of the Carriers. The raiders, knowing that their assault could not have been heard in any village, and ignorant of the three young people hidden in the woods, took no precautions. The first night the pursuers reached the camp where the Carriers had built a long, narrow fire of some kind of wood which emitted no sparks, on either side of which they had placed a long tree-trunk on which to rest their feet as they dried their moccasins at the fire. One of the Bella Coola girls was placed next one end of the fire, the other at the other end on the opposite side. Neither could sleep, but kept watching silently in the hope of being able to escape. Towards dawn one of them was conscious of an a Bella Coola scout peering around a tree-trunk. He motioned her to keep silent and she nodded to show that she understood his signal, then he went away. He told his waiting companions how the Carriers were resting with their feet over logs beside the fire, and suggested that they prepare heavy clubs. Having done this, the Bella Coola crept up behind the dreaming enemy. Each selected a victim and broke his leg, or legs, with a crack of the club. Not one of the victims escaped, the cripples being killed without difficulty. In some manner this event was made the theme of a scout song.

The following unusual incident is probably historically correct, in outline at least, since it is said to have taken place about 1880, and two of the participants were grandsons of the man from whom the account was obtained.

One October a number of Carriers were crossing at Pitsakin. There had was a certain Qwatlum who was recently related to the people of that village, though he had long since ceased to be regarded as anything but a Carrier. The river was running full and though there were many eddies and dog eddies in it, they were difficult to catch on account of the running current. A Pitsakin man, Qwatlum, had laid in an abundant store of fish for the winter, but his last canoe-load was upset, he could not swim, and he was drowned. Qwatlum was a popular man with them was great grief at his untimely death.

As was so often the case, jealousy was rife in Pitsakin, where a certain Hamit had become wealthy. He was a great conjurer, and his relatives had been amassed by contests for making their works, but of course such payments had been made in secret and many people wondered how he had acquired his fortune. This was enough to cause a certain amount of suspicion, and a evil disposition to take advantage of it. This man approached Qwatlum and said that he believed Hamit was responsible [illegible] Mr. Schmidt's death, that he was now the wealthy man was really a [illegible] and had used some evil means to cause the Schmidt's drowning. [illegible] was recently related to the dead man and, thus incited, determined to kill Nuxalk in revenge. That evening, as he was lying playing with his grandchild, the Carver chief secured his bows and drawn a [illegible] against the unsuspecting man's chest. Nuxalk quickly levelled down the muzzle so that the bullet, instead of killing him, merely passed through the fleshy part of his hips. Grandfather made no attempt to run away. He and man's wife with the relatives of the injured man whether or not to take revenge, and they usually avoid beginning a vendetta unless virtually driven to it. Some of the month spent from the valley, and one of Nuxalk's nephews, Tsi-tsaat and Ts'ankang, went up to investigate. They were both men of considerable influence in the community, both relatives matrons who had taken prominent parts in the unprovoked attack on Kitkatla a few years before. Realizing that their uncle was not actually wounded, the two brothers carried him to their canoe, intending to take him home and to disappoint the month.

During this time, the evil Nuxalk men had been working on Grandfather's fears by telling him that Nuxalk was certain to kill him by magical means, until he decided that he could escape only by murdering the wounded man. His followers learn of this and tried to dissuade him, fearing the presence of the two famous warriors. As their canoe was going downstream, it was caught in an eddy and upset so that one member and both carriage boards were lost. This proved to Grandfather the danger to which he had been exposing his foot from the hook and Nuxalk left dead, much to the consternation of his two followers as well as the Nuxalk people.

If Tsi-tsaat and Ts'ankang had been ordinary men they would probably have fled downstream but, being fully validated men of rahen, the matter never occurred to them.[1] Ts'ankang, who had not change left to his mother, consulted his brother as to their course of action.

"Nuxalk is dead," his brother replied. "It is probably time for us to die as well. You had better shoot."

Meanwhile Grandfather had remained on the beach, laughing at the two warriors. Ts'ankang told him to be silent, then fired, instantly killing his uncle's murderer. The Carver began to run to and fro on the shore, whence they could hear the two brothers talking to each other.

"Let us not think of escaping," said one. "We have displayed our distinctive rahen. If we are to die let us die."

[illegible]

[1] The man from whom the account was obtained mentioned as a matter of course that validated matrons could serve two ways, when questioned further he emphasized that the public validation of factors made it utterly impossible for them to do less than avenge.

This account was obtained from a descendant of Tal-kwa and Ogwilkuna who emphatically vouched for its accuracy. Some of the incidents have doubtless been exaggerated, but there is probably a basis of truth, though the passivity of the Wuikalo people is difficult to explain. The killing is said to have taken place about seventy years before 1900, so relatively accurate traditions of it are not impossible. No punishment was meted out to the Wuikalo behavior since the ritual area, the passing of unnoticed outside the house where a ceremony was taking place, was committed by strangers, not by inhabitants of the town itself.

[illegible]

The tribes of the central coast, Bella Coola, Bella Bella, and Rivers Inlet, were frequently engaged with enemies to north or south, but there was seldom serious bloodshed between one another. The following account, however, describes a conflict between the Bella Bella and Rivers Inlet people in which the Bella Coola were not embroiled.

[illegible]

The favorite foods of the Rivers Inlet people are sockeye salmon which have become self-sterilizing and still-running, never without grease. Their neighbors, the Bella Bella, consider both these traits of fish to be disgusting, although they are fond of eye sockets which the Rivers Inlet people regard as filth. As already described, it was not uncommon as protection of the tribe of the town owner for the boys to build up their grease to rancidity. On one occasion the Bella Bella fed a feast with reference to what they considered the objectionable food of their guests. A masked dancer, representing a stranger, entered the house and the host inquired where he came.

"Are you from Fort Rupert?" he asked.

"No."

"From Bella Bella?"

"No."

The dancer gazed to the north as if to indicate the next question.

"Are you from Rivers Inlet?"

"Yes."

"What do you see there?"

Instead of answering verbally, the dancer dove from beneath his cape

he took a sip of water, followed by another ce of dried fish, 726 chewed it four times, and washed it down alive. This was 789 four times repeated so that the provender consisted of four morsels of salmon, each chewed four ti, and four sips of water; it was more important that no mouthful be taken into the mouth than could be swallowed at a single gulp.
During meals, the hero-man passed the c which he had taken from the store to the position holders who ate and drank in the same manner, except that threw with the other side of his mouth, corresponding ate fact that he position on the other side of the cover to the man in the hole. So the food and drink was passed ju to the captain.
If possible, he was required to eat whatever was left, though if there was too much, he threw the remainder over his shoulder into the water. He was also expected to allow whatever water was passed to him, but if there was much he would lie back, his head projecting over the and pour it out over his face so that it fell into the mouth to the food and drink were completely consumed, so it was avoid the enemy would be mouthfuls. If the hero-man had ed to take out enough salmon and water, the captain must none of it, since no second portion could be served.

Each captain took with him a supply 726 cedar-bark which was stored in the hole of cover. During 714 the course of the day, the party would hang the chief decide 824 upon some decoration made by combining ends of the two colours of bark to serve as a distinguishing ch for members of the same canoe. He took care to mark k so he thought would suffice, and the hero-man was the first the symbol.
The second paddler followed, and took to did the same in order of his position in the canoe. If no had been taken, the captain had to wear colours of whatever was left over; if no bride, he had to do without. Having a several cham- 726 ber, the party continued until nightfall, a secluded spot 784 was chosen for camping. Wood was called and fire lit, 792 but no light was ever struck and the men lay around the cold sticks to sleep. Meanwhile, their wives at home were required to be very careful, since a warrior's bandlum playing would cause injury to her husband, and faithlessness, his death. These restrictions were obligatory during the absence of the expedition.

As the party neared the enemy's country, they would conceal the craft under projecting cross by day and travel only at night. When within striking distance, a scouting canoe was sent forward to learn the hostile dispositions, the best means of approach, and so forth. This was usually done at dusk, and when the scouts had returned, the party would steal quietly through the forest and hide behind the unsuspecting village. At dawn the leader would give the signal, and the attackers would rush forward with a fierce shout, killing all the men and seizing women and children as slaves. When captives were taken by slave members of the expedition, they belonged to the leader's master. The victors would cut off the heads of their victims, seize what loot they could, set fire to the village and rush home before support could arrive from neighbouring towns. At first, the slaughter was usually a somewhat unpleasant task, but as the warriors became inflamed with the heat of battle, they began to delight in killing, and even women and children frequently suffered.

The exulting victors sped homewards, rejoicing at their success but somewhat fearful that they might be cut off by overwhelming reinforcements. During the journey, each warrior who had taken a head removed the scalp by cutting the skin around the tonsure close above the eyebrows and ears. These trophies were washed at the rock Skalcomsum on the forel below Bella Coola. When within sight of home, the captain stood up in the canoe and sang again his war song, a symbol of victory as the bloody scalps were held aloft. Women and children would rush forth to greet the conquerors who landed amid scenes of wild enthusiasm and rejoicing.

Prisoners of war became the property of those who had taken them, with the exception of those captured by slaves.

[illegible] (cont.)

[illegible] 824

[illegible] 773

[illegible] 825

[illegible]

[illegible] 773

[illegible] 774

[illegible] 825

[illegible]

[illegible] 773

[illegible] 774

[illegible] 825

[illegible]

[illegible]

place where he is not likely to be disturbed, and addresses the supreme god in a loud tone of voice, requesting his assistance.

Although prayers can be said at any time of the day, or at any season of the year, there are occasions when they are more potent than at other times. At dawn, for example, a wise young man is accustomed to go alone to the river to wash and pray. He enters the icy water, blows mucus over his hands, and rubs his body vigorously* either with a smooth pebble, or, if it can be obtained, with a stone taken from the stomach of a sea-lion.* As he scours himself, he asks Mondhati to grant him long life, power, success, and strength. On coming from the water, he repeats his request, and then washes himself again. This process is repeated four times, making eight prayers in all. A young man who does this habitually, and in other ways observes the supreme deity, is likely to have success, and may even be given supernatural assistance by one of the many anthropomorphic or zoomorphic creatures. The underlying belief is that Mondhati actually hears the words spoken and, almost thereby, aids the petitioner either directly, or by strengthening the supernatural elements in his body.

Mondhati has power over both rain and dry weather, and is petitioned for whichever is desired. When the sun is obscured by rain clouds, the Bella Coola pray:

"Please clean your face, Mondhati," or,

"Please show us your face, we need you."

Before a man starts on a journey, either by canoe or on foot, he always asks help for his undertaking.

"Mondhati," he prays, "Be with me," or "Go before me," or, "Give me what I want."

Corresponding to the importance of the occasion, prayers are always made before the departure of a hunting or war

---

* When one bathes and he rubbing both his body and clothing. It was believed to be application of deer urine, and undoubtedly had a religious significance, taking, holding, and to Mondhati we are indebted and [illegible]

* The Bella Coola also has stones on which found in the stomach of sea-lions. The stones, considered of great value, are very, it was [illegible] a [illegible] the [illegible] party. Canoes always start some other down, and each member of the expedition is careful to pray before leaving, and also to avoid using to cure food should in any way interfere with the success of the venture. Before reaching their destination, a chief in each canoe dozes from a pouch some eagle down brought for the purpose, holds it before his mouth, and blows a little towards each of the four cardinal points, at the same time asking Manitou to smile on the enterprise and grant a safe return. This does not guarantee success, but it is felt that any disaster which may occur would have been more serious if assistance had not been thus requested.

Although Algonkins, under the name of Manitou, is the one to whom prayers are most often addressed, petitions are sometimes made to other beings. In the beginning of time, when Raven had superhumanly power, mortals frequently sought his assistance. In the present time, he is sometimes asked for aid, in the belief that he may still have some shreds of his former power, or he is a better position than man to intercede with Manitou. If storms crash when it is raining, people may ask them to request the supreme being to stop the rain; in such cases, a pattiness is careful to address a raven as Pemaldis, his title as chief, rather than as Qwan. In cold winter weather, a raven is sometimes caught alive, its head smeared with grease, and as it is released, the caster says:

"Please send the cold wind, Pemaldis."

Prayers are also said half humorously, half seriously, on many occasions. When, for example, clothing has become too ragged for further use, it is thrown on a fire with the remark: "Please come to me again, soon."

The thrower does not actually believe that in so doing he is asking help from his clothing, but it gives him a certain sense of satisfaction thus to have expressed his desires.

The prayers above described can be said by anyone, at any time; they are means of propitiation known to the whole community. In addition, information was obtained about two prayers, each of which is the jealously guarded prerogative

1:McDerwith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

601 Coola social organization, and of the absence of standardized obligations based upon specific relationships.

Slaves

567 Since a slave was* without status in the Bella Coola community, it is perhaps incorrect to include a description of [559] slavery in a chapter on social organization; but as slaves lived in the Bella Coola villages, it seems reasonable to include them when dealing with the different units of the tribe. It was 162 impossible to obtain an accurate estimate of their number in 567 Bella Coola; slavery has been so long abandoned that the present natives could only hazard vague guesses. Judging from conversational remarks by elderly men, it seems probable that in the old days there was a considerable slave population in every Bella Coola village, comprising at times as much as thirty to forty per cent of the total population.

527 When a party raided a village most of the inhabitants were 127 slain, but some, especially children, young adults, or famous chiefs were captured. As far as could be learned, once a captive had reached Bella Coola he was in little danger, since torture or systematic slaying after the heat of battle had subsided was not a Bella Coola characteristic. The leader of the expedition retained many of the captives as his own slaves, and distributed others among his followers. Anyone, chief [422] or commoner, could own slaves in the same way that he could own any other type of goods.

527 Like any other commodity, slaves were bought and sold. 431 The Bella Coola were usually so well provided with salmon that they were able to exchange those fish with the members [422] of other tribes for slaves. Lack of strong chieftainship among 726 the Bella Coola hindered their success in war, so that most of [431] their slaves were obtained by trade. To the same category [773] belong those obtained as presents at potlatches. If, however, [441] a member of one of the tribes on the lower Fraser River was

*One of the first efforts of the white man's civilization in British Columbia was the freeing of all slaves. Consequently the past tense is used in this section.

Lib: Dewalth K-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

names to the dog, and had distributed presents to validate the bestowal. Consequently, the animal is a chief (see Plate 11) and can do as he likes. When it dies it will be mourned as a chief. Moreover, a number of people have returned the presents which they received at the time the dog was made a chief, and this money is kept by the woman and her husband, to be used when they perform the rite of mourning for the dog at death. 281 552 622 766

When this is possible, in the present degenerate days, it is not difficult to understand how, formerly, a great chief felt himself above the restraints that hindered lesser men. The last great Bella Coola chief was Pathu, who died between 1870 and 1880. His influence and power were so great that he was a virtual ruler, daring anything. If he requested a young man to take his food box home and the youth was slow to obey, Pathu had no hesitation in killing him on the spot. Such great power, though unusual, is intelligible to the Bella Coola, since Pathu gave far more potlatches than any of his contemporaries. Other chiefs have been known to attempt a similar arbitrary use of power, but have failed, since their prestige was not great enough to justify it. The fame of a mighty chief spreads up and down the coast, and protects him and the members of his family from being ambushed and slain in any sporadic fray. During an actual fight, however, a chief had to take his chances with the rest, but the comparative immunity was a great advantage. 552* 622 [156] [628] [726]

The Bella Coola recognize the fundamental differences between their own concepts about chieftainship and those of other coastal tribes with whom they come in contact. This point was mentioned in the course of conversation by several men. The most powerful chief known to them was Tsakun, who, they say, was virtual monarch of the Kitkatla. None of his subjects could go hunting without his permission, and he had rights to a certain share of their bounty. At any ceremony presents had first to be given to him, and if he were slighted in this respect, he would kill the offender. It is be- 171 556* 622 829

[Doc. cit. III, p 86 (c) - ANALYST]

b:Mc:Dewalth E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

203 that he wants so-and-so, giving the name of a chief, to go, for 556 instance, to Bella Bella, to invite a certain person, whose name 484 he gives, to the potlatch. X likewise names those whom he [679] wishes to form the escort. As a sound whistle is used, it is essential either that the chief himself be a senior sonad, or that a sibi go with him. It is immaterial whether or not all of the crew are members of the society. Nobody is compelled to go, but as all know it will be a matter of pride to X to recompense them, none declines except for some strong reason. X names those whom he wishes to proceed to other tribes, sending one canoe to each group of towns. He arranges their departure according to the distance each must travel, the aim being to have all the guests arrive at Bella Coola at the same time. X is expected to provide food for his guests as soon as they arrive, and as the potlatch cannot start until all have assembled, X tries to ensure simultaneous arrival, no easy matter since the area from which guests are invited extends from the Nass River to Alert Bay.

[441]

The mysterious and sacred nature of the potlatch is impressed on the minds of the uninitiated at the time of departure. When the chief who is to bear the invitation, and the members of the crew are ready in the canoe at the beach, there is heard from X's house the sound of a whistle. The uninitiated, unaware of the method by which the noise is produced, consider it to be the voice of some supernatural being connected with the potlatch. Either the messenger himself, or some assistant with him, blows a whistle. This can be done without exposing the method by putting the whistle to the lips under cover of a large blanket. When this has sounded the canoe is free to proceed.

The messenger-chief carries with him his sonad mask, which he does if he sees another canoe approaching, while eagle down is scattered over the heads of the paddlers. These two signs intimate that the occupants of the craft are on ceremonial business, therefore must not be molested. For a considerable distance up and down the coast the sacred nature of

[532]

[724]

1:36:Dorsith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

the potlatch is recognized to such an extent that an attack upon envoys is unthinkable, though one or two myths recount how this unwritten law was violated on rare occasions. A canoe meeting potlatch messengers veers over to the other side of the channel to give them the right of way. 203 556 484 726

On reaching the destination the canoe is brought to close to shore until the inhabitants of the village have gathered on the beach, which they swiftly do on the arrival of strangers. The messenger sounds his whistle, the significance of which is fully understood by members of the nuxalk society. Any chief who wishes to show his wealth and importance will invite them to his house. As they are landing, he sends a herald to summon a number of influential people of his village, who seat themselves in their rightful places. As the messengers enter they are given seats on the bench behind the fire, the spot usually reserved for chiefs. A number of lads are called in to toast smoked salmon, and when this has been done the fish are broken into shreds by young girls and served to the messengers on a mat, in lieu of a table-cloth. The envoys do not deliver their message as soon as they arrive. On the contrary, they spend the rest of the day aimlessly talking with their hosts, and sleep in the house where they have been received. 575 262

The following day likewise passes without ceremony, but towards nightfall the host summons all his fellow-villagers to his house. The singers take up their customary places and beat out a kaxiut tune. Upon hearing his or her air, the owner of it starts to dance. Using their own discretion, the singers beat out the tunes of kaxiut after kaxiut, and each dances. In like fashion the singers beat out nuxalk songs, and the owner of each dances. Since the supernatural beings are not present, the dances are merely of a ceremonial, not a sacred, nature. When all have danced, each gives a present to the envoys. These gifts are not returnable. They are merely "eagle down," but it is necessary that something be given to validate the dances. The value is immaterial, so far as the purpose is concerned, though a chief who wishes to exhibit his chief-like 203 535 556

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

CAUSES OF DEATH

The Bella Coola know that sickness, accident, wilful murder, old age, and a host of other factors may at any time terminate a man's life, but they consider that any one of these direct causes is possible only in conjunction with an indirect reason of a religious or supernatural nature; in the last analysis they attribute death to supernatural, not to natural causes. As described in a previous chapter, an ancient myth attributes the origin of death to the stupidity of Raven, but this belief, even if its historical accuracy is accepted, belongs to the realm of philosophy and ancient history rather than to everyday life. When a canoe is capsized on the ocean and its occupants are drowned,—the Bella Coola do not consider a drowning a mere accident—it is because Xemoyma was hungry and desired human flesh. This indirect reason is quite as important as the direct one. So, too, the death of a man beneath a falling tree or a land-slide is no accident; Sā-lma caused the tree to crash to earth or the slide to roll downwards. Most individuals believe that this supernatural being is responsible when an animal kills a hunter. He delights in death and always sits on a coffin before it is taken to the grave, although none but shamans can see him. Any supernatural being can cause death, but it must not be imagined that the Bella Coola go through life in a state of constant fear; death may vanquish them in the forests, but the probabilities are against it. Nor does sickness appear to them as a natural phenomenon. Its cause is either the intrusion of some foreign object into the body, or the weakness of one of the patient's supernatural elements. The only remedy in the latter case is an appeal to the supernatural, sometimes through the medium of a shaman, whereas a foreign object in the body can often be extracted by a skilled practitioner. A disease of this type is often brought on by the machinations of a sorcerer, and if death results it is attributed to the potency of his charms, not to a natural ailment. Even ghosts are able to cause death. In war, one man may be able

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

to kill an enemy, but his success is accredited to his super- 761 natural possessions which have given him skill as a warrior 726 rather than to his own ability.

It is felt that no ordinary explanation is sufficient to ac- 761 count for the death of a great chief. No matter what may have 622 been the actual cause, it is always said that the supernatural Carpenters, who in the beginning of time created mankind, [773] came down and "seized" or "called back" the deceased, thinking him too good for this world. It is believed that these beings are keen hunters, and that Alquntám allows them to pursue influential people. This sentiment is always expressed in [533] mourning songs for a dead chief, but although accepted as a matter of fact, it is little more than a formalized belief which serves to comfort the mourners. The infraction of a taboo is another reason frequently given for a chief's death.
It is said that there was a loud crash and the earth shook before the death of Potlas; he became ill immediately, and his stomach began to swell. The stricken chief said that Sonq' itself had fallen upon him, but the common belief was that he had erred in some ritual act. At any rate, he died within a few hours.

RITES FOLLOWING DEATH

News of a critical illness spreads rapidly through the village 763 and the house in which the sufferer is lying becomes a rendezvous for friends asking about his condition. Failure to do so would be considered ungracious, with the result that there is such a constant coming and going that rest is denied the sick person. Shamans are called upon to practise their powers in [756] a noisy manner, and female relatives weep and wail. The din is indescribable.

When the patient shows no further indication of life, the shamans cease, but the women redouble their cries. Relatives, friends, and sympathizers all crowd into the house and begin to weep, often adding verbal lamentations. The progress of the news from house to house can be traced by the wailings. Mean- 764

Z: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

CHAPTER III

WARFARE[1]

General Observations — Specific Accounts

General Observations

721 648 PRIOR to the establishment of British rule, there was considerable warfare among the coastal tribes of British Columbia. Long-continued struggles leading to the extermination of one or other of the participants were unknown, but there were constant raids, counter-raids, forays, and attacks. These were never as continuous as on the Plains, where martial achievements were regarded more highly than on the coast, but it appears probable that at least several villages of the Bella Coola were embroiled every few years. Nevertheless, [796] war was secondary in importance to ceremonial rites. During the winter, peace reigned and members of hostile tribes were [556] even received as guests at some dances. At potlatches they might be subjected to insult, later to be avenged in the same manner or by active hostility, but seldom was actual violence offered either to envoys or guests. The symbol of peace and 726 friendliness was eagle down; the occupants of a canoe who 825 bore an invitation to a potlatch, or who were guests them- 778 selves, used to blow this substance up into the air whenever [786] another craft approached, and it was incumbent on the latter [578] to veer over to the other side of the channel. Eagle down was [627] considered to be so sacred that when two men were quarrelling a chief could stop them by blowing some of it over their heads. 721 In winter, hostilities were prevented by ceremonies, and in summer the people were usually busy laying in supplies of food; consequently, it was only in the late spring that fighting was [575] at all common. Even then the dictates of ceremonial life were [622] not entirely forgotten; no kusiut novice went to war and

[1] Warfare having long been discontinued, the past tense is used throughout this chapter.

721 to attack. It is said that the Fort Rupert people once visited
648 it, but their hair became entangled in the thorns growing near the tide-flats and they were easily slain while struggling to free themselves. Two warriors escaped and hid in the branches
[727] of a huge spruce tree. They used to slip down at night and steal food, thus supporting themselves for several weeks, but [628] were at last discovered and scalped. On such occasions the villagers of the lower and central valley usually rallied to the help of Ilgwaqo, the most exposed one, although there was no mechanism to enforce such assistance. The inhabitants of [774] this town attributed their protection to Algaxiax, and used to claim that he had decreed that they should be immune owing to their close association with him. Though Bella Coola
[361] itself was comparatively free from molestation, Kimsquit and [162] Talio, with smaller populations and less strategic positions, were subject to frequent attacks. At least one of the villages at
712 the head of South Bentinck Arm was defended with a stockade of cedar trunks, set upright in a double row and entered by a water-gate with a drop-door.[1] This water-gate protected the
[648] residents on many occasions, and it is remembered that one
[724] Fort Rupert raiding-party was annihilated while endeavouring to batter down the door with a huge ram. The defenders, armed with muskets, picked off the attackers as they struggled in the open.

721 All the older men were emphatic in stating that most of their raids were in revenge for such attacks. Although such statements were partisan, they were confirmed in every way
[642] and were probably tolerably correct. Lack of a strong govern-
[623] ment was a serious handicap to the Bella Coola. After being assailed, the members of the town would discuss retaliation,
[622] and if unanimity of opinion was reached, that course was de-
[701] cided upon. Public opinion alone selected the leader, usually a man who had given a number of potlatches, especially one whose position had been made stronger by previous validation as a warrior. Such a chief had to command over his followers. If he were a man of great prestige, many would be willing to serve under him, but he could not compel the services of anyone except his own slaves. A few individuals often declined to follow their fellows to war, although the force of public opinion usually prevented a too individualistic course. Inhabitants of other towns used their own discretion whether or not to join the party. If some of their relatives had been slain in the previous attack, revenge influenced them to share in the expedition, otherwise only the prestige of a mighty chief could attract them. No case is known in which all the Bella Coola villages joined in a single expedition; there were often temporary alliances between neighbouring settlements, but complete lack of central organization. The course of events was similar when a chief wished to raid without the motive of avenging an attack. For example, if a Bella Coola had been enslaved by a foreign tribe and slain by his owner, a brother of the victim might decide on revenge. The usual course was to kill a slave belonging to the murderers, though sometimes he led a raiding party if he could gain the necessary support.

[1] It is said that such stockades surrounded other villages, but definite information on this point was unavailable.

Each warrior provided his own weapons, frequently the same as those used for hunting. Bows with obsidian-tipped arrows were most relied upon for offence, though slings were also used from canoes. Every man carried a spear, pointed like an arrow, for hand-to-hand fighting, although there was relatively little of this, most of the combats being fought at a distance with much noise, boasting, and explosives, but few casualties. Spears were, however, useful if the attackers succeeded in surprising a village at night. Hostilities are a thing of the past, consequently it was impossible to obtain detailed information respecting offensive weapons. Armour consisted of maple or birch slats reinforced with moosehide and worn around the body and chest; this rendered quick movement difficult but was effective against arrows. Muskets were introduced many years ago and armour consequently became useless. Large shields of moosehide were carried in all canoes, and one was held up by the bow paddler as the craft neared the shore to protect him and those behind from arrows and stones cast by slings. When one is sick, shields were held away to leave with some white substance resembling flour.* On the shore of the land below Bella Coola, opposite Winter Bay, there are some boulders of the same white tint; even now these are often spoken of as "The Shields of the Bella Coola." It is said that hostile raiders, seeing them, used to remark that they had reached the outposts of Bella Coola.

The same lack of leadership shown during preparations for a war was evident during hostilities. The so-called leader had little authority over his men, who could desert and return home at any time. Lack of martial ability among their own chiefs sometimes led the Bella Coola to place themselves under the authority of a Bella Bella in a way which would be impossible for a war-like people. Frequently such divided leadership led to disaster, and is the surest proof that the Bella Coola were not as aggressive or bellicose as other coastal tribes.

Except when attacking the Carrier, all raiding parties embarked in canoes and followed a definite order of procedure handed down from the past. In the stern of each craft sat the captain, a chief, who, as the craft was leaving, began to sing his or the song, keeping time to it with the beam of his paddle; the recounting of the glories of their ancestors was supposed to encourage the warriors. Instead of leaving simultaneously, a rendezvous was often chosen down the fiord, and the expedition finally moved off from there when all the canoes had arrived. While still in friendly territory, a flotilla proceeded openly. A small amount of dried salmon and water was carried by a war party and morsels of the former were eaten at intervals. The bow-man took as much food and drink as he thought could be consumed at one sitting, put a fragment of dried salmon in his mouth, chewed it four times on the same side of his mouth as he was paddling, and swallowed it. Then to suck a sip of water, fo chewed to four times, and four times squeezed as th of four morsels of salmon, of water. It was next im into the mouth that o

* These substituted substance said to have had protective or preservative qualities.

Having eaten, the bow-taken from the stern to drink to the same man
other side of his mouth paddled on the other si
bow. To the food and d
If possible, he was requi
if there was too much, h into the ocean. He wa water was passed to him
his back, his head positi over his face so that it drink were completely se would be undiluted.
enough salmon and water
so second portion could

Each captain took w
cedar-bark which was u
the course of the day, the upon some decoration o colours of bark to serve of the same canoe. He would suffice, and the bo
The second paddler follo order of his position in th
the captain had to wear too little, he had to do selves, the party continu was chosen for camping
but no light was ever al

ollowed by another piece of dried fish, 926 washed it down as before. This was 789 at the provender consumed consisted each chewed four times, and four sips portant that no more should be taken uld be swallowed at a single gulp.
man passed the food which he had the paddler behind him who ate and her, except that he chewed with the , corresponding to the fact that he e of the canoe from the man in the rink was passed down to the captain.
red to eat whatever was left, though e threw the remains over his shoulder s also expected to swallow whatever , but if there was too much he would ting over the stern, and pour it out fell into the ocean. As the food and nsumed, so it was believed the enemy
If the bow-man had failed to take out r, the captain received none of it, since be served.

ith him a supply of dyed and undyed 926
ored in the bow of the canoe. During 914 party would land and the chief decide ade by combining strands of the two 824 as a distinguishing mark for members took out as much bark as he thought w-man was the first to don the symbol.
wed, and each in turn did the same in he canoe. If too much had been taken, r collars of whatever was left over; if without. Having thus arrayed themed until nightfall when a secluded spot 726
g. Wood was collected and fires laid, 784 truck and the warriors lay around the 722

726 cold sticks to sleep. Meanwhile, their wives at home were 724 required to be very careful, since a woman's handling playing 722 would cause injury to her husband, and faithlessness, his death. These restrictions were obligatory during the absence of the expedition.

726 As the party neared the enemy's country, they would conceal the craft under projecting trees by day and travel only at night. When within striking distance, a scouting canoe was sent forward to learn the hostile dispositions, the best means of approach, and so forth. This was usually done at dusk, and when the scouts had returned, the party would steal quietly through the forest and hide behind the unsuspecting village. At dawn the leader would give the signal, and the attackers would rush forward with a fierce shout, killing all the men and [727] seizing women and children as slaves. When captives were taken by slave members of the expedition, they belonged to [425] the latter's masters. The victors would cut off the heads of their victims, seize what loot they could, set fire to the village [567] and rush home before support could arrive from neighbouring towns. At first, the slaughter was usually a somewhat unpleasant task, but as the warriors became inflamed with the heat of battle, they began to delight in killing, and even women and children frequently suffered.

727 The exulting victors sped homewards, rejoicing at their success but somewhat fearful that they might be cut off by overwhelming reinforcements. During the journey, each warrior who had taken a head removed the scalp by cutting the skin around the cranium close above the eyebrows and ears. These trophies were washed at the rock Skalzemunts on the [583] ford below Bella Coola. When within sight of home, the captain stood up in the canoe and sang again his ne-ala song, a symbol of victory as the bloody scalps were held aloft. Women and children would rush forth to greet the conquerors who landed amid scenes of wild enthusiasm and rejoicing.

[425] Prisoners of war became the property of those who had [567] taken them, with the exception of those captured by slaves.

B
648 established Tsakoe was he who held sway between 1830 and 721 1870, a man of almost gigantic proportions, of tremendous physical strength, and endowed with force of character and initiative as well. Pitted against him, the Kimsquit people suffered even more than before; there were few direct assaults, 648 but Kitkatla canoes seemed always to be lurking in the vicinity, 721 ready to kill or enslave heedless fishermen or those travelling between Kimsquit and Bella Coola or Tallio. Friends of the victims repeatedly discussed counter-measures, but lack of leadership prevented them from coming to a decision for several years.

B
Bb One winter, about the middle of the last century,[1] the Kimsquit determined to take the offensive in May. This plan was discussed both at Bella Coola and Tallio, at Sqmqs the leading chief, Nuxmalk, gave his support and many men whose relatives had been killed or enslaved promised to join the Kimsquit raiders. Among others who took part in the conference was a certain Lo-qmx, an influential Bella Bella chief who happened to be visiting relatives in Sqmqs at the time. It was decided that the rendezvous should be Qalmalks, on Labouchere Channel.

B During the spring those who planned to take part in the expedition
[703] busied themselves with their preparations. No one knew how large would be the force, since as usual, everyone used his own discretion whether or not to join it; some did so to avenge injuries to their relatives, some merely to display martial ability, whereas others declined to repay their wrongs. At last the appointed date came round, and some fifty
B canoes, each containing twenty to thirty men, gathered at the appointed
Bb place.[2] Thence they set out and encamped for the first night at Ikwatch 648 River, Qalqat, near Bella Bella. Lo-qmx knew the time of meeting and B the route that would be followed, so once out two lads to hunt deer at [720] the spot, though, not wishing to circulate news of the raiders, he did not tell them what they were likely to find. The two hunters stumbled upon the encampment without being observed, and hurried home to report what they had seen. Lo-qmx had intended to join the party, so he now set out in a small canoe with the two as paddlers, after warning them that they must say nothing at home of his movements. His war equipment consisted of a musket and two paleto-shaped boards with small
Bb
[713]
[177]

[1] The approximate date was judged from the fact that the old man who told of the expedition in 1922 said that his father was about five years of age at the time.
[2] The strength of the expedition was probably exaggerated.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] from the station where the [illegible] to the [illegible] point passed the face of one of the sentinels. This was obviously the same man, as a Kinnaper chief promptly slit him up a fine case of corsage. From the captive [illegible] it was learnt that Tuhua himself was in Bulla Bulla. Here was a golden opportunity, but the Bulla Coolie neared it through divided counsels. Some wanted to proceed to Bulla Bulla to capture Tuhua himself, others to continue to Kitkatla and wreak during the absence of their warrior chief. Either plan might have been successful, but as usual there was no central authority and they were swayed to and fitting. At length they determined to assault the village, and cautiously drew nearer for the purpose. The same little discussion delayed matters, but at last six eight score of the attackers halted in the woods behind the unsuspecting town, while others guarded the canoes hidden in a thicket.

Meanwhile Tuhua, while at Bulla Bulla, had heard that a Bulla Coolie raiding party had set out. He knew that its objective would be his own village, so he hurried home in a fast travelling canoe with others of pick-alone to reinforce Kitkatla through creeping at night. Under cover of darkness, he passed unobserved into Kitkatla at the very time that the attackers were in ambush. Though unknown of this, Tuhua set out with promptness. He called his followers together and told them what he had learnt in Bulla Bulla, and that from the time which had elapsed since he heard the news, the enemy must be at hand. Drums were beaten and all the community rallied together in readiness. The lurking Bulla Coolie overheard the preparations, but could not make up their minds to attack instantly; some wanted to do so, others desired to wait for dawn, and even more lack of leadership caused an opportunity to slip by. Just as daylight the assault was launched. With a wild yell the Bulla Coolie fell upon the town, but the Kitkatla were on the alert, their arms beside them, and the onslaught was a failure. The first rush was driven back, so the assault degenerated into a sporadic musketry duel which continued throughout the day with advantage to the sentinels although the casualties were heavy on both sides. Tuhua owned a small brass cannon which he fired as a signal to other towns of the Kitkatla to rally to his assistance, and the Bulla Coolie were forced to consider the possibility of hostile reinforcements arriving at any time. Some of the attackers tried to burn the village by crawling on the roofs and setting them alight, but the very defenders pulled them through the smoke vents and killed them. In the afternoon several canoes came hurrying up, filled with allies summoned by the firing of the cannon. As they sped past the place where the Bulla Coolie canoes were concealed, they noticed one of the sentries and took a few long-range shots at him. One struck him on the wrist, and the

[illegible] the sound that [illegible] the raiders were [illegible] the attack and [illegible] had off as soon,

[illegible] as a dearly loved [illegible] relatives. In the [illegible] live speech:

[illegible] number of Bella [illegible] good his escape.
[illegible] gave a chance for [illegible] addressed. The [illegible] knife canoes into [illegible] she could do so [illegible] chance of a large [illegible] were with paddles
[illegible] ia. Aided by so [illegible] score and had [illegible] canoe coming to [illegible] driven ashore to [illegible] perilous position,
[illegible] sounds for yellow
[illegible] canoes, an art
[illegible] tribes. Fire
[illegible] found; the dis-
[illegible] rude canoes, [illegible] roused. The two [illegible] ventures.

[illegible] father of the man [illegible] grandfather of a [illegible] discussed. The [illegible] validated. One

[illegible] or opportunity to [illegible] we attacked."
[illegible], first requesting [illegible] scheme, in case of [illegible] proposing a plan
[illegible] who had imitated [illegible] ped, tied a knife
[illegible] theft. He had no

Schoolcraft, H. R. (1822-1924) 1848
NEB Bethune NEB
Transfer NE 15

difficulty in getting over the village, but the dogs smelt his approach and their barking so distressed him that he returned. Now it was the turn of the men to whom the scheme had first been suggested. He took the canoe from and pushed off into the darkness. A celebration of victory was taking place, so that he was able to land unobserved on the beach and mingle without suspicion among the many strangers who had assembled to Techaro's call. These included allies among whom were slaves and others whose faces were unfamiliar to the residents of the village itself. After walking around for some time, the Bella Coola noticed a canoe of suitable size at the end of the village. He joined a group walking in that direction, but detached himself by making some excuse when near the desired point. Once out of sight behind the canoe, he waited until he was unobserved and moved the craft a few feet; again he waited, then shifted it once more, until he was ultimately able to launch it. By great good fortune, he was able to slip in unobserved, and managed to rejoin his companions although he had only his hands and a few pieces of wood with which to paddle. The seven remained on the islet for two days more, making paddles and waiting until all suspicion of the presence of any strangers had passed.

Then they launched their craft and started homewards. Ignorant of the outside channel, they determined to follow the well-known inner route, though this course exposed them to constant danger and necessitated travelling by night only. There was so little darkness, however, that they could neither proceed fast nor replenish their stock of food. On the eighth day, when lying near Hartley Bay, they were almost starving. Tsi-ômai, one of the warriors, said to his brother Opwikany:

"Do you want us to die of starvation? We cannot go on this way, let us camp for a few days and hunt, no matter what the danger."

Opwikany agreed, and set off with a packer, telling his comrades not to worry even if he were absent four days since he did not know the country, and might have difficulty in finding game. Another hunter, Kwalwaltsma, went off with a packer in the other direction but soon returned unsuccessful and discouraged, though Tsi-ômai cheered him by saying that he was sure his brother would succeed. Before night Opwikany and his packer brought back a fat buck which was divided among the starving wanderers. At first they ate the fat uncooked, but hunger at last drove them to build a small fire and toast the meat in thin strips so that the minimum of heat and flame was required. Thus strengthened, they eventually reached home.

Even those who had fled at the arrival of the first reinforcements had difficulties in reaching home owing to ignorance of the route. Some of the canoes reached Kitlobe in safety, whence the occupants proceeded

B 795 the body to his own house, preparatory to burying it. It was April, but [796] as they were waiting, a violent thunderstorm blew up from the east, the only time that such bad weather occurred at that season. Thunder had promised to come to Xwalil's aid, but the latter had died too suddenly B to make any appeal; the supernatural one had just learnt of his gran-[798] ndfather's death and had come rushing to his assistance. Realizing the danger, the ceremonier and his friends hastily buried the corpse, throwing over it a number of blood-stained cloths, and finally stamping down the earth. There was a furious hurricane; trees were uprooted, houses shook,
B the earth over the grave swelled as if in a whirlpool and chunks of it [799] were carried up into the air. Only the potency of the blood on the cloths prevented the return to life of Xwalil.*

This second unmanageable crisis on the Kitkatla so disheartened the
B Bella Coola that they made no more raids on their northern foemen who,
T flushed with victory, became ever bolder than before. As usual, the 648 Kimsquit and Tsi'o people suffered more than the inhabitants of the [721] main valley. On one of these forays, about 1835, the Kitkatla killed [722] Sekwaulaut, a brother of Pudus, the leading chief of the Bella Coola at the [622] time. This was contrary to all the rules of warfare since he was a member of one of the leading families and the donor of many potlatches, a man whose name was as well known as that of Pudus, Nekhpelem of Fort Rupert, or Tsibaos himself. The fame of such chiefs was enough to protect them except during the actual heat of conflict, and the Bella Coola were justly angry.

B A few years later a single canoe came paddling up North Bentinck
T Arm and was beached about half a mile from the head. Scouts investi-
648 gated, and returned to Kimsquit with news that the occupants were 728 Kitkatla, and that Tsibaos himself was among them. At once there was heated discussion among the people of the lower valley. Many who had lost relatives in the protracted struggle wished to wipe out the party; others, to see what they wanted. A few daring individuals stalked
B through the forest and fired on the visitors at long range; they were T answered, not with bullets, but by the four times holding aloft of a moose-[722] skin, a sign of friendly intentions. If the strangers had fired on the scouts, a fight would have ensued, but this peaceful reception disarmed suspicion.

B
[787] *This tale is a curious illustration of the manner in which supernatural elements become woven into accounts which have an historical basis. It is to be assumed that the wanderers were in a suggestible state owing to privation, and readily believed that supernatural powers must have assisted them. Xwalil was feared as a sorcerer, and probably boasted of a visitation from Thunder during his wanderings. This was accepted and the incorporation of impossible incidents followed in due course.

Tuhoe remained encamped for several days, during which time he sent word to the Bella Coola that he regretted the death of Kitwanhat and had come to make peace. He added that his followers had tried to dissuade him, saying that he would be killed, but he had answered that he was too great a man to allow fear to influence his actions.

Having waited for several days, the party came up the Bella Coola River, their canoe loaded with pemmican and eagle down, while Tuhoe's brother, Nowakai, wore the mask of his ancestors as further proof of friendly intentions. It was unusual to display one escape in a canoe ceremonial, but this was an unprecedented event; to have that he might soon be killed and he preferred to die while bearing the obvious mark of correspondence with some incident of an ancient myth. The canoe was launched opposite the house of Pathe where the men blew eagle down into the air to mark their peaceful mission. Men had gathered from all parts of the Bella Coola valley and several had doubtless wished to disregard the safe-conducts and slay their enemies, a course which they had recommended for several days and had tried to precipitate by overt acts against the Kitkatla. Pathe himself had not spoken, but he now appeared and advised the people not to harm Tuhoe, since overbearing hostility would result. Though his wishes did not entirely quiet the angry ones, they eventually received the Kitkatla of a welcome. Pathe brought forward a moose-skin, and told some of his people to hold it spread so that, when Tuhoe leaps from his canoe, he would land upon it, and could be carried to the house without putting foot to the ground. Tuhoe expressed proudly that there was nothing on earth strong enough to support him, since his many potlatches had made him incomparably heavy. Since the law, he accepted the honour, so someone to landing shown only to mighty chiefs, and was carried into the house where he was seated in the far right-hand corner, an honourable location. Pathe invited all the people in the vicinity, slaves as well as Bella Coola, and the inner partitions of the house had to be removed to provide space for the throng.

Though Pathe had decided against the immediate killing of the Kitkatla, he had concocted a scheme to test their bravery and the sincerity of their desire for peace. No one knew of this except his nephew, Nowakai, who was to carry it out. When all were seated, the latter appeared, his face smeared with ashes, and his hair tied up in a top-knot with weasel skins as is customary during war. Nowakai moved sunwise around the house, brandishing a musket and repeatedly pointing it at Tuhoe in a threatening manner. If the Kitkatla had shown nervousness, particularly if one of them had fired his own musket, a massacre would have resulted. But they remained unmoved, confident in the prestige of their leader, while he knew that though his body might be

B
T
648
721

lasted. This feud has continued up to the present time. In 1909 word reached Bella Coola that Tsalos had approached a Quatsino chief and asked him to spread the rumour that the missing party had been drowned at sea, at the same time admitting what had taken place. A year later a half-breed Kwakiutl, hunting on Virgin Rocks, happened to unearth the bones buried beneath the tap. There the matter rests for the moment so far as the Bella Coola are concerned, but they express the opinion that the continued feud may cause bloodshed at any time.

It must be remembered that the above account of the meeting between the Kitkatla is of a partisan nature. No attempt was made to have the Kitkatla side of the matter, so that the version here given may or may not be the truth. It has been inserted as an illustration of Bella Coola attitude, and of the manner in which, formerly, doubts, fears and suspicions led to war. This would certainly have been the case in the present instance but for the moderating influence of the white man's rule.

KWAKIUTL WAR

B
K
648
721
K
[532]

Only slightly less feared than the Kitkatla were the Kwakiutl-speaking peoples, especially those inhabiting Knight's Inlet, Kingcome Inlet, and Blunden Harbour, who were known collectively as Dzelkwa. As Tsalos was feared among the northern tribes, so was Nawi among the south-erners. Bella Coola itself was too difficult of access and too densely populated to be successfully attacked, but Tsi'is was subject to constant raids. Even more disconcerting was the constant danger of lurking foemen; one year it would be a hunter who was surprised and killed, the next a party of women would be carried off while picking berries.

B
[712]

The raiders became so bold that the inhabitants of one of the Tsi'is villages decided to defend themselves by building a stockade. Everyone assisted in the task, so that the fortification was soon completed. It consisted of a fence of vertical logs with a platform running around near the top, on the inner side, on which the defenders could stand, and a water-gate through which canoes could enter at high tide. It surrounded five or six houses and was planned as a place of refuge for all the Tsi'is villages. One of the tree-trunks brought for the stockade was hollow, and there was considerable discussion as to whether it should be used, but finally it was set up with the others. A Kwakiutl who was visiting Tsi'is at the time took notice of this weakness, but no one seems to have suspected that he would inform his friends of it when he went home.

B
K
[726]

The summer after the stockade had been completed the Kwakiutl discussed the usual raid on Tsi'is; one of the principal chiefs opposed an expedition on the ground of the reputed strength of the defence, but

[a famous Tsimshian chief - ANALYST]

[illegible]

[illegible] was overruled by the popular vote and the raiders set out. They had chosen an opportune time, since most of the people were absent hunting and fishing; in fact, three men and three children were the sole occupants of the fortified village. They saw the approaching marauders in the distance, closed all openings, and prepared to defend themselves. The Kwakiutl killed a large cow and with this as ram attempted to barricade the gate. It was too strongly built, and while struggling with it, the attackers offered excellent targets to those within. One of them, Swang, was a good shot and took heavy toll. Convinced that the gate was too strong for them, the Kwakiutl turned their attention to the hollow log; these men failed to observe it and thus again suffered heavy casualties. Thus had the defenders escaped scathless. One of the three was struck by an enemy bullet, another fell from the fighting platform and accidentally shot himself, while Swang's powder began to fail. Fearing that all was lost, he told one of the little boys to open a concealed rear door* and fled into the woods with the two smaller children. The three managed to escape unobserved from the village and hid themselves under leaves. The Kwakiutl did not know how weakly the stockade was defended, and Swang disguised the fact by ranking from one part of the platform to another and calling out in various tones as if a number of people were speaking. He could fire only occasionally on account of shortage of powder, but the ruse was effective and at last the raiders withdrew, carrying their dead with them. Two of them wandered into the forest instead of accompanying their comrades; they must have died of exposure, since their corpses were found in an emaciated condition several weeks later.

Not content with defeating the raiders almost single-handed, Swang embarked in a small canoe and cautiously followed the course which he knew they must have taken. His children had been slain by the Kwakiutl during a previous raid, a circumstance which had so enhanced him that he regarded the escape of a single one of them, and was determined to treat even their dead with ignominy. At length he sighted a number of canoes congregated on a sandy beach, and rightly judged that this indicated the spot where the vanquished had buried their slain. Swang exhumed one of the corpses and impaled it on a stake in a crouching position.

Meanwhile the relatives of the raiders, expecting the usual easy success, had gathered near their leader's house. They were filled with apprehension when they heard a mourning song from the returning canoes, and anxiously called out to learn the fate of different members

*Probably a mere chink in the stockade.

Dobbs Growth B-5 (1922-1924) 1968
NEB Bellacoola NEB
Kwakiutl NE10

B 727

and SnE'lkum soon discovered a protected hollow where, having concealed himself with leaves and rotten wood, he went to sleep. When he awoke in the morning the war-party had moved away.

Without clothing to protect him from cheesy bushes, SnE'lkum could not pass through the forest, so he climbed above the tree-line and made his way to the west side of South Bentinck Arm, not far from the place where he had been captured. With much difficulty and many scratches, he made his way down to sea-level and paddled across the fiord on a log. Then he climbed up once more, and crossed the mountains to Bella Coola above the tree limit. The one survivor of the attack had taken the same route when bearing the evil tidings. Women were wailing and weeping when a naked man was seen coming down the mountain-side; it was SnE'lkum. They welcomed him as one returned from the dead; in earlier years he had boasted that, if ever captured, he would escape, and it was recognized that he had made good his promise.

B
K
48
926

The defeat at Ta'ic rankled in the mind of Sîwid, who made another attack on the stockade a few years later. This time it was fully manned and the assailants suffered even more severely than before. As they advanced with a ram, one of the defenders fired a powerful charge and the bullet passed through the bodies of several of the raiders. This so discouraged them that they dragged away the bodies of the slain and departed, having killed only two Ta'ic men. As they were going homewards, they chanced to pass beneath a precipitous mountain on which two young Bella Coola were hunting. The latter fired on them at long range and were fortunate enough to register several hits.

After this second failure, Sîwid decided to make Bella Coola itself his next objective. With this aim in view, a party of Kwakiutl raiders set out one year. As is customary, they hid during the daytime when in hostile territory, and happened to be in a small harbour below Green Bay when a party of Kimsquit, en route to Bella Coola, landed there for water. As one of them, the uncle of a man of fifty in 1923, was drinking at a stream he was fired upon, whereat he hastily concealed himself. A skirmish ensued in which the same man was wounded in the arm. By this time he was some distance from the sea, and he tried to crawl back over the crest of a low ridge to regain the shore. Suddenly he felt a sharp pain in the back and thought he had been hit once more; he continued his flight till he found that his bark-cape had become ignited, and was the cause of the second discomfort. He threw it off and contrived to escape. Another Kimsquit man was wounded in the back but hid himself within a hollow tree.

After this trifling success, the marauders decided to return home. Early the next morning, when paddling down Burke Channel to the east

E. McDowell E-1 [1922-1924] 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA
KulaKiutl NE10

B K 491 926

of Kwatna, a woman called down to them from the upper slopes of the mountains on the south-east. She was one of a party of Kwatna people who were picking berries; their canoes were lying in a bay beneath, where the youths of the party were resting and sleeping, ready to climb up and carry down the boxes of berries as the women filled them. Bilxwalakt, the woman who had called out, had done so under the impression that those passing were Bella Coola, and though one of her companions recognized her error and bade her be silent, the intimation had been given. The raiders would have passed in mid-channel unaware that anyone was in the vicinity, but now they quickly entered the bay and slew the few lads who were with the canoes. Next they endeavoured to capture the women and started climbing up for the purpose, but as soon as they entered the woods, they lost sight of the fugitives who were on the open slopes above. One of the canoes was paddled back to mid-channel, whence there was a clear view so that the crew could call out and direct their comrades' pursuit. Two of the women had started climbing as soon as they saw the warriors turn inwards; they escaped over the mountains and reached Kwatna with word of the affray. With one exception, the others kept together and sought refuge in a narrow cave, the entrance of which they were able to defend; the attackers did not dare linger for a siege, so they too escaped. But Bilxwalakt, the cause of the whole disaster, was cut off from her companions and hurried from place to place as she strove frantically to get away. When finally brought to bay, she struggled furiously and refused to be taken alive, so her throat was cut and the body decapitated. She was a member of a chief's family, a woman who had been confirmed on a good seat, so the murder was entirely contrary to all coastal customs. If she had been taken prisoner, she would have been ransomed and the matter would have ended, but her death demanded revenge.

B K [727] [721]

When the two women who had fled overland reached Kwatna, a party of warriors set out immediately, but could do no more than bring back the women who had hidden in the cave. Meanwhile the Kwakiutl continued their voyage and encamped at Jacobson's Bay where they watched a Bella Bella canoe pass up the channel towards Bella Coola. They concluded that the Kimsquit people, whose canoes they had destroyed, would hail this passing craft and thus reach Bella Coola with news of raiders in the vicinity. So it transpired, while almost simultaneously came news from Kwatna of the woman's murder, but by this time the Kwakiutl had reached home waters.

B 721

Bilxwalakt's parents had been Kwatna people, her husband was a Bella Bella, and she had Bella Coola ancestry as well, so the members of these three tribes were all affronted by this killing of a chief. At Bella

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Coola the important men of Sunxl, Tcmoxl, and Alpálxl met at Xemqo-ts and discussed the matter stormily. Putlx was the leading Bella Coola chief at the time, but he alone did not attend the meeting at which all the others were present, though he sent a man to search a storehouse owned by the murdered woman on the south side of the mouth of Bella Coola River, near the former Hudson's Bay Company's post. Bilxwalakz had a large amount of ammunition stored within, and this was brought to the house of Putlx. Next morning, the chief himself appeared, his face smeared with ashes and his hair tied in a top-knot with a weasel-skin. This is done by anyone who has killed a man, and it was a clear intimation that Putlx had decided on war. He seated himself in the doorway of his house, a cocked musket in either hand, and intimated that he would shoot anyone who passed on the sidewalk before him. For four days he sat there, neither speaking nor eating: he was nawxil, so no one disregarded his wishes and the inmates even of his own house used the refuse holes for egress during that period. No other case is known of such an action, but Putlx could do as he liked, and he manifested his grief and determination in this spectacular manner. On the fifth day, he ordered drums to be beaten, and the inhabitants of the adjacent villages gathered; Putlx wasted no words:

"Bilxwalakz has been murdered," he said. "She was a chief and my relative.[10] I am going to war. We shall use her own powder and shot."

The ammunition was distributed and the Bella Coola prepared for the expedition.

Owing to the prestige of Putlx, volunteers came swarming in, not only from Bella Coola itself, but from Kimsquit and Talio as well. No one was thoroughly acquainted with the geography of the Kwakiutl territory except a slave named, like the Kwakiutl warrior chief, Sewid, though not, however, related to him. This man had lived among the Bella Coola for so long that he was thought reliable; he readily agreed to act as guide, only asking that his old mother be spared, a request which was granted.

After the usual delays, the expedition set out and spent the first night at Kwatna. Next morning, Kwalxnl, one of the leading warriors, tied his hair into a top-knot and smeared his face with ashes. He was a man whose bravery had been firmly established by the distribution of valuable presents. To show his valour, he stood up on the beach within easy musket range and called out:

"Please fire at my top-knot. If you hit it and make it fall, so will we lay low our foes."

---

[10] It is doubtful whether she was a kinswoman, but Putlx used the term figuratively in speaking of one who, like himself, was a person of importance.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Kwakiutl NE10

B 726
789

For some time no one was willing to take the risk of hitting a comrade, but Kwalstnf continued his request until a good shot took careful aim and fired. The bullet cut the knot and the warrior's scanty locks fell streaming over his face; he was partially bald so that his top-knot was thin and collapsed easily. Everyone was pleased at this incident as foretelling victory. Those whose courage had been established either by magical means or by the distribution of wealth, often deliberately took public risks of this kind to show their bravery.

B
K
648
726

Then the expedition continued, travelling only by night after leaving friendly waters. It was decided to attack the people of Kingcome Inlet, though it is unknown whether that objective had been decided upon before leaving Bella Coola or en route. When close to their goal, a scouting canoe was sent forward, guided by the slave. He led the party into one cove, then into another, without seeming to arrive anywhere; the scouts feared that he was deceiving them, so they landed, and while two or three lay in hiding, the others took Siwid back to the main party. One Bella Coola had a slight knowledge of the route, so he was sent forward to join the hidden scouts; their canoe was cautiously paddled forward in the darkness till the crew was able to land unobserved about a quarter of a mile from the objective. Kingcome Inlet is famous for its olachen, which attract fishermen from all parts of the coast; on the day previous a canoe from the north had arrived for the spring run and reported the departure of the Bella Coola expedition. From the time which had elapsed, the Kingcome Inlet people knew that this must now be in the vicinity. Two canoes filled with men were sent out from the threatened village; they scoured the neighbouring coasts, but although one of the crews almost stumbled over the hidden scouts, they found no trace of them, and returned, reporting that no enemy was near. Having avoided those who were looking for them, the Bella Coola scouts returned to the main party and preparations were made to attack at dawn.

The warriors gained positions in ambush behind the village without being discovered, and just before daybreak the assault was launched. The Djoldhaus, taken unaware, could offer no real resistance; many of them were killed or captured although Siwid, the chief, himself escaped. The Bella Coola suffered only one casualty, the captain of one of the canoes. During the journey, the bow-man of his craft had misjudged the amounts of food and cedar-bark required, so that his leader, in the stern, had received neither and was in no fit condition for fighting. Some of his friends advised him to remain with the canoes and promised to bring him prisoners to guard; the captain refused this offer, rushed into the fight and was slain. It was generally felt that lack of war decorations was responsible.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
KwakiuH NE10

B
K
648
726

As the attackers rushed into the village, the mother of the slave Siwid, suspecting who they might be, cried out in Bella Coola to ask their tribe. A chief replied and added that they had come for revenge. Her son, who had taken his full share in the attack, was told where to find his mother, so he rescued her and brought her to Bella Coola, where she was given an honourable position instead of being treated as a slave. As soon as all resistance was ended, the Bella Coola warriors gathered in the captured village to take stock of their victory. At this juncture someone noticed a canoe-load of Djoldźawe trying to steal away unobserved; they had no weapons and the craft was promptly stopped. One of the leading warriors, Sisumbile, uncle of a man about sixty years of age in 1923, had lost several of his relatives during raids from the south, and had joined the expedition for revenge. He came rushing up and slew first one occupant of the canoe, and then another, slowly and deliberately; until, as he became frenzied with blood, he killed them all as quickly as possible. The mother of the Bella Coola slave told the raiders that there were other Djoldźawe villages in the neighbourhood from which help would certainly be sent. So the victors seized as many boxes of olachen grease, blankets, and other valuables as possible, and fled with their captives, not stopping even to fire the village.

B
[721]
[727]

B
[727]

Among the prisoners was a young woman whom the slave Siwid recognized as a chief. He determined to help her to escape and accordingly offered to aid her captor by guarding his prisoner, without telling him of her rank. The Bella Coola had retreated about two miles, their canoes strung out in a long line, when Djoldźawe craft, hurrying up from other villages, appeared and a running fight ensued. In the rear Bella Coola canoe were two hunters, both expert shots; two loaders kept handing them charges already measured out so that they were able to keep up a rapid and well-directed fire which kept the enemy at a distance. The pursuers being directly astern, several times a single bullet passed through the bodies of two warriors, and on one occasion this led to the capsizing of one of their canoes. While the Bella Coola were watching this success, Siwid whispered to the girl to dive overboard, that she would be picked up by her friends. By swimming underwater, she deceived the Bella Coola who, though several saw her, thought she was an animal, unworthy of a bullet from one of the marksmen. She reached her fellow-countrymen and was picked up by one of the chasing canoes. Soon afterwards Siwid abandoned the hopeless pursuit. Some of the Bella Coola wanted to camp and feast, but the majority thought it safer to push on and put a safe distance between them and their enemies. There is only one good harbour, Indian Cove, in that part of the coast, where they agreed to stop for a few hours if there were no recent footprints in the

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5
Kwakiutl NE10
Bellabella NE5

B K 648 726

sand. None were to be seen; but after a short delay they proceeded homewards where they were welcomed with wild rejoicing. It was well that they had returned promptly since messengers had been sent immediately to Newitte, Fort Rupert, Alert Bay, and other Kwakiutl towns. A strong force was gathered as soon as possible and went straight to Indian Cove, knowing that the Bella Coola would be likely to camp there. When they found that the raiders had already gone by, they pursued no further.

B K 648 721

After this victory, the Bella Coola suffered less from the southern raiders. As before, occasional canoes came north to seize unprotected fishermen or berry-pickers, but the Kwakiutl had learnt a salutary lesson and were less bold than formerly. About four years later, they formed a large expedition to attack the Bella Coola, but the latter were fortunate enough to have it deflected by an accident.

B K Bb 648 726 Bb [424] [203]

Some four years before the Bella Coola victory, a Bella Bella chief had decided to give an elaborate potlatch at which he would display an ancestral prerogative consisting of twelve stepped platforms within his house. This meant that a large excavation had to be made, around which the stagings were built in receding tiers. The prerogative of building such a house was not unusual, but this was the largest ever known and eight years were spent in its construction. When at last it was finished, the owner prepared to invite guests from all the coastal tribes, including the Kwakiutl. As his envoys to them, heading southward, passed Tsowpuh, near Koeye River in Fitzhugh Sound, they met a canoe and promptly blew their whistles to make known their business. Instead of veering over to the other side of the channel, the craft was paddled alongside that of the potlatch messengers, who realized that the crew were warriors; it was, in fact, the advance guard of the Kwakiutl expedition against the Bella Coola. Before leaving, the men had sworn to kill every person whom they met, either forgetting or deliberately overlooking the possibility of encountering potlatch envoys.* Now that the time came to carry out their oath, the occupants of the leading canoe hesitated; they had failed to grant it right of way, but feared to begin killing, and while they dallied, the second craft ranged up on the other side. Its crew likewise hesitated to kill the messengers, and waited for the third, and they for the fourth. As usual, the expedition had been travelling with the canoes in single file, those from each village together, with the leader in the rear craft of his detachment. Within a few minutes, the chief of the leading town came up to the Bella Bella messengers, but

*News of a coming potlatch was usually circulated so that the Kwakiutl were probably aware of the possibility of meeting messengers, and seem to have deliberately agreed to break the law to mark their passion for revenge.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Kwakiuth NE10
Bellabella NE5

B
Bb
K
648
726

be too delayed action until the foremost craft of the next town had arrived. This was continued until the whole flotilla, which had extended for nearly five miles, was ranged in an irregular mass around the envoys. The captain of the last canoe was Qwaxiällis, a Fort Rupert chief and validated warrior who had taken an unassuming position because he had Bella Coola blood in his veins and was unwilling to kill his kinsmen; he had been unable to dissuade his fellows from the expedition, but had determined to take little part in it himself. The reputation of this man was so great that it was decided by universal consent to leave the fate of the messengers in his hands. But when Qwaxiällis arrived, the canoes were massed so closely that he could not even see the cause for the delay. He entered a small craft and managed to make his way to the centre of the throng, where he quickly sized up the situation and bitterly upbraided those who had failed to keep their oaths. Then he donned his war accoutrements, killed a single Bella Bella silently and unemotionally, then withdrew to the edge of the flotilla. Thus encouraged, an attack was made on the unfortunate messengers. One of them unshipped the mast, stood in the bow and offered a stout resistance by swinging this around like a heavy club, killing one of his foes. Another plunged overboard and in the confusion managed to swim ashore. When the massacre was over, Qwaxiällis called out in a loud voice:

"Sang[w] will fall upon us for our sin. Take care. I am going home."

He turned and paddled homewards, followed by the other canoes from his own village. His real reason was to assist his Bella Coola kinsmen, but none of the Kwakiutl realized that. After some discussion, the whole expedition was abandoned.

Bb
648
726
203

The Bella Bella survivor eventually made his way home with the news which was received with great astonishment, disregard of a safe-conduct to potlatch messengers being virtually unknown. The ceremony itself was postponed and finally abandoned owing to the death of the intending donor. No punishment was meted out to the offenders by a third tribe, either because the ritual was committed against a foreign tribe instead of among themselves, or because the offenders came from so many villages that it was impossible to isolate the guilty.

B
K
648
721
[728]

After this calamity, Sisiä himself made no more efforts to raid the Bella Coola. About twenty-five years later, when he was an old man, he made a peaceful visit northward to establish friendly relations; he was welcomed and no more hostile acts were committed by his followers during their chief's lifetime. On his death, his son, who was also warlike in disposition, tried to stir up trouble but was restrained by the influence of the white man which had become dominant on the coast by that time.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

WAR WITH THE CARRIERS

B C 648 721 B [186] B [484]

The only other people with whom the Bella Coola came into frequent conflict were the Carriers. Some of the latter used to spend the winter among the coastal tribes, and had even intermarried with them to a considerable extent, but their mode of life was so different that they were always viewed as foreign in thought and outlook. The Bella Coola despised them for their dirtiness, their fondness for unsavoury food, and, above all, for their ignorance of kusiut and susook matters. This distrust was mutual and not infrequently led to bloodshed. Owing to the location of the Carriers, they could not be reached by canoes, and the Bella Coola had no liking for long overland journeys. The mobility and relative lack of permanent villages made it difficult to bring the Carriers to bay, so that warfare between them and the Bella Coola usually took the form of a killing followed by a raid for revenge; continued hostility was virtually unknown. The people of the lower villages were scarcely affected, but in former times there seems to have been a considerable amount of intermittent fighting between the inhabitants of the upper valley and the Carriers living east of them.

B C 648 726

The following account, claimed to be historical, describes what was said to be a typical raid, followed by a counter-attack.

On one occasion all the young people of Sauxl, Nukils, Ăsăn-ăn-i, and Snuisli went on a picnic to a large, clear tract of ground up the valley, where they spent their time, playing and singing. Towards nightfall two young men, who had not come with the others, drew near cautiously until they could call a girl who was a friend of one of the two. She slipped off quietly from her companions and passed the night with her lover and his comrade in the woods. Towards dawn a party of marauding Carrier Indians swooped down on the sleeping picnickers who, unarmed and unprepared, could make no resistance. With the exception of two pretty girls carried off as slaves, all were slain. The three who had been in the woods hurried back to the villages with the news.

The men of the four towns prepared for action. They went to the picnic ground and brought back the corpses for burial, thus learning for

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

B
C 648
726

the first time that two girls were missing. Then they set forth on the track of the Carriers. The raiders, knowing that their assault could not have been heard in any village, and unaware of the three young people hidden in the woods, took no precautions. The first night the pursuers reached the camp where the Carriers had built a long, narrow fire of some kind of wood which emitted no sparks, on either side of which they had placed a long tree-trunk on which to rest their feet as they dried their moccasins at the flames. One of the Bella Coola girls was placed near one end of the fire, the other at the other end on the opposite side. Neither could sleep, but kept watching silently in the hope of being able to escape. Towards dawn one of them was overjoyed to see a Bella Coola scout peering around a tree-trunk. He motioned her to keep silent and she nodded to show that she understood his signal; then he went away. He told his waiting companions how the Carriers were resting with their feet over logs beside the fire, and suggested that they prepare heavy clubs. Having done this, the Bella Coola stole up behind the drowsing enemy. Each selected a victim and broke his leg, or legs, with a crack of the club. Not one of the raiders escaped, the cripples being killed without difficulty. In some manner this event was made the theme of a sisaok song.

B
C
648
721

The following unrelated incident is probably historically correct, in outline at least, since it is said to have taken place about 1860, and two of the participants were great-uncles of the man from whom the account was obtained.

One October a number of Carriers were staying at Nusqalst. Their chief was a certain Ṡämälxem who was distantly related to the people of that village, though he had long since ceased to be regarded as anything but a Carrier. The river was running full and though there were many cohoe and dog salmon in it, they were difficult to catch on account of the roaring torrent. A Nusqalst man, Ṡelxwliotl, had laid in an abundant store of fish for the winter, but his bad-tempered wife urged him to get her some fresh salmon and he ventured forth. A drifting log struck his canoe; he called out for help, but before it reached him, his craft capsized and he was drowned. Ṡelxwliotl was a popular man and there was great grief at his untimely death.

B
[556]
[754]

As was so often the case, jealousy was rife in Nusqalst, where a certain Nänätl had become wealthy. He was a good carpenter, and his riches had been amassed as rewards for making kusiut masks, but of course such payments had been made in secret and many people wondered how he had acquired his fortune. This was enough to cause a certain amount of suspicion, and a rival determined to take advantage of it. This man approached Ṡämälxem and said that he believed Nänätl was responsible

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

B for Ẉáxwalistl's death, that he was sure the wealthy man was really a
C sorcerer, and had used some evil means to cause the fisherman's drowning.
648 Ẉámálxem was distantly related to the dead man and, thus incited, deter-721 mined to kill Nánátl in revenge. That evening, as he was lying playing
B with his grandchild, the Carrier chief entered his house and thrust a musket against the unsuspecting man's chest. Nánátl quickly knocked [556] down the muzzle so that the bullet, instead of killing him, merely passed [754] through the fleshy part of his hips. Ẉámálxem made no attempt to run away. In such cases it rests with the relatives of the injured man whether or not to take revenge, and they usually avoid beginning a vendetta unless virtually driven to it. News of the assault spread down the valley, and two of Nánátl's nephews, Ẉá·kmai and Oẉmikmẉ, went up to investigate. They were both men of considerable influence in the community, both validated warriors who had taken prominent parts in the unsuccessful attack on Kitkatla a few years before. Realizing that their uncle was not seriously wounded, the two brothers carried him to their canoe, intending to take him home and to disregard the assault.

During this time, the evil Nuxálst man had been working on Ẉámálxem's fears by telling him that Nánátl was certain to kill him by magical means, until he decided that he could escape only by murdering the wounded man. His followers learnt of this and tried to dissuade him,
B fearing the presence of the two famous warriors. As their canoe was
C going downstream, it was caught in an eddy and tipped so that one 648 musket and both cartridge boards were lost. This seemed to Ẉámálxem
the chance for which he had been waiting: he fired from the bank and 726 Nánátl fell dead, much to the consternation of his own followers as well as the Nuxálst people.

If Ẉá·kmai and Oẉmikmẉ had been ordinary men they would probably have fled downstream but, being duly validated men of valour, this course never occurred to them.[14] Oẉmikmẉ, who had one charge left in his musket, consulted his brother as to their course of action.

"Nánátl is dead," his brother replied. "It is probably time for us to die as well. You had better shoot."

Meanwhile Ẉámálxem had remained on the bank, laughing at the two warriors. Oẉmikmẉ told him to be silent, then fired, instantly killing his uncle's murderer. The Carriers began to run to and fro on the shore, whence they could hear the two brothers talking to each other:

"Let us not think of escaping," said one. "We have displayed our
B characters today. If we are to die, let us die."

[703] [14]The man from whom this account was obtained mentioned as a matter of course that confirmed warriors could never run away; when questioned further, he emphasized that the public validation of bravery made it utterly impossible for them to flee from danger.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

The other agreed, so they paddled in and landed at the bottom of the village, heedless of the fact that it was full of Carriers. The Nuxalst people seem to have remained passive, but the angry Carriers came rushing forth and Oémikmy spoke proudly to them: B C 648 726

"You would be dead as your chief if we had not lost our weapons."

The two brothers walked slowly up the long sidewalk of the village, while the Carriers skulked around, uttering threats, casting stones and shooting arrows. Some of the latter stuck in their backs, but long previously both Ts̓ā·kmai and Oémikmy had eaten part of a xsiaitl which had rendered their bodies impervious to such wounds. Arrived at the upper end of the village, they stopped and waited, making no attempt to defend themselves, until they were killed. At intervals throughout the day the Carriers treated the two bodies with ignominy, now thrusting spears into them, now beating them, and all this time not a single Bella Coola dared even to protest, so much were they filled with fear of the Carriers who, when roused as they then were, fight like mad dogs. In the late afternoon one of the women thrust a knife into the eyes of the fallen warriors. Even this insult did not rouse the Nuxalst people themselves, but Winās, one of their slaves, felt called upon to take action. Before being captured, he had been a person of importance in his own home and the Bella Coola had allowed him to become a leading member of the kusiut society; in the course of time he had become entirely reconciled to his fate, and even thought as a Bella Coola which gave him the necessary assurance to address the Carriers. B C 648 727 B [567]

"Wa, wa," he said. "See the breadth of the sky.[11] I have never seen, nor have I even heard of such a thing as you have done today. Truly you have wiped your feet on all that is sacred and powerful."

This speech for the first time brought the enormity of their offence home to the Carriers. The actual taking of life did not affright them, but in their excitement they had overlooked what was to Winās the most obvious sin: they had passed and repassed on the sidewalk outside a house where a kusiut dance was taking place. Thus reminded of the danger to which they had exposed themselves, the Carriers withdrew. B [688]

Next day the Nuxalst people buried the four victims. Ts̓ēmālxem had been a mighty chief and, being distantly related, they would normally have given him an elaborate funeral, but now they acted as if dazed and unaware of his prowess. A man who owned a powerful medicine put some of it in the eyes of the two who had been mutilated by the Carrier woman; as the bodies began to decompose, those who had killed them began to suffer from eye-trouble, and the woman became blind. Believing that their sin had caused their misfortunes, the Carriers fled home. B [754]

[11] To call attention in this way to the breadth of the universe carries with it the implication that it will fall to crush those who have broken a sacred law. B [784.195]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Kwakiutl NE10
Bellabella NE5

B
e 648
726

This account was obtained from a descendant of Tsä·kmai and Ōmitumg who emphatically vouched for its accuracy. Some of the incidents have doubtless been exaggerated, but there is probably a basis of truth, though the passivity of the Nuxqalst people is difficult to explain. The killing is said to have taken place about seventy years before 1922, so tolerably accurate traditions of it are not impossible. No punishment was meted out to the Nuxqalst kukusiut since the ritual error, the passing of uninitiated outside the house where a ceremony was taking place, was committed by strangers, not by inhabitants of the town itself.

B
[688]

A WAR BETWEEN THE PEOPLE OF BELLA BELLA AND RIVERS INLET

K
Bb
721
648
B [721]
[648]

The tribes of the central coast, Bella Coola, Bella Bella, and Rivers Inlet, were frequently engaged with enemies to north or south, but there was seldom serious bloodshed between one another. The following account, however, describes a conflict between the Bella Bella and Rivers Inlet people in which the Bella Coola were not embroiled.

K
Bb
[186]
[262]
[556]

Two favourite foods of the Rivers Inlet people are sockeye salmon which have become soft after spawning, and wild currants, eaten without grease. Their neighbours, the Bella Bella, consider both these articles of diet to be disgusting, although they are fond of raw mussels which the Rivers Inlet people regard as filthy. As already described, it was not uncommon at potlatches of the tribes of the outer coast for the hosts to hold up their guests to ridicule. On one occasion the Bella Bella did so with reference to what they considered the objectionable food of their guests. A masked dancer, representing a stranger, entered the house and the host enquired whence he came.

"Are you from Fort Rupert?" he asked.

"No."

"From Bella Bella?"

"No."

The dancer pointed to the south as if to indicate the next question.

"Are you from Rivers Inlet?"

"Yes."

"What do you eat there?"

Instead of answering verbally, the dancer drew from beneath his cape

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

become entangled in the loop when drawn back by the cord attached to the butt. A tug-of-war now takes place, those of each party who have caught the ring endeavouring to pull it to their side of the water. At last one or other is successful, and brings ashore the prize, with the dangling spears of their adversaries. Sometimes a lad with a fine weapon determines to retain possession of it at all costs and is dragged through the pool to the amusement of all. 526

TOURNAMENTS

526 628 726

It is doubtful whether the subject of tournaments should be considered as belonging to mythology, warfare, or games, since it has aspects pertaining to each. Several of the older men affirmed that prior to the introduction of muskets, it was not uncommon for rival villages to stage fights according to definite rules, after full intimation of the attack had been given. This usually followed a period when angry comments had been made, but when the provocation was not sufficient for war. In such a case, the challenging town would notify its rival that on such a date an expedition consisting of, for example, twenty canoes would attack them with stones. Such an announcement could not be disregarded; the inhabitants of the two settlements prepared for action and wagered the large number of valuables essential to all such competitions. [525]

Many years ago, the Kimsquit people challenged the ıstāmx to a tournament of this kind. It was first necessary to choose the contestants. Twenty of the strongest men were selected, each to stand in the bow of a canoe and hold a moose-skin to shield the paddlers behind. To test their endurance, each took his place and the canoes were paddled towards the shore while all the other inhabitants, lined up on the beach, showered stones on them. On this first test, six of the twenty fell beneath the avalanche of projectiles and were accordingly considered too feeble. Their places were taken by six others who were tested the same way the following day, and the same procedure was repeated until the twenty strongest men in all Kimsquit had been found. A certain Sinuxstl was chosen as

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

526 captain. Meanwhile the ustāmx people had been carrying out similar tests, so that the picked men of both settlements were 628 ready on the appointed day.
726 A canoe was sent forward to give final notice of the approaching flotilla so that the twenty canoes from each settlement came together, fully manned and armed. First ten canoes on each side came to blows, the captain of each craft singling out a hostile one and dealing with it alone. The crews threw stones over and around their own bow-man, trying to beat down the moose-skin held up by their rival, or sometimes endeavouring to throw missiles high up into the air on to the heads of their foes. Whenever a bow-man was knocked down, his crew was defenceless and subject to serious injury if they continued the fight. If, however, they abandoned the conflict, the winners made no effort to punish them further, nor did they join in an attack on any other canoe; that each craft had one adversary only was the rule in all tournaments. In this instance, the Kimsquit people were victorious, no less than eighteen of their canoes defeating the craft opposed to them. Sinuxell returned home in triumph, singing his war-song, and was received with as much enthusiasm as if he had led a successful raid. Indeed the casualties, consisting chiefly of broken heads, were sometimes almost as serious as on a foray, but no revenge was ever claimed in case of death so caused. Instead of throwing stones by hand, it was sometimes agreed that they were to be cast by slings which made the tournament more dangerous. The warriors never left their canoes, so that hand-to-hand fighting was impossible.

It is probable that tournaments of this nature took place many years ago, although none of the men now living had ever participated in one, and many had never heard of this type of competition. Until relatively recent years, however, heavy moose-skins were held up as protections in the bows of canoes, and men were selected for the task of being pelted with stones in the manner just described.

000 One other type of game, string figures, was studied rather extensively. These are described in Appendix B.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

sa·qwa·t: String figure.
Saskwanuts: Harbour on east side of King Island.
[227] sdjidji'is: Movable box-like container which can be raised at a salmon-weir.
Sekukmâw·a: 1—Supernatural herring woman, or perhaps herring head.
2—Carrier murderer living in the last century.
[823] sklilâst: Rock crystal used in kusiut initiation rites.
skima siakmkek: River net for salmon.
[822] Sxisalânt: Echo.
Sxsxkâlsix: Supernatural being who advises the supreme god.
Sxsxkwalyalaslaix, "The Strengthener of the Breathing": One of Tlitcaplitw·a's names, and hence a designation given to shamans.
[805] Sitlxelkx: Ancestral name created on earth by a Lemqo·ts man.
Siaqam, "When Herrings Spawn": Third moon after the winter solstice.
[825] sidâxsu: One of the river sculpins, the so-called cat-fish.
[805] Sidakoos di Ano°likwalsaix, "The Coming of Ano°likwalsaix": Fourth moon after the summer solstice.
siaala: Servants; the term is used to describe the relationship of the supernatural beings to the supreme god.
[805] Si'ishilil, "The Time for Eating Dog Salmon": Second moon after the summer solstice.
Si'iswai·itl, "The Time for Eating Cohoe Salmon": Third moon after the summer solstice.
[584] si'illiukek: Presents, given unostentatiously, at the time when a proposal of marriage is broached.
[431] si'ipikm, "The Ability to Walk": Strength or stability as obtained for children by the repurchase of their mother from their father.
[583] Skmt, "Sits Down": Moon of the winter solstice.
[805] Skâmi, "Time for Eating Spring Salmon": Moon of the summer solstice.
Sikâkmtak, "Time When Sockeye Salmon Ascend the Rivers": First moon after the summer solstice.
[104] siki, "One who Cures": Functionary who protects novices at kusiut and sisaek rites.
Sikilikmm: Evil supernatural being who acts as executioner for his fellows in the land above.
[805] Sikulq, "Time for Making Salmon-Weirs": Fourth moon after the winter solstice.
Sikwalxwlekx: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola man.
Sikwâdjut: Ancestral name of a Stuix man.
Siknm: Chief of mythical house in the sky.
[226] Silias: Celebrated composer.
siltmaq: Salmon-weir.
[827] sinaqyme'ax: Sisaek head-dress.
siminits: Breath, or power of being alive, an element in the human body.
[761] si·nipadjaxtmax: Hide-and-seek as played by two boys.
Simptcus: Man led astray by a supernatural being in the beginning of time.
[805] Sinomwak, "Time for the Use of Olachen Hand-Nets": Fifth moon after the winter solstice.
[726] Sinulkemitl, "Where It Spoke": Outpost near mouth of the Kwatna River, occupied to give warning in times of danger.
Sinunukelâkm: Benign supernatural being who causes Cannibals to return from the land above.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

Wa'a: Xixais woman living in the beginning of time.
wals: Dog.
wawats: Dog, archaic.
wa-xsia: Cape of yellow cedar-bark.
waxwaxsia: Brother or sister of grandparent.
Wiakai: One of the first women to settle at Swalell in the beginning of time.
Wiqsaik: 1—One of the first men to settle at Tál-is in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Stuax in the beginning of time.
Wikwaxwula: Synonym for Xwala: Influential Kwakiutl woman captured in the beginning of time by a Nuxalkt chief.
Wikwanuk: Kimsquit hunter mentioned in an ancient story.
wina, wostite, winso: War-party.
Winás: Slave living at Nuxalkt several generations ago.
winás di qsh, "War-Party of the Ocean," or winás di sá-ildjo-ts, "War-Party of the Tides": Supernatural being.
Winwina: Supernatural being who captured birds and fish for the benefit of mankind.
Winwinhwak: Supernatural being, perhaps identified with one of the warm winds.
winsts: Assistance rendered by the inhabitants of a town to a neighbouring settlement being attacked.
Wipitpawakts: Bella Bella chief living in the beginning of time.
Wiumkilak: Smaxan's daughter-in-law in the beginning of time.
Wi'tsloo: Ancestral name of a Kimsquit man.
Wiuklk: Sisook name of a Kimsquit man.
Wixat: Man who travelled to the Skeena River in the beginning of time.
Wixon: One of the first men to settle at Schooner Pass in the beginning of time.
wl-a: Kusiut dance in which the nine supernatural siblings are summoned to earth.
Wlly: One of the first women to settle at Schooner Pass in the beginning of time.
Wlx: One of Raven's female Crow relatives.
wly: Cripple.

X

Xaiápalst: Ancestral name of a Tál-is man.
Xaiqts: Stream entering the Bella Coola from the north near Nuhwa.
Xai-ut: Continuous North Wind, anthropomorphized.
xak'lai: Cry raised as each of the first spring salmon is brought ashore.
Xalalya: Step-daughter of Raven in the beginning of time.
xapants: Great blue heron.
Xas: Designation of a tribe, probably a branch of the Carriers, dwelling far to the south-east of the Bella Coola.
xawf: Canada goose.
xal-a: Root of qáymats, an unidentified plant.
Xekalus: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola Cannibal.
Xekwatsaw-a: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Xelimal: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola woman.
xem: The successive rising of the sun from day to day. This word, which is common in derivatives, appears usually to be pronounced yem after s.
Xemenu: 1—One of the nine supernatural siblings.
2—One of the first men to settle on the Dean River in the beginning of time.
3—One of the first men to settle at Swalali in the beginning of time.

[825]
[291]
[601]
[628]
[726]
[821]
[226]
[825]
[821]

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

By laying their hands on the nape of a person they are able to tell whether his soul is present or whether it has left the body. If the soul should become weak they are able to restore it to its former vigour. If a person swooons it is believed that his soul has flown away without breaking its shell. The shaman hears its buzzing wings, which give a sound like those of a mosquito. He may catch and replace it in the nape of its owner. If the soul leaves the body without breaking its shell the owner becomes crazy. 774 756 [828] [753] [828]

The art of shamanism is bestowed by Snq. It is impossible to obtain it by means of fasting and praying, as is the case among the neighbouring tribes, but it is a free gift from the deity. A person who is to become a shaman will fall sick, and, during his illness, Snq will give him a song which must be kept a deep secret. After this he is able to cure diseases. If a person falsely pretends to have received the gift of shamanism, and tries to suck out diseases from a patient, he will fall sick himself. 756 [776]

When asked more closely about the curious difference between this method of obtaining the power and that of the neighbouring tribes my informant said: 'When an Awiky'ô'noq wishes to become a shaman he may go to the mountain where the deity of their shamans resides (probably Ma'tom) who will initiate him. No Bilqula can obtain the art in such a way.' [171]

Sickness is caused by a disease entering the body or by witchcraft (see p. 417). The shaman is able to extract the disease by sucking. A peculiar method of witchcraft, somewhat similar to the 'ek'a' of the Kwakiutl (see Sixth Report of the Committee, p. 612), was described to me as follows: The person who wants to bewitch his enemy endeavours to obtain some of his old clothing, portions soaked by perspiration being considered especially effective. After it is obtained a wolf is killed, and the clothing is put into its mouth, which is then tied up. Then the wolf is placed in a box. This procedure is called smk. Sometimes the clothing or some hair is inclosed in the bone of a wolf or of a dead person. No shaman can counteract these charms. 753 755 754 [825]

If a person has been murdered, and a string is tied firmly around the neck of the corpse, the murderer's neck will become diseased and he will be unable to breathe and will die. If sand is strewn in the corpse's eyes and the lids closed over it the murderer will die. If a person has been killed with a knife or arrow, or another weapon, to which some of his blood adheres, the latter is brought into contact with a wolf's head, dog's hair, or anything else that is bad, and then thrown into the fire or put into a frog's or snake's mouth; then the murderer will die. 682 754 [825]

I add here a few current beliefs:—

Sneezing indicates that people are talking about one. 827

Slight ringing of the ears indicates rain, loud ringing good weather.

Twitching of the muscles of the left side of the body is unlucky; of the right side lucky. Twitching of the skin under the eyes indicates that one will cry. [777]

If a dog dreams and howls in its sleep its owner will die. 825

The breaking of a box without an apparent cause is unlucky. 763 777

WARS.

When a war party was organised the warriors did not paint their faces, but they put on headbands of white cedar-bark and strewed their 726 714

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

726 hair with white eagle-down. Warriors when on a war party must not [714] drink more than four mouthfuls of water, else they would be killed. A watchman was appointed in each canoe, who sat in the bow. On landing
[271] near the village of their enemies they divided themselves into a number of parties, one house of the village being assigned to each. Then, early in the morning, when all were asleep, they rushed up to the village uttering their war cry 'ieai!' They took a stand at the fire which burns in the centre of the house, and if any one of the enemies succeeded in taking up his arms and came out of his bedroom they killed him. Then 727 they entered the bedrooms, killed the men, and took the women and children along as slaves. The heads of the dead were cut off, the houses burnt, and they returned home singing war-songs. The heads which they had taken along were then scalped, and the scalps tied to each end of a pole. When they approached their village one man stood up in the bow of each canoe and swang the pole to which the scalps were attached, and they all sang songs, in which their deeds were recounted. The scalps were valued the higher the longer and fuller the hair. They were used in the Sisan'kH.

648 The following tales of war expeditions offer some points of interest.
726 About thirty or forty years ago there was a famine at Bella Coola. The [731] people went overland to Knight Inlet, which belongs to the Tenaqtaq, a tribe of the Kwakiutl, to fish there. The Tenaqtaq made fun of them, took from them the fish they caught, tore the blankets from the backs of the women, and seduced many of them. Finally the Bilqula returned home. There they held a council and resolved to make war upon the Tenaqtaq. The Tinneh joined them in this expedition. They crossed the mountains in four days. When they approached Knight Inlet they sent two spies in advance, who were to count the number of houses in the village of the Tenaqtaq. Early in the morning they attacked the houses and killed a great many men. The Tenaqtaq could not escape, as they were hemmed in by the river. The Bilqula slew them with knives, lances, and stone axes. They took away the clothes of the women, leaving them naked, and subjected them to shameful insults in revenge for the disgrace put upon their wives and daughters. Then they burnt the village.

About thirty-five years ago the Talio'mH were attacked by the Kwakiutl. Originally they intended to attack Nuqa'lkH, but the raven, according to the narrator, changed their mind, as he always protects the village of Nuqa'lkH. They came in many canoes, while most of the Talio'mH were at the lake, which is situated above that town, fishing. Four men were in charge of the village, and a number of old men and women had also remained at home. The father of Nusk'ɛlu'sta, who told me of these events, happened to be out picking berries, accompanied by his wife. He saw the canoes passing by and kept himself hidden. The [712] village of Talio was at that time surrounded by a strong stockade, which consisted of a double row of palisades crowned with thorns. At each corner there was a strong box fastened on the stockade like a tower. Here watchmen were stationed, who were able to shoot at the enemy while being themselves protected. At that time the Talio'mH had only four guns. The Kwakiutl sent out two spies, who reported that the village was well fortified. The Talio'mH had seen the canoes coming and were on their guard. The Kwakiutl thought that they would not be able to enter the village until after the stockade had been destroyed.

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

They resolved to make an attempt to burn it and to break open the door. 648
On the following day they came up to the village, but the guard on the 726 towers used their guns to such good effect that the enemy had to retreat with severe losses. They made still another attempt, but with no better success. They had lost many men, while only two old men of the Talio'mH, TumHa'akyas and A'lk·ins by name, and one woman had been hurt. The latter had been killed. When the Kwakiutl turned back a messenger was at once sent up to the lake to call the young men, who then went to NuqaʼlkH to ask for help. The Kwakiutl passed close to Nusk'slu'sta's father's canoe, but they were so terrified by the losses they had sustained that they passed by without so much as noticing it. Two of their number were so ashamed of their defeat that they would rather remain in the enemy's country than return with their friends, and they stayed ashore. Meanwhile the Talio'mH and the Bilqula were pursuing the fugitives. They had reached the outlet of Bentinck Arm without overtaking them. Then their chiefs resolved to return, as they believed that their enemies had a long start upon them. Later on they learnt that the Kwakiutl were at that moment only a few miles from them, about to continue their homeward journey, after having encamped at the outlet of the channel. Afterwards the Talio'mH found the two men who had remained ashore. They called them and promised to send them back to their friends, saying that the war had ended, and that they had no grudge against them. The men were, however, too much afraid, and finally starved to death.

Later on the Talio'mH and Bilqula organised an expedition against the Kwakiutl to take revenge for the unprovoked attack. A chief named Koani'la, whose father was a Talio'mH, while his mother was a Kwakiutl, was their leader. They intended to attack the Lē'kwiltok· and the Kwē'k·sōt'ēnoq. When they approached the village of the latter they sent a canoe ahead to search for the village, and to report the number of houses. For two days they were unable to find the village, which lies in a labyrinth of islands; but finally they found it, and saw that it consisted of sixteen houses. On the next morning they attacked it. The tribe was wholly taken by surprise and almost all of them were killed. Koani'la's mother lived at this place, and when she heard the Bilqula coming she asked at once for her son, and was taken care of by him. Only five men and four women escaped. The Bilqula allowed these to run away, as they had killed as many as they desired. AnukH'tsem, a chief of the Sznqtlx'mh, was the only man of the Bilqula who was wounded. He died on the way home. They returned, but in the country of the Nā'koartok· they were overtaken by four Kwakiutl canoes which pursued them. The Bilqula were victorious, but Koani'la induced them to desist. During the fight two of the women, whom they had taken as slaves, and one boy jumped overboard, and were rescued by the Kwakiutl.

MEDICINE.

Boils are treated by cauterisation with dry bark or with gunpowder. 752
Sometimes a series of parallel cuts is made over swellings or boils. Fractured bones are set, and fastened between splints of cedar-bark.

Enemata of shark oil or olachen oil are given by means of a kelp tube, 757 with a mouthpiece made of the wing-bone of an eagle. Snake poison is [237] collected and used as a poison. Women wear tight anklets to prevent 700

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

423 is no doubt that a man tends to lose those rights in property
614 which are strictly his, if they are located at a distance. Thus several men claim that they are legally entitled to hunt at Kitlobe, but from mere difficulty of access neither they nor their fathers have exercised the right, and it would have been lost in the course of a few generations, even without the utter decay of custom which has followed the advent of the white man. Practically, a man hunts only in the grounds of those ancestral families in whose origin myths he has names, though, theoretically, he is entitled to hunt on any hunting-ground of any ancestral family of which he is a member whether or not he holds a duly validated name from its origin myth. It is not necessary to confirm the right to property as with a name, though a validated ancestral name is the usual mark of a man's right to that area of the ancestral family to which that designation belongs. Although the ownership of land in distant regions is of little practical importance, it is, none the less, a [554] matter of great pride to a man to feel that he has rights in many places. The efforts of an individual to make good those [721] claims has often led to bloodshed; in fact, one intelligent old man stated that property disputes were the principal cause for war in British Columbia. A person who lacks hunting-grounds
[554] is little better than a slave, whereas one who has much land is important.

The Bella Coola regard land as almost inalienable. Though a man does not own the land of his wife's ancestral family, he can use it and his children have full rights to it. Conversely, a wife can gather berries on her husband's land, though it is not hers. A guest at a village may be allowed to use the [574] territory of his hosts, but it does not become his. In the old
727 days wars between the coastal tribes were common, but though slaves were taken freely, land was never seized; such is un-
423 thinkable to a Bella Coola. In fact, several of the older people [567] inquired how it had been possible, in the first world war, for the allies, whose cause they believed to be righteous, to annex territory from Germany. If the victors had killed or enslaved

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

the Germans it would have been moral and proper according to Bella Coola ethics, but to take land was unheard of. 423 [727]

Since land is only valued for hunting or collecting purposes, it is not divided into small areas. Any man can build his house at will near the village. It is said that at Kitlobe the crab-apple trees are the property of different ancestral families, themselves members of different tribes, but this is unknown in Bella Coola. It may be mentioned that the Bella Coola somewhat naïvely assume that all other coastal tribes have ancestral families similar to their own, although they recognize that some of them also have a clan system which has no counterpart in their social organization. Since the concentration of the tribe on a small reserve and the beginning of agriculture, a system of individual ownership of cultivated land has sprung up. It is realized that if a man clears and cultivates a field, the produce is his own, and he can will this land to whomsoever he pleases. Likewise a man who rings a tree to kill it for firewood is the sole owner. The Bella Coola regard uncultivated land in the reserve as being at the disposal of anyone, a concept which appears not to have been taught them by any white administrator. Its origin seems rather to lie in the old belief that any unpreëmpted land, far removed from a village, can be used by anyone. It is recognized that the reserve cannot be considered as a xol'olam belonging to any ancestral group, hence it is free to all. One corner of it, however, includes the lower part of a side-valley formerly used by the people of Tsmoil. An old man, whose ancestral family lived in that village for generations, has set his bear-traps in this corner of the reserve for a number of years without interference from other hunters, who go far afield with their traps. Even within the limits of the reserve it is felt that this man has the prime right to that area for the use of himself and his family. [829] [177] [428] [614]

Theoretically an ancestral family may die out. Several accounts were received of old men who, believing themselves to be the sole survivors of their family, bequeathed their names 614 428 721

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

601 Coola social organization, and of the absence of standardized obligations based upon specific relationships.

Slaves

567 Since a slave was[11] without status in the Bella Coola community, it is perhaps incorrect to include a description of [554] slavery in a chapter on social organization; but as slaves lived in the Bella Coola villages, it seems reasonable to include them when dealing with the different units of the tribe. It was 162 impossible to obtain an accurate estimate of their number in 567 Bella Coola; slavery has been so long abandoned that the present natives could only hazard vague guesses. Judging from conversational remarks by elderly men, it seems probable that in the old days there was a considerable slave population in every Bella Coola village, comprising at times as much as thirty to forty per cent of the total population.

567 When a party raided a village most of the inhabitants were 727 slain, but some, especially children, young adults, or famous chiefs were captured. As far as could be learned, once a captive had reached Bella Coola he was in little danger, since torture or systematic slaying after the heat of battle had subsided was not a Bella Coola characteristic. The leader of the expedition retained many of the captives as his own slaves, and distributed others among his followers. Anyone, chief [422] or commoner, could own slaves in the same way that he could own any other type of goods.

567 Like any other commodity, slaves were bought and sold. 437 The Bella Coola were usually so well provided with salmon that they were able to exchange these fish with the members [622] of other tribes for slaves. Lack of strong chieftainship among [726] the Bella Coola hindered their success in war, so that most of [431] their slaves were obtained by trade. To the same category [773] belong those obtained as presents at potlatches. If, however, a member of one of the tribes on the lower Fraser River was

[648]

[11] One of the first effects of the white man's establishment in British Columbia was the freeing of all slaves. Consequently the past tense is used in this section.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

given as a slave to a Bella Coola, he was treated as a guest.[1] 567
Slaves were bartered between Bella Coola individuals as a [437] matter of course. Their value depended on sex, ability, and [435] industriousness, as well as on supply and demand. When there was an over-supply, the value of a slave fell to twenty or thirty [437]
salmon, but whenever an owner found that someone wished to purchase a particular slave he endeavoured to raise the price.
If a foreigner borrowed goods in Bella Coola he usually had to [426] leave a relative as pledge. Thus, not many years ago, a Xiwais
Indian, from near Ootsa Lake, borrowed goods from a Kimsquit man and left his son as pledge. The goods were not returned, so the son was sold as a slave to the people of Kitimat.

It was not uncommon for a Bella Coola to lose his freedom 525 by gambling. At lehel especially, a player who had exhausted 567 his goods not infrequently wagered his children, or in extreme cases, himself. If he lost, his children, or himself, became the property of the winner. Unless speedily repurchased by some relative, such slaves were usually sold or given away at the first opportunity to a member of a foreign tribe, since it was considered improper for a man to hold a member of his own 567 tribe in servitude. The same course of action was taken on [628]
those rare occasions when one Bella Coola village fought [727] against its neighbour and prisoners were taken.

To the Bella Coola, who still consider a man's "power" in the land as dependent to a considerable extent on his ancestral [554]
myth, a slave's greatest misfortune lay in the fact that he had [773]
no ancestral home, and hence no rights.

"No slaves came to earth with the first people," they say.

A slave was a stranger in a strange land, unsupported by a chain of ancestors reaching back to the beginning of time. On the whole, captives taken in war were better treated than other [727] slaves since it was felt that such a misfortune might occur to anyone at any time. They were frequently ransomed by their

[1] This is said to be an ancient practice, due to the fact that several of the forefathers of the Bella Coola came to earth in that region and were on friendly terms with the inhabitants. It is conceivable that this tradition may have reference to the breaking away of the Bella Coola from the main Salish stock. [773]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

[567] friends, a further cause for their preferential treatment. A Bella Coola who had been enslaved and ransomed had to [727] undergo a cleansing ceremony to remove the taint of slavery [783] before he could take part in the ceremonies of the community. It was impossible to learn the details of this rite.

[624] A master had complete power over a slave, unaffected by the force of public opinion, since the affairs of a slave, being without relatives, were of no consequence to anyone. Accordingly, the lot of a slave depended on the character of his master, and on his own ability and industry. An industrious slave was valued; such an one would not be traded or sold except through dire necessity, and in course of years he became, as far as actual treatment was concerned, one of the [424] family. Many masters gave their slaves kusiut[34] dance pre- [431] rogatives, expending large sums for the purpose. In such a case the slave might become an influential member of the community, though the fact that he was not free was never forgotten. On the other hand, a master had not the slightest compunction about beating a lazy slave, and could kill him if he so desired. None of the present Bella Coola has heard of such a case; it was considered more sensible to sell or give away an unsatisfactory slave. It was accepted as a matter of course that a master should provide his slaves with food and clothing, since anything produced or obtained by one belonged to him. A slave-owner had full rights to his female slaves, [837] and unquestionably exercised them. The only restraints were the jealousy of his own wife, or wives, and the feeling that it was undignified for a free man to demean himself. It was impossible to learn with even approximate accuracy to what extent intercourse took place between masters and slaves. Probably not a great deal, though there was considerable freedom of relations between slave women and the young men of the community, unrestrained by the pride of chieftainship. When a slave had been faithful for a number of years and had [582] become almost a member of the family, his master would try

[34] Dance privileges (I, p. 180) were more rarely given.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

789 "Please, may it be as it was when you held intercourse."
821 The basis of these medicines is that mountain goats and 825 beaver mate in November when it is cold, and deer in October when it is rainy.

An old Kimsquit man mentioned that one winter he had been driven ashore by continuous cold winds and was on the verge of starving. He slew a buck and by using the medicine just described was able to bring rain with consequent lessening of wind so that he could continue his journey.

MALEVOLENT MEDICINES

754 To Destroy the Benefits of Another's Ceremonial Chastity
825 Place pieces of flesh from any recently skinned animal within a coffin from which the skeleton of an enemy has been removed, uttering at the same time the name of the person to be injured. This destroys the "cleanness" acquired by the observance of ceremonial chastity.[3]

To Cause Insanity in a Woman

Catch a squirrel alive and tie one of the woman's hairs around its stomach; then release the animal. As it runs violently through the forest, sometimes head upwards, sometimes head downwards, so will the brain of the person whose hair it is carrying begin to churn violently till madness ensues.

To Cause Ferocity in Grizzly Bears

Throw the body of a recently killed muskrat against a man's back. The next grizzly bear he encounters will be ferocious, and may kill him. Knowledge of this medicine was learnt by noticing that a number of men who had been struck in play with muskrats, were killed by grizzly bears. The potency of the act has since been recognized.

754 To Cause Disease in a Malefactor
● 727 A number of years ago, when three Bella Coola were killed

[3]This medicine was learnt from a rather unsatisfactory informant and was not confirmed by others.

McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

in a skirmish by the Carriers, one of their women mutilated a body by poking out the eyes. The corpses were rescued and a Bella Coola with secret knowledge dropped into the eye sockets some potent medicine. As the corpses rotted, the murderers began to suffer pains, and the woman who had poked out the eyes lost her sight. As a blind, old woman, she had been seen by several men with whom the matter was discussed. 754 [727]

To Cause the Death of a Murderer (three means)

(1) Two women were murdered at Kimsquit in 1915. Before they were buried, an elderly Bella Coola put a secret medicine on the back of the neck of each so that the murderer would die from a disease located there. Within eight months, a Rivers Inlet man succumbed to a deep sore at the back of the neck, and it was assumed that he must have visited Kimsquit unseen and perpetrated the double murder. 754 682 [766]

Medicines like this and the preceding are widely known, but it is sorcerers who specialize in using them.

(2) When a man dies suddenly and murder is suspected, although the perpetrator is unknown, place the corpse within an old, hollow spruce log. As it rots, needles and dirt enter the flesh and at the same time the body of the murderer becomes lacerated and full of sores. This method was employed during the lifetime of an informant and caused the death of the suspected murderer, whose guilt was thereby accepted as proved. [766] [695]

(3) Bury the victim's body with a toad in its mouth and the murderer will soon die.[4] [766]

To Kill 754

Lift a corpse from the ground and point it at one or more individuals. This causes their death in the near future.

[4]This information was obtained from one informant only; details were unavailable, and confirmation from others could not be secured.

McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

he beats in the fire with his stick, and expresses the hope that the name of the marshal in the town where the error took place may be blackened unless he does better. 575* 628 203

As an individual kusiut who errs is punished by a marshal, so is punishment meted out to the members of a village in which any serious accident occurs during a dance. Such disasters are fire, causing concealed kukusiut to appear among the uninitiated, the breaking of a sidewalk on which a number of the members are dancing, or the capsizing of lashed canoes which are used in some of the performances. The obvious effect of such mishaps is to lower the prestige of the kusiut society in the eyes of the uninitiated. The news travels from town to town, and to adjacent tribes. This is a casus belli for any village which wishes to attack the one where the disaster took place; in fact, a raid is considered meritorious. Owing to frequent marriages between the members of neighbouring villages, it usually happens that the inhabitants of adjacent settlements are unwilling to attack, but the news spreads until it reaches a town willing to take the lead. The marshals, aided by any other influential kukusiut, discuss the matter and decide on war; uninitiated are called upon to take part, though they are told only that the foray is connected with the rites of the kusiut society which increases rather than decreases their awe. The threatened villagers, knowing that an attack is inevitable, send out sentinels and guards, and, if possible, flee at the last moment to neighbouring towns for safety, allowing the raiders to burn their village and carry off loot. If a fight takes place many people may be killed, but slaves are never taken. In the last century Stuux attacked Ālqāläxl; the assailants were aided by a number of Chilkotin to whom they were related but who had not the slightest idea of the cause of the raid. Although an attacked town is usually helped by its neighbours, this is not the case when the assault is caused by error in kusiut or susaok ceremonial. 575* 628 688 721 [727] [567]

Nor is punishment for error or disaster in ritual meted out [648]

2; McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*533 prerogative, he was debarred from seclusion in the back-room and consequent [701] initiation as a ɜɜaok. The exact relationship between warriors and members of [575] the ɜɜaok society is obscure.

[424] (b) Laxsiyao·k' is a Kitkatla name from the north. The first owner moved to Kitlobe where he married, and the designation was transmitted to his descendants. One of the latter migrated to Kimsquit, where the name has since been handed [177] down from generation to generation though its original source has not been forgotten.

(c) Recorded as song VII D 36, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard. This song is said to have been used about 1870.

(d) Vocative form.

(e) That is: I double my importance. This kind of expression is popular among chiefs.

[424] (f) Qowi is one of the ancestral names of Raven, the dancer's crest. In thus addressing the bird, he called attention to his ancestral history.

[262] (g) The home of the first Laxsiyao·k' was near a point where dead whales often drifted ashore. The dancer likens himself to a whale on which people will dine.

(h) Such repetition is not uncommon. The dancer implies that his wealth will be divided in a manner similar to the cutting up of a whale's carcass.

(i) A promontory owned by the first Laxsiyao·k'.

(j) That is: I summon people [to a feast.]

(k) An invitation not to be taken too literally.

Xe·tla Songs

The tunes of xe·tla songs are believed to have been handed down, unaltered, for many generations. The words, too, are frequently ancient although the singers sometimes make slight changes so that they will be more suitable for the chief in whose honour they are being sung. Owing to the decline of cere-[796] monials in which they were used, few xe·tla songs are now remembered.

Xe·tla Song Used by Sinugwil of Kimsquit(a)

[727] A Alinaxwoo | Ahlxwal'aipdai | Di stalsaiamydai | dänuihmik
Come! | See! | The chief | a man stands in the bow(b)

di yalxwtsal'aikdai
of those who travelled everywhere.

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

B Alsiqwalxwqoots | dä'änänuskilsdax | aiyatätyämäthlsdax
He did so, | my pattern(c), | whence I came(d);

533*

ḳmusmālixwanuxet	aiyawasoyo·nxwals
he circled and returned	Sonx[w].

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

C The third part of this song has been forgotten.

(a) Recorded as song VII D 39a, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.
(b) A sign of victory, eagerly watched for when a war-party is returning. [727]
(c) A reference to Wixut, one of Sinuxetl's first ancestors in the beginning of time. He made a journey to the Skeena, returning from there with canoe and paddles decorated with sun designs. The exploits of his descendant are compared with those of his pattern, that is, his first forbear. Such references to family history are sources of pride to the chief being honoured. [773]
(d) That is: From whom I am descended.

Fragment of a Xe·tla Song(a) Used by Qwoyusditsas of Kimsquit(b)

A Kaiyumsāmōlsan	di stālaiāmxdai	kaiiḳainuxits
Presently he will be ashamed	that chief	if I get aiyadilāliaisdai

my copper.

(a) Both tune and theme are said to be of Kwakiutl origin. [177]
(b) Recorded as song VII D 34b, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.

Fragment of a Xe·tla Song Used by Sinuxetl of Kimsquit(a)

A Sānusiḳomosīsandai	yao (b) diḳxoiaiyalīumdai	Oldiḳaxlāmitlisandai
They are smiling,	greetings to the out-stretched glass!	They drink

sewās qomcuadja
the food of white men(c).

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

B and C have been forgotten.

(a) Recorded as song VII D 41b, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.
(b) Literally: Hello!
(c) This song was used at a potlatch where the fare provided was whisky. The tune is said to be very ancient although new words were composed for the occasion. [556] [273]

A'alk Songs

A'alk songs somewhat resemble sisaok ones and, like them, are difficult to collect completely. Parts of many are remem- [575] [796]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

seldom a chief who had given many potlatches. Successful raiders rarely slew such an one; his position placed him above the dangers to which lesser men were subject. 721 575 622

Raids appear never to have been carried out solely for the purpose of giving warriors opportunities to display their prowess, or of permitting young men to prove their mettle. Scarcity of food was the commonest cause for forays when, of course, the victims were chosen for their accumulated supplies. The Kwakiutl especially, lacking abundance of salmon, often attacked the Bella Coola. Even more dreaded were the Kitkatla, the most warlike people of the central coast, who used to raid for many miles to carry off slaves whom they sold or traded for other commodities. Trespassing, too, was a source of friction which often led to hostility. In such a case, the offenders were usually held up to ridicule at potlatches, and the irritation gradually increased until wiped out in bloodshed. Members of a tribe which had suffered from a raid prompted by any of these motives would await a suitable opportunity for retaliation; this in turn would be avenged, and a vendetta often ensued lasting for generations. As already described, a ceremonial error brought punishment from a neighbouring tribe; this was the only motive which caused fighting between different Bella Coola villages. In the last century there was a struggle of this kind between the people of Stuux and Ältqäläxt in which the former were victorious and took many slaves who were later ransomed. When ill-luck had dogged a village or a group of villages for some time, the inhabitants sometimes endeavoured to wipe out their misfortunes by attacking another tribe. 648 685 626 556 688 628 727 777

The teeming salmon at Bella Coola, Kimsquit, and Täl·io, made it unnecessary for the Bella Coola to wage aggressive war for which they were unfitted both on account of their unmilitary attitude and their lack of central authority. On the other hand, they were tempting victims for more belligerent neighbours. The narrow Bella Coola valley, however, far removed from the open sea, and densely populated, was difficult to attack. 642 648 133 161

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

721 to attack. It is said that the Fort Rupert people once raided
648 it, but their hair became entangled in the thorns growing near the tide-flats and they were easily slain while struggling to free themselves. Two warriors escaped and hid in the branches
[727] of a huge spruce tree. They used to slip down at night and steal food, thus supporting themselves for several weeks, but
[628] were at last discovered and enslaved. On such occasions the villages of the lower and central valley usually rallied to the help of Q̓omqo·ts, the most exposed one, although there was no mechanism to enforce such assistance. The inhabitants of [776] this town attributed their protection to Ätquntäm, and used to claim that he had decreed that they should be immune
[361] owing to their close association with him. Though Bella Coola itself was comparatively free from molestation, Kimsquit and [162] Täl·io, with smaller populations and less strategic positions, were subject to frequent attacks. At least one of the villages at
712 the head of South Bentinck Arm was defended with a stockade of cedar trunks, set upright in a double row and entered by a water-gate with a drop-door.[2] This water-gate protected the
[648] residents on many occasions, and it is remembered that one
[726] Fort Rupert raiding-party was annihilated while endeavouring to batter down the door with a huge ram. The defenders, armed with muskets, picked off the attackers as they struggled in the open.

721 All the older men were emphatic in stating that most of their raids were in revenge for such attacks. Although such statements were partisan, they were confirmed in every way
[642] and were probably tolerably correct. Lack of a strong government was a serious handicap to the Bella Coola. After being [623] assailed, the members of the town would discuss retaliation, and if unanimity of opinion was reached, that course was de-
[622] cided upon. Public opinion alone selected the leader, usually [701] a man who had given a number of potlatches, especially one whose position had been made stronger by previous validation

[2] It is said that such stockades surrounded other villages, but definite information on this point was unavailable.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

726 cold sticks to sleep. Meanwhile, their wives at home were 784 required to be very careful, since a woman's heedless playing
722 would cause injury to her husband, and faithlessness, his death. These restrictions were obligatory during the absence of the expedition.

726 As the party neared the enemy's country, they would conceal the craft under projecting trees by day and travel only at night. When within striking distance, a scouting canoe was sent forward to learn the hostile dispositions, the best means of approach, and so forth. This was usually done at dusk, and when the scouts had returned, the party would steal quietly through the forest and hide behind the unsuspecting village. At dawn the leader would give the signal, and the attackers would rush forward with a fierce shout, killing all the men and [727] seizing women and children as slaves. When captives were taken by slave members of the expedition, they belonged to [422] the latter's masters. The victors would cut off the heads of their victims, seize what loot they could, set fire to the village [567] and rush home before support could arrive from neighbouring towns. At first, the slaughter was usually a somewhat unpleasant task, but as the warriors became inflamed with the heat of battle, they began to delight in killing, and even women and children frequently suffered.

727 The exulting victors sped homewards, rejoicing at their success but somewhat fearful that they might be cut off by overwhelming reinforcements. During the journey, each warrior who had taken a head removed the scalp by cutting the skin around the cranium close above the eyebrows and ears. These trophies were washed at the rock Skolsexumnsta on the fiord below Bella Coola. When within sight of home, the [533] captain stood up in the canoe and sang again his xe·tla song, a symbol of victory as the bloody scalps were held aloft. Women and children would rush forth to greet the conquerors who landed amid scenes of wild enthusiasm and rejoicing.

[422] Prisoners of war became the property of those who had [567] taken them, with the exception of those captured by slaves.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

If the war had not been of long duration in which extremely bitter feelings had been aroused, captives were often ransomed by their relatives, who came unmolested for the purpose when the heat of battle had subsided. Failing this, prisoners remained as slaves, the children especially growing up virtually as members of their owner's family as far as food and clothing were concerned, though never sharing in the prowess of his ancestral family. Torture or killing of prisoners seems to have been a rare practice. One extremely old Kimsquit woman related that in her childhood she had seen a captive stretched out on the hot rocks at the side of the ocean, fastened there, his testes crushed with stones, and allowed to die. No other similar traditions could be obtained and it seems probable that this must have been an unusual case. It is true that hostilities have long ceased, but the Bella Coola have clear recollections of other long-abandoned customs, and it is unlikely that torture was ever a common occurrence. It is, of course, one about which reticence is to be expected, but information would have been obtainable if the custom had been common or if it had been one which played an important part in the lives of the Bella Coola. 727 [567]

Scalps were hung on a cord and dried like salmon, then suspended as valuable trophies in the taker's house. When setting out on a war expedition, he would often cover his head with one, holding it in position by weaving its hair into his own. At a man's death, they were either inherited by his heirs or, more often, burnt with his other possessions. It is said that the Fort Rupert people used to tie scalps in bundles to their masks. When the Bella Coola went to war to retaliate for a murder, instead of scalping a victim, they sometimes brought back his whole head and impaled it on a stake over the grave of the person avenged. [422] [714] [768] [721] [648] [682]

At this late period it is virtually impossible to form any opinion as to the amount of bloodshed in wars waged by the Bella Coola. Several of the older people spoke in gloating terms of the slaughter accomplished by their ancestors, but all 721

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15

B 721 these accounts seemed to be exaggerations, and the casualties were probably few. The Bella Coola did not have the same [554] admiration for the successful warrior as for the man who gave many potlatches, while everything indicates that their raids B [703] were on a small scale, rendered singularly ineffective by lack of discipline.

Specific Accounts

B 72 Active warfare has been so long discontinued on the coast that none of the living Bella Coola can describe conditions as 128 they existed during hostilities. It was possible to collect the *539 following accounts of raids and adventures which, though individually of small value, illustrate tactics and strategy, and recount incidents which throw light on the frame of mind of the participants.

KITKATLA WAR

B T 648 For many years there was animosity between the Bella 721 Coola and the Kitkatla who, with the advantage of strong government, used to sweep down from the north for salmon and slaves. Bella Coola itself was comparatively immune from attack, but the Kimsquit people suffered severely. The attackers were not always successful; one old man related how, when his mother's mother was an infant, they were driven off with the loss of four canoes and many men. The fact that this B incident had been remembered for so many years indicates that T it was unusual.

567 Slaves captured in this way were traded from tribe to tribe 439 and rarely escaped. When an elderly Bella Coola was a lad, there was considerable excitement in the community owing to [727] the return of Slukwala, a woman who had been carried off when a girl. She had been traded to a northern tribe among whom, she said, it was customary to crush captives beneath totem-poles and house-posts. Her diligence saved her from this fate, and she was passed on until she reached the far north, on the

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bellabella NE5

divisions, each containing a loaded and measured charge; these were novelties recently obtained in trade from the white man and considered very valuable. On reaching the place where the Bella Coola canoes were drawn up, Lo·qwa·t called out four times:

"Nusmät·a, are you there?"

On being answered in the affirmative, Lo·qwa·t leapt ashore, sent back his own canoe, and definitely joined the expedition.

The Bella Bella chief gave Nusmät·a one of the prized palette-shaped boards, and the recipient repaid this overwhelming generosity with the gift of a marten-skin coat which he was wearing. A Kimsquit chief likewise gave Lo·qwa·t a valuable blanket-coat. As usual, the war-party was suffering from lack of leadership. Lo·qwa·t, a properly validated warrior, was a man who had given many potlatches, and though not a Bella Coola, was related to them by blood; in addition, he alone knew the route to Kitkatla, so he virtually assumed command, although many of the Bella Coola were unwilling followers. Lo·qwa·t suggested an immediate move, and gained his point owing to the fact that no one had a definite counter-suggestion. After travelling seven miles in the darkness, Lo·qwa·t massed the canoes to address his ill-disciplined and somewhat uncertain force. He pointed out that the way to Kitkatla was long and difficult and that it would be dangerous to attack their northern foe-men, but that the Waoyel·a[6] near at hand would be an easy prey. The Bella Coola had no quarrel with these people, and were reluctant to attack them, especially as there had been inter-marriage between the two tribes. Lo·qwa·t spoke fluently, saying that the Waoyel·a had mocked him in their potlatches, and that many of their women, gathering sea-weed on lonely beaches at this season, would be easy victims. His arguments were given strength by the fact that he was a numitl chief and warrior; no one dared to stand against him, so it was decided to follow his wishes, though the Bella Coola stipulated that none of the Waoyel·a were to be killed.

The flotilla continued and in the early dawn raided a small Waoyel·a settlement and captured several slaves. Continuing their journey, they took prisoner a number of women who were gathering sea-weed, and destroyed the supplies which had been stored up. Lo·qwa·t had joined the expedition merely in hope of getting revenge upon the Waoyel·a; now that this end was accomplished, he was willing and eager to return home, but uncertain how to leave his followers.

With this in view, Lo·qwa·t suggested an attack on a China Hat settlement, adding that he knew where some of their frames[7] used in Cannibal dances were stored, and that the China Hat people were too arrogant

[6]Probably one of the Bella Bella-speaking groups.
[7]Such as were covered with meat to represent human bodies.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bellabella NE5
Tsimshian NE15

B Bb 648 721 in their ceremonies. Again the Bella Coola were unwilling, but again their unformulated and uncertain wishes were overruled by the dominant chief, and the assault was made. The frames were stored in an unguarded shelter near the cemetery, into which the raiders broke, smashed them, and threw the debris into the water. While this was taking place, a Waoyel·a canoe rounded a point, and Lo·qwa·t took the opportunity to jump aboard, saying that he was escaping from a Bella Coola raiding-party. The canoe paddled away and the expedition was left leaderless. The usual discussion took place about what was to be done, but finally the raiders returned home. They had been diverted from their original objective, had been led to attack a friendly tribe, had been deserted by their leader, and the only spoils of the long-prepared expedition were a few slaves.

B 727 Among the prisoners were two daughters of a certain Olowa, who was hated because he had frequently been in partnership with Tcubsa. A few days after the return of the expedition, the father appeared to ransom his children. Some of the Bella Coola wanted to kill him, others demurred, and it was finally decided that a spear, fastened to a line, should be hurled against his canoe so that it would project outwards and lodge against an olachen stake, capsizing the craft and drowning the occupant. The spear was thrown, but clever handling prevented the intended disaster. Olowa was a validated warrior, one who never showed fear, so he calmly pulled out the missile and again paddled upstream. This time the Bella Coola fired shots close to either side of his head, but he sat unmoved and unarmed amid his boxes of presents. Finally, a Bella Coola tried to wrench off a tuft of hair from above one ear, but though he pulled with all his force, he did not succeed, and everyone on shore laughed at him. This restored good humour, and Olowa was allowed to land and ransom his daughters. When he left for home he was told to send his friends if they wished the return of their relatives. This was done and peace followed; if Olowa had waited a few days until the excitement of victory had cooled, he would have been able to land without molestation. The only other result of the expedition was that the China Hat kukusiut killed their own Cannibals for having allowed their frameworks to be exposed.

B T 648 [721] After this fiasco, the Kitkatla became even bolder and many years elapsed before another expedition was sent against them. This time, there was no Bella Bella chief to interfere with the arrangements and after the plans had been discussed for a winter, a flotilla from Bella Coola, Kimsquit and Tal·io took the water one day in May.

B [726] Nothing of importance took place until, near Kitkatla, a canoe was captured containing a man and his wife. The former's face was marked with a vertical scar, and it was remembered that, four years earlier, when Tcubsa had been attacking Kimsquit, one of the defenders had shot an

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15

B
T 726
648

difficulty in getting near the village, but the dogs smelt his approach and their barking so dismayed him that he returned. Now it was the turn of the man to whom the scheme had first been suggested. He took the same float and pushed off into the darkness. A celebration of victory was taking place, so that he was able to land unobserved on the beach and mingle without suspicion among the many strangers who had assembled to Tcubsa's aid. These included allies among whom were slaves and others whose faces were unfamiliar to the residents of the village itself. After walking around for some time, the Bella Coola noticed a canoe of suitable size at the end of the village. He joined a group walking in that direction, but detached himself by making some excuse when near the desired point. Once out of sight behind the canoe, he waited until he was unobserved and moved the craft a few feet; again he waited, then shifted it once more, until he was ultimately able to launch it. By great good fortune, he was able to slip in unobserved, and managed to rejoin his companions although he had only his hands and a few pieces of wood with which to paddle. The seven remained on the islet for two days more, making paddles and waiting until all suspicion of the proximity of any attackers had passed.

2

B
727

Then they launched their craft and started homewards. Ignorant of the outside channel, they determined to follow the well-known inner route, though this course exposed them to constant danger and necessitated travelling by night only. There was so little darkness, however, that they could neither proceed fast nor replenish their stock of food. On the eighth day, when lying near Hartley Bay, they were almost starving. Ṭsä·kmai, one of the warriors, said to his brother Oḑmikumẓ:

"Do you want us to die of starvation? We cannot go on this way, let us camp for a few days and hunt, no matter what the danger."

Oḑmikumẓ agreed, and set off with a packer, telling his comrades not to worry even if he were absent four days since he did not know the country, and might have difficulty in finding game. Another hunter, Ḳumslxwalāxtsta, went off with a packer in the other direction but soon returned unsuccessful and discouraged, though Ṭsä·kmai cheered him by saying that he was sure his brother would succeed. Before night Oḑmikumẓ and his packer brought back a fat buck which was divided among the starving wanderers. At first they ate the fat uncooked, but hunger at last drove them to build a small fire and toast the meat in thin strips so that the minimum of heat and flame was required. Thus strengthened, they eventually reached home.

Even those who had fled at the arrival of the first reinforcements had difficulties in reaching home owing to ignorance of the route. Some of the canoes reached Kitlobe in safety, whence the occupants proceeded

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

727 overland to Kimsquit, and from there to Bella Coola. The crew of another craft lost their way among the islands and fiords and wandered around for days until their food was exhausted. They were then near China Hat where they could have landed in safety but, thinking that they were still in hostile territory, they feared to camp and hunt. At last, spurred by hunger, they determined to catch some eagles, the only living creatures in sight. A rude shelter was built on the shore, a bark tray placed before it, and one of the party gashed the fleshy part of his back until the blood ran sufficiently freely to fill the vessel and serve as bait. A companion hid himself and clubbed the eagles as they swooped down to the fresh blood. Though the food was coarse and had to be eaten raw, it enabled the refugees to continue their journey home.

727 648 Another canoe was surprised at the entrance to Douglas Channel by a party of Kitimat who slew all the crew except a certain Yā·k"axwaxwa who succeeded in escaping into the woods. Thinking that the survivor would be driven down to the beach by hunger, the Kitimat patrolled the shore for days, but he eluded them by travelling overland, though his only food was uncooked plants and a single goat, killed by a stone. Yā·k"axwaxwa was a Kimsquit man whose wife was from Kitlobe; her relatives, hearing of his plight, watched the shore of Gardners Canal, hoping that he might be able to reach that refuge. He managed to do so, though at the last gasp, and was taken to Kitlobe whence he returned to Kimsquit. This was the first time that anyone had travelled overland from Douglas Channel to Gardner Canal.

Still another canoe actually landed at Kitimat where the crew was butchered except for five men who fled to the forest. One of them, Xnutli, uncle of a man about seventy years old in 1923, had made several trading expeditions into the interior and was familiar with part of the route. He acted as guide, but soon lost his way and the five wandered for months through the trackless interior, often in dire straits for food, and becoming more and more weary. Their journey began in May, and 727 by October they were all enfeebled through hardship and lack of food. 787 Xnutli himself was the first to give up the struggle, saying that he could go no further. He asked his comrades to make him as comfortable as possible, and then to leave him; regretfully they laid him on some evergreen boughs, and tottered off, expecting their own death within a few days. Soon after their departure, there was a violent thunderstorm and, at the moment of a tremendous clap, Thunder, himself, appeared to the dying wanderer. The supernatural one went to a near-by rivulet and dipped up water which he brought Xnutli to drink; when he had done this four times, the man felt as if he had had a hearty meal. Thunder then told Xnutli to close his eyes. He did so; then the supernatural one

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

spit upon his own hands and rubbed them over the patient's head, his arms, his trunk, his legs, and finally his feet, as if massaging him. Xnutli's strength began to return at the first touch of Thunder's hands, and, when the treatment was finished, he felt entirely rejuvenated. Thunder told him to overtake his friends and to massage them in the same way and they would be revived. He explained that they had been travelling in circles of ever-decreasing radius which was the reason that they had neither reached their destination nor recrossed their own tracks. He added that they must think constantly of their first objective, Ulkatcho, Nukätco in the Bella Coola language, and that at night Xnutli must sleep on the side of the five nearest that goal. 727 787

Soon afterwards the four wanderers were surprised to see a stalwart man swinging along the trail behind them, and their amazement was intense when they realized that it was Xnutli whom they had left at the point of death. He bade three of his comrades hide, and massaged the fourth as Thunder had done to him; this restored his strength exactly as in his own case. The one so cured then concealed himself, while Xnutli treated another of his comrades, and finally the third and fourth. This was not the end of the assistance so obtained. Within a few minutes of their recovery, they found the trail they had so long been seeking and reached Ulkatcho before night, though under normal circumstances the same distance would have required four days of travel. There were several Bella Coola at the settlement who were overjoyed at the safety of those for whom all hope had long been abandoned. They rested for four days, then set out for home. Xnutli told his comrades to fix their minds upon their objective, and as a result they were able to make the journey with phenemonal rapidity. 727

Thunder had granted Xnutli the boon of uxlokwaladjut on this occasion, and had promised that he would come to his help whenever called upon. Xnutli was a sorcerer, a profession which had been practised for generations in his family, and he now performed more openly than ever, assured that Thunder would be able to protect him. The malefactor killed more and more people, until he became an object of universal hatred and fear. At last the principal chief of the village, confident in the power which the giving of many potlatches had bestowed upon him, ordered an expert shot to slay Xnutli. The man so deputed had himself lost several relatives and gladly watched an opportunity. This came when the sorcerer was paddling across the Bella Coola near the old Hudson's Bay Company's post; he took careful aim from ambush, fired, and the evil man fell dead. A medicine can be made from the corpse of a murdered person, which, when used by the relatives, causes the killer's death. To prevent this, the executioner called his friends and they took 754 [776] [683]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Kwakiutl NE10

he was over-ruled by the popular wish and the raiders set out. They had chosen an opportune time, since most of the people were absent hunting and fishing; in fact, three men and three children were the sole occupants of the fortified village. They saw the approaching marauders in the distance, closed all openings, and prepared to defend themselves. The Kwakiutl felled a large tree and with this as ram attempted to batter down the gate. It was too strongly built, and while struggling with it, the attackers offered excellent targets to those within. One of them, Sninq, was a good shot and took heavy toll. Convinced that the gate was too strong for them, the Kwakiutl turned their attention to the hollow log; their ram failed to shatter it and they again suffered heavy casualties. Nor had the defenders escaped scatheless. One of the three was struck by an enemy bullet, another fell from the fighting-platform and accidentally shot himself, while Sninq's powder began to fail. Fearing that all was lost, he told one of the little boys to open a concealed rear door[11] and flee into the woods with the two smaller children. The three managed to escape unobserved from the village and hid themselves under leaves. The Kwakiutl did not know how weakly the stockade was defended, and Sninq disguised the fact by rushing from one part of the platform to another and calling out in various tones as if a number of people were speaking. He could fire only occasionally on account of shortage of powder, but the ruse was effective and at last the raiders withdrew, carrying their dead with them. Two of them wandered into the forest instead of accompanying their comrades; they must have died of starvation, since their corpses were found in an emaciated condition several weeks later.

B K 648 726 [721]

Not content with defeating the raiders almost single-handed, Sninq embarked in a small canoe and cautiously followed the course which he knew they must have taken. His children had been slain by the Kwakiutl during a previous raid, a circumstance which had so embittered him that he regretted the escape of a single one of them, and was determined to treat even their dead with ignominy. At length he noticed a number of crows congregated on a sandy beach, and rightly judged that this indicated the spot where the vanquished had buried their slain. Sninq exhumed one of the corpses and impaled it on a stake in a crouching position.

B K 648 727

Meanwhile the relatives of the raiders, expecting the usual easy success, had gathered near their leader's house. They were filled with apprehension when they heard a mourning song from the returning canoes, and anxiously called out to learn the fate of different members

K 727

[11] Probably a mere chink in the stockade.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Kwakiutl NE10

K 727 of the expedition. Some were able to answer for themselves, but to many queries the reply came that the one asked about had been slain.

B This defeat did not by any means discourage the Kwakiutl, whose forays continued as before. On one occasion, as they were returning K homewards, they noticed several canoes drawn up on the west side of 721 South Bentinck Arm, not far from its junction with Burke Channel. The raiders cautiously landed and stalked the unsuspecting owners, Bella 648 Coola who had landed to cut stakes for a salmon-weir. The Kwakiutl bore down upon them with a rush; unarmed and taken unaware, the Bella Coola could make no real resistance. One of them managed to flee K into the deeper woods, but the rest were either killed or captured. Among B the prisoners was a chief, Sink'lusam, who was wearing a handsome 648 marten-skin cloak at the time. His captor promptly appropriated this, 727 leaving the man naked.

Elated at this success, the Kwakiutl continued their return journey. When near Kwatna, they encountered a fierce southeast gale which made progress impossible; at this point cliffs rise so precipitously on either side of Burke Channel that there is not even the semblance of a harbour, and the only chance to weather the storm was by anchoring. There was considerable anxiety as to whether or not the weight would hold, but it did so, and the canoe remained tied, now carried to the full extent of the mooring-rope almost against the cliffs, now to the same distance far out in mid-channel. Towards night it began to rain and the cold grew bitter. The crew, assured that the anchor would hold and weary from their exertions, went to sleep, as did most of the prisoners. Sink'lusam, without B covering of any kind, was too uncomfortable to follow their example. As 727 the canoe was tossed near the cliff, he happened to notice a narrow ledge just above water, with a small cedar growing in a nearby cleft. Here was a possibility of escape and the chief became alert at once. When next the canoe was dashed near he examined the cliff more closely, and decided that it might be possible to scale it. At any rate death was better than captivity, and he determined to make the venture. As the craft came shorewards again, he plunged overboard into the rough water and succeeded in grasping the tree-root with the aid of which it was an easy matter to pull himself to the ledge. The surf was breaking over it and he was bitterly cold, but he managed to reach another root and to scramble up to a second ledge. From it he gained a wider projection where he could rest in comfort. His escape had been unobserved, and as Sink'lusam looked downward he could see the canoe tossing to and fro at the end of the cable; there was a large boulder near him, and he thought of tipping this over to sink the craft, but refrained out of consideration for the prisoners. From this point the climb upwards was comparatively simple,

2; McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Kwakiutl NE10

B 727

and Sink'lusam soon discovered a protected hollow where, having covered himself with leaves and rotten wood, he went to sleep. When he awoke in the morning the war-party had moved away.

Without clothing to protect him from thorny bushes, Sink'lusam could not pass through the forest, so he climbed above the tree-line and made his way to the west side of South Bentinck Arm, not far from the place where he had been captured. With much difficulty and many scratches, he made his way down to sea-level and paddled across the fiord on a log. Then he climbed up once more, and crossed the mountains to Bella Coola above the tree limit. The one survivor of the attack had taken the same route when bearing the evil tidings. Women were wailing and weeping when a naked man was seen coming down the mountain-side; it was Sink'lusam. They welcomed him as one returned from the dead; in earlier years he had boasted that, if ever captured, he would escape, and it was recognized that he had made good his promise.

B K 648 726

The defeat at Tăl-io rankled in the mind of Siwid, who made another attack on the stockade a few years later. This time it was fully manned and the assailants suffered even more severely than before. As they advanced with a ram, one of the defenders fired a powerful charge and the bullet passed through the bodies of several of the raiders. This so discouraged them that they dragged away the bodies of the slain and departed, having killed only two Tăl-io men. As they were going homewards, they chanced to pass beneath a precipitous mountain on which two young Bella Coola were hunting. The latter fired on them at long range and were fortunate enough to register several hits.

After this second failure, Siwid decided to make Bella Coola itself his next objective. With this aim in view, a party of Kwakiutl raiders set out one year. As is customary, they hid during the daytime when in hostile territory, and happened to be in a small harbour below Green Bay when a party of Kimsquit, en route to Bella Coola, landed there for water. As one of them, the uncle of a man of fifty in 1923, was drinking at a stream he was fired upon, whereat he hastily concealed himself. A skirmish ensued in which the same man was wounded in the arm. By this time he was some distance from the sea, and he tried to crawl back over the crest of a low ridge to regain the shore. Suddenly he felt a sharp pain in the back and thought he had been hit once more; he continued his flight till he found that his bark-cape had become ignited, and was the cause of the second discomfort. He threw it off and contrived to escape. Another Kimsquit man was wounded in the back but hid himself within a hollow tree.

After this trifling success, the marauders decided to return home. Early the next morning, when paddling down Burke Channel to the east

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
KwaKiutl NE10

B K 648 726

of Kwatna, a woman called down to them from the upper slopes of the mountains on the south-east. She was one of a party of Kwatna people who were picking berries; their canoes were lying in a bay beneath, where the youths of the party were resting and sleeping, ready to climb up and carry down the boxes of berries as the women filled them. Bilxwalakt, the woman who had called out, had done so under the impression that those passing were Bella Coola, and though one of her companions recognized her error and bade her be silent, the intimation had been given. The raiders would have passed in mid-channel unaware that anyone was in the vicinity, but now they quickly entered the bay and slew the few lads who were with the canoes. Next they endeavoured to capture the women and started climbing up for the purpose, but as soon as they entered the woods, they lost sight of the fugitives who were on the open slopes above. One of the canoes was paddled back to mid-channel, whence there was a clear view so that the crew could call out and direct their comrades' pursuit. Two of the women had started climbing as soon as they saw the warriors turn inwards; they escaped over the mountains and reached Kwatna with word of the affray. With one exception, the others kept together and sought refuge in a narrow cave, the entrance of which they were able to defend; the attackers did not dare linger for a siege, so they too escaped. But Bilxwalakt, the cause of the whole disaster, was cut off from her companions and harried from place to place as she strove frantically to get away. When finally brought to bay, she struggled furiously and refused to be taken alive, so her throat was cut and the body decapitated. She was a member of a chief's family, a woman who had been confirmed on a good seat, so the murder was entirely contrary to all coastal customs. If she had been taken prisoner, she would have been ransomed and the matter would have ended, but her death demanded revenge.

B K [727] [721]

When the two women who had fled overland reached Kwatna, a party of warriors set out immediately, but could do no more than bring back the women who had hidden in the cave. Meanwhile the Kwakiutl continued their voyage and encamped at Jacobson's Bay where they watched a Bella Bella canoe pass up the channel towards Bella Coola. They concluded that the Kimsquit people, whose canoes they had destroyed, would hail this passing craft and thus reach Bella Coola with news of raiders in the vicinity. So it transpired, while almost simultaneously came news from Kwatna of the woman's murder, but by this time the Kwakiutl had reached home waters.

B 721

Bilxwalakt's parents had been Kwatna people, her husband was a Bella Bella, and she had Bella Coola ancestry as well, so the members of these three tribes were all affronted by this killing of a chief. At Bella

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
KwaKiuth NE10

As the attackers rushed into the village, the mother of the slave Siwid, suspecting who they might be, cried out in Bella Coola to ask their tribe. A chief replied and added that they had come for revenge. Her son, who had taken his full share in the attack, was told where to find his mother, so he rescued her and brought her to Bella Coola, where she was given an honourable position instead of being treated as a slave. As soon as all resistance was ended, the Bella Coola warriors gathered in the captured village to take stock of their victory. At this juncture someone noticed a canoe-load of Djeldtsmx trying to steal away unobserved; they had no weapons and the craft was promptly stopped. One of the leading warriors, Sintumhila, uncle of a man about sixty years of age in 1923, had lost several of his relatives during raids from the south, and had joined the expedition for revenge. He came rushing up and slew first one occupant of the canoe, and then another, slowly and deliberately; until, as he became frenzied with blood, he killed them all as quickly as possible. The mother of the Bella Coola slave told the raiders that there were other Djeldtsmx villages in the neighbourhood from which help would certainly be sent. So the victors seized as many boxes of olachen grease, blankets, and other valuables as possible, and fled with their captives, not stopping even to fire the village.

B K 648 726 B [72] [27] B [27]

Among the prisoners was a young woman whom the slave Siwid recognized as a chief. He determined to help her to escape and accordingly offered to aid her capture by guarding his prisoner, without telling him of her rank. The Bella Coola had retreated about two miles, their canoes strung out in a long line, when Djeldtsmx craft, hurrying up from other villages, appeared and a running fight ensued. In the rear Bella Coola canoe were two hunters, both expert shots; two loaders kept handing them charges already measured out so that they were able to keep up a rapid and well-directed fire which kept the enemy at a distance. The pursuers being directly astern, several times a single bullet passed through the bodies of two warriors, and on one occasion this led to the capsizing of one of their canoes. While the Bella Coola were watching this success, Siwid whispered to the girl to dive overboard, that she would be picked up by her friends. By swimming underwater, she deceived the Bella Coola who, though several saw her, thought she was an animal, unworthy of a bullet from one of the marksmen. She reached her fellow-countrymen and was picked up by one of the chasing canoes. Soon afterwards Siwid abandoned the hopeless pursuit. Some of the Bella Coola wanted to camp and feast, but the majority thought it safer to push on and put a safe distance between them and their enemies. There is only one good harbour, Indian Cove, in that part of the coast, where they agreed to stop for a few hours if there were no recent footprints in the

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6 ●
Carrier NE7

B C 648 726

The other agreed, so they paddled in and landed at the bottom of the village, heedless of the fact that it was full of Carriers. The Nuxalkmc people seem to have remained passive, but the angry Carriers came rushing forth and Ofmikmg spoke proudly to them:

"You would be dead as your chief if we had not lost our weapons."

The two brothers walked slowly up the long sidewalk of the village, while the Carriers skulked around, uttering threats, casting stones and shooting arrows. Some of the latter stuck in their backs, but long previously both Tsi-kmai and Ofmikmg had eaten part of a xsiutl which had rendered their bodies impervious to such wounds. Arrived at the upper end of the village, they stopped and waited, making no attempt to defend themselves, until they were killed. At intervals throughout the day the Carriers treated the two bodies with ignominy, now thrusting spears into them, now beating them, and all this time not a single Bella Coola dared even to protest, so much were they filled with fear of the Carriers who, when roused as they then were, fight like mad dogs. In the late afternoon one of the women thrust a knife into the eyes of the fallen warriors. Even this insult did not rouse the Nuxalkmc people themselves, but Winds, one of their slaves, felt called upon to take action. Before being captured, he had been a person of importance in his own home and the Bella Coola had allowed him to become a leading member of the kuxiut society; in the course of time he had become entirely reconciled to his fate, and even thought as a Bella Coola which gave him the necessary assurance to address the Carriers.

B C 648 727 ● B [567]

"Wa, wa," he said. "See the breadth of the sky.[1] I have never seen, nor have I even heard of such a thing as you have done today. Truly you have wiped your feet on all that is sacred and powerful."

This speech for the first time brought the enormity of their offence home to the Carriers. The actual taking of life did not affright them, but in their excitement they had overlooked what was to Winds the most obvious sin: they had passed and repassed on the sidewalk outside a house where a kuxiut dance was taking place. Thus reminded of the danger to which they had exposed themselves, the Carriers withdrew.

B [688]

Next day the Nuxalkmc people buried the four victims. Xmdzem had been a mighty chief and, being distantly related, they would normally have given him an elaborate funeral, but now they acted as if dazed and unaware of his prowess. A man who owned a powerful medicine put some of it in the eyes of the two who had been mutilated by the Carrier woman; as the bodies began to decompose, those who had killed them began to suffer from eye-trouble, and the woman became blind. Believing that their sin had caused their misfortunes, the Carriers fled home.

B [754]

[1] To call attention in this way to the breadth of the universe carries with it the implication that it will fall to crush those who have broken a sacred law.

B [784-195]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

shall': Devil's-club.
shalomadits: To lament ceremonially, the term used to describe the reason for a memorial potlatch. [824] Shami, "Ashes": Ancestral name created for a Sualali chief about 1910. [765] shamsk: Supernatural creature dwelling in water.
shay: Anus.
shaum: Splinters projecting upwards from the bole of a broken tree-trunk. [824]
Shamolpman-a: One of the first women to settle at Sualali in the beginning of time.
Shapts: Chief of the spring salmon.
shatsmam: Narrow strips of goat skin with wool attached, distributed at marriage. [585]
shehats: Merganser. [825] shekmadjat, "The Opening": Ceremony when the first public presents are given to the family of a future wife, following the announcement of betrothal. [584]
shi: To cure, especially with the aid of a frenzied beating of sticks. [431]
Shimatsil: Stuax man mentioned in an ancient story.
shimp, "Cure Ye!": Call of invitation to a hamat dance in the upper Bella Coola valley.
shiowa: Cloud.
shma: Thick hide, either of moose or caribou. [825] shma: Semi-circular knife used by women for cutting salmon. [412]
shmain, shmaul, or shmdjat: 1—Frenzied beating of sticks for curing purposes, especially when the patient is a member of a secret society. [755]
2—Final hamat rite at end of the ceremonial season.
shmim: To cure by means of the frenzied pounding of sticks.
Shmi, "The Charred Portion of a Half-Consumed Log": a'alt name obtained in the beginning of time.
Shmotsil: House used by a group of first settlers near Stuax in the beginning of time.
Shmualin-a: Daughter of the first settlers at Nusqalst in the beginning of time.
sha'nale: Fungus.
shlomiants: 1—Box made of strands of cedar-bark. [824]
2—Ancient name of nusak head-dress. [415] shop: Ceremonial designs executed on the exterior front wall of a house.
shshil': Rose.
Shsilkmo-a: Kaziut name of a Kimsquit man.
shsil: Wasp. [825]
Shshommants: Rock on shore of North Bentinck Arm where war trophies were washed. [727]
Shpuishit: Name of house brought down by first settlers at Sishiat in the beginning of time; the term was also applied by them to one of their female relatives.
shsi, sucatin, shasi: Parent-in-law or child-in-law. [601]
shtiq: Suitable place in the river for setting eulachen nets.
shlas: Game played with throwing stones.
shuiat: Synonym for yaxwas, the tangible or intangible prerogative possessed by some hahalat in addition to a dance rite. [424]
shuwshiw: River sculpin. [825]

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

726 hair with white eagle-down. Warriors when on a war party must not [714] drink more than four mouthfuls of water, else they would be killed. A watchman was appointed in each canoe, who sat in the bow. On landing
[271] near the village of their enemies they divided themselves into a number of parties, one house of the village being assigned to each. Then, early in the morning, when all were asleep, they rushed up to the village uttering their war cry 'ʼwai!' They took a stand at the fire which burns in the centre of the house, and if any one of the enemies succeeded in taking up his arms and came out of his bedroom they killed him. Then ●727 they entered the bedrooms, killed the men, and took the women and children along as slaves. The heads of the dead were cut off, the houses burnt, and they returned home singing war-songs. The heads which they had taken along were then scalped, and the scalps tied to each end of a pole. When they approached their village one man stood up in the bow of each canoe and swang the pole to which the scalps were attached, and they all sang songs, in which their deeds were recounted. The scalps were valued the higher the longer and fuller the hair. They were used in the Sisan'kн.

648 The following tales of war expeditions offer some points of interest.
726 About thirty or forty years ago there was a famine at Bella Coola. The people went overland to Knight Inlet, which belongs to the Tenaqtaq, a [731] tribe of the Kwakiutl, to fish there. The Tenaqtaq made fun of them, took from them the fish they caught, tore the blankets from the backs of the women, and seduced many of them. Finally the Bilqula returned home. There they held a council and resolved to make war upon the Tenaqtaq. The Tinneh joined them in this expedition. They crossed the mountains in four days. When they approached Knight Inlet they sent two spies in advance, who were to count the number of houses in the village of the Tenaqtaq. Early in the morning they attacked the houses and killed a great many men. The Tenaqtaq could not escape, as they were hemmed in by the river. The Bilqula slew them with knives, lances, and stone axes. They took away the clothes of the women, leaving them naked, and subjected them to shameful insults in revenge for the disgrace put upon their wives and daughters. Then they burnt the village.

About thirty-five years ago the Talio'mн were attacked by the Kwakiutl. Originally they intended to attack Nuqa'lkн, but the raven, according to the narrator, changed their mind, as he always protects the village of Nuqa'lkн. They came in many canoes, while most of the Talio'mн were at the lake, which is situated above that town, fishing. Four men were in charge of the village, and a number of old men and women had also remained at home. The father of Nuak'zlu'sta, who told me of these events, happened to be out picking berries, accompanied by his wife. He saw the canoes passing by and kept himself hidden. The [712] village of Talio was at that time surrounded by a strong stockade, which consisted of a double row of palisades crowned with thorns. At each corner there was a strong box fastened on the stockade like a tower. Here watchmen were stationed, who were able to shoot at the enemy while being themselves protected. At that time the Talio'mн had only four guns. The Kwakiutl sent out two spies, who reported that the village was well fortified. The Talio'mн had seen the canoes coming and were on their guard. The Kwakiutl thought that they would not be able to enter the village until after the stockade had been destroyed.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15

B 754 the body to his own house, preparatory to burying it. It was April, but [776] as they were waiting, a violent thunderstorm blew up from the east, the only time that such had ever occurred at that season. Thunder had promised to come to Xnutli's aid, but the latter had died too suddenly to make any appeal; the supernatural one had just learnt of his pro-
B tégé's death and had come rushing to his assistance. Realizing the [789] danger, the executioner and his friends hastily buried the corpse, throwing over it a number of blood-stained cloths, and finally stamping down the earth. There was a furious hurricane; trees were uprooted, houses shook, the earth over the grave seethed as if in a whirlpool and chunks of it
B were carried up into the air. Only the potency of the blood on the [789] cloths prevented the return to life of Xnutli.[8]

This second unsuccessful attack on the Kitkatla so disheartened the
B Bella Coola that they made no more raids on their northern foemen who,
T flushed with victory, became even bolder than before. As usual, the 648 Kimsquit and Tāl·io people suffered more than the inhabitants of the [721] main valley. On one of these forays, about 1855, the Kitkatla killed Q̣olxweliotl, a brother of Potles, the leading chief of the Bella Coola at the [726] time. This was contrary to all the rules of warfare since he was a member
[622] of one of the leading families and the donor of many potlatches, a man whose name was as well known as that of Potles, Nukāpinkam of Fort Rupert, or Tcubsa himself. The fame of such chiefs was enough to protect them except during the actual heat of conflict, and the Bella Coola were justly angry.

A few years later a single canoe came paddling up North Bentinck
B Arm and was beached about half a mile from the head. Scouts investi-
T gated, and returned to Q̣omqo·ts with news that the occupants were 648 Kitkatla, and that Tcubsa himself was among them. At once there was 728 heated discussion among the people of the lower valley. Many who had lost relatives in the protracted struggle wished to wipe out the party;
B others, to see what they wanted. A few daring individuals skulked
T through the forest and fired on the visitors at long range; they were [726] answered, not with bullets, but by the four times holding aloft of a moose-skin, a sign of friendly intentions. If the strangers had fired on the scouts, a fight would have ensued, but this peaceful reception disarmed suspicion.

B
[787]

[8] This tale is a curious illustration of the manner in which supernatural elements become woven into accounts which have an historical basis. It is to be assumed that the wanderers were in a suggestible state owing to privation, and readily believed that supernatural powers must have assisted them. Xnutli was feared as a sorcerer, and probably boasted of a visitation from Thunder during his wanderings. This was accepted and the incorporation of impossible incidents followed in due course.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15

Tcubsa remained encamped for several days, during which time he sent word to the Bella Coola that he regretted the death of Qolxweliotl and had come to make peace. He added that his followers had tried to dissuade him, saying that he would be killed, but he had answered that he was too great a man to allow fear to influence his actions.

Having waited for several days, the party came up the Bella Coola River, their canoe loaded with presents and eagle down, while Tcubsa's brother, Ne·slo·s, wore the mask of his tutwinam as further proof of friendly intentions. It was unusual to display one except in a susaok ceremonial, but this was an unprecedented event; he knew that he might soon be killed and he preferred to die while bearing the obvious mark of incorporation with some incident of an ancestral myth. The canoe was beached opposite the house of Potles where the crew blew eagle down into the air to mark their peaceful mission. Men had gathered from all parts of the Bella Coola valley and several hot-heads wished to disregard the safe-conducts and slay their enemies, a course which they had recommended for several days and had tried to precipitate by overt acts against the Kitkatla. Potles himself had not spoken, but he now appeared and advised the people not to harm Tcubsa, since everlasting hostility would result. Though his wishes did not entirely quiet the angry ones, they virtually assured the Kitkatla of a welcome. Potles brought forward a moose-skin, and told some of his people to hold it spread so that, when Tcubsa leapt from his canoe, he would land upon it, and could be carried to the house without putting foot to the ground. Tcubsa answered proudly that there was nothing on earth strong enough to support him, since his many potlatches had made him incomparably heavy. None the less, he accepted the honour, an assistance to landing shown only to mighty chiefs, and was carried into the house where he was seated in the far right-hand corner, an honourable location. Potles invited all the people in the vicinity, slaves as well as Bella Coola, and the inner partitions of the house had to be removed to provide space for the throng.

Though Potles had decided against the immediate killing of the Kitkatla, he had concocted a scheme to test their bravery and the sincerity of their desire for peace. No one knew of this except his nephew, Ne·xwinkai, who was to carry it out. When all were seated, the latter appeared, his face smeared with ashes, and his hair tied up in a top-knot with weasel skins as is customary during war. Ne·xwinkai moved sunwise around the house, brandishing a musket and repeatedly pointing it at Tcubsa in a threatening manner. If the Kitkatla had shown nervousness, particularly if one of them had fired his own musket, a massacre would have resulted. But they remained unmoved, confident in the prestige of their leader, while he knew that though his body might be

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15

B T 648 728

killed, his reputation would only be increased by the manner of his death. At length Ne·xwinkai fired into the air; not until a shower of eagle down was blown forth did anyone realize that his musket had been loaded with nothing more deadly. This marked the establishment of friendly relations.

B T [535] [431]

The Kitkatla had brought their own singers,[1] who now began to beat out time for Tcubsa to perform a susaok dance. He was followed by several other chiefs, and then the strangers gave presents to influential Bella Coola on the most lavish scale. Potlas likewise performed a susaok dance, and bestowed gifts on the guests to validate it; such were, of course, not returnable. A meal was then served, and after that Tcubsa made a speech of which the gist was that the Bella Coola had previously known his achievements as a warrior, they now knew his nobility and bravery in risking his life, and that the name Tcubsa could never be forgotten, irrespective of his own fate.

Tcubsa left soon afterwards. It was somewhat difficult fully to comprehend his motive in thus risking his life. Undoubtedly his main object was to display his valour and disregard of danger. Moreover, it gave him an opportunity to impress these qualities upon the Bella Coola, and thus to exhibit his prowess actually within the enemy's camp, which must have been a source of tremendous gratification to him. The alleged motive, regret at killing a chief, may have been a contributory factor.

B T 648 556 574 [721]

Although this visit was an intimation from Tcubsa that the Bella Coola need have no further fear of him, the suspicions of years could not be immediately allayed; in fact, an occasional skirmish still took place although Tcubsa himself refrained from fighting. A few years after his visit to Bella Coola, Potlas prepared to give a potlatch to which he determined to invite the northern chief. Many of the Bella Coola doubted whether the Kitkatla warriors would respect the safe-conduct usually afforded to envoys, and no one was anxious to bear the invitation. At length six chiefs volunteered for the task and set out, though with many misgivings. They stopped en route at Bella Bella where a chief of that tribe, Omxu, joined the party; he thought that he would have influence with the Kitkatla and might add protection to the Bella Coola. Fearing to be seen by any small Kitkatla bands, the delegation travelled only by night until they could actually reach Tcubsa's village. As they paddled up, they indicated their mission by singing one of Potlas's susaok songs. On hearing this, Tcubsa asked one of his Bella Coola slaves whose song it might be, and when he answered that it was one of Potlas's, Tcubsa despatched a chief, Kwinao, to invite the guests to his house. Omxu was thankful when he saw this man approaching, since he felt that it heralded a friendly welcome. The party was conducted to Tcubsa's

[1] [i.e. to the peace negotiations - ANALYST]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Kwakiuth NE10
Bellabella NE5

B
Bb
K
648
726

he too delayed action until the foremost craft of the next town had arrived. This was continued until the whole flotilla, which had extended for nearly five miles, was ranged in an irregular mass around the envoys. The captain of the last canoe was Qwaxliällis, a Fort Rupert chief and validated warrior who had taken an unassuming position because he had Bella Coola blood in his veins and was unwilling to kill his kinsmen; he had been unable to dissuade his fellows from the expedition, but had determined to take little part in it himself. The reputation of this man was so great that it was decided by universal consent to leave the fate of the messengers in his hands. But when Qwaxliällis arrived, the canoes were massed so closely that he could not even see the cause for the delay. He entered a small craft and managed to make his way to the centre of the throng, where he quickly sized up the situation and bitterly upbraided those who had failed to keep their oaths. Then he donned his war accoutrements, killed a single Bella Bella silently and unemotionally, then withdrew to the edge of the flotilla. Thus encouraged, an attack was made on the unfortunate messengers. One of them unshipped the mast, stood in the bow and offered a stout resistance by swinging this around like a heavy club, killing one of his foes. Another plunged overboard and in the confusion managed to swim ashore. When the massacre was over, Qwaxliällis called out in a loud voice:

"*Sonx*ʷ will fall upon us for our sin. Take care. I am going home."

He turned and paddled homewards, followed by the other canoes from his own village. His real reason was to assist his Bella Coola kinsmen, but none of the Kwakiutl realized that. After some discussion, the whole expedition was abandoned.

Bb
648
726
203

The Bella Bella survivor eventually made his way home with the news which was received with great astonishment, disregard of a safe-conduct to potlatch messengers being virtually unknown. The ceremony itself was postponed and finally abandoned owing to the death of the intending donor. No punishment was meted out to the offenders by a third tribe, either because the ritual was committed against a foreign tribe instead of among themselves, or because the offenders came from so many villages that it was impossible to isolate the guilty.

B
K
648
721
[728]

After this calamity, Siwid himself made no more efforts to raid the Bella Coola. About twenty-five years later, when he was an old man, he made a peaceful visit northward to establish friendly relations; he was welcomed and no more hostile acts were committed by his followers during their chief's lifetime. On his death, his son, who was also warlike in disposition, tried to stir up trouble but was restrained by the influence of the white man which had become dominant on the coast by that time.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[728] yelxmax: Peace ceremony.
Yelxlin: Bella Coola carpenter living in the last century.
yen·imut: Ceremonial error.
[534] Yentsänl: House of the first settlers at Sätlia in the beginning of time.
yet·en: Rattle.
[425] yet·umm: The sending back of a name to the family of its original owners through a return marriage, or the proposal to do so,, made by the relatives of the wife.
[583] [554] yetsalt; plural, yetsält; vocative plural, yetsalt:: A woman who has attained an honourable position through being many times repurchased from her husband; virtually, a female chief.
Yelsqwikaiya: Kitlobe chief living in the beginning of time.
Yexasila: Kusiut name of a Kimsquit man.
[825] yexdimut: Fire-holder carried by Thunder.
yexo'maitl: Old, female sea-lion.
Yexlin: Ancestral name of a Sinxl man.
Yexwomaitl: Ancestral name of a Kimsquit woman.
Yulätimut: One of the supernatural Carpenters.
[372] yuhmta: Sticks for making fire.
yuhäly: Promontory.
yu'pätl: The actual appearance of a performer at an a'alk dance during a potlatch.
Yuqwa·t: ustämg village.
Yuyuhmgl: Stone on the shore of Dean Channel believed to have been a man a long time ago.
Yuyulk"mai: 1—One of the first men to settle at Äiqalänl in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Snuhöli in the beginning of time.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Indians from both of these areas were interviewed and it was found that, except for minor details in certain beliefs, their customs were identical with those of the Bella Coola proper. Accordingly, in this monograph, the term "Bella Coola" will be taken to include the inhabitants, not only of that valley, but of South Bentinck Arm and the head of Dean Channel. Those living on South Bentinck Arm will be referred to as Täl·io people, the Bella Coola term for them; those of Dean Channel as Kimsquit, the name by which they are generally known. It is an anglicized form of the word Kimẓkwut, meaning "Canyon," by which the Bella Bella designate the people of Dean River.

VILLAGES ON SOUTH BENTINCK ARM

(28) Sätlia: on the east side of South Bentinck Arm, about a quarter of a mile from the point that marks its junction with North Bentinck Arm. Food was obtained from an ocean fish-trap.[13] Long deserted except as a summer camp.

(29) Q̣ankilst, "Island": east side of South Bentinck Arm, slightly north of the island opposite the Hot Springs on the west side of the fiord. The town took its name from this island. In summer the numerous inhabitants lived immediately opposite it, at a place where they had an ocean salmon-trap; in winter they moved to a fortified spot at the base of a mountain slightly farther to the north. This village was blotted out by a landslide one spring long ago, and the few survivors were unable to re-establish it.

*(30)[14] Tsaoltmem: on the east side of the fiord about four miles above the last-named. A small town, whose inhabitants lived on the catch from their ocean fish-trap; it was recently deserted.

[13]Ocean fish-traps work as follows:—A pen is made by a series of stakes, into which the salmon enter at high tide. It is then closed and, as the falling tide lays bare the mud, the imprisoned fish can be scooped out by hand or in hand-nets.

[14]Mackenzie did not visit either South Bentinck Arm, or Kimsquit, but it will be convenient to continue the use of asterisks to mark those towns which are said to have been inhabited at that time.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

361 (31) Ḱxdis, "Ocean Fish-Trap": on the east side of South Bentinck Arm, about a quarter of a mile from the Nuk" River. [226] It is doubtful whether this was a town, or merely a camping place of the people of Nuk" when using their salmon-trap.

*(32) Nuk": on a raised mound at the south side of the mouth of the Nuk" River, which enters the head of South [731] Bentinck Arm from the east. The meaning is unknown. This [164] was a populous town until the inhabitants were decimated by an epidemic of smallpox.

*(33) Tāl·io: on the west side of the mouth of the river of the same name which flows into South Bentinck Arm from the south. The location of this village was constantly changed, [133] owing to destructive variations in the course of the river. It was formerly a large town, and has been deserted only since 1900. This village had another name, Ṭqwantlos, "Facing," so called because its houses faced those of the town of Nuk".

*(34) Ȧs·ux", "At the Head": at the head of South Bentinck Arm there is a bay running south-west, into the upper end of which a small stream empties. The trail leading to the [487] lake at the head of Rivers Inlet follows this valley. Ȧs·ux" was located on this creek, at some little distance from the ocean; the name was derived from the geographical location of the town. It has not long been deserted and must have been a populous place to judge from the numerous repositories (II, p. 8).

(35) Q̇wapx: on the east side of the mouth of a creek flowing into the bay at the head of South Bentinck Arm, from the south. This town was of moderate size. The meaning of the name is unknown. It is thought to be in the Rivers Inlet language.

VILLAGES AT KIMSQUIT

[133] Two rivers, the Dean from the east, and the Kimsquit from the north, flow into the head of Dean Channel, and the villages of this area can be grouped according to the two rivers.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

174 reliable traditions of Carrier settlements there. The probable explanation is that the Bella Coola formerly extended over the area, either in actual fact or according to mythology, but were supplanted by the Carriers.

175 The Dean River is called Nulɔl, and the generic name for the people of the Dean valley is Sutslmx. About eighty years [101] ago a smallpox epidemic so reduced the villages on the Kims- [164] quit that the survivors abandoned them and moved to the Dean. At that time a certain Kimsquit man is believed to [731] have said: "We will take their places and kill even their dogs."

Since that time, the joint settlement has suffered one [164] epidemic after another, until a mere handful of the people [731] survive, and they are almost entirely descended from the Kimsquit River immigrants. Within the last few years, these have requested permission from the Bella Coola to abandon Kimsquit entirely and live among them. The two groups have [628] always been on the best of terms, but the Bella Coola have not forgotten the fate of the Dean River people and have been unwilling to admit the Kimsquit survivors.

Villages on the Kimsquit River, Sä·tsk'

361 *(44) Sä·tsk': this large and important town, at the mouth of the river, was deserted at the time of the smallpox epidemic.

*(45) Nuxwlst: this settlement can be grouped with the last-mentioned, although situated on the shore of Dean Channel, at the site of the present Manitou Cannery, six miles away. No meaning of the name is known.

Tribal Organization

619 The subject of this monograph is the people of the above forty-five villages. They will be referred to as a tribe, and as this term is customarily limited to a political unit, a brief justification for its use is necessary.

342 Each Bella Coola village consisted of a single row of houses, 361 built along the shore of a river or the ocean. The front doors

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 776 is in the upper Bella Coola valley near Firvale, cause cold 773 breezes by blowing them through their anuses. ułexwan·i es-[821] pecially is a prominent figure in mythology (I, p. 670), but she has not appeared for many generations and her actions belong to legend rather than to either religion or social practices. It is said that she has four sons who once wanted to break a large number of grass stalks. Finding it difficult to do so on account of their toughness, they asked their mother to freeze them; she did this and destroyed every other plant at the same time.

* 776 Another anthropomorphic being is Sxk'łätł, the super-821 natural South Wind of winter who brings storm and snow.
177 The Carriers affirm that every icicle which grows down until its end is in the snow is his walking-stick, and that to break
[731] one causes famine. Some Bella Coola have adopted this belief and carefully refrain from destroying such icicles.

* 776 Supernatural beings experience the same difficulty as mortals in reckoning the passage of time. A number of calendrical experts live in the land above, whose duty it is to record both months and years. They are called Ałmułskäłłwaiyaix or [575] Ałmułskitłnum. They have been seen occasionally, and are shown, as masked figures, at sisaok (I, p. 180), but not at kusiut dances. Two of these beings always appear, and they argue about their observations after the fashion of humans.

Another denizen of Nusmät·a of slight importance in the social life of the Bella Coola is Xemxemälotła, a friend and [575] associate of Ałquntäm. He acts as patron of kusiut dancers, and in this manner is brought to the notice of mortals. In the land above his function is to cherish Ťłäqmä·ks, a being resembling a diminutive man, created by Ałquntäm as a child to all supernatural beings. Xemxemälotła is its guardian or nurse; and for safety he usually keeps his charge in the far distant upper land above Nusmät·a, where Ałquntäm frequently visits the two. In some mysterious manner, Ťłäqmä·ks has been [777] known to reach this earth, giving good fortune to the lucky finder. He is in many cases spoken of as "The Cherished

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 787 843 If a woman dreams that she has caught two salmon, two small birds, or is holding two infants, the birth of twins is foretold. This type of explanation is obvious; in fact, these examples lie on the border-line between direct and symbolic interpretations.

* 787 843 775 Another indication of approaching pregnancy is for a woman to dream of a dead relative; this means that the latter will soon be re-born. An elderly Kimsquit man mentioned that some fifty years earlier his mother dreamt that her dead mother came to her, saying that she was lonesome and wished to return. Soon afterwards she conceived, and the daughter born was considered to be the reincarnation of her own grandmother whose names she was promptly given. [553] At the present time, this informant addresses his sister as sister, though he states that as a child he was taught to call her grandmother. As already mentioned, if a new-born infant is a reincarnation, the fact can often be recognized by holes or dimples in the ears, relics of previous borings for rings. Unless such a birth has been foretold in a dream, it is impossible to learn whom the child re-embodies.

* 787 A dream of frequent occurrence in Bella Coola is the return of the sleeper to the scenes and activities of his childhood. [761] This always signifies a long life. Strangely enough, to dream of being nailed in one's coffin and carried to the grave is translated conversely, and likewise indicates a long life. It is remembered that there were many dreams of fire before the outbreak of the smallpox epidemic, so it has since been assumed that such presage an outbreak of this disease. [731]

* 787 224 The only dreams of which the interpretations are wholly symbolic are those experienced by hunters. The Bella Coola explain this by saying that hunters always observe ceremonial chastity and their spirits are, therefore, in a receptive condition to supernatural impressions. [785] When a man has set his traps, he is able to tell from his dreams whether or not any animals have been caught:

To dream that a canoe has been upset in the river and that

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

726 hair with white eagle-down. Warriors when on a war party must not [714] drink more than four mouthfuls of water, else they would be killed. A watchman was appointed in each canoe, who sat in the bow. On landing
[271] near the village of their enemies they divided themselves into a number of parties, one house of the village being assigned to each. Then, early in the morning, when all were asleep, they rushed up to the village uttering their war cry 'wai!' They took a stand at the fire which burns in the centre of the house, and if any one of the enemies succeeded in taking up his arms and came out of his bedroom they killed him. Then 727 they entered the bedrooms, killed the men, and took the women and children along as slaves. The heads of the dead were cut off, the houses burnt, and they returned home singing war-songs. The heads which they had taken along were then scalped, and the scalps tied to each end of a pole. When they approached their village one man stood up in the bow of each canoe and swang the pole to which the scalps were attached, and they all sang songs, in which their deeds were recounted. The scalps were valued the higher the longer and fuller the hair. They were used in the Sisan'kH.

648 The following tales of war expeditions offer some points of interest.
726 About thirty or forty years ago there was a famine at Bella Coola. The people went overland to Knight Inlet, which belongs to the Tenaqtaq, a [731] tribe of the Kwakiutl, to fish there. The Tenaqtaq made fun of them, took from them the fish they caught, tore the blankets from the backs of the women, and seduced many of them. Finally the Bilqula returned home. There they held a council and resolved to make war upon the Tenaqtaq. The Tinneh joined them in this expedition. They crossed the mountains in four days. When they approached Knight Inlet they sent two spies in advance, who were to count the number of houses in the village of the Tenaqtaq. Early in the morning they attacked the houses and killed a great many men. The Tenaqtaq could not escape, as they were hemmed in by the river. The Bilqula slew them with knives, lances, and stone axes. They took away the clothes of the women, leaving them naked, and subjected them to shameful insults in revenge for the disgrace put upon their wives and daughters. Then they burnt the village.

About thirty-five years ago the Talio'mH were attacked by the Kwakiutl. Originally they intended to attack Nuqa'lkH, but the raven, according to the narrator, changed their mind, as he always protects the village of Nuqa'lkH. They came in many canoes, while most of the Talio'mH were at the lake, which is situated above that town, fishing. Four men were in charge of the village, and a number of old men and women had also remained at home. The father of Nusk'slu'sta, who told me of these events, happened to be out picking berries, accompanied by his wife. He saw the canoes passing by and kept himself hidden. The [712] village of Talio was at that time surrounded by a strong stockade, which consisted of a double row of palisades crowned with thorns. At each corner there was a strong box fastened on the stockade like a tower. Here watchmen were stationed, who were able to shoot at the enemy while being themselves protected. At that time the Talio'mH had only four guns. The Kwakiutl sent out two spies, who reported that the village was well fortified. The Talio'mH had seen the canoes coming and were on their guard. The Kwakiutl thought that they would not be able to enter the village until after the stockade had been destroyed.

7:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1900 NE6 Bellacoola NE6

776 ceremonial, and sometimes in 'the kn'siut. The following song belongs to 575 his mask and dance :—

[539] Nanemō'istaxuit ti q'oyaki'mtst'aix·. Nō'noq'awēxum ts'ɛn t'ayōlɛlat'aix· ayati smanō's ti sōnx· t'aix·, wā, nān, ai!

("Cry now, as though you had left me! I shall tie up my hair, warriors, like the Bear of Heaven.")

776 At sunset stands an enormous post which is called Nutēexoa'axtatas ti 821 Sōnx· t'aix·. It supports the sky, and prevents the Sun from falling down into the lower world. The trail of the Sun is described as a bridge which was built by Masmasala'nix. The bridge is as broad as the distance between the winter solstice and the summer solstice. The Sun walks, his face turned towards the west. In summer he walks on the right-hand side of the bridge, in winter on the left-hand side of the bridge, which explains the varying heights of the sun in the course of the year. The extreme right and extreme left of the bridge are called Sē'ɛmt ("the place where he sits down," that is, the solstices). At each of these points a being is placed who is called Alk·x·ē'lɛnɛm (Plate X, Fig. 3). It is their duty to see that the Sun does not tarry too long at the solstice. If in summer or winter he should be inclined to stay too long or to return too soon, they regulate his course. When the Sun tarries too long at the winter solstice, the people say, "ēx tsēs pa'nia" ("salmon will be dried late this year"). If he leaves it without tarrying, they say, "ēk·!x· tsēs pa'nia" ("soon we shall dry sālmon"). Three guardians named Naqumiqa'otsaix (Plate X, Fig. 1) accompany the Sun on his course, dancing around him all the time. The halo is called Itwu'xtsia ti Mānl t'aix· ("the cape of our father"). A sun-[731] dog that appears westward from the Sun is called Alqōl ti Mānl t'aix· ("the [753] painted face of our father"). The Bella Coola believe that when it drops down to our earth, it causes epidemics. During an eclipse the Sun is believed to lose his torch. The rays of the Sun are his eyelashes.

There are twenty-four guardians appointed to take care of the sky. They are called Nexolak·ai'x·. According to tradition, the sky must be continually fed with firewood. Once upon a time they put too much firewood into the sky and made it burst. All the pieces except one, called S'al-walō'sɛm, fell down to our earth. The fragments hit the faces of the twenty-four guardians, and distorted them. They tried to mend the sky, but did not know how to do it. They went down the river, and came to Masmasala'nix, whose assistance they asked. Masmasala'nix gathered up the broken pieces, and glued them together. Up to that time the Sun had staid in the east, but now he began to go on his daily course. At that time Masmasala'nix built the bridge over which the Sun travels every day. He placed a wedge in the opening of the sky, into which the Nexolak·ai'x· have to put the firewood. This opening is called K·awa'umsta, that is, "mouth kept open by means of a wedge." Masmasala'nix spoke: "The sky shall not burst again. This wedge shall keep its mouth open." The following kō'siut song refers to these deities: — 776 821 [539]

Ai'mats tā mnatsai' tōsxts ti sō'nx·tsgi t'aix.
Aiēlx tā mnatsai' ōl ti S'ałwalō'szms ti Sōnx· t'aix.
Sk·a ya'hxtox ti si'lxnō tā mnatsai'.
Sk·a anōga wa xxxmē'x ti K·awa'umstask· ti Sōnx· t'aix· tā mnatsai.

("My child perished like the sky when it broke.
Go to S'ałwalō'szm of the sky, my child!
Gladden my heart, my child!
Sit down in the mouth of the sky, my child!")

Our world is called A'nēkō'ōł, or Qenk·i'łst, that is, "the land below." It is an island swimming in the boundless ocean. In the far east a giant is sitting with legs apart, who is called Ałēp!ałaxtnaix·. He holds a long stone bar in his outstretched hands. The earth is fastened to this stone bar by means of two stone ropes. Sometimes he gets tired, and moves his hands to take better hold of the stone bar. Then we have an earthquake; and the Bella Coola say, "Snēnik"pstak·imtōłs," that is, "he takes hold of our world." When he moves our earth westward, we have epidemics. When he moves it eastward, all sickness disappears. 772 776 823 [131] [753]

In the ocean lives a being called Sēłsāts, who twice every day swallows the water of the sea and gives it forth again. This is the cause of the tides. A mask representing this being appears in the kō'siut ceremonial. He is represented as a human being, the face of which is painted with white stripes, which symbolize the various levels of the sea.

The world below us is the country of the ghosts (kōłk"łōłē'mx·). It is called Asiutā'nem. Descriptions of the ghosts' country are principally obtained from shamans who believe they have visited that country during a trance. According to the statement of an old woman who believed that as a little girl she had visited the country of the ghosts during a trance, the entrance to the country of the ghosts is through a hole situated in each house, between the doorway and the fireplace. The country of the ghosts stretches along the sandy banks of a large river. There is a hill behind their village, the base of which is covered with sharp stones. When it is summer here, it is winter there. When it is night here, it is day there. The ghosts do not walk on their feet, but on their heads. Their language is different from the one spoken on earth. The souls, on reaching the lower world, receive new names. The village of the ghosts is said to be surrounded by a fence. They have a dancing-house, in which they perform 772 775 [756] [787]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

855 well, and these are soon learnt by the child who is fortunate
[867] enough to have many kinsmen. Primarily, responsibility rests with the parents for the care and support of their offspring, but they have the advice, assistance, and material aid of their relatives. Nor are these limited to the near kindred of either father or mother; all members of the ancestral family take their part. Housemates, also, even if unrelated, take an interest in any child who shares their habitation, irrespective of his rank.

Much of the care bestowed on children is of a magical nature and must be reserved until a later chapter. Little boys 868 follow their fathers on hunting expeditions and so acquire knowledge by practical experience, as do girls from their mothers with regard to household tasks and feminine occupations.
867 Even small children are quick to notice the attention paid to the orders of chiefs, and carry out their commands without demur. A disobedient child is beaten or thrown into cold 861 water; the parents usually act in such cases, though a near relative does not hesitate to do so, especially if he is a chief.
857 Like all other children, Bella Coola boys and girls are fond of 867 stories and listen eagerly to the tales told in the long evenings by some old man or woman. Many of these are somewhat 538 obscene, but they serve to teach much ancient lore, and at the same time to emphasize many taboos and restrictions which are thus assimilated without definite schooling. They illus-
[626] trate the laws of morality, as does the public disapproval shown to anyone who infringes some point of etiquette or behaviour.
[825] If a child makes fun of a cat-fish or a bull-head, he is not told to stop doing so; instead, one of his elders tells him how, in the distant past, there was a famine, and advises him not to scoff at the fish which alone saved his ancestors from starvation at that time. If a rude little boy laughs at a maimed or deformed [732] man, he is told of Ałałałi, a Bella Bella urchin who repeatedly mocked a one-eyed man and presently, himself, lost the sight of an eye.

867 "Don't laugh at cripples, blind people, or those who are [735]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

the most human of all substances, and, therefore, a potent protection against supernatural beings. It is valuable as a defence against evil monsters, but it is equally deadly to shamans and other human beings with supernatural powers. In the distant past, Raven taught mankind that to sleep with a menstruating woman would so blind a man that he would be unsuccessful in hunting. The belief is that animals, knowing everything that takes place, avoid one who is so unclean. One old man mentioned that he had failed to obey this injunction and considered his loss of virility as a punishment, overlooking the fact that he was over seventy years of age.

The coming of adolescence in a boy is recognized by change in voice and the other usual indications. He is neither taboo nor unclean, and consequently does not have to undergo any restrictions on his actions. There is no ceremony to mark the entry of a youth into adult membership of the tribe; instead, this comes gradually and puberty is no more than an indication of increasing age and strength.

Marriage

Like most so-called "primitive" peoples, the Bella Coola regard the married state as the normal condition of man. Anyone unwilling to wed is considered unnatural. Since the number of the sexes is approximately equal, the only persons forced to live alone are elderly widows and widowers, and those crippled, either mentally or physically. Such individuals are looked upon as unfortunate; in fact, they have failed in one of the most fundamental of life's struggles. Man provides fish and game, builds houses and canoes, while woman collects berries, makes baskets, cooks, and performs the multitudinous small household tasks.

"Is it not to the benefit of each to marry?" say the Bella Coola.

Marriage is not a mere economic arrangement, nor is its sole function to regulate relations between the sexes. Its most important feature is that it governs the status of the child.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

phases of activity, leaving here only certain rules about diet and a number of prohibitions which hunters must observe. 784

FOOD TABOOS OBSERVED BY WOMEN 262

Women must not eat bear meat. To do so would derange the catamenia and cause profuse growth of hair. 562

Women of child-bearing age must not eat beaver. To do so would cause a difficult delivery. [841] [826]

A woman of child-bearing age must not eat roasted salmon until the sticks have been removed which hold it in front of the fire. She will bear twins if this injunction is disregarded. [844] [845]

TABOOS OBSERVED BY HUNTERS

No hunter or fisherman may leave the village in the morning if he has been foolish enough to break the night's fast. It is customary to depart at dawn and take a small meal when nearing the hunting or fishing-ground. 224 [226] [264]

No hunter may drink water in which dog salmon have been soaked. Animals dislike this liquid and avoid a man with it in his stomach.

When traps have been set, and a party of hunters is sitting around the camp-fire in the evening, no one must pass between it and one of his fellows. If this should be done, heedlessly, animals would disregard the bait that has been set out.

When mountain goat hunters are travelling, the most expert must lead the party. When he sits down, so must the others, and no one can change places with him. This is said to be a custom of the Carriers as well as of the Bella Coola. [171]

When a hunter is cutting up a bear, he must be careful not to cut a vein which is said to run across the chest and down each fore-paw. To do so causes sickness. [825] [753]

When a hunter kills a bear, he must place either the skull or the whole head in a tree near the scene of the kill, otherwise he will become blind. In some families, the man remove only an eye, place it in a notched stick and set this under an over- [752]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

224 hanging rock where no rain can penetrate. Long ago, some [732] hunter failed to do this and became blind in consequence, hence the rite has since been carried out.

When a hunter is in the field, his wife must not swing. To do this causes him to go up into lofty and dangerous places as she rises on the swing, and also destroys the power laboriously accumulated by ceremonial chastity.

Ritual Acts

796 Ceremonialism is an extremely important aspect of Bella
226 Coola life, but most of their rites are social or religious rather than magical, so that descriptions of them belong to other 789 chapters. In connection with the taking of the first olachen and salmon, however, a number of ritual acts are performed to bring about desired ends; the element of propitiation is not entirely absent, but on the whole they may be considered as magical.

Rites connected with the first olachen

226 At the height of the olachen run, the fish are so abundant 796 that they can be taken profitably in large purse-nets. They 574 do not, however, come simultaneously, and eager fishermen keep watching for their arrival and catching the straggling forerunners in hand dip-nets. These fish must not be eaten immediately. Each fisherman arranges a box in the front part of his house in which he deposits them as taken; if several men are doing this in a single dwelling, one box for each will be arranged near the front-door. Whenever a dance is held, eagle down is blown over the receptacle to placate the olachen and prevent them from being disturbed by the noise. As soon as a man has caught enough for a feast, he invites all his fellows to his house and the fish are distributed. It is taboo for any woman to share this meal, and it is most improper for a man to summon his neighbours until he has enough olachen to allow each guest to carry home a plentiful supply for his family. In former times, there used to be a number of meals of this kind, quantities of ducks and geese, and the inhabitants of the inland villages sometimes made hunting expeditions to the nesting places of wild-fowl in the lakes of the interior uplands. Although numbers of birds were sometimes killed in this way, they were never a steady article of diet. The same is true of grouse. Always plentiful, these birds were commonly killed, but never in large numbers.

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The basis of the food supply was fish. The river teemed with salmon, which enabled the country to support its relatively large population. Spring, sockeye, hump-back, dog, and cohoe salmon, all entered the river in thousands during the spring and summer, while the steel-head could be caught throughout the year. They were taken in weirs and their flesh smoked for winter use. Throughout the year, salmon was the principal article of diet. Second in importance was the olachen, a fish somewhat resembling a herring, which entered the river in great numbers during April or May. They were taken in purse-like nets,* allowed to rot for ten days or two weeks, and then boiled. The grease was skimmed off and kept indefinitely to be used as a relish for other foods. It was always a sign of poverty if a person were obliged to eat berries without olachen grease. Trout and bull-heads were found in the river, but were not sufficiently plentiful to be of importance.

Although no form of agriculture was practised, the Bella Coola used vegetable food to a considerable extent. Berries were abundant; some were eaten raw, but many more were pounded into a pulpy mass and dried in the sun. Cakes prepared in this way kept indefinitely and formed one of the regular winter foods. The bark of the hemlock and cottonwood was eaten, as well as the roots of many plants. In recent years many of these have not been used, so that an investigator is apt to overlook their great importance in early times. Although useless for food, the cedar was the corner-stone of Bella Coola material culture. From its trunk were split out, with wedges, the wide planks which formed

*See Appendix A for a description of olachen fishing.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

of their occurrence in most ancestral myths.[6] There seems to be no mythological explanation for the casting of a copper into the fire after the passing of the representation of a deceased relative, but the desire of chiefs to use them at potlatches is the result of their use under similar circumstances by their ancestors. Some ancestral myths lack reference to coppers, but their use is common to all, whether or not embodied in such. It is said to be easier for a chief to acquire coppers if they had been used by his ancestors, but this is not essential. 556* 773 [769]

When arranging for the appearance of a dead relative, the donor of a potlatch is careful either to possess a copper, or to be able to borrow one at the right moment. As soon as the masked figure has disappeared, the donor stands up, breaks or bends his copper, and throws it into the fire "to make bone for the deceased." No matter how valuable a copper may have been, it is now worthless; its value has been expended on the purpose for which it has just been employed. It lies unheeded in the flames, a valueless article belonging to no one. 556* 769

At some convenient time, either hours or days later, any chief may remove the copper and give it to a poor man, only taking care to choose an individual who has not recently received one. It is said that the gift is "to patch his canoe." It is now the poor man's property, but it has no value, since no goods have been expended for it. The new owner straightens and repairs it, if necessary by riveting on the broken piece, thus making it ready for further use. The poor man may keep the copper for years, or it may be only a few weeks before some chief, preparing for a potlatch, offers, perhaps, $20, for it. In the old days, values were computed in slaves, canoes, salmon, and other commodities, but now in dollars. If two chiefs should happen to want it, the poor man may haggle about the price, though in such a case the two rivals would probably agree amicably rather than lower their dignity by seeming to be interested in a matter of money. It is to the advantage of a 556* [735] [325] 435 556* 437

[6]Abalone-shells and moosehides are treasured for the same reason; the former are mentioned in several origin myths, the latter in two at least. [237]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*556 chief to pay somewhat lavishly, since the value of the copper [435] depends on the amount expended on it.

[437] The $20 received by the poor man must not be casually spent. He is expected to invite the whole village to his house, *556 otherwise he would never again be given a copper. The heralds call everyone to the house, the singers as usual being the first •735 to arrive. They beat out the kusiut song of anyone, to which [533] the owner dances; the songs are used one after another, until [575] almost every member of the society has danced. Sisaok songs may then be used in the same way. Since the supernatural beings are not present, the rite has no religious significance; it is merely a social affair. At the close of the dancing, the poor man distributes food to all, equivalent in value to the money received. It is probable that poor men sometimes give away slightly less than they have received, although any noticeable laxity in this would be punished by the receipt of no further coppers. The recipient of a copper from a fire derives no direct gain from it, though it is to his indirect advantage, since a person who has given away food is likely to receive larger presents on future occasions than one who has not.

435 Meanwhile the chief owning the copper is unable to use it at his potlatch since the value, dependent on the goods ex- *556 pended for it, is only $20, a sum so small that to use it would be insulting to his dead ancestor. There are several ways of increasing its value:

(1) By Painting. Taking advantage of some ceremony [532] when a number of people are present, the owner gives a carpenter $10, for example, with a request that he paint on his copper a representation of the crest used by his, the owner's, first ancestor, when coming to this earth. Henceforth the value of the copper is $30.

435 (2) By Naming. The Bella Coola say that among the 552 Kwakiutl names are given to almost all coppers; in Bella Coola it is a rare practice. Occasionally, a chief creates a *556 name for his copper and validates this by presents to all the

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

855 well, and these are soon learnt by the child who is fortunate
[867] enough to have many kinsmen. Primarily, responsibility rests with the parents for the care and support of their offspring, but they have the advice, assistance, and material aid of their relatives. Nor are these limited to the near kindred of either father or mother; all members of the ancestral family take their part. Housemates, also, even if unrelated, take an interest in any child who shares their habitation, irrespective of his rank.

Much of the care bestowed on children is of a magical nature and must be reserved until a later chapter. Little boys 868 follow their fathers on hunting expeditions and so acquire knowledge by practical experience, as do girls from their mothers with regard to household tasks and feminine occupations.
867 Even small children are quick to notice the attention paid to the orders of chiefs, and carry out their commands without demur. A disobedient child is beaten or thrown into cold 861 water; the parents usually act in such cases, though a near relative does not hesitate to do so, especially if he is a chief.
857 Like all other children, Bella Coola boys and girls are fond of 867 stories and listen eagerly to the tales told in the long evenings by some old man or woman. Many of these are somewhat
538 obscene, but they serve to teach much ancient lore, and at the same time to emphasize many taboos and restrictions which are thus assimilated without definite schooling. They illus-
[626] trate the laws of morality, as does the public disapproval shown to anyone who infringes some point of etiquette or behaviour.
[825] If a child makes fun of a cat-fish or a bull-head, he is not told to stop doing so; instead, one of his elders tells him how, in the distant past, there was a famine, and advises him not to scoff at the fish which alone saved his ancestors from starvation at that time. If a rude little boy laughs at a maimed or deformed [732] man, he is told of Ałałāls, a Bella Bella urchin who repeatedly mocked a one-eyed man and presently, himself, lost the sight of an eye.

867 "Don't laugh at cripples, blind people, or those who are [735]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

poverty-stricken," say the elders. "If you do, you will become like them yourself." 867 [735]

As a boy grows older, his father insists that he wash, pray, and practise other ritual acts likely to win approval from supernatural beings. He is frequently beaten to inure him to hardship. By the time a youth is eleven or twelve years of age he has become fully acquainted with the principles of the potlatch system and a wise parent teaches him to remember debts. Taking his son to some quiet spot in the woods, he makes a small bundle of cedar twigs, for example, and tells him: [869] [861] 211 867

"So-and-so at Bella Bella gave you fifteen beaver skins. When you see this bundle you must think of those skins."

Then he takes another bunch, perhaps of spruce twigs, to represent a present from a Rivers Inlet chief. A bundle of nettle fibre may stand for a Kimsquit debt; one ornamented with a tuft of undyed cedar-bark, a gift from a Täl·io chief; a solid piece of alder stem, a local debt; another section of alder stem with a notch in it, another local debt, and so on. The son is expected to listen attentively, and to repeat after his father what each represents. Then the pupil turns his back and the instructor alters the positions of the bundles. His father tells him to look at them and repeat what each signifies. This is repeated time after time until a boy becomes familiar with remembering debts by means of symbols. In later years, if he becomes a chief, he will use this method for bearing his indebtedness in mind. No system of standardized signs has been evolved, each individual merely designates what he wishes by a mark which he alone can recognize.

A child grows up in the community, absorbing information and lore without conscious effort, learning the activities which he will later practise, fearing the supernatural beings that are dreaded by his parents, marvelling at the power of those endowed with supernatural ability, and generally fitting himself for the struggle of life. If his parents are wealthy, he may be fortunate enough to be given a susook name and to partake in 867 [556]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

place in the manner already described. After passing through the fourth hole, or for the fourth time through the single opening, the two go to some lonely pool in the forest where the mourner washes. They light a fire and deposit on it some of his clothing, placing the rest in a stump or hollow tree. The friend always takes with him a supply of new clothing which the person being purified puts on and returns home, cleansed from the immediate taint of death. 764 783

The above rite protects widower or widow, but does not alter the fact that for one year they are ceremonially "unclean" and must obey sundry taboos. They must not go to the bank of the river, or even appear at the front door of a house facing it. To do so is displeasing to the salmon; for the same reason they cannot eat this fish unless it has been smoked. If they wish to travel on the ocean, they cannot embark at the village but must go through the woods to a point on the shore and there be picked up by the canoe. There is a regular "Widows and Widowers Rock" about a mile on either side of every village on the ocean. The one near Kimsquit is called Sq̣tan'ti, and there is thought to be blood on it. A person mourning a consort must wear a hat decorated with miniature coppers of which the bottoms are bent upwards; should this be omitted, when the offender remarries, the new husband or wife will soon die. 765 [783] [825] [262] [484] [292] [761]

In addition to these taboos, there are customary laws of behaviour, an infraction of which renders the offender liable to social disapproval. Widows and widowers should cut their hair short, and the former should rub ashes on the face. Sexual intercourse is prohibited to both sexes; if this rule is broken, the relatives of the deceased are insulted. Remarriage should not take place for at least a year, although among poor people it sometimes occurs after only six months, in which case all taboos and restrictions automatically cease. There is no law on this point, but it is considered fitting to allow this period to elapse. These requirements clearly indicate that bereavement is not merely an individual affair, but entails social and [626] [302] [834] [587] [735]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

(a) Recorded as song VII D 28a, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard. The tune is said to have been handed down for more than two hundred years. 533*

(b) That is: Let us stop paying the customary respect to.

(c) It is not remembered which chief was thus held up to the scorn of his fellows.

(d) That is: He does not act in accordance with the traditions of the name he uses.

(e) That is: The dancer is feeble. This refers to another nusqwal dancer who, owing to his poverty, had not performed for many years. It is not known whether he was the same individual as the one derided in the first part of the song. [558]

(f) To flaunt another's poverty in his face is the height of Bella Coola rudeness. [735]

(g) That is: He, too, was a nusqwal.

(h) The ancestor from whom the prerogative was derived. [576]

(i) That is: In virtue of my nusqwal ability. This appears to be a departure from the usual theme of a mocking song.

*Nusqwal Song Used for Q̇wixlâkilak*ʷ, a Kimsquit Man(a)

A Tukesdjidjsdumalnuwit	yaqwixlâkilakwsudai	skâ'ânutsâyenmixwais
Please do not sleep,	*Q̇wixlâkilak*ʷ(b),	listen to your sewaqoptânuswais drums(c).

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

B Sânanmaodjâmâdu	snuyaiyatuwikais	âltâltâmstaqailsandai
I alone	am content(d);	is increasing aiyadispxliwatsdai

my prerogative(e).

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

C The third part has been forgotten.

(a) Recorded as song VII D 29a, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.

(b) It is not uncommon in sisaok and a'alk songs for the dancer to address himself in this way. [575]

(c) That is: Be ready to listen to drums beaten at one of your ceremonies.

(d) The dancer is deriding another nusqwal who has not performed for a long time. [558]

(e) This song differs slightly from the usual mocking type in lack of specific references to the person derided; lack of reference to an ancestral myth, however, shows that it was not composed for a potlatch. [556]

Song of a Kimsquit Nusqwal(a)

A Dipas-uqo	pâlnâlaix	dastâlumqwos	disisut
That is he,	the impostor,	the chief	of the paddle(b).

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

 539

his left cheek until the blood flows, takes also a mouthful of his own urine, and spits out the mixture. 776 823

The following instance of this belief was recorded. [789]

A Bella Coola chief and a number of followers were once at Kwatna where they had been gambling for stakes of mountain goat grease. Two of the men had lost their supply, so they went into the mountains between Kwatna and Restoration Bay to replenish it. They saw two goats, killed them, and at once two more appeared in the same place; these they also slew. When a fifth and sixth goat appeared and were likewise dispatched, one of the hunters tried to restrain his comrade, saying that such phenomenal success must be due to supernatural power which they should not abuse. They stopped firing, cut the grease from their quarry, and started on the return journey. Presently the mountain began to tilt upwards before their feet. They had no ropes, and almost in despair concealed themselves in a small rock shelter. Their dogs too felt the movement and barked in terror. Fortunately, the mountain did not rise more than a few feet and soon subsided, so that the men escaped. [525]

The attitude of the Bella Coola to supernatural powers of all kinds may be termed a doctrine of Opportunism. Supernatural beings abound and constantly play a part in the affairs of mortals. An alert and bold man can take advantage of these opportunities and obtain assistance, but he who hesitates is indeed lost. Certain types of assistance are most commonly granted to orphans and other unfortunates; accounts of these belong to the realm of mythology and will be described in a later chapter. On the whole the supernatural ones do not show discrimination in conferring boons, and the man who is quick to take advantage of them is the one to whom success comes. 776 [736]

Supernatural Elements in Human Beings

The Bella Coola believe that in the human body itself there are certain supernatural elements. Neither sticks nor stones can move, because they lack these attributes possessed by men and animals. Considering the firm belief of the Bella Coola in the omnipresence of the supernatural, it is not surprising that they should ascribe the phenomena of health and sickness, 774

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The married sons of a chief usually live in his house, and if he is very powerful the husbands of his daughters may also reside with him. Such a man is at the zenith of power, surrounded by a close group, formed of elderly relatives, of children and grandchildren. Connections by marriage are also added to the family group. At the present time, for example, one Bella Coola man is looking after his brother's widow, and it is felt that she is a member of his family. 592 556 622 602

Another way in which a rich man can increase the size of his family is by adoption. Parents who have lost an infant may adopt the child of some member of the ancestral family of either father or mother. The matter is usually arranged soon after birth, and the transfer takes place immediately after weaning. The real parents are willing since they know that the adopting parents will be able to validate valuable prerogatives and names for the child, which they themselves are unable to do. This desire for their child's welfare overrules parental love. In such cases the real father or mother can likewise bestow names and other prerogatives on the child, who really becomes a member of two families. This is often done by an old couple whose own children have married and moved away, and who thus find themselves lonely. It is considered disgraceful for parents to allow their children to be adopted by anyone not a member of their ancestral family, since that would be an admission of inability to bring up a child in the path of his ancestors. 556 597 614 [888]

"Your father was not strong," could be said to such a child as a reproach.

In the case of an orphan some wealthy relative is almost always ready to adopt him. Consequently, as he grows up, he receives his full share of the ancestral origin myth, and the names embodied therein, so that the loss of his own parents is of little consequence in the course of life. Occasionally a child is not adopted by relatives, and then his fate is indeed hard. 736 597

shelter in the house of any chief, and shared in the food which was being distributed at the almost continuous ceremonial feasts. Now, each family lives alone and no one feels any responsibility for this old man. [178]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

597 736 Ignorant of his ancestral names, and lacking the means to validate them even if someone should tell them to him, owning no hunting-grounds, the unfortunate infant is little better than a slave. This is almost unthinkable except in the extremely rare contingency of a child being left without relatives.

Although public opinion does not impel kindly treatment to orphans left without kindred, yet many Bella Coola have charitable dispositions and it is not unknown for a family to adopt and tend an infant without reason or hope of reward. One old man mentioned how his mother and a Chilkotin child had been born on the same day when a party of the latter had been encamped near Nusqalst. A few days later they left for the interior, abandoning the infant. The grandfather of the old man chanced to pass their camp while the ashes of their fire were still warm and found the baby, whom he brought back, to be a brother to his own daughter. His wife suckled the two, giving each a breast, and treating the foundling as her own. When the boy grew into manhood, he went back to his own people, but never forgot his adopted parents. Forty years later he visited Bella Coola, bringing with him his own wife and family. The old man who related this incident recalled the manner in which the Chilkotin had instructed his children to regard him as their brother.

597 [768] Children are not the only persons to be adopted. On the death of an adult his relatives may "adopt to replace" someone who has a striking facial resemblance to the deceased. Thus, some time after the death of his sister, a certain man was in Bella Bella and saw a Bella Bella woman who closely resembled her. He desired to adopt her, and since he was a man of importance, his wish was granted. To legalize the transaction [431] he distributed valuable presents among the Bella Bella. A person so adopted does not usually change his abode, nor does [601] he lose membership in his own family; instead, he becomes a [835] member of two, with full rights to names and prerogatives in both, is addressed with the same kinship terms as if related by blood, and is likewise considered a member of the family as far as incest rules are concerned.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

carried out, her relatives are expected to return to her husband's family the goods received during the engagement and at the wedding. The matter is then settled. If the deceased has a younger sister, cousin, or other near relative, an effort is usually made to have this individual replace the dead wife.[9] No further goods are given, except perhaps a few to add dignity to the transference; the new wife merely replaces her dead sister and the bond between the two families continues unbroken. If the husband should die, his wife's relatives are considered honourable and endowed with the minds of chiefs if they restore to his relatives the presents which they have received. But if the wife can be remarried to one of his relatives, there is no need for this and the two families continue to enjoy the mutual strength acquired by the long period of engagement and exchange of benefits and presents.

If death takes place after the repurchasing of the wife, there is no need to return presents, since the rebuying has cancelled the expenditure by the husband. If children have been born and the woman has long become practically a member of her husband's family, she is buried by them as a matter of course, but should she die soon after marriage, her own family usually performs the obsequies.

With the passing of many years of married life, the repurchasing several times of the woman, and the birth of children, she becomes so much a member of her husband's family that his death seldom ends the arrangement. The widow is by no means a slave and usually is master of her own destiny, especially if she has children and has reached a position of eminence in the community. Since the desirability of preserving the bond between the two families is fully realized, it is accordingly customary for a widow to wed her husband's brother, or a husband his deceased wife's sister. But in each case the ritual of marriage and exchange of presents must be [9] The native term emphasizes the fact that the new wife is virtually inherited by her husband.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

838 woman who dressed as a man and used to hunt successfully,
[171] though she was married. Such practices are said to have been not uncommon among the Haida. The women were considered bold and independent, but the Bella Coola of today know little *[776] about them, and are not even certain that Sxunts is responsible for a female assuming the actions of a male. It will be readily understood that he is not regarded with much awe, nor does he influence their daily lives.

*776 Another supernatural being, uninfluential though resident [822] upon earth, is Echo, Setsaläni, "The Voice Repeater." The Bella Coola regard him as a male being, in human form, and recognize his presence whenever sounds reverberate. He figures in mythology, occasionally appears as a masked figure at [575] kusiut or sisaok dances, but has neither helped nor harmed human beings for so many generations that he is accordingly neglected.

*776 A supernatural being from whom many Bella Coola have 787 had unpleasant visitations is Shimsila, the cause of nightmares.
828 He is a man-like creature with black face and an enormous head which he constantly scratches. His home is in Nusmät-a, but he frequently descends to this world and frightens sleepers. If a person scratches his head while asleep it is because he has just seen Shimsila doing so, and if he walks in his sleep it is to escape this supernatural visitor. A sleep-walker is usually aroused by having a bucket of water thrown over him. A ●[751] person frequently troubled by Shimsila can avoid him by painting a black circle around each eye before going to sleep.

*776 With the exception of Ałquntäm, the supernatural beings thus far described play little part in the lives of the Bella Coola. They believe in their existence, but do not expect to meet them, and do not believe that they exercise much influence on the course of their daily life. Supernatural beings of this ineffective type are exceptional. A man goes into remote parts of the 781 mountains, or even into little frequented areas around his *776 village, with mingled fear lest he encounter an actively malicious being, and hope that he may meet a benevolent one. More-

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

receive such pretty objects, restores the sick, though she does not herself come to do so. 755 756 *

The shaman now sends a young man out to fill his curing basin. When this is done, he carries it around the fire, once, sunwise, and sets it down beside the patient. The practitioner drinks from it, and casts some eagle down on the surface. If it revolves sunwise, it signifies that the patient will soon recover, and the shaman proceeds to wash him with the water; if it remains stationary or revolves in the opposite direction, it is an unfavourable sign, and he throws the water out of the door. More is then brought, and the procedure repeated until it revolves sunwise. Although no Bella Coola can state definitely how this is performed, the concensus of opinion is that it is done by twisting the box slightly. [782] 755 756 * 787

Shamans are not the only ones who make offerings to Ťlitcăplilän-a. It is generally known that she likes to receive things, so a sick person often throws on the fire a little grease, some of his own clothing, or other objects of small value. By so doing he hopes that she may appear, or that the sickness will vanish as the object is consumed in the flames. A person in good health sometimes makes like offerings, either on the central house fire or on one built behind the house, at the same time asking Ťlitcăplilän-a to help guard him. 755 782 751 ● 782

(7) In recent years some shamans have been in the habit of displaying the sickness in visible form; this is said to have been a practice adopted from the Bella Bella. After throwing himself on top of the patient the shaman sucks violently, and produces such an object as a toad, a snail, or a stick of wood, which he claims to have been the cause of the malady. This has, of course, been concealed throughout in his mouth. This belief is fostered by the undoubted skill of some shamans in extracting such foreign substances as a salmon bone, wedged in a patient's throat, or a sliver. In such cases he first works with his fingers to force the object near the surface. It is believed that some shamans are so powerful they can draw forth foreign substances by the mere application of their stick 755 756 * [177]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

752 For Fractures

An effort is made to straighten the limb and to place the ends of the broken bone together in their proper position. If there is considerable swelling, an incision is made to let blood escape. Hemlock gum is applied freely to the whole region to soften the wound and hold the splints in position. This penetrates the cut, if one has been made, and is believed to facilitate the knitting process. Any small sticks are used for splints.

REMEDIES FOR AILMENTS CAUSED BY SUPERNATURAL OR HUMAN BEINGS

783 753 Persons suffering from diseases or accidents of the types described in the previous section are not the only ones whom the Bella Coola consider to be sick. A girl at puberty, a mother who has just given birth, a man or woman whose consort has just died, has been placed in a peculiar relation to the supernatural and is in a condition identical to that of one suffering from a disease. The ritual acts prescribed at these crises of life are medicines, just as truly as an herbal potion or a curative treatment. In fact, anyone who has been in close touch with the supernatural is in a critical condition and must act circumspectly, the reason for the taboos observed by shamans.

789 [75] Hunters particularly, and others who are likely to come in contact with supernatural beings, employ a number of medicines to protect themselves or to alleviate the dangers to which they have been exposed. As already described, the most potent of these are articles which have been rendered essentially human by contact with the body. For example, an evil supernatural being such as the War-Party of the Tides can be kept at a distance by casting soiled clothing upon a fire. Even more powerful are stained cedar-bark sanitary napkins. It is remembered that when a Bella Bella lad was treated with a gull so that he could see beneath the ocean, his friends became so alarmed at his tremendous ability that they destroyed it by throwing pads of this kind on a fire built beneath the bed on which he was sleeping. The basis of this medicine is the belief

751 Women wear tight anklets to prevent the calves of their legs from slipping down.' During their monthly 841 periods women place soft cedar-bark in the vagina. The bark is afterwards 824 burnt in the woods. The smoke of this fire is believed to be poisonous.

It is evident that the culture of the Bilqula is very greatly influenced 177 by that of the Kwakiutl. The secret societies and the potlatch ceremonies 551 are almost a copy of those of the Heiltsuk'. This influence has been so 556 deep that names of even deities and of the mythical ancestors of certain gentes are purely Kwakiutl words, or have at least Kwakiutl endings. Thus 575 the name Aiumkt'lkya (see p. 413) is purely Kwakiutl, meaning 'good all 776 over the world.' K'ûmk'umkt'lkya is also a Kwakiutl word, meaning 771 'the rich one of the world.' The chief's name, Mt'lkyûtsil (see p. 419) belongs to the same class of Kwakiutl names. On the other hand, the religious ideas of the Bilqula are very curiously developed, and apparently but slightly influenced by their neighbours. The whole Nanamuk'wis tradition is peculiar to them, but has been partly adopted by the Awiky'- ô'ness, with whom the Bilqula have intermarried.

[pp. 425-449 not processed]

L:McDavitt E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

It is the life that suffers

761 whenever the skin is broken. Any wound may prove dan-[752] gerous, but particularly one that cuts either of the invisible [827] lines along which vitality flows from the little finger to the little toe. An injury to one of these channels spreads rapidly and is in many cases fatal.

761 It is generally considered that a person dies if his life leaves 794 his body. In contradiction to this, though the discrepancy seems of slight importance to the Bella Coola, is the belief that it ascends at the winter solstice to the gathering of the supernatural beings in Nacmitʼa to greet Alpaxtim. It is common knowledge that some part of the human body does this, but there is diversity of opinion regarding which it may be. Some say it is the spirit, but the consensus of opinion is that it is the life. If it is successful and receives presents in the land above, its owner will prosper on earth; if it is unfortunate, he will be the same; if it falls in the crush as the guests hurry forth to escape the heat of Alpaxtim's entry, he will die. By dreams 761 a man learns the fortune of his supernatural representative,
787 and from them he can judge what is in store for him during the coming year and receive intimations concerning birth and death, answer society matters and, in fact, every phase of human activity, since all are decided at the meeting of Alpaxtim and his associates. Dreams are considered to be especially important at this season of the year (I, p. 608) and information obtained from them may, perhaps, be the origin of the present firm conviction that some portion of the body actually ascends.
[182] Bella Coola beliefs have so broken down in recent years that lack of unanimity concerning the specific part is not surprising, nor does it alter the importance of this conviction. No attempt is made to explain how an individual can remain alive during the annual absence of his life.

761 Although the life is so ethereal, it really consists of four intangible elements which unite to form the immaterial whole. One of these parts, including the voice, is located in the throat, another in the trunk, a third in the legs, and a fourth in the feet; the body is thus divided into four quarters. The ear-

1:McIlwraith K-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

757 the science of medicine. The Bella Coola are familiar with 759 many acts which cause definite results. To place a new-born girl in contact with the representation of a beautiful woman [756] so that she may grow up to be like her, seems false science, [757] magic, to the white man; whereas the application of splints and gum to a fractured limb is a medical treatment, crude perhaps, but definitely scientific. The two are identical to the Bella Coola. They do not ask why or how a result follows, they merely know that it does. Such lore has been handed down from time immemorial; it is steeped in the sanctity of antiquity and hallowed by the knowledge that their ancestors have done the same for generations. All such acts may be described as "medicines," for so they appear to those who practise them. To separate them into magical and scientific categories would misrepresent the native point of view; the only division that can be made is between those that cause, and those that prevent or cure. Even in this there is some overlap. A medicine that cures a child from crying likewise causes him to be placid and amiable; so, too, medicines of a preventive nature comprise elements of both types. The principle governing most of these is sympathetic magic, a concept which, if put in words to the Bella Coola, would be regarded as [755] logical and scientific. The second important class of medicines consists of objects, either herbal or derived from the human body, which are believed to have such abundant power that they are effective against ailments of supernatural origin, or against supernatural beings themselves. Some of these have already been mentioned in connection with the attitude of the Bella Coola towards these beings of the earth, sky,
and water.

754 Most curative medicines are used by the practitioner on himself; most preventive, on someone else. The latter are either 755 social or anti-social, depending upon whether the result is 759 benevolent or malevolent. Shamans frequently use magical means in curing the sick and are highly regarded by the community, but medicines of the same kind may be used to kill

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

glen, bites him between the eyes or at the back of the neck so that a little blood flows. 865 861

"If you don't keep quiet," he says to the screaming child, "I shall bite you all over your head."

This medicine acts in two ways: (1) The offender is so frightened that he is likely to reform; (2) Contact with a man of good disposition imparts the same to him. A tuft of mountain goat wool is inserted into the wound to make it heal properly.

To Cure Disobedience and Laziness 461

Parents whose child exhibits these bad qualities also ask help of a man of good character. If he accepts the task, he provides himself with a bone needle and waits until he hears the child refuse to perform some simple task. Then, with a rush, he throws the offender on his stomach and suppurts the needle until the blood flows freely. He then releases the frightened child who usually slinks away to bed for the rest of the day. When the bleeding has ceased, the quiet person cuts chips from the canoe of an energetic man and rubs them on the wound, saying: 865 861

"There, may you be like the canoe, always active and doing whatever is expected of you."

An old Kitamaat man recalled vividly the application of this medicine to him when he refused to fetch water for his mother. He was about eleven years of age at the time and asserted that it had greatly improved his behaviour.

MEDICINES FOR ORDINARY DISEASES

For Sprains and Bruises 752

Pound stalks of false hellebore, mix with hemlock gum, and bind on the injured spot as a poultice.

For Swollen Neck

Cut off small pieces of a thoroughly smoked bear's heart, pound in water, and drink the mixture. 757

McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

757 about one week. This causes the skin to turn white and draws out the matter.

752 [177] (2) The usual remedy for boils and similar sores is cutting. There are no professional surgeons so that a patient merely requests a friend in whom he has confidence to perform the operation which is now carried out with a metal knife instead of an obsidian blade. A man frequently performs on himself and it is not uncommon to see a Bella Coola sitting nonchalantly with the blood streaming down his leg into a receptacle filled with water. Even when a boil is on the buttocks, it may be cut by sitting down on a knife, but in this case a friend is always present to state when the position is correct.

752 759 For Ulcers and Abscesses

A few individuals, at present two at Bella Coola and one at Kimsquit, have the necessary skill to locate and operate on ulcers of the stomach. They have no inherited prerogative, their ability is due solely to practice and good sense. If a person suffers from internal pains and believes them to be caused by an ulcer, he requests one of these men to help him. The practitioner kneads and handles the patient to locate the growth, and suggests operating if he thinks it necessary. He measures off on the blade of a knife the depth required for the incision and asks consent to make such a cut. If the sufferer considers it too deep, he may indicate a shorter distance on the knife, or he may desire a still deeper one. As soon as patient and surgeon have agreed upon the depth of the wound, the latter inserts the knife to the proper distance, twists it around, and draws it out. If he has diagnosed correctly, pus comes pouring out; the wound is drained by the insertion of an eagle quill, and in many cases the patient recovers. Several instances are remembered of too deep cutting, resulting in penetration of the intestines and death. A surgeon is always suitably rewarded for his work.

It is believed that such operations were performed before the introduction of metal knives. Whether or not this be true,

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

it is certain that ones of this type took place about 1870. No 752 information could be obtained about other surgical practices. [759]
The Bella Coola are unacquainted with either trephining or cupping, and it is most unlikely that they performed more than cutting and the setting of broken limbs. Though incisions are primarily for boils and abscesses, one may be made in case of any obstinate pain, in the belief that some foreign matter has entered the body and must be extracted.

For Stomach-Ache (two means)

757

(1) Peel the outer surface of red elderberry roots and chew a section until all the juice has been squeezed forth and swallowed; then spit out the tasteless bark and take a second piece. This must be continued for some time. It is dangerous to allow the liquid to remain within the stomach, so warm water must be taken as an emetic.

(2) Take five roots of the plant ma'xwal·i, each about one-tenth of an inch in diameter and one inch in length, grind them to powder and pour on water. Warm the mixture to body heat and drink in large quantities. This acts as an emetic and the patient feels hungry after vomiting. If cooked for a longer [262] time, the roots provide a valuable food.

This medicine is not sufficiently potent for serious attacks.

For Stomach-Ache, and also for Other Internal Pains (two means)

(1) Strip the bark from a kāk'tslp (birch?) branch a few inches in diameter and about three feet in length, and boil for an hour in a small amount of water. Care must be taken not to boil the decoction too long or it will become poisonous. Drink about four cupfuls of the mixture. It causes the stomach to heave violently, followed by vomiting. Then drink warm water, which also acts as an emetic. Take a further potion of the medicine, then more water, and continue with alternate doses until the vomit is clear. This medicine is so powerful that a patient usually recovers by the following day.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

752 For Fractures

An effort is made to straighten the limb and to place the ends of the broken bone together in their proper position. If there is considerable swelling, an incision is made to let blood escape. Hemlock gum is applied freely to the whole region to soften the wound and hold the splints in position. This penetrates the cut, if one has been made, and is believed to facilitate the knitting process. Any small sticks are used for splints.

REMEDIES FOR AILMENTS CAUSED BY SUPERNATURAL OR HUMAN BEINGS

783 753 Persons suffering from diseases or accidents of the types described in the previous section are not the only ones whom the Bella Coola consider to be sick. A girl at puberty, a mother who has just given birth, a man or woman whose consort has just died, has been placed in a peculiar relation to the supernatural and is in a condition identical to that of one suffering from a disease. The ritual acts prescribed at these crises of life are medicines, just as truly as an herbal potion or a curative treatment. In fact, anyone who has been in close touch with the supernatural is in a critical condition and must act circumspectly, the reason for the taboos observed by shamans.

789 [751] Hunters particularly, and others who are likely to come in contact with supernatural beings, employ a number of medicines to protect themselves or to alleviate the dangers to which they have been exposed. As already described, the most potent of these are articles which have been rendered essentially human by contact with the body. For example, an evil supernatural being such as the War-Party of the Tides can be kept at a distance by casting soiled clothing upon a fire. Even more powerful are stained cedar-bark sanitary napkins. It is remembered that when a Bella Bella lad was treated with a gull so that he could see beneath the ocean, his friends became so alarmed at his tremendous ability that they destroyed it by throwing pads of this kind on a fire built beneath the bed on which he was sleeping. The basis of this medicine is the belief that the proximity of such intensely human articles is enough 789

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

to counteract and render powerless anything of a superhuman nature. Likewise, when a certain woman came in contact [755] with the War-Party of the Tides and began to exhibit symptoms of insanity, she was cured by drinking water in which other women had squeezed out their menstrual pads. Another defence is the burning of dried salmon, fumigation from which [828] is particularly effective for one who suffers from nightmares.
Other remedies already mentioned are to cut the right leg and smear a bullet with the resultant blood in order to kill a smnq, and to lacerate the inside of the mouth and spit to withstand
a capsizing mountain.

The medicine most commonly taken is false hellebore, the 224 use of which was learnt by some ancient shaman. At dusk a 789 hunter should eat a small twig of it, raw; it draws from his stomach everything injurious, particularly women's hairs, which are abhorred by animals, and ensures him success on the morrow. If he takes too much of it, he becomes ill and [752] must swallow the antidote, mountain goat grease or marrow.
He should also carry twigs of the plant with him, ready either to swallow or throw in the direction of any dreaded supernatural being whom he may encounter. Eagle down and dried salmon roe are sometimes similarly used.

The powers of a person who has obtained supernatural 756 ability, whether or not he is a shaman, can be destroyed by 789 similar means. For example, a lad treated so that he understands the speech of ravens, will lose his ability if he eats food cooked or prepared by a menstruating woman, by one who has lost her husband within the last year, or if he passes through the hole in the floor used by an adolescent girl. The last Bella Coola with this skill was deafened to the meaning of the birds' croaking by lying near his sister one night for warmth, since her mere proximity was enough to nullify his power. This 789 aspect of medicine merges with taboos. So, too, the power of an object can be destroyed by washing; an instance of this in

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 tive. Hence compensation must be given. Payment for wounds
*796 inflicted is really parallel to payments to witnesses of any other 431 prerogative; without their assistance X would not have been 424 able to display his right. Long ago Cannibals are said to have [773] had teeth of such sharpness that they were able to take pieces from the bodies of their victims with ease and quickness. In more recent years, it has been customary for a person about to be bitten to cut himself with a knife so that, when the Cannibal seizes him, a simple sucking at the chosen part will bring forth blood. In view of the honour attached to being bitten, no person to whom such a proposal is made would think of refusing. As previously mentioned, Cannibals do not bite other Cannibals, Scratchers, Breakers, or those whose patrons are ghosts, otherwise their victims may comprise any kukusiut.[a] Presents received by those bitten are called "Bandages." At the time of such payment gifts are usually given to all kukusiut, with additional compensation for the sufferers.

*575 Now that X has eaten ordinary food it is supposed that he
*796 is again normal, although special precautions must be taken for the rest of the winter since he is subject to returning fits of frenzy. Consequently, he is never allowed to be alone, but is always followed by a number of kukusiut whose function appears to the uninitiated to be to guard them from the Cannibal. The sight of strangers suffices to rouse him, so that when a canoe from Tāl·ie or Kimsquit approaches, a herald bids the uninitiated conceal themselves. On their arrival X rushes to the beach, apparently in spite of his guardians' restraint, and honours several of the strangers by biting them, as he did before he was able to eat ordinary food. On such occasions he then visits every house, attended by his escort, before returning to his own. Inside each dwelling he growls, cries out xwa·, xwa·, xwa·, and sometimes shakes or tears off the

[a] Every effort is made to convince the uninitiated of the severity of the wounds inflicted. For example, if a kwiel woman is suffering from some malady of the breast which requires an operation, a Cannibal bites her there and non-members are told that the incision, made about the same time, was caused by his teeth.

[752]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

him and bring him back, struggling, to the village where he snaps at all within reach. As soon as a person is bitten, an assistant covers the wound with undyed cedar-bark. A number of young men and women kukusiut accompany X wherever he goes, without any special prerogative for doing so. When he is weary, he rushes off into the forest where his followers sit down in two groups until he has recovered from his exertions; then he returns and bites more people. About noon the herald goes through the village calling out:

575* 796* [752]

Ipänap, ipänap, kukusiaot, "Come to hold him down, ye kukusiut."

About two in the afternoon a number of kukusiut women assemble on the beach. X, apparently in spite of his guardians, dashes into the lowest house of the village where he growls and bites a few people, while any women present drone. Then those on the beach begin to drone and X rushes out of the house towards them. They become quiet, and when almost upon them, he appears to change his mind and hurries back to the house immediately above the one that he has just quitted. Again the women on the beach drone, and again he runs out, only to return to the house next above. This is repeated until he has visited every dwelling, his course up the village being a series of Ws. He returns finally to his own home and sits near the back-room.

Two sounding-boards and some beating sticks are brought in and a number of kukusiut range themselves in a double row under the leadership of a shaman to beat time madly to cure X. Four times the ritual is repeated, amid the droning of the women, and as the leader concludes with the short double jump, the sticks strike the floor with an ear-splitting crash. X now takes one of the sticks and starts to beat time for his own song, but almost immediately goes off into a wild beating like that of a maniac. Everyone cries out hoip, which ultimately soothes him. Once more he takes the stick and essays to beat time, but as before goes into a frenzy, and throws it away. The singers have been listening carefully, as if striving to learn

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

"I will give my necklace of dentalium to whoever will recover my foot." 539*

First Gull tried, but he could not stay under water long enough to find it; Loon, however, dived down and brought the foot back to Ḷ̣aisetl. She tied it to a stick which she carried over her shoulder, and paraded the village singing merrily:[10]

Ḳ̓ciälgdinits	wesaitwastaiyia	ɣnuwakila	diaitums-aiyiya
Has cut off my leg	now	Nowakila[11];	Yes, he did it.[12]

Sämlisqo	dälalxäpnänidis	ḷ̣taisalxänixi
What is that	is carrying	Ḷ̣taisalx?[13]

Digmäsolqo	diɣälams	ḷ̣taisalxänixi
It is her leg that	is carrying	Ḷ̣taisalx.[14]

Asnanikiqual	asnanikiqual
She will gum it on;	she will gum it on.

Then she went into the forest at one end of the village and collected a large quantity of hemlock gum with which she fastened her foot in its proper place, reinforcing the junction with pliant sticks. Once more she paraded up and down the town, singing. This time her theme was:

"Ḷ̣taisetl's foot is now gum."

For ten days she kept it embedded in the gum, and when she removed the covering, the foot had regrown to her leg.[15] Raven was amazed, but said nothing; in fact, the two avoided one another as much as possible. However, when Raven once more invited Ḷ̣taisetl to accompany him, this time berry-picking, she refused to go, saying that she was afraid.

---

[10]This was recorded as song VII D 13b, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard. The same method of recording has been used as for dance songs, although the vertical lines indicate only word clusters, not grouped forms to be called out by an announcer. [533]

[11]That is: Nowakila [Raven's name as chief] has just cut off my leg.

[12]This song is divided into four parts, although they are not so clearly separated as dance songs. [533]

[13]That is: What is Ḷ̣taisalx carrying? The man from whom the song was obtained used this form of the woman's name; the narrator of the story called her Ḷ̣taisetl.

[14]That is: Ḷ̣taisalx is carrying her leg.

[15]The Bella Coola, who still use hemlock gum to fasten splints and for swollen wounds, affirm that they learnt the practice from Ḷ̣taisetl. [314] [752]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*192 istutsmap, "Come and eat": Invitation to the kukusiut to assemble in a performer's house.

isulta: House beams.

isut·sta: Messenger bearing invitation to a potlatch.

[752] itcliktas: Massage.

[585] ilskalemsk: 1—Presents, regarded as clothing, etc., given by the groom's relatives to the bride's kinsmen when the latter visit his house on the wedding day.

[431] 2—Other presents given by the husband's relatives to the wife's kinsmen prior to her repurchase.

[583] ilxwaxdjut, "The Throwing Off of a Heavy Burden from the Shoulders": Said of the repayment by a wife's relatives of presents received from her husband's kinsmen.

itxwolhsta: 1—Battering-ram.
2—The destruction of the house of a chief who is about to give a potlatch.

Ixulqotlam: One of the names of the supreme god.

[201] iqdhmaxtem: Notification, by pressure on the foot, to a chief to go to the meeting-place.

[533] ixlxanm: The employment of frenzied stick-beating.

Ixpc·mm: Hot Springs on South Bentinck Arm.

ixskeicpanmas, "The Hearing": Synonym for alastmm, q.v.; this is a Kimsquit term only.

i·qtimut: Kusiotem rite in which the performer appears to be burnt to death.

i·qwatmm: The casting of kusiut masks on the fire.

Iywnk, "Far from the River": Village on the upper Kimsquit River.

[847] ixwotl: Abortion.

i·xwsila, "Disappointed": said of the supernatural beings called by a wl·á dancer who arrive too late for the potlatch.

ilkas: Slave from the lower Fraser owned in Kimsquit during the last century.

[101] ilqwlatamq: Bella Coola term for the Bella Bella.

[601] ilqwlastwlastmax: Half-brother or half-sister.

imlk: 1—Man.
2—Son; term used in direct address to adult.
3—Husband.

[614] imlkasta: Male relative of same ancestral family.

imlklima: Woman who performs man's work.

[601] imlkqasta: Single brother in a family with several sisters.

[431] immlki, plural, immlkoksi: Small boy, especially son; term used in indirect address.

[584] iqlalk", "Working Clothes": Presents given by the relatives of the future bride to the kinsmen of the future bridegroom at the first announcement of the engagement. The implication is that they will have to labour industriously to obtain the wealth necessary for the marriage.

[821] isinarul: Cold wind of the mornings, semi-anthropomorphized.

istaity: Bella Bella term for the istamq.

[563] istamq: Bella Coola term for the people of mixed Bella Bella-Kimsquit stock who inhabited the shores of Dean Channel.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE 15

B
C

POLYPODIACEAE, FERN FAMILY

137
757

Polypodium vulgare L., Polypody, Parasitic Sword Fern

Bella Coola: Roots—sometimes mixed with leaves of the red cedar (Thuja plicata Donn) or with other medicinal roots which the informant had forgotten—boiled, and the warm decoction taken internally for pains in the stomach, but not for vomiting or diarrhoea. Neither an emetic nor a purgative.

Roots chewed for swollen sore throat.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Asplenium cyclosorum Rupr., Lady Fern

Bella Coola: Little roots cleaned off, from five to ten centres, mixed at times with roots or branches of the currant (Ribes laxiflorum Pursh. var.), boiled strongly, but for a short time only, and the decoction used as a wash for sore eyes.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

B

Aspidium spinulosum Sw., Shield Fern

[757]
[262]

Bella Coola: Root eaten raw to neutralise poisoning from eating several kinds of shell-fish in the early part of the summer.

C
I 137
757

Fern, species uncertain

Northern Carrier: Root boiled and the decoction taken internally for worms.

Gitksan: The large, round, green root-stock, but not the rooflets, mashed with bark of balsam fir (Abies grandis Lindl.) and devil's club (Fatsia horrida Sm. B. and H.), a little gum of scrub pine (Pinus contorta Dougl.) or tideland spruce (Picea sitchensis Carr), and root of skunk cabbage (Lysichiton kamtschatcense Schott), warmed a little, and applied to a boil or ulcer, which it brought to a head. Also used for rheumatism, and as a plaster on the chest for hemorrhage of the lungs.

C

LYCOPODIACEAE, CLUB MOSS FAMILY

137
757

Lycopodium clavatum L., Common Club Moss

Southern Carrier: Inserted in the nose to cause bleeding and cure headache.

TAXACEAE, YEW FAMILY

B
137
757

Taxus brevifolia Nutt., Yew

Bella Coola: Branches with leaves boiled, and the decoction taken internally for the lungs. Neither a purgative nor an emetic.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15

CONIFERAE, PINE FAMILY

Juniperus communis L., JUNIPER

B
E 137
757

Bella Coola: Roots, leaves, branches, and bark boiled, and the decoction taken internally as often as desired for many ailments, including a cough from the lungs, and pain in the stomach. Neither a purgative nor an emetic.

Southern Carrier: Branches boiled, and the vapour inhaled for headache and pain in the chest.

Northern Carrier: Tips boiled, and the decoction taken internally as a purgative, also for a cough.

Juniperus sp.

B
J
137
757

Gitksan: Entire plant, including roots and berries, boiled for a day, and the decoction, when cool, taken internally for many ailments, including hemorrhage and kidney trouble. A purgative and diuretic.

Thuja plicata Donn, RED CEDAR

Bella Coola: Very soft bark used to bind up wounds, and to cover poultices of false bugbane (Trautvetteria grandis Nutt.) and of tall buttercup (Ranunculus acris L.).

Leaves, sometimes with the gum-coated cones, boiled, and the hot decoction taken internally for pain in the stomach. Neither an emetic nor a purgative.

Leaves powdered by pounding, mixed with a little cold water and taken internally for pain in the stomach, also externally for coughs and internal pains, as heart trouble, rheumatism, swollen neck, and pain in the stomach. See also Polypody, page 48.

Gitksan: Not used.

Chamaecyparis nootkatensis (Lamb) Spach, YELLOW CYPRESS, YELLOW CEDAR

B
137
757

Bella Coola: A little soft bark used to cover poultices of false bugbane (Trautvetteria grandis Nutt.) and of tall buttercup (Ranunculus acris L.).

Pinus contorta Dougl., SCRUB PINE, JACK PINE

B
[152]

Bella Coola: Gum applied to cuts.

Gum chewed and applied to broken skin.

B
[164]

Gum at the ends of branches, collected in November, December, and January, boiled and the decoction taken internally for "consumption."

Gum—like that of tideland spruce (page 51) and western hemlock (page 51)—mixed with the baked stems and leaves, or the dried and pulverized bulb, of false hellebore (page 53), and applied as a poultice (sometimes spread on red cedar bark) to the chest for heart trouble, and to the arms for rheumatism. Burned the skin within two or three days, but was sometimes left on as long as two weeks.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15
Sekani NE14

Abies sp.

Northern Carrier: Bark boiled in water and the decoction taken internally as a purgative.

Gum used as an ointment on wounds, and especially on burns.

Sikani: Gum applied to wounds.

Gitksan: Juicy inner bark, scraped from the trunk of the tree, after removal of the outer bark, taken internally for constipation.

Gum from the bark blisters taken internally as a purgative and diuretic for "consumption," gonorrhoea, and many other serious ailments. Applied externally to cuts and sores, especially the sores of gonorrhoea.

The young cones, obtainable in August, sliced across, mashed, and used for the same purposes as the gum from the bark blisters.

See also fern, page 48.

Pseudotsuga taxifolia Britt., Douglas Fir

Bella Coola: Gum boiled and taken internally, while warm, as a diuretic for gonorrhoea.

Gum, spread on red cedar bark, applied to cuts. (One informant said that although gum of scrub pine (see page 49), hemlock (see page 51), and tideland spruce (see page 51) were good, Douglas fir gum made cuts worse.)

Gum mixed with dogfish (shark) oil or, if that were not available, eulachon oil, taken, two spoonfuls at a time, with warm water, as an emetic and purgative for colds, rheumatism, gonorrhoea, constipation, intestinal pains, and diarrhoea.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

Tsuga heterophylla (Raf.) Sarg., Western Hemlock, and Tsuga Mertensiana Carr, Mountain Hemlock

Bella Coola: Leaves chewed and applied to burns.

See also scrub pine (page 49).

Gum warmed and applied to cuts. Not boiled for a diuretic for gonorrhoea.

Burning twigs applied to the skin for various internal ailments.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

Picea sitchensis Carr., Tideland Spruce

Bella Coola: Tips of small, but not of large, spruces mixed with blue currant (Ribes bracteosum Dougl.), young juneberry (Amelanchier florida Lindl.), and crushed branches (leaves and stems) of garden snowberry (Symphoricarpos racemosus Michx.), boiled and taken internally for gonorrhoea.

Sap from the peeled trunk taken in doses of from half a cup to a cupful as a laxative from May to August.

B
137
757

Ripe cones boiled, and the decoction taken internally for a pain. Neither an emetic nor a laxative. A bed consisting of a sack of ripe cones, placed on top of hot stones, used by rheumatics. Cones also burned to fumigate rheumatics.

A piece of the bark 5 feet long by 2 feet wide used as a mat in a hot bath for rheumatism. Many stones were heated, a little sand strewn over them, the bark spread above with the inside uppermost, and the patient, naked, lay on the bark, covering himself with one or more blankets. A similar bed, but with the bark covered with a few leaves of devil's club (Fatsia horrida Sm. B. and H.), used for chronic backache.

B
●[752]

Gum applied to small cuts, broken skin, and suppurating sores.

Branches used to whip a burned arm or leg until the blood came.

Gum boiled and taken internally while hot as a diuretic for gonorrhoea.

See also scrub pine (page 49).

For use with fern. See page 48.

C
T 137
757

The buds or new shoots, with the gum sometimes found around the outside when they are about half an inch long, boiled in water, and the decoction taken internally for tuberculosis.

Southern Carrier: New shoots and bark of small branches boiled for about two hours, and the decoction taken internally, one or two cupfuls at a time, for pain in the stomach, but not for vomiting, diarrhoea, or constipation. Said to effect a cure in one day, and preferred to the decoction made of scrub pine (page 49) or aspen (page 54).

Gum from new shoots and small branches, scraped out with a little stick, placed in the eyes for snow-blindness.

S
[757]

Sikani: Inside bark scraped and chewed for a cough.

Needles chewed, and the saliva applied to external sores.

Gum, obtained by splitting the tops, applied with a stick to white spots on the eye.

The "flower" boiled and the decoction taken internally for pain in the chest.

T [287]
[164]

Gitksan: Gum extracted from the wood by boiling in water, added to eulachon oil, salmon oil, bear grease, ground-hog fat, lard, etc., and taken internally before meals for consumption.

Twigs bearing both leaves and bark boiled with entire roots of soapolallie (Shepherdia canadensis Nutt.); one cupful of the strong decoction taken internally three times a day for rheumatism.

ARACEAE, ARUM FAMILY

B
T

Lysichiton kamtschatcense Schott., Skunk Cabbage, Yellow Arum

137
757

Bella Coola: Roots used with oil as a hair tonic.

Roots boiled, and the sweet decoction taken internally for stomach trouble.

B [302]

See also white fir (page 56).

Gitksan: Root well mashed with water and applied externally for blood poison and boils. Said to bring boils to a head. For use with a fern (see page 48).

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15

Smoke from the burning roots inhaled for bad dreams, influenza, and rheumatism (a remedy avoided by medicine men, lest it destroy their magical power). Roots themselves considered poisonous.

Leaves used to sit or lie on when taking a sweat bath for rheumatism; also spread over the afflicted parts.

Calla palustris L., WATER ARUM

Gitksan: Roots well boiled and the decoction taken internally for cleaning the eyes of the blind, for hemorrhage, for short breath, and influenza.

LILIACEAE, LILY FAMILY

Clintonia uniflora Kunth., QUEENS CUP

Bella Coola: Boiled and used to wash the body. One leaf toasted and applied as a poultice to eyes or wounds.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

Smilacina racemosa L., FALSE SOLOMON'S SEAL

Bella Coola: Not used.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Roots boiled and decoction taken internally as a very strong medicine for rheumatism, sore back, and kidney trouble. A purgative. Bark and leaves useless. Roots mashed and bound on cuts.

Veratrum viride Ait., FALSE HELLEBORE

Bella Coola: Small bulbs or scrapings of large bulbs, boiled, and one cupful or less of the decoction, according to the strength of the patient, taken internally for chronic cough, gonorrhoea, constipation, pain in the stomach, and many illnesses. Two or three cupfuls acted as an emetic. Said to be poisonous if eaten raw.

Small pieces of the raw root swallowed with a little cold water as an emetic for pains in the stomach. More water taken if all the pieces not vomited. Overdose considered fatal.

See also scrub pine (page 48).

Southern Carrier: Entire roots dried in the sun, and powdered by rubbing on a stone. About a dessertspoonful of the powder taken in hot water as an emetic for sickness. Too strong a decoction considered fatal.[1]

SALICACEAE, WILLOW FAMILY

Salix lasiandra Benth., WILLOW

Bella Coola: Six sticks about a foot long charred, and pulverized on a stone. A teaspoonful of the powder taken in a cupful of cold water for diarrhoea. Said to effect a cure in two or three hours.

A piece of the inner bark folded once and the folded edge inserted into a knife cut; other edges then separated and flattened down, and the wound covered with eagle down. Thought to make the pus come out. Same process used to heal incisions in the abdomen made by those who tried to cure pain in the stomach.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

[1] The late Dr. C. F. Newcombe informed the writer that this plant seems to be used by every tribe in whose territory it grows.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15
Sekani NE14

T
S
B
C

137
757
B
[750]

Salix Scouleriana Hook., WILLOW

Bella Coola: Folded inner bark used like that of Salix lasiandra Benth. for cuts; but charcoal from the stick not used for diarrhoea.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

Salix sp., WILLOW

Sikani: Young willow chewed and the saliva applied to external sores.

White powdery tops chewed for a cough.

Populus tremuloides Michx., ASPEN, TREMBLING POPLAR

Bella Coola: A quantity of bark from the roots boiled, and the decoction taken internally from seven to ten times a day for gonorrhoea with hemorrhage from the urethra. A very bitter decoction, said to be a good remedy that stopped the hemorrhage.

Southern Carrier: Bark used instead of tideland spruce bark (page 51) to make a decoction for pain in the stomach. Considered inferior to the spruce bark.

Sikani: Bark pulverized by pounding, moistened with water, and applied as a paste to wounds.

Bark scraped, scrapings steeped in hot water, and the decoction taken internally for worms. Caused a stool immediately.

Gitksan: Bark of roots chewed or mashed and put on cuts.

Bark alone boiled, and the decoction taken internally as a purgative. Not an emetic.

B
C
137
757
B [302]

Populus trichocarpa T. and G., BLACK COTTONWOOD

Bella Coola: Leaves, ten to fifteen years old, from the lower layers lying rotting on the ground, boiled, and the decoction used as a bath, the patient sitting in it up to his neck for about two hours to cure pain in the body, not rheumatism. A hot stone added from time to time, and the bath repeated the next day.

The buds with their resin boiled and the decoction used as a hair wash. See also white fir (page 50).

Half a cupful of buds, picked some time between December and March, mixed with two roots of cow parsnip (Heracleum lanatum Michx.), a half cupful of buds of mountain alder (Alnus tenuifolia Nutt.), and a little water, mashed, and applied warm, but unwarmed, as a poultice for pains in the lungs or hips like rheumatism. Said to effect a cure in two days, but harmful if left on longer.

See also western dock (page 56).

Southern Carrier: Buds with their resin boiled for one or two hours, and the decoction taken internally for coughs and lung affections.

C [302]
[326]

Resin from the buds applied to the face as a cosmetic, or, with the addition of oil, to repel mosquitoes, black flies, and gadflies.

Roots and bark not used; buds not boiled to make a hair wash.

C
[152]

Northern Carrier: Green roots chewed to a pulp and applied to wounds to stop bleeding.

Inside bark boiled and the decoction used as an eye-wash.

T
[302]
I
[161]

Gitksan: Gummy buds boiled and the resin mixed with bear grease for a hair pomade.

Roots, leaves, and seeds not used.

S: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15

Ledum groenlandicum Oeder, Labrador Tea
Bella Coola: Leaves boiled, and the decoction used as a simple beverage, or for pain in the stomach, but not for diarrhoea or vomiting. Neither an emetic nor a purgative.
Southern Carrier: Not used formerly, now as a beverage only.
Gitksan: Leaves boiled, and the decoction used as a diuretic, or merely as a beverage.

Gaultheria shallon Pursh, Salal
Bella Coola: Leaves toasted, pulverized by rubbing, and applied to cuts.
Southern Carrier: Not used.

LABIATAE, MINT FAMILY

Prunella vulgaris L., Heal-All
Bella Coola: Roots, leaves, and blossoms washed, boiled, and a cupful of the weak decoction taken internally for the heart. Not used for diarrhoea or vomiting.
Southern Carrier: Not used.
Gitksan: Not used.

Mentha canadensis L., Mint
Bella Coola: Entire plant boiled, and the decoction taken internally, as often as desired, for pain in the stomach. Not used for vomiting, constipation, or diarrhoea.
Southern Carrier: Entire plant boiled, and a cupful of the decoction taken internally for the stomach, colds, lung affections, and various ailments.
Gitksan: Not used.

SCROPHULARIACEAE, FIGWORT FAMILY

Castilleja miniata Dougl., Paint-Brush
Bella Coola: Not used.
Southern Carrier: Not used.
Gitksan: Entire plant boiled, and the decoction taken internally for bleeding, stiff lungs, sore eyes, and lame back, possibly caused by kidney trouble. A purgative and diuretic.
Roots boiled and the decoction taken internally for coughs.

CAPRIFOLIACEAE, HONEYSUCKLE FAMILY

Lonicera involucrata Banks, Black Twin-Berry
Bella Coola: Leaves chewed and put applied for itch.
Leaves chewed and applied to boils, after they were cut open, to draw out the poison.
Leaves crushed and applied to burns and sores of gonorrhoea.
Bark toasted, pulverized, and applied to sores of gonorrhoea.
Bark boiled and decoction taken internally for cough.
Southern Carrier: Bark boiled for five hours, and the decoction used daily as an eye-wash. Roots, leaves, and berries not used.
Northern Carrier: See earth pine (page 48).
Gitksan: Fresh juice of berries used in sore eyes. Inner bark (when berries not available) soaked in water, and the milky solution used in the eyes.

S: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15

COMPOSITAE, COMPOSITE FAMILY

Achillea Millefolium L., YARROW

Bella Coola: Leaves chewed and applied to burns.

Southern Carrier: Entire plant, except the roots, boiled, and the decoction taken internally at frequent intervals for colds.

Leaves chewed and applied to sprains and swellings.

Gitksan: The young plant, except the roots, gathered between June 1 and July 15, boiled, and the decoction gargled for sore throat. Roots, marked by the dead stalks, dug out at other seasons and used instead.

Artemisia discolor Dougl., SAGEBRUSH, GREEN WORMWOOD

Bella Coola: Used for medicine.

Southern Carrier: Chewed and applied to sprains and swellings.

Northern Carrier: Sagebrush (sp. ?) steeped in water and the hot decoction taken internally for headache.

Antennaria Howellii Greene, EVERLASTING

Bella Coola: Leaves boiled, and the decoction taken internally for pains in the body, but not for pains in the limbs. Not used for colds.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

Taraxacum officinale Weber., COMMON DANDELION introduced

Bella Coola: Roots boiled, and the decoction taken internally for pain in the stomach, but not for diarrhoea or vomiting. Remedy said to have been learned from white men.

Gitksan: Not used.

Lactuca spicata (Lam.) Hitchc., TALL LETTUCE

Bella Coola: Roots boiled, and many cups of the decoction taken internally for heart trouble, hemorrhage, pains in the body (but not in the limbs), for vomiting, or for diarrhoea. Neither an emetic nor a purgative. Milky juice not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

Prenanthes alata (Hook.) Gray, RATTLESNAKE ROOT

Bella Coola: Roots boiled, two or three cupfuls of the decoction taken internally daily for colds. For a baby only a small spoonful given three or four times a day.

Bella Coola: Chewed, and applied to burns or to any painful part of the body.

Boiled, and two or three cupfuls of the decoction taken internally daily.

Malaxis ophioglossoides Bland, MOSS

Southern Carrier: Entire plant, except the "roots", boiled, and two or three cupfuls of the decoction used to bathe a swollen face.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923);1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15

SKUNK

Spilogale, Spotted Skunk, or Mephitis, Striped Skunk

Bella Coola: Oil not used as a remedy.

Southern Carrier: Oil warmed, and a cupful taken as a purgative for worms.

HARE

Lepus americanus columbienais Rhoads, The British Columbia Varying Hare

Northern Carrier: Hare opened, ruminating stomach containing something like the white of an egg removed, and the liquid applied to a foot blistered by frost-bite. Considered a sure cure.

RED SQUIRREL

Sciurus hudsonicus Erxleben

Bella Coola: Opened along the under side and applied as a remedy to badly broken chancres in the groin.

GIANT SLUG

Bella Coola: Slug made to crawl into a baby's mouth to cure loss of skin on the inside of its mouth.

Slug opened, and bound tightly over large cut.

SEA CUCUMBER

Bella Coola: Decoction of the water in which the sea cucumber was boiled, taken internally as a specific against heartburn. Not a purgative.

SPITTLE INSECT

Cercopidae, Spittle Insect, Frog Hopper

Bella Coola: "Fly spit," i.e., the material surrounding a nymph of a spittle insect, applied to sores.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

WOODWORMS

Gitksan: Pulverized and applied to cuts.

COPPER

Bella Coola: Fine particles scraped from clean copper (but not from a weathered green surface) placed in sore eyes.

Gitksan: Copper ground, poured into a vessel of cold water, first water poured off, and second water taken internally as a harmless contraceptive.

CHARCOAL

Northern Carrier: Charcoal daubed under the eyes to prevent snow-blindness.

4:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)[95]
NEA Bellacoola NEA

They resolved to make an attempt to burn it and to break upon the door. On the following day they came up to the village, but the guard on the towers used their guns to such good effect that the enemy had to retreat with severe losses. They made still another attempt, but with no better success. They had lost many men, while only two old men of the Tsilx'wis, Tsemkiyeel and A'k'ms by name, and one woman had been hurt. The latter had been killed. When the Kwakiutl turned back a messenger was at once sent up to the lake to call the young men, who then went to Kwa'ltis to ask for help. The Kwakiutl passed close to Bark-Wrinkle's father's canoe, but they were so terrified by the losses they had sustained that they passed by without so much as noticing it. Two of their number were so ashamed of their defeat that they would rather remain in the enemy's country than return with their friends, and they stayed where. Meanwhile the Tsilx'wis and the Bilqula were pursuing the fugitives. They had reached the outlet of Dentrish Arm without overtaking them. Then their chiefs resolved to return, as they believed that their enemies had a long start upon them. Later on they heard that the Kwakiutl were at that moment only a few miles from them, about to continue their homeward journey, after having encamped at the outlet of the channel. Afterwards the Tsilx'wis found the two men who had remained behind. They called them and promised to send them back to their friends, saying that the war had ended, and then they had no grudge against them. The men were, however, too much afraid, and finally starved to death.

Later on the Tsilx'wis and Bilqula organized an expedition against the Kwakiutl to take revenge for the unprovoked attack. A chief named Kwal'ts, whose father was a Tsilx'wis, while his mother was a Kwakiutl, was their leader. They intended to attack the Ts'ewhak and the Kwa'k'wi'lang. When they approached the village of the latter they sent a scouts ahead to search for the village, and to report the number of houses. For two days they were unable to find the village, which lies in a labyrinth of islands; but finally they found it, and saw that it consisted of sixteen houses. On the next morning they attacked it. The tribe was wholly taken by surprise and almost all of them were killed. Kwal'ts's mother lived at this place, and when she heard the Bilqula coming she ashed at once for her son, and was taken care of by him. Only five men and four women escaped. The Bilqula allowed them to run away, as they had killed as many as they desired. Ana'kwlaxa, a chief of the Ewqalt'ish, was the only man of the Bilqula who was wounded. He died on the way home. They returned, but to the country of the Ts'ewhak they were overtaken by four Kwakiutl canoes which pursued them. The Bilqula were victorious, but Kwal'ts induced them to desist. During the fight two of the women, whom they had taken as slaves, and one big pounded overboard, and were rescued by the Kwakiutl.

Massage.

Bells are treated by massageation with dry bark or with gunpowder. Sometimes a series of painful cuts is made over swellings or boils. Fractured bones are set, and fastened between splints of cedar-bark.

Remedies of shark oil or chicken oil are given by means of a baby tube, with a massageation made of the wing bone of an eagle. Snake poison is collected and held on a pillow. Women wear light aprons to prevent and keep away apparently uninjured. The Bella Coola say that yearling goats have very strong spirits (l. p. 94) which make possible such actions.

Though generally callous with regard to the sufferings of animals, the Bella Coola are usually careful not to kill more than they need, and knowledge of the supernatural power possessed by animals sometimes leads men to treat them with great consideration. For example, if a bull-head is caught in an chicken net in the river, the fisherman throws it back into the water, saying:

"I have saved you; please do the same for me."

The following incident, believed without question by the Bella Coola, shows the manner in which bull-heads help those who have often befriended them. About 1880 a Kitsegukla fisherman, Mudda-i, fell into a rapids where he was in great danger of drowning. A bull-head, seeing his plight and mindful of former help, increased his size and showed Mudda-i ashore with its tail.

"I have saved you, saved," said the bull-head, as he did so.

The ability to increase in size is not restricted to fish, but is shared by small mammals and reptiles. Lizards, for instance, four feet in length, are said to live permanently in a pond about seven miles below Kitsegukla; they are named gwalic.

Snake, too, are old mortals. If a man see a snake devouring one of them he will, if he is wise, kill the snake and say to the snake:

"Please help me when I am in difficulties."

A snake never forgets its obligations and if that man should [illegible] large enough to drag him forth.

Snakes are regarded with aversion and disgust. This may be in part due to the belief that they suck for Ahts-tsiid (l. p. 96), but more because these reptiles enter the stomachs of human beings. The Bella Coola believe that snakes are the offspring of a supernatural Mother of Snakes, a mythical being of dread powers. The following story illustrates their beliefs

Title Overall: B-5 (1952-1953)1943
NEH Deliberate NEH

concerning the danger of near approach to this creature.

Eadale was a man of mixed lineage, Kinnapin and Fox, near Stanton. With several companions he was gathering berries when he stepped into a hole and felt numerous tiny creatures crawling over his legs. Looking down, he saw that they were small snakes, that had just been hatched from a Mother of Snakes. He fled, terrified, pursued by the reptiles, which he managed to keep off to some extent by breaking behind him a branch of spiny creeping greenberry, a known deterrent. When he had ran distanced the snakes he called his companions, told them of his adventure, and returned home. There he reported the tale. Though Eadale did not know it, many of the snakes had succeeded in entering his stomach. Presently he began to swell, his body became larger and larger until he was in danger of bursting. The reptiles within were breeding rapidly. Luckily, one of his fellow villagers knew the proper remedy. A raised bed was made for the sufferer about five feet from the ground where Eadale stretched himself on a number of thorny branches, while his friends built a fire of devil's club and creeping greenberry twigs so that he was fumigated by the smoke. Then, to give greater privacy, they went on the Roman relief clothing and provided either both pads covered with mentioned blood, over this was of no avail, so finally a woman squatted on top a round area of her menstrual blood which Eadale drank. This killed the snakes. The patient began to vomit, emitting a mass of wriggling serpents, and as soon began to grow thinner, now regaining his normal condition. Had he not been able to spot the reptiles, he would have died.

Eadale was not the only one to have this unpleasant experience. Many others have suffered in the same way, but in no case has anyone been able to find the snakes at the actual place or time of entry.

The beliefs of the Bella Coola concerning the power possessed by animals are clearly shown by their attitude with regard to killing them. Man is immortal, as are animals. Ayamisin decreed that bears and birds should serve as food for mankind, but it is only their clothing, their mortiform "Shadow of Souls," as the Bella Coola express it, which they give to hunters. In the autumn bears appear to die, but every spring they are reborn. Similarly, when an animal is slain, it merely discards its visible self while its spirit* ascends

*Comments, see vol. 1, p. 36.

Seventh R-5 (52-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

years ago a chief, when [illegible]ting, sat down to rest. While he 774 sat a slide plunged down the mountain-side and swept away the ground where he would have been if he had not stopped. The Bella Coola know that such a fortunate escape is no accident, as foolish white men believe, but is the result of an active spirit. Sometimes it can convey only symbolic hints of what is to happen. An old Kwakiutl man told how his lower eyelids once became sore and his stomach began to heave. This [827] [787] occurs with nothing, and he knew that ill-fortune was before him and was not surprised at the death of his son. A thoughtful person pays great attention to indications such as these, knowing that his spirit is always striving to pierce the future and obtain information of him, however indefinite. The importance of the supernatural to the Bella Coola can be judged from the fact that they attribute every action and thought to an element of this nature.

Mentality, soul, though caused by the spirit, is somewhat 774 vaguely regarded as a separate entity. It comprises two parts, 828 one constantly urging good deeds, particularly to activity in ritual matters, the other evil. No one knows the appearance, form, or nature of human mentality. Some of the thoughtful older men believe the opinion that every tree has mentality, whereas others say that it has a spirit. In former times especially, as one was falling, the crowd could occasionally see a dark object somewhat resembling an owl flash away and disappear. Not until then was the tree actually dead. Even the old people do not profess to know anything definite about mentality, which is important only as an attribute of the spirit. In indefinite 774 association with it, [illegible] breath, sinimis, provided by Ai- [961] yanim for everyone at birth. The word signifies more than [827] the mechanical act of breathing, it denotes the actual physical state of being alive, a condition "lent" by Aiyanim to mortals. The connection of these two elements with the spirit is unexplained, though their exact relationship is indefinite.

If the spirit moves far from its proper position at the back of the neck, the owner falls ill; if it leaves him, his condition [953] [955]

774 becomes critical. Only a shaman (I, p. 539) can return one, and 755 if he fails death always results. In some cases a spirit leaves
[753] its owner without apparent reason; he becomes insane, tries
[756] to eat dirt, and his relatives realize at once what is the matter. They summon a shaman who takes off his cape, hangs it like a pouch on his stick, and points it in all directions as he sings his shaman's song. Finally he locates what is missing, and traps it in his cloak, which he places around the sick man. This restores the element and the sufferer recovers immediately. Another method is for the shaman to press the back of the patient's neck, and by blowing and spitting cause the wandering spirit to return. Either cure must be performed by a shaman because of the supernatural power required.

774 Spirits can be extracted in various ways. Shamans can draw one forth by sucking at the back of the neck between their cupped hands; in former times, some were so powerful that they could extract them by their mere presence. During 774 kwiat dances (II, chap. i), the uninitiated are told that if they 575 enter the house where a ceremony is taking place, or even pass
[535] on the sidewalk outside the door, their spirits will be drawn from them by the power within and attracted to the dancer or to the sacred platform on which he is concealed. Many [178] stories are told of this, which were firmly believed by the uninitiated until the last few years. Members of the society claim that their great power acts as a magnet to the spirits of all but their associates, except children in arms; the latter can be taken by their mothers into the house, because their supernatural elements have not developed sufficient strength to leave their bodies. A person may also lose his spirit through 774 a sudden shock. If two people meet unexpectedly in the forest and one of them shouts loudly at the other, even if only in fun, the spasmodic contraction of the muscles is enough to expel it.
[761] The person to whom this happens falls down as if dead, and [756] though he soon recovers, his spirit has left him, and if it is not brought back by a shaman he dies a lingering death.

775 At death, the spirit permanently leaves the body. In some

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

below. These are termed tally posts.[*] Each remained upright as long as the individual to whom it referred was alive, but fell at his death. Since that time, whenever Ałqawtáw lends to a mortal sinsnitz, the undefined power that causes life, his supernatural artisans erect in the land above a tally post for the new-born infant, marked with the bird or animal used by an ancestor. As long as this remains upright and straight, firmly fixed to the ground, its owner continues to be strong and prosperous, and has success in all his undertakings; if it becomes loose, or is crooked, he ceases to succeed. Prosperity does not depend upon the activities of an individual, but upon his supernatural possessions, spirit, tally post, and a third to be described later. If the tally post tilts far from the perpendicular, its owner becomes ill, and can be cured only by straightening it. In some cases Ałqawtáw is kind enough to do this if placated by prayer and ceremonial chastity (I, p. 110), and in olden days, shamans were occasionally able to penetrate to the land above for this purpose. Even when a post was reached, they were sometimes unable to set it upright, though they could always estimate the length of a man's life from its angle of inclination. In one of the kwiat dances, the performer pretends to have the ability to go aloft and the uninitiated are deceived by the erection of a tall ladder up which he climbs and disappears (II, p. 201). On his return, he reports the condition of the tally posts of various people. This performance serves to remind both members of the society and uninitiated of the existence of these supernatural elements, and of the dependence of individuals on them for success in life. In spite of this ritual, actual knowledge of the powers and functions of tally posts has been derived only from the first Bella Coola who, covered in the land above, were acquainted with the mysteries of life and transmitted such lore to their descendants. One old man expressed the opinion

[*] Kwalkwatsa. One of the names of Nuxalk is, Kwalkwatsaxáu, refers to these, meaning, "The Place of the Tally Posts." Kwalkwatsa and kwalkwatsa are closely associated; sometimes the latter is pronounced kwalkwa, although this may be an error in recording.

1:McIlwraith, E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NES Bellacoola NES

THE WASH-BASIN

A third supernatural element which must be in good condition if a Bella Coola is to prosper in life, is a wa'ulaxte, wash-basin. In the land above, Ałqantēm has a large one filled with water which, having been constructed by himself, is replete with power. When a child is born, a small part of this receptacle, with its contents, is reserved for him; the supernatural artisans choose the actual section, but it is Ałqantēm who gives them the ability to do so. A fortunate man, whose ventures are successful and to whom goods are attracted, is said to have a good wash-basin; whereas the ill-luck of an unfortunate person is attributed, among other reasons, to the small size of his supernatural vessel. The Bella Coola have no clear ideas about the connection between an individual and his wash-basin. Some state that it remains in the land above; others believe that its intangible essence comes to a child at birth and grows up with him, always near his body, as if it were the offspring of the basin in the land above. As long as it remains in motion the owner continues in good health and prosperity, but if it becomes sluggish he falls ill. Long ago, shamans knew how to reanimate a wash-basin, but since the time of the first people, when supernatural ability was common, this has been a lost art. Senile decay is attributed to lethargy of this possession.

River water, being a creation of Ałqantēm, is akin to the water in his basin above. Boys are always advised to bathe in the river at dawn; the act is termed ła'ulaxem, a word connected with wa'ulaxte. A prayer is uttered while washing. The combination of verbal appeal and the application of water strengthens the petitioner's wash-basin and so increases his chances for prosperity. Until a few years ago, this practice was almost universal. Water is always considered a strange substance, obviously a supernatural creation, and believed to be the chief means of sustenance for a child after being weaned.*

*This may be a more modern idea.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

975 small particles of food on a fire; these become large when they 982 reach the land below and nourish the ghosts. An individual making an offering of this kind says:

"Ts-xxkkilimat ts-xxlas," "This is to make straight your road, beloved one."

[952] The needs and desires of ghosts have been made known to mortals through visits paid by shamans to the land below, and by the coming of ghosts to this world. It is, therefore, realized that food placed on the ground does not reach the [372] land below, but that morsels thrown on a fire sink through into the abode of ghosts. Offerings to the dead are not made [953] with the hope of receiving favours from them, but rather to provide beloved relatives with necessary food and to prevent them from showing displeasure by causing stomach-aches and other ailments.

982 Other instances, both of prayer and of sacrifice, will be recorded in connection with various myths. The salient feature is that the Bella Coola are able to gain, by such means, the favour of supernatural beings, a factor which plays an important part in their daily life. In addition, they have a [944] large number of practices based on sympathetic magic. No absolutely rigid boundary line can be drawn between the latter and religious proper, but there is a fairly clear division between cites such as those just described, in which propitiation is the important element, and others in which the desired end follows the mere performance of a certain act. Customs of this last type will be reserved for later consideration (vol. I, chap. vi).

THE OBSERVANCE OF CEREMONIAL CHASTITY

984 In addition to prayer and sacrifice, the Bella Coola have 985 yet another means of obtaining the goodwill of supernatural beings, and at the same time of strengthening their own supernatural attributes so that good fortune is likely to occur. This is by the practice of certain, ceremonial chastity, of which the basis is that a man must not hold intercourse except after certain periods of continence. To understand this, it is neces-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NE5 Bellacoola NE6

Ceremonial chastity is considered almost a necessity to hunters, and in former years a man would rarely, if ever, set out to seek game without fortifying himself by at least several days of continence followed by washing. In the few cases known of a female assuming the clothing and activities of a male, she has been forced to hire a man to sleep with her on the proper nights before starting to hunt. But hunters are by no means the only ones to observe ceremonial chastity. If a man wants to build a salmon-weir, it is by this means that he makes himself strong enough to succeed; if he plays cards, good fortune is sought in the same fashion. The guests at a potlatch observe ceremonial chastity so that their host may not forget them in his distribution of presents, the host, that his guests may arrive on time. The Tsaxis dancer thus fortifies himself for the performance of a dangerous ritual. In this way a man experiences dreams foretelling the future. In every desire or activity of life, ceremonial chastity is a potent means of success, not infallible, usually combined with prayer and in many cases with sacrifice, but a background and accompaniment to every means of propitiation. If a man has conspicuous ill-luck, it is because he has failed to observe ceremonial chastity; if he succeeds, it is because he has done so. At the present time there is living in the Bella Coola valley an old white man who for years has ranged the mountains in search of gold; he has been unsuccessful, and the Bella Coola believe that he will never succeed until he observes ceremonial chastity.

The strength which a man may acquire through the practice of this rite is almost limitless. A man may be ailing on account of the loosing of his tally pole, but, if he energetically and faithfully observes chastity, it will become straightened, whether automatically or through the agency of Alquntám is uncertain. After the termination of a long period of continence, a man's spirit is so strong that his friends place their hands on the back of his neck in order to absorb some of the power radiating from his spirit. Ancient myths record how the more force engendered in a man's body by lengthy abstin-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

(3) The bearing of exceptionally well-behaved children; 614
(4) The bearing of exceptionally naughty children; 827
(5) Disposition to steal;
(6) Uncontrollable sexual desires;
(7) Sudden death, that is, members of certain ancestral families are less apt than others to die of disease or old age;
(8) Death by drowning. One informant, in whose family this is a tendency, has twice been thrown into the water and barely escaped. He fully expects to meet his fate in this manner;
(9) Insanity (not a common malady); [158]
(10) Dribbling at the mouth with increasing age;
(11) Liability to contract the skin disease known as tofaly. With regard to the transmission of this disease the surprising information was received that if a relative of a sufferer should drink from the same bucket or use the same spoon as the patient, he is likely to contract the disease, whereas another person can use them with impunity. This statement may be based on a knowledge of germs learnt from the white man, and warped by a belief in inheritable tendencies, although it is amazing that the theory of germs could have reached the elderly Bella Coola. Possibly this statement is a relic of an old belief in the transmissability of disease through contact, but it is more reasonable to ascribe it to white influence. 614 827 753 177

In a later chapter an account is given of certain occupational abilities, including that of carpentry, which must be confirmed and validated by presents. The above are quite different; they are either present or absent without any action on the part of the individual. 614 827

The Village Community

The village community referred to in the preceding section consists, fundamentally, of the descendants, traced in the patrilineal line, of the reputed first settlers to occupy a site. Since a Bella Coola always describes himself as a native of such-and-such a town, it follows that the village community 614 621

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

845 alone, and when she leaves it, it dries up immediately. When a year has elapsed, the parents return home with their children and the father resumes the ordinary routine of life. For three years more the mother must remain in the house, leaving it only at night through a hole in the floor. Above all else, she must keep away from the river; she cannot draw water from it, nor can she cut salmon on its bank. One instance is remembered in which the parents of twins failed to observe these restrictions; their legs became swollen and they soon died. In addition to punishment of the offenders in cases such as this, there is danger that if they fail to obey the customary taboos the salmon will be insulted and avoid the Bella Coola River.

[753] [825]

After four years a mother of twins resumes her normal life, but she is henceforth endowed with special powers. If she wishes to see anyone who is absent, she has only to think of the person, and in her dreams she will be able to see him. She must never try to start up a dying fire by blowing upon it, since to do so would cause a gale. When a person sets out on any kind of an expedition from the house in which a mother of twins is living, the latter must chew a little food and spit it out towards the departing guest, otherwise he will fail in his venture.

[778] [787]

845 825 Twins themselves, being akin to salmon, have miraculous ability to see their fish-kinsmen and read their thoughts. Bella Coola mythology contains many stories of the way in which twins could talk with, and change into, salmon. Such knowledge is not limited to tales of the distant past. An elderly Bella Coola described the manner in which her grandmother, a twin related to Sockeye Salmon, was consulted by a man who had been unlucky with his weir. Gazing down into the water, this woman saw that the fish were avoiding his dam because of the charred uprights used in its construction; when these were changed he was successful in his fishing.

845 Twins are believed to possess remarkable ability from earliest childhood, and even to remember incidents occurring

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

867 imitation potlatches, but he cannot himself carry out a cere-556 mony until he has reached manhood.

Puberty Rites

881 The change from childhood to adult age is, of course, more obvious with girls than with boys, and the former alone must observe strict taboos. Menstrual blood, like that which follows delivery, is unclean, especially that emitted at the first discharge. A woman who has just given birth is a xwsile; an [714] adolescent girl, a syuswi, that is, "A Person Not Fully Tabooed"; the attitude with which the former is regarded is held, in a lesser extent, for the latter.

At the first indication, the girl asks a woman to inform her mother of her condition, and goes home immediately if she happens to be away at the time. Her parents at once make a small enclosure or bedroom of planks or matting in either of the front corners of the house, providing it with a trap-door and ladder by which she can leave without passing through the front door. There the girl must lie for four days, with legs close together and bent at the knees, never stretched out straight. She is not allowed to drink anything, and must eat sparingly; if she should consume much food, she would be greedy when an adult. When necessary for her to leave the enclosure, a woman must always accompany her. Her mother, or some other female relative, provides her with the usual soft cedar-bark pads. On the fifth day, she leaves her shelter early in the morning with one feminine friend and goes to a secluded pool back in the forest, where she washes for the first time. Then she runs rapidly through the woods, which has the effect of making her a strong woman. Should a girl fail to do this, [753] she would be afflicted with an illness caused by the salmon, become blind, and die young.

784 For one year an adolescent girl is subject to many restrictions. Her near approach to the river would affend the salmon 881 and cause them to avoid Bella Coola, so she is not allowed to [825] draw water, or even to appear on the bank. She may not use

1:McDowalth E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

CAUSES OF DEATH

961 The Bella Coola know that sickness, accident, willful murder, old age, and a host of other factors may at any time terminate a man's life, but they consider that any one of these direct causes is possible only in conjunction with an indirect reason of a religious or supernatural nature; in the last analysis they attribute death to supernatural, not to natural causes. [773] As described in a previous chapter, an ancient myth attributes the origin of death to the stupidity of Raven, but this belief, even if its historical accuracy is accepted, belongs to the realm of philosophy and ancient history rather than to everyday life. 961 When a canoe is capsized on the ocean and its occupants are drowned, — the Bella Coola do not consider a drowning a mere 776 accident — it is because Qwaqwa was hungry and desired human flesh. This indirect reason is quite as important as the direct one. So, too, the death of a man beneath a falling tree or a land-slide is no accident; Sil-lem caused the tree to crash to earth or the slide to roll downwards. Most individuals believe that this supernatural being is responsible when an animal kills a hunter. He delights in death and always sits on [754] a coffin before it is taken to the grave, although none but shamans can see him. Any supernatural being can cause death, but it must not be imagined that the Bella Coola go through life in a state of constant fear; death may vanquish them in the forests, but the probabilities are against it. Nor does [753] sickness appear to them as a natural phenomenon. Its cause is either the intrusion of some foreign object into the body, or the weakness of one of the patient's supernatural elements. The only remedy in the latter case is an appeal to the super- [755] natural, sometimes through the medium of a shaman, whereas a foreign object in the body can often be extracted by a skilled [756] practitioner. A disease of this type is often brought on by the machinations of a sorcerer, and if death results it is attributed 761 to the potency of his charms, not to a natural ailment. Even [773] shamans are able to cause death. In war, one man may be able [776]

1:McDowell E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA DeDecorola NEA

177 964 squatting, now it is customary to use the extended position. It is impossible to state whether this is the direct result of white teaching, or whether the ease with which large boxes can now be made has led to interment at full length.

RITES FOLLOWING DISPOSAL OF THE BODY

968 Interment of the corpse does not end the ceremonial necessitated by a death in the community. As already described, some of the clothing and utensils of the dead person are burned during the funeral, but all are not destroyed at that time. The proportion kept for future treatment is immaterial, nor is there any established usage concerning the type of object reserved. During the days following the funeral, relatives of the deceased carefully gather his clothing, cooking utensils, rifles, and all other articles which have been his personal property or used exclusively by him. On the fourth day, these are taken to the cemetery by his immediate family, accompanied by as many of their friends as wish to show their sympathy. A fire is kindled near the grave and on it is deposited whatever can be burnt; other objects are either cast into the flames or piled near at hand (see Plate 11). It is most important that every article belonging to the deceased should be disposed of in this way. There are two reasons for this. First, it is considered indecent to use the possessions of a dead person; they would have the effect of poison on anyone doing so. Secondly, the ghost of the deceased receives goods that are burnt or deposited on the grave four days after the funeral. If deprived of what belongs to him, a ghost punishes the offenders by causing sickness. 178 968 Occasionally a new rifle, or some other treasured possession, is kept by a relative or friend; this is contrary to the established custom, but is justified by considering the article to be a gift from the deceased or a memento of him. No one would accept such a legacy unless he felt sure that the dead man

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

775 to a ghost, he informs a shaman of the fact and the latter [756] notifies the relatives of the deceased. If no shaman is convenient, the shade does not hesitate to help himself. Invisible, 264 and armed with a barbed hook, he approaches a person who is
775 eating and pulls away a crumb which falls to the earth. Should the eater stoop to pick this up, the ghost, robbed of his booty, 753 beats the offender with his hook, causing toothache or sometimes a sharp pain in the head or stomach. Other ailments are caused by the ghosts hitting with invisible stones those who have offended them. Consequently, no one picks up a crumb which has fallen, since it is impossible to know whether it has [827] been an accident or a seizure. Another indication of a ghost's hunger is loss of a tooth. The loser should throw it on a fire [782] with an invitation to the dead to accept his offering.

The barrier between ghosts and human beings is considered 775 to be little more than a wall of smoke, just too dense for ordinary eyes to penetrate. In early times intercommunication between the denizens of the two worlds was so easy that a doting mother was once allowed to tend her dead child on earth. Unfortunately, the woman's mother one day insisted on holding her grandchild, unaware that he was a ghost. Shocked at his appearance, the old woman dropped the child, much to the anger of the dead people.[*] Ever since that time it has been impossible for human beings to see and talk with [538] their deceased kinsmen. Like so many Bella Coola stories, it is doubtful whether this one is regarded as more than an item of ancient history; it is considered to be a fact, but it is not one that enters into the daily thoughts of the people.

[824] Ghosts frequently come to their old homes at night where dogs can see them. If one of these animals begins to bark and gazes fixedly at a spot where nothing is to be seen, it is because a wraith is standing there and the dog's owner hopes that it will remain invisible. It is true that some individuals have [754] received shamanistic power from a ghost, but more often a visitation is disastrous and to be avoided. A dead person often

[*] This story is recorded in detail later (I, p. 577).

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

tries to speak to living relatives, but his whistling language is 775 unintelligible and frightens the hearer. Ghosts dislike urine, [789] and the only means known to keep them away from a house is to sprinkle this liquid outside the door, a common Bella Coola custom. There is no actual danger in hearing a ghost, and 761 little even in seeing one, provided the observer does not relate 775
his experience, but should he try to do so, something happens to his mouth as if an invisible hand had been clamped over it 753 to prevent his words issuing forth. He can neither eat nor drink and soon dies.* It is possible that other beings are responsible for this same affliction, but as no sufferer has ever been able to explain the cause of his ailment, no one knows.
The most dangerous ghost is that of a person who, buried [764] without a nose-ring, is unable to disintegrate into his elements.
The sight of such an apparition causes almost immediate death through contraction and closing of the mouth.

An unpleasant habit of ghosts is the throwing of stones at 776 the living. This is done partly from a love of mischief, and partly to remind their relatives of their needs. An old Kitsaquit man described how, when encamped on King Island, he had almost been struck by a stone which seemed to fall from a tree. He realized that it must have been thrown by a ghost, [753] and his opinion was confirmed when he found he could not [755] speak. He instantly built a fire and cast on it both food and clothing as offerings to the dead, which had the effect of loosening his mouth. Pondering on the reason, he remembered that one of his relatives had died not far away, and that he had failed to give him any crumbs for a long time. In this case, as in many others, the stone was visible, though the thrower remained invisible.

Even near approach to ghosts is sometimes dangerous. The same man related how, when hunting, he heard what he thought was the note of a water ouzel, and passed by heedlessly. In a few minutes he thought he heard the cackling of geese, but the sound, instead of continuing to come from a pond a few hun-

*The disease attributed to the actions of ghosts may be lock-jaw. [764]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NES Bellacoola NES

Supernatural good fortune has also been obtained from the "Mothers" of certain plants. 777

Among the roots that are sought for when a man intends to give a potlatch are those of clover and of oká, a grass which grows on flats near the sea. Once the aunt of an elderly (in 1913) Bella Coola woman dug up the Mother of Oká, a root, thick as her thumb, but shaped like a woman. Perhaps the reason that she found it was because she was digging in the darkness, after the setting of the sun. The woman, ignorant of the proper procedure, did nothing, with the result that her hands became painfully swollen. If she had wrapped the root in a portion of her used clothing and kept it hidden for one year, without saying anything about her find, it would have brought her supernatural good luck.

824 [556] [559]

Another woman found an elderberry as large as a baseball, and shaped like the mask worn above the forehead by a member of the nusuk society. Her father, an old man skilled in such matters, wrapped the berry in his daughter's soiled clothing and kept it carefully hidden in her box. It brought her supernatural good luck because, no matter how much or how often she gave away presents, goods always came to her.

SUPERNATURAL GOOD LUCK FROM STONES

Stones are among the objects from which supernatural good luck can be obtained. A person who has long observed ceremonial chastity may be fortunate enough to hear what seems to be the weeping of a new-born infant, as he passes in his canoe beneath some steep ocean cliff. Then, if he watches, he will see a stone being born from a larger one at the level of the sea. If the observer takes the infant-stone, wraps it in his soiled clothing and stows it among his possessions, it will act as other bringers of supernatural good fortune by luring all kinds of valuables to the owner. In fact, such a stone is said to be so potent that if left in an empty box for some time, it will attract enough skins to fill the receptacle.

777 787 523 [785]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The Curing of the Sick

755
756

When a person is ill one of his relatives comes to request a shaman to cure him.

"I will help the mortal," answers the shaman, as though he were himself a supernatural being.

Indeed he considers himself to be removed from the ranks of ordinary mortals, and refers to the being from whom he has received his power as "comrade." No mention of recompense is made, but the shaman understands that if he succeeds he will be rewarded. Donning his collar of alternate rows of dyed and undyed cedar-bark, he proceeds to the patient's house, usually followed by some of the singers, as well as by anyone else who is interested. He throws himself down beside, or on, the sick person and begins to feel for the sickness. Particularly in the case of stomach or chest trouble this is a difficult matter. The practitioner kneads the flesh, pounds the patient, leaps on him, and pummels him until a spectator wonders that the sufferer survives. The aim throughout is to bring the disease, pictured as a foreign object having material form, towards the surface whence it can be extracted in one of the following ways. [753]

(1) Some shamans of long ago were the possessors of life-sticks, and could cure merely by touching the patient with the life-giving end.

(2) In a simple illness the shaman is able to cure by his power alone. After locating the seat of the disease he casts himself on the patient, with head pressed close to the spot where he has located the trouble, and growls and grunts with half-closed lips, ejecting a flow of saliva over the sick person. By so doing he imparts his own power into the sufferer, who at once begins to imitate the chattering and to shake his hands. Then the shaman proceeds to recall this power to himself by scooping it up with half-cupped hands. Endowed as he is, the sickness is harmless to him. No instance is known of a shaman having failed to recall his power, but, theoretically, if he did

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

them that might escape. It is the sickness! The din increases; the leader works himself into a frenzy with his rapid gyrations, then he stills the noise as the shaman goes to the door. In dead silence, the more striking in contrast to the previous tumult, he partly opens his hands and puffs against them, as if blowing something out of the door, at the same time calling out, hsip. Again the beating of sticks breaks out, again it is stilled, and again the shaman blows forth the sickness. This is done four times. The shaman uses his own discretion whether to send the sickness through the door or the smoke-vent. 755 756 * [535]

A variant of this method is for the functioning shaman to dance during the beating of sticks, before throwing himself on the patient. With chattering teeth and shaking rattle, he revolves sunwise, his free arm bent at the elbow so that his wrist, which he shakes freely, is close to his chin; at intervals he calls out, ensaiswa. It is a serious and important proceeding to the Bella Coola, and the effects are considered nullified if a dog barks during the stick-beating. [535]

(4) Some powerful shamans cure by the use of dyed and undyed cedar-bark. A roll made of these two substances is placed among glowing embers until it is itself afire, when the shaman puts it in his mouth. After dancing for some time to the accompaniment of frenzied stick-beating, he hauls forth the bark, still burning, and again puts it in the fire. This is done four times. Then he thrusts the burning bark into the patient's mouth, and leaves it there for some time before pulling it forth. This, too, is repeated four times. When finally drawn forth, it has attracted the sickness, which can then be thrown away by the throwing away of the bark. It seems clear that this must be done by conjuring, but the writer was unable to learn the method employed, and was repeatedly assured that no subterfuge was used. [824] [535]

(5) One illness is caused by a person carelessly stepping on a dead salmon, such as dot the banks of the rivers in the autumn. The fish, indignant, injects a sickness into the offender. [753] [825]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola,NE6

* 756 called out to him, and then remembered no more. It was 775 obvious that she had seen a ghost.

[787] It is over diseases caused by ghosts that a shaman from the dead has power. If a person picks up and eats any morsels
● 753 which he has dropped he will usually suffer, because, though
* 756 he thinks the crumbs have fallen, they have really been pulled
775 from his hands by a hungry ghost, who thus showed his desire for food. By picking up and eating the fragments, the man
[264] thwarts a dead person who retaliates by forcing some sickness into him. Ghosts may visit this land of the living and ask their relatives for food or clothing, but mortals, unable to hear the speech of the dead, are unaware of the requests of their deceased relatives, and so do not answer them. The irritated ghosts respond by causing sickness. In such cases a shaman
755 from the dead is able to suck out the cause of the ill, and some-
* 756 times to display it as a bone, twig, or other small object and at the same time to tell the sufferer what it was that his relatives desired. Like ordinary shamans, a shaman from the dead uses his own discretion whether or not to employ the violent beating of sticks, and like his fellow-practitioner re-[465] ceives payment from those whom he has helped. There are no fixed charges, but a successful shaman is always wealthy.

* 756 The intimate contact of ghosts with shamans has already 787 been mentioned in connection with the ability of the latter to learn from the ghost of a murdered person whom he believes 694 to be his slayer.

There is one method of sacrificial curing practised by 755 shamans from the dead alone. If the sickness refuses to yield
* 756 to ordinary methods, the practitioner makes ten cedar-bark 782 vessels, fills these with grease and places them near the fire, one between it and the door, one on the inner side, and four on either side of it, parallel to the side walls of the house. By each vessel are placed two small wooden figures, roughly carved to represent men, and decorated with dyed and undyed cedar-bark. After endeavouring to suck forth the disease, with or without the assistance of the frenzied beating of sticks, the

1) McDowell E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

in a kind of a cave. He here unties the rope, dives into the water and out through a narrow passage to the open fiord where he is picked up by a waiting canoe. 778 755

If he is to recover, he feels as he dives the scraping of some rough-skinned animal against his side. No one knows what this is, perhaps a fish about seventy yards in length which was seen near the place about 1905. If a person is too ill to make the dive unaided, a stick is forced through the entrance from the fiord, with a rope attached. The patient, who has been lowered to the ledge from the upper air, is then tied firmly to the stick and hauled out. Before leaving, shreds of his clothing are always left at the mouth of the cave in payment to its supernatural occupant for his assistance. [757]

The method of curing at the spot, Ałkwaxa, differs from those previously described since it is only the man whose repository (II, p. 8) is there who is able to exercise the power. Patients whose flesh has become rotten are carried to the place and he scrubs their bodies, in the water, with various prickly bushes. This man is not a shaman, his power rests solely on the fact that this curing place is his repository. [756]

At ɛxpaław the virulent skin disease łłokły can be cured.* This is caused by a worm of colour salmon or fern root passing from the mouth up into the head, instead of down into the stomach. The Bella Coola have only slight knowledge of anatomy, and by "head" probably mean the passage connecting mouth and nose. In this spot the food becomes a frog egg, hatches into a tadpole, and finally transforms into a frog. If a shaman is called on immediately, he can remove the frog by thrusting his finger up the nasal passage and hanging down on the patient's head, but if he delays, the eye and nose become clogged, the hair falls, and the flesh on arms and body wastes away until the skin is shrivelled. Then the only hope is to visit ɛxpaław. [753] [754] [755] [756]

Friends of the sufferer carry him to the spot and place him in an ice cavern, roofed by the glacier itself, and then retire to

*On his earlier images it can be treated elsewhere.

#534
#787
777

mitaqan lying on the stones at the bottom of the river. Realizing his danger, he swiftly hurled the pole on to the shore beneath a huge cedar where no rain could penetrate. There it remained for twenty or thirty years until it had become covered with moss.

One day two sisters chanced to pass that way and the younger wished to gather some of the moss, but the elder, who apparently secretled with what the pole had been in contact, was afraid and tried to dissuade her. The handsome girl picked some of the moss, and threw it towards her elder sister, saying:

"Pshaw! It is nothing."

The moss struck her, and the elder girl, now thoroughly frightened, was determined that if any ill results were to follow, her younger sister should likewise suffer from them. So she, too, gathered some of the moss and threw it on the first picker. Nothing happened until they had gone home and down now to the fire when both began to swell. They told what had befallen them, but it was too late to apply any remedy and both continued to expand until their stomachs burst and they died.*

THE MITAQAN THAT WAS CAUGHT IN A NET

Between 1868 and 1870, a young man, related to the Bella Coola from whom this account was obtained, was visiting salmon near Tsawatl. He had caught all that he needed but decided to make one more haul. As he did so, he saw in the water a giant toad with enormous shining eyes and white feet. It was a mitaqan. The boat covered the net which sank under its weight. The terrified fisherman plucked up enough courage to haul in his net, and found that the toad had turned to a stone, the surface of which was covered with grass. He placed it on top of his salmon and went home to summon the people of his own and neighboring villages to view the wonder. There were ancient traditions about such beasts having been caught in nets, but this was the first time that such a marvel had ever been seen by any of the eager crowd that thronged the bank. A very old man, well-informed in such matters, now appeared and warned the people to keep away from the space between the stone and the river. He cautioned that they should see the whole beast turned in, carrying into the water, stones, the pile of freshly landed salmon, and the mysterious stone. The old man had heard of a similar occurrence, and his knowledge saved the lives of the onlookers.

[759]
[766]

*The usual explanation given for the bursting of the stomach is that some of the fire from the smoke has entered the victim's body, and there increased on coming close to a flame. It results in the early stages of swelling is said to be the coming of an unwelcomed stalkers dark.

THE BELLA COOLA INDIANS

For Fractures

An effort is made to straighten the limb and to place the ends of the broken bone together in their proper position. If there is considerable swelling, an incision is made to let blood escape. Hemlock gum is applied freely to the whole region to soften the wound and hold the splints in position. This prevents the sun, if one has been made, and is believed to facilitate the knitting process. Any small sticks are used for splints.

CONDITIONS FOR SUPERNATURAL CAUSES OF DISTURBANCES OR DISEASE DEFINED

Persons suffering from diseases or accidents of the types described in the previous section are not the only ones whom the Bella Coola consider to be sick. A girl at puberty, a mother who has just given birth, a man or woman whose consort has just died, has been placed in a peculiar relation to the supernatural and is in a condition identical to that of one suffering from a disease. The ritual acts prescribed at these crises of life are medicines, just as truly as are herbal potions or a curative ceremony. In fact, anyone who has been in close touch with the supernatural is in a critical condition and must act circumspectly, the reason for the taboos observed by diseases.

Hunters particularly, and others who are likely to come in contact with supernatural beings, employ a number of conditions to protect themselves or to alleviate the dangers to which they have been exposed. As already described, the main potency of these are articles which have been rendered essentially human by contact with the body. For example, an evil supernatural being such as the Wise-Party of the Tribe can be kept at a distance by wearing soiled clothing upon a fire. Even more powerful are soiled cedar-bark menstrual napkins. It is remembered that when a Bella Bella lad was treated with a gall so that he could see beneath the ocean, his friends became so alarmed at his tremendous ability that they destroyed it by throwing pads of this kind on a fire built beneath the bed on which he was sleeping. The basis of this medicine is the belief [illegible] [illegible] as two figurines prepared to cause love has been described.

[illegible] In addition to these non-specialized medicines, the Bella Coola are acquainted with remedies for several specific ailments caused by supernatural beings. One of them, to cure a person in whose head a toad was formed, has already been described.

To Prevent Blindness

[illegible] Loss of sight is caused by a bee flying into a man's face, or by a raven's droppings falling upon him as he looks upward. After either accident, rub a feather from any bird in a raven's liver and draw it across the eyes. The person practising this cure must remain continent for one year or blindness will result.

To Prevent Paralysis of the Leg

If a man puts his foot in a hole so that he crumbles and falls, he will lose the use of that leg unless he counteracts the danger by placing a small stick upright in the cavity. In the summer of 1900 the writer noticed an old Bella Coola, with whom he was walking in the woods, break off a branch about two feet in length and place it in a hole where he had crumbled. He could give no explanation for his act, except that failure would cause him to lose the use of that leg.

To Prevent Paralysis of the Foot

If a person should happen to set his bare foot upon a dead wolf, he will lose the use of his lower limbs. The accident to this has been forgotten within recent years, and patients are merely treated by shamans.

To Prevent the Revenge of a Ghost

[illegible] The ghost of a murdered person usually tries to avenge himself on his killer, who can protect himself by obtaining a small piece from the body or clothing of his victim, a tuft of hair, a shred of cloth, or even a piece of earth from above his

0.98-Dawson B.C. (502-514)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

phases of activity, having here only certain rules about diet and a number of prohibitions which hunters must observe. 784

THE TABOOS OBSERVED BY WOMEN

212

Women must not eat bear meat. To do so would derange the menstrual and cause profuse growth of hair. 562

Women of child-bearing age must not eat beaver. To do so would cause a difficult delivery. [841] 806

A woman of child-bearing age must not eat smoked salmon until the sticks have been removed which hold it in front of the fire. She will bear twins if this injunction is disregarded. [844] [849]

TABOOS OBSERVED BY HUNTERS

204

No hunter or fisherman may leave the village in the morning if he has been foolish enough to break the night's fast. It is necessary to depart at dawn and take a small meal when nearing the hunting or fishing-ground. [206] [264]

No hunter may drink water in which dog salmon have been soaked. Animals dislike this liquid and avoid a man with it in his stomach.

When traps have been set, and a party of hunters is sitting around the camp-fire in the evening, no one must pass between it and one of his fellows. If this should be done, heedlessly, animals would disregard the bait that has been set out.

When mountain-goat hunters are travelling, the most expert must lead the party. When it sits down, so must the others, and no one can change places with him. This is said to be a reason of the Carrion as well as of the Bella Coola. [191]

When a hunter is carving up a bear, he must be careful not to cut a vein which is said to run across the chest and down each fore-paw. To do so causes sickness. [825] [755]

When a hunter kills a bear he must place either the skull or the whole head in a tree near the scene of the kill, otherwise he will become blind. In some families, the man removes only an eye, places it in a scoubed stick and set this under an over- [752]

Sukaxtar and back X's call in the usual manner. Then, two by two, the masks are cast on to the fire and the ceremonial is over.

THE DANCE OF THE TALLY POSTS

As previously described, a tally post is erected in the land above for every Bella Coola at birth. As long as this memorial is upright and firm, the individual to whom it refers enjoys health and prosperity, but if it becomes crooked he falls ill. The uninitiated believe that several Sukaxtar have the prerogative of climbing to the land above during the ceremonial season and straightening leaning tally posts. This is such a useful ability that it must have exercised great influence on the uninitiated in early days, but the rite has not been properly carried out since the smallpox epidemic in the last century. The following account was obtained from two old men who remembered the manner in which a certain Qoikaf of Tsimsil performed a year or two before "The Great Sickness." Neither of the informants was a Sucar at the time, but they were able to supplement their recollections of the dance with what they afterwards learnt when initiated, so the following account is probably accurate in outline though deficient in detail. It will be convenient to refer to the dancer as X, and describe the ceremony in the present tense. It was also performed at Kimsquit many years ago.

The rite resembles Sucrum dances in many respects. X must obtain the consent of the masks during the preceding summer, and their permission is refused unless the prospective dancer is a man of proved discretion. If they agree, X asks a number of Sukaxtar women to help him by making a very long and strong rope of nettle fibre. At intervals the work-women gather for the purpose in the back-room of X's house, taking care that no uninitiated see what they are doing. Every effort is made to ensure that there is no flaw in the rope as a break would be a serious matter, punishable by death.

Near the winter solstice the masks choose a suitable time

(a) Recorded on song 512 (b 11), National Museum of Canada; source, Joshua Johnson, leader, Jim Pollard, prompter and successor, entered by Pat'a Charlie and Jonathan Jones.

(b) In many of Pat'a's successors had been deemed that he considered such a loss to be an inheritable tendency and reserved accordingly. This song was composed for a memorial potlatch held after the drowning of three of his sons.

(c) Jim means, literally, the successive rising of the sun from day to day; in his therefore, the significance of. The span of life is shortening.

(d) This and explains the usual swallow chorus.

(e) Raven. This is one of the rarely used chief's names.

(f) The reference is to an incident related about Raven in the beginning of time. He made, and gave life to a son who was the chief par and delight. Afterward he wondered what the creature might be and sent down one of his sons. The supernatural lands to save him. Raven, ignorant of the reason for his son's loss and with no idea that he was being carefully guarded, was absolutely disconsolate. The myth is recorded in vol. 2, p. 40.

Inverted Tunes

In contrast to the carefully prepared and logically worded mourning songs, many of those used by shamans are extremely incoherent. This is natural in view of the belief, already described, that the words and tune are given to a sick person at the time that he is cured. Those who recover from an illness are convinced that they must have received a supernatural visitation, and at once begin to ponder on the song brought to them at that time. A person of imaginative temperament easily persuades himself that the words which begin to form in his mind were actually brought by an agent, and, having thus deluded himself, it is easy for him to convince others. The coherence of the text thus depends upon the ability of the patient, a factor which explains the extreme lack of skill in many compositions. The examples here given are, perhaps, unusually complex.

[illegible] (Pantomimic), a Tsimpsian Shamaness

1. [illegible]	[illegible]
In the beginning	the life-giving power(?) was made,
[illegible]	[illegible]
that is what we have given	within [illegible].

[illegible] (?).

*538
786

B [illegible] | [illegible] | [illegible]
They(f) sang | over my ends heard(f), | they all worked over

[illegible]
my dancer's power(f).

[illegible]

C [illegible] | [illegible] | [illegible]
Because upon | the place of dancer's power(f), | there I am

[illegible]
[illegible]

(a) This song received his name and his ability to cure the sick from [illegible] a place [illegible]. He was very ill, apparently on the point of death, at the time of his initiation.

(b) Recorded as song 1(f) D the, National Museum of Canada, singer, [illegible]

(c) The first part is sung as if supernatural beings were speaking.

(d) The reference is to the healing ability granted to dancers who have demonstrated their overall ability actually (f).

[1158]
[1176]

(e) Thus to Human beings. It is believed that a person can be cured only if [illegible] or some other supernatural being implant within the patient's body some of the healing power.

(f) The two dancers of this song have different names, an unusual feature.

(g) Referring to supernatural beings, the part of the song is sung as if [illegible] were speaking, and describing the time by two night a dancer.

(h) Reference to the ends there shows that [illegible] had the ability to cure the sick.

(i) The dancer is sung as if supernatural beings had visited and bowded over the power which they ultimately sent down.

(j) The reference to to Thunder-a which, as the home of supernatural beings, is unmentioned, the place from which comes a dancer's power. When [illegible] was on the point of death, it seemed to him that he also spoke where him as that he was able to give upon those spirits there. He noticed the supernatural were [illegible] where he was lost, and good with you as the dispersion of [illegible] to [illegible] time.

[35]

Song Used by [illegible], a Bella Coola [illegible]

[195]

D [illegible] | [illegible] | [illegible] | [illegible]
It moved up each down, | illegible | when they(f) sang | of [illegible].

[illegible]

E [illegible] | [illegible] | [illegible] | [illegible]
They(f) placed eagle down, | within the ends heard(g) | when I sang(h),

[illegible]
he(f) pulled me forth.

[illegible]

APPENDIX D

377 192*

[illegible]: Something long sought for on account of its reported desirability, such as undiscovered wealth.

[illegible] [354]

[illegible]: Small letters concealed within the back cover.

[illegible]: One of the few men in uniform in Kitsapit in the beginning of time.

[illegible]: Drawn on a pedestal.

[illegible]: "The Sickness". Name assumed by Gaunes in the beginning of time.

[illegible]: "Who Has Been Stolen Off". Name applied to present distributed when a woman has been carried through the mail. The implication is that they are that stolen from the Empire of the document. [491] [744]

[illegible]:
1. The supreme gift.
2. One of the few men in uniform on the upper Bella Coola in the beginning of time.
3. One of the few men in uniform on the upper Kitsapit in the beginning of time.
4. Full of a Dove repository.

[illegible]:
1. Mountain on the north side of the lower Bella Coola.
2. Name assumed for one of the few uniform on Gualet in the beginning of time.

[illegible]: Old people, especially persons who in a polite way for direct address. [471]

[illegible]: Supernatural priests who made appeared in the beginning of time. [374]

[illegible]: Powers given to children the initiation of a Kwakiutl. [231]

[illegible]: Ancient name of a Bella Coola woman. [231]

[illegible]: Professional musicians. [643]

[illegible]: Professional dancers or marriages.

[illegible]: Professional hunters.

[illegible]: Professional warriors.

[illegible]: Kitsapit Adventure Bring in the last century.

[illegible]: Chiefs are.

[illegible]: Unknown Gaunes appointed to an inferior away.

[illegible] [401]

[illegible]: Repository of a Kitsapit Classified when name are offered.

[illegible]: Professional warrior. [643]

[illegible]: Professional river guardy.

[illegible]: Ancients and world of the Kitsapit River.

[illegible]: Shaman.

[illegible]:
1. Starting of those who have given polyandry.
2. Unidentified Gaunes and in inward only slightly. [753]

[illegible]: Sayings appearing in those who are being adopting and in associate themselves with the world's health in the Inward connections of a marriage.

[illegible]: Name applied to the supernatural artisans with reference to their construction of everything used for weaving.

[illegible]: "Chief-Creator". Name applied to the supernatural being Kitsapit with reference to the Kitsapit invisibility.

[illegible]: "The Highest of All Chief-Gaun". Name of Gaunes's son in the beginning of time.

[illegible]: "Falling Into Fire". Name assumed by a Gaunes's son long ago.

[illegible]: "The Bad-Maker". Name applied to a Kitsapit son long ago.

[illegible]: One who has received a consolation for sequence made in preparation for a potlatch. [643]

By laying their hands on the nape of a person they are able to tell whether he and a person or whether it has left the body. If the soul should become weak they are able to restore it to its former vigour. If a person swooms it is believed that his soul has been away without leaving its shell. The diseases have its hovering wings which give a sound like those of a mosquito. Do any watch and replace it in the nape of the person. If the soul leaves the body without leaving its shell the person becomes crazy.

774
756
[828]
[753]
[828]

The art of divination is bestowed by God. It is impossible to obtain it by means of fasting and praying as it has been among the neighbouring tribes, but it is a free gift from the deity. A person who is to become a diviner will fall ill, and, during his illness, God will give him a song which must be kept a deep secret. When this he is able to cure. Should a person falsely pretend to have received the gift of divination, and wish to work out diseases from a patient, he will fall ill himself.

956
[776]

When which were clearly shown the various differences between the method of obtaining the power and that of the neighbouring tribes he subsequent said: "When an [illegible] wishes to become a diviner he must go to the ancestors whom the deity of their diseases resides (probably [illegible]) who will initiate him. Do Dingiki are others the are to work a song."

[171]

Sickness is caused by a disease entering the body or by witchcraft (see p. 417). The diseases is able to extract the disease by sucking. A peculiar method of witchcraft somewhat similar to the "ab" of the Kwakiutl (see Sixth Report of the Committee, p. 116), was described to me as follows: The person who wants to bewitch his enemy endeavours to obtain some of his old clothing, preferably worked by perspiration being considered especially effective. When he is obtained a wall is built, and the clothing is put into the mouth, which is then tied up. When the wall is placed in a box. This procedure is called [illegible]. Sometimes the clothing or even hair is included in the form of a wall or of a head gear. The diseases are considered these diseases.

753
755 759
[826]

If a person has been bewitched and a string is tied firmly around the neck of the corpse, the witchcraft's neck will become swollen and he will be unable to breathe and will die. If such is placing in the corpse's eyes and the life passes over to the witchcraft will die. If a person has been killed with a knife or arrows, or another weapon, in which case of the blood adhering, the latter is brought into contact with a witch's head, they feel, or anything else that is left and then throws into the fire or put into a fire in witch's mouth, then the witchcraft will die.

682
759
[828]

I will have a live witch's [illegible]

Sneezing indicates that people are talking about me.

Right shoulder of the sick indicates men, left shoulder good weather.

Twitching of the muscles of the left side of the body is unlucky, of the right side lucky. Twitching of the skin under the eyes indicates that one will cry.

827
[777]
835
763 777

If a big [illegible] and lands to be sharp he cross will die.

The twitching of a [illegible] without an apparent cause is unlucky.

Wives.

When a man gently was expected the machine did not [illegible] quite [illegible], but they put on handkerchiefs of white cotton [illegible] and [illegible]

736
719

[illegible] and sometimes to 'the ki'ran. The following song belongs to the week end dance :—

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

here to get the firewood. This opening is called [illegible], that is, "a mouth kept open by means of a wedge." [illegible] spoke: "The sky shall not have spots. This wedge shall keep its mouth open." The following [illegible] songs refers to these deities:—

> [illegible]
> [illegible]
> [illegible]
> [illegible]
>
> ("My child protect the sky, my child!
> [illegible] of the sky, my child!
> [illegible] sky, my child!
> [illegible] of the sky, my child!")

[illegible]

The world is called [illegible], or [illegible], that is, "the land below." It is an island connecting to the boundless ocean. In the [illegible] a ghost is sitting with legs apart, who is called [illegible]. He holds a long stone bar in his outstretched hands. The earth is fastened to this stone bar by means of very strong ropes. Sometimes he gets tired, and moves his hands to take better hold of the stone bar. Then we have an earthquake; and the Bella Coola say, "[illegible]," that is, "he takes hold of our world." When he moves our earth backward, we have spring-tides. When he moves it outward, all rivers disappear.

In the ocean lives a being called [illegible], who never sees the sun; he sees the water of the sea and gives it forth again. This is the cause of the tides. A mask representing this being appears in the [illegible] ceremonial. He is represented as a human being, the face of which is painted with white stripes, which symbolize the various levels of the sea.

The world below or in the country of the ghosts ([illegible]) is called [illegible]. Descriptions of the ghost country are principally obtained from shamans who believe they have visited that country during a trance. According to the statement of an old woman who believed that as a little girl she had visited the country of the ghosts during a trance, the entrance to the country of the ghosts is through a hole situated in each house, between the doorway and the fireplace. The country of the ghosts stretches along the south banks of a large river. There is a hill behind their village, the base of which is covered with sharp stones. Where it is summer here, it is winter there. Where it is night here, it is day there. The ghosts do not walk on their feet, but on their heads. Their language is different from the one spoken on earth. The souls on reaching the lower world receive new names. The village of the ghosts is said to be surrounded by a fence. They have a dancing-house, in which they perform thus been done about seventy years earlier. It appears that attempts were commonly made to kill chiefs by means of sympathetic magic, and it is quite possible that such attempts, becoming known, preyed upon the minds of the victims to such an extent that death resulted.

WEALTH

Since wealth is so important in chieftainship, it would be desirable at this point to consider the concepts of wealth. Unfortunately, it is impossible to give a satisfactory treatment of this subject. The coming of the white man altered the economic aspects of Bella Coola life so radically, and at such an early period, that concrete examples of economic investigations, so useful in a thorough study, could not be obtained in the field. It is possible that greater attention to this subject might have produced more satisfactory results, but I am doubtful of this.

In the old days, "wealth" was of two categories: (a) Possessions, tangible or intangible, which could be shown, personally or dramatically, or could be expounded in words, and (b) Goods which could be distributed for validating such possessions. Individual possessions, unrelated for distribution, were hardly considered as wealth; a sewing-machine, a bottle of whiskey, a bed, or some other luxury might give satisfaction to the owner, but did not increase his importance in the eyes of his fellows. The value of objects was only for their use in ceremonial distribution; indeed, prior to such distribution, they were only of potential value. This attitude controlled Bella Coola economics in the early days of contact, and still influences their behaviour. A native storekeeper was carefully commented on the fact that he would gain no advantage from the goods on his shelves, since he hoped merely to sell them, not to give them away.

A man's relatives were expected to help him in the acquisition of goods, but the extent of their contributions was never

of his village, hence they will not feel it incumbent upon them to intervene. But news travels, and in course of time the armed members of some other tribe will decide to send a raiding party against X's village. All informants agreed most emphatically that this custom prevailed among the coast people from the Trinidian country to Siara Bay, but specific examples could not be obtained. The Bulu Cooks regard such a raid as the proper course to pursue, and belligerent tribes may have used as irregularity in the potlatch rites as an excuse for an assault. It is clear, however, that this custom never attained such prominence that it could be called a law.

The following is an instance of the Bulu Cooks outlook on the question:

The father of an informant had had such success in giving potlatches that his neighbours were jealous. On one occasion he prepared a representation of a whale, an elaborate wooden frame, fifteen feet long, covered by mats crowded within and carrying passengers. (He was a figure which covered ten his assumed worth. One of the carpenters who made it, bribed by a jealous rival of the donor of the potlatch, arranged that the frame just of the whale should fall on the floor during the proceedings. This revealed the mechanism of the structure. While influence on the coast prevented an invasion of foreign raiders, but according to the informant, the chief determined that his father should die, and then employed a sorcerer for this purpose. His father and three other relatives died soon afterwards. This man, the sole survivor, ascribes his escape to the adoption of Christianity.

Another instance of the jealousy which follows events to potlatch rivalry occurred a few years ago, when a number of young men said the cross shaped whether quietly, as if they had been seen. The presence of the white man prevented any open steps towards punishment, but before long all the youths died. No one knows what caused their deaths, though probably they were due to an appeal to black magic acting on the instructions of a native sorcerer.

After the prayer, X and his family give more food to their guests, whose boats containing what they are to carry away are increasing in number. By his hospitality, X increases his prestige in the eyes of his fellow-villagers.

If he can afford to build a new house embodying the form

Schoolcraft E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

701 difficult to estimate the former influence of such warriors. The belief of all in their ability must have given them some prestige, although the requirements of practical qualifications in fighting must often have prevented them from functioning as military leaders. In other words, a man may be, socially, a warrior, even though he lacks ability as a fighting man.

701 The functions of warriors are not limited to fighting with 693 enemies of other tribes. Each has the power to kill and must exercise it when requested. If a mistake is made in a cere-[688] monial kwiat dance, the offender must be killed, and one way in which this is accomplished is by the senior members of the [575] society requesting a professional warrior to act as executioner.
[428] One of these men, who lived at Ada-do-i, always used a stone club which had been handed down from generation to gene-[411] ration, becoming the property of each new incumbent of the name and prerogatives. In other cases, the killing is said to [754] have been done with the aid of magic. The power of the Ada-do-i warrior had been confirmed with so much goods that he was the most powerful professional killer known to the Bella Coola. He acted on instructions from the senior members of the kwiat society or when called upon by anyone. If, [684] for example, a man found that his wife had been faithless and wished to kill her lover, it was only necessary to call the professional warrior, who was bound to act in accordance with his prerogative. He received no pay, since he was merely [682] exercising his right. The relatives of the murdered person never took revenge on the slayer, realizing that he was pow-less in the matter, though they frequently requested him to slay the person who had asked him to kill the first victim.
He could never refuse to do so, even if the victim were his own brother, or if he knew that the person he was to kill was guil-less. The underlying principle was that this man's power had been increased to such a pitch by the distribution of presents [761] that if he failed to exercise it on demand, it would react upon himself and cause his own death. This Ada-do-i warrior began in time to have an aversion for his vocation, since he

McDougall E-5 (1922-1924)948
NES Bellacoola NES

CHAPTER VIII

DEATH

Death Rites—Memorial Rites—Fate of the Dead

Death Rites

DEATH is marked by even more complicated and prolonged rites than marriage. Like so many primitive peoples, the Bella Coola not only carry out elaborate rituals soon after the actual decease, but hold lengthy commemorative and mourning ceremonials in later years. As these require the co-operation of a large number of people, the death of an individual affects a wider circle than his own relatives, and the celebrations have, therefore, an important social as well as religious significance. 76 796 [182]

OMENS OF DEATH

It is not surprising that the Bella Coola, believing in the omnipresence of the supernatural, should consider various peculiar occurrences to be omens of death. One of the simplest of these is to hear the falling of a tree when there is neither wind nor other reason to account for it. Such a fall is audible only to the person whom it warns of approaching death, either to himself or to one of his relatives. A number of men may be in the forest together, when one of them hears the crash of a tree and notices that his companions are unaware of it; he realizes that this is an omen and protects himself by calling out: 763

"Let this evil reach against whoever has been plotting evil against me."

The basis of this custom is the belief that someone has been practising black magic against the hearer, who, by this answer, is able to cause the sorcery to recoil upon the malefactor. Even more dangerous than to hear a falling tree, is to have one crash [754] [824]

Libb:Dwyer:Ch. E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NES

CAUSES OF DEATH

961 The Bella Coola know that sickness, accident, willful murder, old age, and a host of other factors may at any time terminate a man's life, but they consider that any one of these direct causes is possible only in conjunction with an indirect reason of a religious or supernatural nature; in the last analysis they attribute death to supernatural, not to natural causes. As described in a previous chapter, an ancient myth attributes [778] the origin of death to the stupidity of Raven, but this belief, even if its historical accuracy is accepted, belongs to the realm of philosophy and ancient history rather than to everyday life. When a canoe is capsized on the ocean and its occupants are 961 drowned,—the Bella Coola do not consider a drowning a mere 776 accident—it is because Sisnaqua was hungry and desired human flesh. This indirect reason is quite as important as the direct one. So, too, the death of a man beneath a falling tree or a land-slide is no accident; Sisnaqua caused the tree to crush to earth or the slide to roll downwards. Most individuals believe that this supernatural being is responsible when an animal kills a hunter. He delights in death and always sits on [754] a coffin before it is taken to the grave, although none but shamans can see him. Any supernatural being can cause death, but it must not be imagined that the Bella Coola go through life in a state of constant fear; death may vanquish them in the forests, but the probabilities are against it. Nor does 753 sickness appear to them as a natural phenomenon. Its cause is either the intrusion of some foreign object into the body, or the weakness of one of the patient's supernatural elements. The only remedy in the latter case is an appeal to the super- [755] natural, sometimes through the medium of a shaman, whereas a foreign object in the body can often be extracted by a skilled [754] practitioner. A disease of this type is often brought on by the machinations of a sorcerer, and if death results it is attributed 761 to the potency of his charms, not to a natural ailment. Even [779] shamans are able to cause death. In war, one man may be able [776]

1:Mc:Dewelth E-5 (1922-1924)1945
NE4 Bellacoola NE4

dance again in eight years. Four years later, one of his fellow- 778 villagers offered him five skins for the one which he had used, 539 and, when this was declined, the number was raised to ten, then to fifteen, and finally to twenty new bear-skins. As there was no particular value in the mantle itself, the owner became suspicious and asked advice from his mother who admonished him not to sell, in view of the time when he would want it. Accordingly, he did not accept the offer, but when it was increased to twenty-five skins he did so. He did not know that the purchaser's desire for it was to enable him to injure the seller by magic through the acquisition of this personal possession. [754]

The sale took place in April, and the following December 778
the former owner became crippled with a disease which so 755 weakened his back that he could hardly raise himself from 539 the ground. When the sickness had lasted for one year, his 787 friends carried him away to the Hot Springs on Lakeachere Channel.

It was known that if a patient were left night and day in the spring, scrubbing himself with hemlock boughs, he often was given such power by a supernatural being that, like a shaman of old, he could kill or cure by means of a stick. Many of this man's relatives had been killed by rivals envious of their success in giving potlatches, so it was feared that he might wish to retaliate if he gained too much power. To prevent this, he was removed from the spring at night. On the first day as he lay on a mat in the warm water, there appeared on a flat stone a diminutive man, about two feet tall, resembling a Bella Coola except for a short tail. It was probably a tâqwal ts, such as his first ancestor had obtained (I, p. 688). The little creature ran around the stone; when it returned to the starting point it stopped and was joined by a second one of the same kind. The two circled the stone three times, on each occasion stopping at the starting point; they then vanished. The next day while the patient lay in the stream he heard from within the mountain four beats of a drum and a sound as if a large number of people were talking and calling together, though he [796]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

757 the science of medicine. The Bella Coola are familiar with 789 many acts which cause definite results. To place a new-born girl in contact with the representation of a beautiful woman [856] so that she may grow up to be like her, seems false science, [752] magic, to the white man; whereas the application of splints
and gum to a fractured limb is a medical treatment, crude perhaps, but definitely scientific. The two are identical to the Bella Coola. They do not ask why or how a result follows, they merely know that it does. Such lore has been handed down from time immemorial; it is steeped in the sanctity of antiquity and hallowed by the knowledge that their ancestors have done the same for generations. All such acts may be described as "medicines," for so they appear to those who practise them. To separate them into magical and scientific categories would misrepresent the native point of view; the only division that can be made is between those that cause, and those that prevent or cure. Even in this there is some overlap. A medicine that cures a child from crying likewise causes him to be placid and amiable; so, too, medicines of a preventive nature comprise elements of both types. The principle governing most of these is sympathetic magic, a concept which, if put in words to the Bella Coola, would be regarded as logical and scientific. The second important class of medi-[755] cines consists of objects, either herbal or derived from the human body, which are believed to have such abundant power that they are effective against ailments of supernatural origin, or against supernatural beings themselves. Some of these have already been mentioned in connection with the attitude of the Bella Coola towards these beings of the earth, sky,
and water.

● 754 Most curative medicines are used by the practitioner on himself; most causative, on someone else. The latter are either 755 social or anti-social, depending upon whether the result is 789 benevolent or malevolent. Shamans frequently use magical means in curing the sick and are highly regarded by the community, but medicines of the same kind may be used to kill

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

and those who have knowledge of them are sorcerers. Even a man of this kind is not outside the pale of society unless he practises indiscriminately; members of the kusiut society, for example, frequently employ one to kill an individual who has offended against their regulations (I, p. 740). A man is regarded as a sorcerer not on account of his knowledge but on account of the ends to which he applies it.

Closely related to, if not identical with, the belief that certain consequences follow certain acts, is the conviction that the infraction of ritual prohibitions brings disaster. There are many such taboos, for so they may be called. Though most important at the critical periods of life, puberty, pregnancy, while observing ceremonial chastity, and so forth, there are many which must be obeyed at all times.

Restrictions pertaining to the river and regulations at birth and death have already been described. Like magical acts, these often verge on the religious owing to the belief that disregard offends supernatural beings. On the whole, however, it seems as if most infractions bring their own punishment without intervention of higher powers, a concept which throws taboos into the category of magic rather than of religion, with the ever-present proviso that the two cannot be separated entirely from one another. With them may be associated a number of ritual acts connected with fishing and hunting in which, though the element of propitiation is not absent, it is satisfied by the performance of definite rites. Finally, there have been included in this chapter a number of unimportant beliefs, the psychology of which cannot be analysed.

What is the basis of these rites defined as Medicine, Magic, and Taboo? As already described, the Bella Coola either do not explain their origin and function, or merely state that Ałquntăm is responsible, as he is for every activity of life. This is unsatisfactory because many which, viewed scientifically, have neither curative nor causative power, produce the desired end. A child who has been "made" a carpenter during infancy, usually grows up to be proficient in that profession; the person men had vanished. It is possible that in this particular case there was a belief that Alquntów granted the wish when convinced that all had the same desire, but this element is often entirely lacking.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEG Bellacoola NEG

Belief in the power of thought is a concept which the investigator constantly meets in Bella Coola at the present day. For example, in 1921 a government official working in the valley, purchased a representation of a merganser which had been used in a ceremonial.[9] Although this should have been destroyed after use, no difficulty would have been raised if the transaction had remained a secret. Unfortunately, the buyer allowed the object to be seen by several Bella Coola and by some Carriers. This caused indignation throughout the community and news of it reached the Bella Bella, who concluded that the vendor would suffer disaster for allowing a secret object to be seen by the despised Indians of the interior. Within a year, his wife died. The Bella Bella believed that his sin had brought its own punishment, but the Bella Coola, who knew the details of the sale and did not consider the exposure of the article to have been the fault of the seller, attributed it to the power of the thoughts of the Bella Bella. They all expected that he would be punished; therefore he was punished; the expectation was sufficient to effect its own fulfilment. This incident was too fresh in the minds of several men to allow them to sell ceremonial objects to the writer.

The most common form taken by this conviction is with regard to death; if it is believed that a man will die, he is almost certain to do so. In June, 1922, a woman died in Bella Coola and her father claimed that she had been murdered by a certain man either with material poison or by magical means. He took no direct steps in revenge but stated emphatically that the man whom he suspected would die within a year. The threatened man knew of this, and more than once said that he

[9]The article, now in the National Museum of Canada, consists of a cloth and wood representation of a merganser canoe such as was used by Nuxtáls in the beginning of time.

759 would probably fall a victim. He became ill in May, 1923,
761 and, though treated by a white doctor, grew steadily worse
789 until he died in the latter part of June, three weeks after the 828 year had elapsed. All the Bella Coola firmly believe that this [622] was due to the power of thought. The father of the woman was a powerful chief whose thoughts were accordingly potent, and some consider that his concentrated desires and expectations were enough to kill the accused, while others believe that his expressed statements convinced others of the result, and that it was their combined thought that caused the death. It usually requires the thoughts of more than one individual to lead to this effect. The doctor who attended this man stated that his patient had shown symptoms of melancholy and resignation during his last sickness; it seems clear that the expectation of death must have lessened his chance of recovery.

771 A prominent theme in Bella Coola folk-lore is the belief 954 that a person cannot long survive who has made himself unpopular. It is sometimes stated that a magical means was 828 employed to remove him, and this was no doubt often the case;
[536] a person who learns that a "medicine" had been employed to kill him is in no fit mental condition to counteract the power of suggestion, particularly if he knows that others are aware of what has been done. His death is regarded as proof of the efficacy of the means employed and the belief of others grows stronger. As already stated, this conviction still survives. When this ethnological investigation was being conducted, a
[648] point under discussion was whether or not the Kimsquit people should be allowed to live in Bella Coola. One chief took the lead in objecting and everyone expected that, having thus roused the ire of would-be immigrants, he would die. He did so soon afterwards, and it is universally believed that it was caused by the concentration of the hostile thoughts of the Kimsquit. Similarly, the potency of taboos is increased by the fact that since [784] time immemorial the thoughts of everyone have been opposed to any infraction. Consequently, an offender is liable to punishment both for breaking an injunction and because he

U.S.N.M. Records, B.A.E. (1922-1924)/1945
NEA Reflexotile 9/54

has gone contrary to something about which there has been universal agreement for generations.

To understand Bella Coola medicines it is, therefore, necessary to regard them as concepts deep rooted in tribal history, and made potent by the suggestibility of those who practise them. This can be most clearly illustrated with regard to those affecting death, but is equally true with regard to all medicines, whether curative or connective.

There remain for consideration the sociological aspects of medicines. Knowledge of most remedies has been handed down for generations as the property of ancestral families. Some are acquainted with one or two "cures," some with many, and some with none at all. The name of the discoverer of a particular medicine is usually lost in antiquity, though it is often attributed to someone described in the family's myth. Like other possessions based on mythology, a remedy of this type can be practised by any member of the group to which it belongs. If it is observed that a certain individual is using one of these successfully, others will ask him to apply it for them. Payment is always expected, but the sum varies enormously, depending upon the efficacy of the remedy, the difficulty of operation, the generosity of the person benefited, and so many diverse factors that no general conclusions can be made. A patient may observe the details of the treatment, but unless he is entitled to it, he would never dream of using it himself. This is due not only to honesty, but to the conviction that only a person with the inherited right to a certain cure can perform it successfully. Rarely, such knowledge is sold or given away outright, but, like other possessions of an ancestral family, this usually leads to friction and jealousy on the part of those overlooked. Some of the simple herbal remedies are common knowledge and are used by all, since remembrance of their ownership, if it ever existed, has been lost. At the present time it is difficult to learn details of proprietorship of some medicines, but these are indicated whenever possible.

"Please, may it be as it was when you held ceremonies."

The basis of these medicines is their mountain grave and heaver nests in November when it is cold, and deer in October when it is rainy.

An old Kitamgatt man mentioned that one winter he had been driven ashore by continuous cold winds and was on the verge of starving. He drew a bath and by using the medicine just described was able to bring rain with consequent lessening of wind so that he could continue his journey.

MISCELLANEOUS MEDICINES

To Destroy the Benefits of Another's Ceremonial Charity

Place pieces of flesh from any recently skinned animal within a coffin from which the skeleton of an enemy has been removed, uttering at the same time the name of the person to be injured. This destroys the "charisma" acquired by the observance of ceremonial charity.[1]

To Cause Insanity in a Woman

Catch a squirrel alive and tie one of the woman's hairs around its stomach; then release the animal. As it runs violently through the forest, sometimes head upwards, sometimes head downwards, so will the brain of the person whose hair it is carrying begin to churn violently till madness ensues.

To Cause Ferocity in Grizzly Bears

Throw the body of a recently killed monkeyat against a man's back. The next grizzly bear he encounters will be ferocious, and may kill him. Knowledge of this medicine was learnt by noticing that a number of men who had been struck in play with monkeys, were killed by grizzly bears. The potency of the act has since been recognized.

To Cause Disease in a Malefactor

A number of years ago, when three Bella Coola were killed

[1] This medicine was learnt from a rather unsatisfactory informant and was not confirmed by others.

[illegible]

754 [727]

in a skirmish by the Cowichan, one of their women mutilated a body by poking out the eye. The corpses were rescued and a Bella Coola with secret knowledge dropped into the eye sockets some potent medicine. As the corpses rotted, the murderers began to suffer pains, and the woman who had poked out the eyes lost her sight. As a blind, old woman, she had been seen by several men with whom the matter was discussed.

To Cause the Death of a Murderer (three means)

754 682 [766]

(1) Two women were murdered at Kimsquit in 1915. Before they were buried, an elderly Bella Coola put a secret medicine on the back of the neck of each so that the murderer would die from a disease located there. Within eight months, a Bivouac Indian man succumbed to a deep sore at the back of the neck, and it was assumed that he must have visited Kimsquit unseen and perpetrated the double murder.

Medicines like this and the preceding are widely known, but it is sorcerers who specialize in using them.

[766]

(2) When a man dies suddenly and murder is suspected, although the perpetrator is unknown, place the corpse within an old, hollow spruce log. As it rots, needles and dirt enter the flesh and at the same time the body of the murderer becomes leprosied and full of sores. This method was employed during the lifetime of an informant and caused the death of the suspected murderer, whose guilt was thereby accepted as proved.

[695]

(3) Bury the victim's body with a toad in its mouth and the murderer will soon die.[4]

[766]

To Kill

754

Lift a corpse from the ground and point it at one or more individuals. This causes their death in the near future.

[4]This information was obtained from one informant only; details were unavailable, and confirmation from others could not be secured.

755 of water in which had been boiled eight splinters from a coffin. She would have obtained two from each side, and two from each end, in each case inserting the point of a crooked knife to pry loose a fragment of the wood, and then pulling it off in the same direction as the sun travels. It would have been immaterial from which aspect the first had been taken, but Y would have been careful to move around the coffin from east to south to west to north, corresponding to the course of the sun.

It is believed that no one has now the ability to use this cure.

Sorcerers

754 [424] Among the causative medicines of which knowledge has been handed down in various families for generations are secret means of killing. Every sorcerer must have such a possession, but he is not so branded unless he begins to exercise his powers for anti-social purposes. For example, if it be known that a [575] certain individual is able to cause death, the members of the kusiut society are eager to admit him to their group, so that his ability will be at their disposal to punish anyone who breaks their regulations. Likewise, if a chief decides that a certain [622] man should die, the power of his thoughts may suffice to cause the death, but the desired end will be effected more certainly by requesting aid from the owner of a means of killing. Such [756] an individual is frequently a shaman who is only too glad of an opportunity to exhibit his powers. The following methods of execution are said to have been employed socially, that is, with the connivance or at the request of chiefs or the members of the kusiut society:

(1) The executioner scratches for four successive nights on the door of the victim's house. If the latter suspects what is to take place, he may endeavour to escape by remaining awake which renders the scratching powerless. It is said that no one has been able to remain sleepless for more than three nights which gives the killer his opportunity.

(c) The conscientious chewing the left, bottom rib from a man's skeleton, puts one end in the fire until it is alight, and keeps it smouldering by continuous puffing. When he knows that his victim is asleep, he knocks with the torch on the outside of his house and the sleeper dies immediately.

(d) The conscientious holds a dried human hand before his victim's face, or knocks with it on his door, and he falls dead.

Individuals who have such knowledge are regarded with fear and a certain amount of respect, but it is recognized that they have every right to use their inherited abilities when requested to do so. A similar medicine was tried recently with fatal results:

A few years ago a number of Bella Coola, travelling to the interior along a trail over which some Carriers had just passed, noticed a place where one of the latter had been picking Indian rhubarb and had spit on the fibres after chewing. One of the party decided to use a medicine which had been handed down in his family for a long time. Catching a cord, he threw some of the shreds down his throat, tied a loop of the fibre around his neck, and left the animal suspended to die of strangulation or starvation as the case might be. That night the Bella Coola overtook the carriers who had camped early owing to the illness of one of their party. He was lying on the ground, too sick to move, and complaining of a choking sensation in his throat. Realizing the seriousness of the case, the man who had fastened up the cord turned back to release it, but found it dead. Before he regained his companions, the Carrier had likewise choked to death. The efficacy of the medicine was thus proved.

Another man stated that a similar means of killing was to use in the same way fibres left exposed from bark which had been stripped for eating. There are believed to be many secret means of killing which, since they have often been employed indiscriminately, are thought to have had an appreciable effect in reducing the numbers of the Bella Coola.

The most common method of execution is by obtaining something belonging to the victim, and subjecting it to the fate desired for its owner. A few years ago, for example, the members of the Axaist society wanted to frighten one of their

[354] members, and delegated the task to a man who was known to be skilled in such matters. The latter stole some shreds of the offender's clothing, placed them in a human skull which he fastened to a long rope and drove into a swift stretch of the river. As the rapids tossed the skull to and fro, the person whose clothing was within began to feel uneasy; first he experienced a jumping pain in his head, but as the wild movements continued, he became light-headed and finally delirious. At this juncture, it was decided to pull back the skull, but the rope broke and it was carried every downstream. Nothing could save the man and he died within a few hours. This particular incident occurred among the Bella Bella, but it is agreed that it might have happened in Bella Coola.

[355] The mingled fear of, and aversion to, a person who knows such secret method of killing, fades into insignificance compared to the extreme loathing of every Bella Coola for sorcerers. Their methods of killing may be similar to the one just described, but they are evil creatures who practise secretly, working entirely to gratify their own personal desires. Not

[356] only is the murder of a sorcerer a virtuous act, but the relatives of one should be put to death without mercy. There is no single factor which has caused so much hatred, bitterness, and suspicion as belief in the activities of sorcerers. Conversion to

[357] Christianity has scarcely altered it, and men who have been members of the church for ten to twenty years remain fully convinced that some of their associates have loathsome abilities as sorcerers. In many parts of the world, belief in black magic and witchcraft is one of the last native convictions to pass away, and it seems probable that this will be the case in Bella Coola although, of course, it will become increasingly difficult to obtain information about the subject.

The actual methods used by different sorcerers vary, although most of them require an article which has been in contact with their intended victim. Consequently, they seek pieces of soiled clothing, nail parings, hair clippings, spittle, and other objects of the same type which are usually concealed by their owners for safety. Juju, as old Bulu Coulo believed to be a sorcerer, has been seen to escape up the water earth where a man has witnessed, in former times anyone doing such a suspicious act would have been killed. The article obtained is hidden and kept for future use, and if the practitioner wishes to inflict pain or death, he places it in contact with some potent medicine. Human bones are frequently employed for this purpose, although the most powerful is said to be grease obtained by boiling flesh cut from the inner side of the thigh of a recently buried corpse. To obtain either of these, graves must be robbed, another reason for having sorcerers.

Secrecy is essential, as a sorcerer is usually assisted by his children, and in this way he has a better chance of obtaining articles belonging to different people without arousing suspicion. The necessary knowledge can accordingly be transmitted from generation to generation, sometimes without the slightest inkling of it becoming known. Even if a man is found out, he may be able to bribe his discoverer to silence.

Sometimes two from different villages work in partnership to lessen the danger of practising their rites near the village of a victim. For example, a Bulu Coulo sorcerer may send an article to an accomplice in Bulu Bulu for placing in contact with strong medicine; this causes the victim to languish and die while the person responsible continues his usual routine of life around the village, suspected by no one. The commencement of such a partnership is a matter of great difficulty, since anyone who admits his crimes places himself in the power of his confidant. Sometimes, however, rumours that a certain individual is practising malevolent magic reach a foreign sorcerer who needs an accomplice. If he considers that the information is authentic, he may admit his own powers and suggest that they work together. Such an arrangement is profitable to both parties, and a partnership so formed may continue for generations.

Sorcerers display considerable ingenuity in arranging that their skill shall bring them pecuniary benefits as well as the gratification of killing their enemies. To achieve this end, a member of the family claims to be a shaman and his relatives loudly acclaim him. It is not difficult for a man with skill in conjuring to perform some simple shamanic act, probably one carried out by an ancient shaman, which he announces has been shown to him by a supernatural being who has given him power to cure the sick. Then the accomplice selects a suitable victim and causes him to become ill by placing something taken from him in contact with his medicine. If the malefactor is fortunate, the victim will consult the "shaman" who will effect a cure and be paid for it, ignorant of the fact that his recovery has been due to the removal of the article by the practitioner's accomplice. This deception is especially difficult to expose if the sorcerer has a low cunning genius to conceal from human bodies, since the sickness increases or diminishes according to the depth to which the article is sunk. This is one of the ways in which some shamans have built up great reputations as sorcerers.

754
754

The psychology of sorcery is similar to that of other kinds of magic. It is not possible for the malefactor to tell his victim that he has stolen a nail paring, for example, and that he will die because it has been placed in a decoction of human groans. But if the attending shaman is an accomplice, he can inform the sufferer that his malady has been caused by a sorcerer and this belief profoundly affects him. He feels that he will die unless a remedy be found, and if the shaman assures him that he has rendered the evil influence impotent, his chances of recovery are increased accordingly. So, likewise, the members of families who possess remedies against the activities of sorcerers often work in conjunction with one. It is therefore not surprising that the Bella Coolas should firmly believe in their machinations and affirm that they have killed many thousands of people in the course of generations. The belief in magic would itself be sufficient to explain this, but it is strengthened by the social and economic aspects of a sorcerer's vocation. The container in which the potent mixture is kept

754
171

Lib. McDowell: B-5 (1922-1924)/548
NEA Bellacoola NEA

is spoken of in the Chinook jargon as a mesatchie hoo, that is, a "dirty," "unclean," or "repulsive" hoo, and this term is one which is mentioned whenever an unexpected death takes place, or whenever a coastal Indian is accused of loitering around a deserted camp or of stealing into another's house. The belief is not limited to the Bella Coola, but has formed the basis for criminal cases all over the coast of British Columbia. It is difficult to find words sufficiently strong to express the disgust, loathing, and fear with which the Bella Coola regard a person suspected of sorcery.

Ability in this respect carries with it certain prohibitions. A sorcerer would lose his power if he should wash or blow his nose except when about to commit murder. The one old Bella Coola now thought to be a sorcerer never washes; he knows that if he did so, he would be immediately accused of plotting someone's death. This man is greatly feared, as he is said to have a collection of spittle from every member of the tribe; efforts have been made to break into his house and steal this, but it has never been found. He takes credit for the death of at least one white man in the valley. A peculiar impediment suffered by all sorcerers is a prohibition against turning around, although no one knows why doing so should deprive them of their strength. The explanation may be that their power would recoil upon themselves, a concept well illustrated by the following incident:

When the first Christian Bella Coola left the old village to settle near the mission station, they were regarded with dislike and suspicion by their fellow-tribesmen. One day, one of them happened to follow a path through the woods which led her to a rude shelter in which was a bundle. Hastily summoning her fellows, they opened it and found an article of clothing belonging to each Christian. The man who told this incident described his fear at finding a dirty shirt of his own among the others. They felt that the garments had been collected by a young man who claimed to be a shaman, but whom they suspected to be merely the accomplice of a sorcerer, and this was soon proved to be the case. He was insufficiently trained; instead of touching the patient's body with his stick, he used to suck wherever the pain was located and then 754 drink water. This washed the sickness down into his own stomach, which rotted away so that he died. Recovery of their clothes saved the Christians from injury on this occasion.

Although the Bella Coola suspect that several of their tribesmen are sorcerers, their work is so carefully concealed that it is naturally difficult to obtain evidence against them. A few years ago, however, the two daughters of a Tâl'ic man were searching for a pail lost by their father when they found a coal-oil can half hidden in a bush near the pasture fence. They peered into it, and were shocked to find a decayed human leg. They hurried home to their father, who investigated and found that it was the portion from knee to ankle, and that it was partly covered by a sock made for himself by his wife. This so terrified him that he took the find to the Indian Agent, who is believed still to have it. The finder was convinced that the deaths of several of his children must have been caused by earlier activities of the same, or another sorcerer. He suspected another Tâl'ic man who had cleared a small farm in the vicinity, and who asked the two girls whether they had found a jam-tin near the place where the leg had been discovered.

The Bella Coola agree that sorcerers were more powerful in early times than at present, and recount a number of stories describing their activities. The following examples require no further explanation and clearly illustrate their beliefs.

A BELLA BELLA SORCERER

539 754 Not many years ago, as a Bella Bella lad lay dozing, he saw a man approaching him with a stick to one end of which was fastened a tuft of undyed cedar-bark. He quickly realized that it must be a sorcerer who had come to collect some of his exhaled breath as a personal possession, so he pretended to be asleep. The villain came nearer, held the sponge-like bark before the sleeper's face for a moment, and then stole away. He did not know that his intended victim was following him. The sorcerer entered his house, cautiously drew out a human leg bone and tied the tuft of bark to it; then, wearied by the strain, he went to sleep. This was the victim's opportunity. He crept into the house, took another piece of bark, held it before the sleeper's face, removed the one stained with his own breath, and suffused it with that containing the sorcerer's.

Before dawn the next morning, the sorcerer, ignorant of the substitution, took the bone and left the house. The youth had been watching and followed him to the edge of the sea, where he laid his bundle in a hole in the rocks through which the rising tide was sending up a miniature water-spout. The sorcerer went away at once, giving the lad an opportunity to remove the bone and secrete it in another cavity. He knew that the wicked man would soon become ill and would suspect that someone had tampered with the bone. So it proved. As the water whirled the lock containing his colluded breath, the sorcerer began to feel light headed and rushed off to the hole in the rocks. Meanwhile the troubled sorcerer had commenced his neighbours to watch what might happen. The man searched frantically, but of course could not find the bone, so, as the water rose and covered the lock, he was impelled to plunge repeatedly beneath the surge, until he was drowned.

THE OUTWITTING OF A SORCERER

Over one hundred years ago there was living in Ibonga a powerful chief who owned a salmon-weir. Though no expert fisherman himself, he relied to a great extent on the assistance of a concubine who was still more efficient. One summer this man died suddenly. Immediately after the funeral, the chief commissed his wife, removed the fish, and returned home, physically weary from his labour and more than ever regretting the loss of his assistant. For some reason he could not sleep, so, after tossing for an hour or more, he decided to gather firewood. There was a late-rising full moon, so he had no difficulty in seeing his road as he climbed the small mountain behind the village, carrying only an iron axe. He had cut a bundle and was ready to return when he heard a groaning sound as though someone with a heavy burden were climbing the slope. Putting down his load, he hid himself in such a position that clear moonlight shone upon the path. After waiting a few minutes, he saw a figure approaching; it was Omqwad, a local shaman, carrying a coffin upon his back. Now thoroughly suspicious, the chief decided to follow, trusting to his axe for protection.

Omqwad passed over the crest, descended the other side, and then ascended the slope of the mountain on the east, in long tangents to hide his course. The chief had no difficulty in following him unobserved, and finally watched his unsuspecting guide put down the coffin and clear away the brush-wood. He seemed to be lifting something, which was followed by a grating sound as if a large stone was being dragged across another; then he disappeared from sight and the chief realized that Omqwad had descended into an underground house of which the combustible door and smoke-vent had been covered with stones and small sticks.

E99
B2
B4

The chief crawled to the entrance and looked within. Round the walls were seated the corpses of all those who had died recently in the village, and Onapaut was removing the body of the expert fisherman from its coffin. He put it to bed with the others and put on a dance-apron decorated with human fingers and toe nails. Then he began to dance, at the same time pressing the lever of a mechanical contrivance which caused the corpses to bear time with sticks and even to keep into the air as intricately as do living singers. It was most weird and uncanny, but after watching for a few minutes, the chief was forced to cough. Although this was the first intimation to Onapaut that he was being observed, he lowered an arrow and invited the cougher to come down the ladder into his house. The chief did so, and he was received in a courteous and hospitable manner by his host who frankly admitted that he was a sorcerer, and added that his corpses were just dancing to welcome the new arrival.[1] He showed his guest everything of interest in the dwelling, including a box containing potent medicine in which was held the skin of a man's left hand. He explained that he frequently took this to the village and, if he desired to kill anyone, would place within the palm a roll of cedar-bark on which his victim had breathed, then close the fingers upon it. This caused death almost instantly. The chief, though keenly interested, never relaxed his vigilance for a moment, knowing that the sorcerer would not have been so communicative unless he had felt confident of his ability to kill his hosts. Towards morning, Onapaut suggested that they return home, picked up the skinned hand, and was the first to climb the ladder, intending to stun the chief when his head appeared over the surface. His pursuer followed close at his heels and finally, at the top of the ladder, hurled the sorcerer with his head so that he sprawled on the ground and the chief was able to emerge with safety. Unperturbed by this first failure, Onapaut covered the entrance to his house so carefully that a man might have passed over it without suspecting its presence. The sorcerer wanted the chief to provide him homewards, but the latter was too cautious for any such subterfuge and insisted upon following close at the heels of the malefactor. They did not separate until they reached the village, where each proceeded to his own house.

---

[1] Although this account is supposed to be a historical record of a comparatively recent incident, items of a supernatural type have obviously been added. The man who told the story did not seem to realize the difficulty of a mechanical contrivance to make corpses beat time, nor did it strike him that the dance of welcome must have been adapted from the similar ceremony performed by ghosts. The whole story was related as an unusual one but not of a supernatural nature.

The chief knew that his life was in serious danger although he had not seen the first sound. Consequently, instead of lying down to sleep, he placed himself with his arms stretched out before him on a log and his head supported on them so that he could watch through his fingers. As he suspected, Onqamd soon came creeping in, holding a rush of sealed cedar-bark. He made no movement, even when the sorcerer held this before his face and stole away with it when it had been touched upon. The brave man knew that his life would be in constant danger unless he could convert his enemy and that this was his opportunity. He waited for about one hour, then quietly entered Onqamd's house where the sorcerer was sleeping peacefully, thinking that all danger was over, and the bark-skin was lying in plain sight on a box. The chief carefully took a rush of cedar-bark, held it before the sleeper's nose till it was impregnated with his breath, and then placed it within the skin from which he withdrew the piece already there. Having accomplished his purpose, he returned home without disturbing the sleeper.

The chief knew that Onqamd would wash the following morning if he intended to kill, so he remained awake and was watching the sorcerer's house before daybreak. As he suspected, the malefactor presently appeared, carrying his chamber-vessel, and went to the river. First he cleansed himself with urine and walked in up to his knees, remained for a few minutes, and came ashore again. The second time, he waded in until the water was up to his thighs; the third time, he went on till it was shoulder-deep. Sorcerers always wash in this way in order that the lower parts of the body shall be covered successively, although no one knows why this should be done by them alone. The hidden chief knew that Onqamd would meet disaster when he bathed for the fourth time since the skin, carried beneath his arm-pit, would then be beneath the surface for a few moments. So it transpired. He dipped his head, but instead of being able to raise it, his feet floated above the surface, and he remained in that position, slowly drowning. This was the fate which he had destined for the chief whose breath he had placed within his closed hand, but he was unaware of the substitution which, of course, re-acted upon himself.

The watcher hastily roused his neighbours who came running to the back hall-shed and rubbing their eyes. They brought ashore the corpse of the drowned man while the chief recounted all that he had seen and done during the night. As soon as it was sufficiently light a number of men accompanied him to the underground house in the mountains from which the bodies were brought back and reburied by their relatives. Previous to this time, no one had suspected Onqamd of sorcery, but as soon as the discovery was made, the angry people slew all his relatives

Lib: Twelfth E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

539 754 except an infant daughter. She grew up, married, and was the mother of the old Bella Coola, about seventy years of age in 1922, who is so honored as a sorcerer. It is he who has the collection of spirits, and it is believed that, like his grandfather, he is the owner of a skinned and stuffed left hand with which he can kill a man as surely as with a rifle.

THE DISCOVERY OF TWO SORCERERS

Many years ago there lived at Stuie two young men who were constant companions; they always hunted and travelled together, and were determined to share each other's fortune, no matter what it might be. One day they agreed to go up the valley to visit some friends, but decided to postpone their departure until dusk. One of the two went out for a short walk and failed to return by the time appointed; his comrade sought him everywhere and finally hurried off up the trail, thinking that his friend must have started before him. He soon heard sounds of laboured breathing as if people were carrying a heavy burden; and could just distinguish two men carrying a coffin on poles between them. He realized that they must be sorcerers and that their inability to turn around would give him an advantage. Stealing up behind them, he pushed the rear man, not only causing him to stumble, but the one in front as well, since their burden was resting between them. Neither could turn around to see who had discovered them, and they became more and more terrified as the brave youth first pushed, and then pulled the one in the rear. [774] Suddenly he called out, we-, so loudly in their ears that the sudden start expelled their spirits and they fell to earth as if dead. The lad watched their gradual recovery, feeling confident that his partner must be within ear-shot and would come hurrying back to his assistance if necessary. As soon as the sorcerers had revived, one of them said angrily to the boy:

"You will die presently."

"No," he answered. "It is you who are in grave peril."

At this point he called loudly for his companion who was so far ahead that he could barely hear the other's voice; he answered the shout and began to run back. The sorcerers, trying to make the best of a bad situation, mocked him by advising him to call again and to bring more helpers if he wanted to escape death. When his friend had come so close that he could see what was taking place, the youth called out to him:

"Partner! They say that I am in danger."

"No," the other answered. "It is they who will die."

When he joined the group the four began to discuss what was to be done. The sorcerers begged their discoverers not to expose their mis-

Inbk:Dorsth E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

539
754

dainge, and offered to make them members of the Raven society in return for their silence. Though uninitiated persons, even this tempting bribe was refused by the two youths. Next, each of the malefactors offered a daughter as wife to each of the pervers, and they accepted this bargain. For their part, the sorcerers were glad to escape at any cost, since they had been caught red-handed; they knew that henceforth they would have to assist their captors, but this was preferable to exposure.

The two groups parted company; the boys continued their journey to the upper village and the sorcerers went on their way to some cave in the mountains. Within a few weeks, each youth married the daughter of one of the malefactors, with whose assistance they were able to give potlatches and become influential personages.

A FAMILY OF KWATNA SORCERERS

Near the village of Kwatna there used to be two cemeteries. One was on a small point of ground at the mouth of the river which became an island at high tide; here were interred the bodies of chiefs alone, a custom said to be without parallel on the coast. It is not known why there should have been this special burial-ground, but the place was always spoken of as "The Chiefs' Island." Instead of being buried, coffins containing commoners were laid on ledges of rock at the base of a cliff behind the village; this custom, though unusual, is known elsewhere on the coast, at Kitsaquit and Port Simpson, for example.

[764]
[171]

Many generations ago, there was a time when the corpses of commoners frequently disappeared from the ledges on which they had been placed, and although it was believed that a sorcerer was responsible, no one knew whom to blame. One old woman had lost nearly all her numerous relatives when she realized that, though there had been many deaths in the village and some families had been almost wiped out, no members of one group had been taken. This roused her suspicions; she soon noticed that whenever anyone was sick, four brothers of the family in question always made some plausible excuse to leave the village and proceed up the other arm of the inlet. She concluded that this could be no mere coincidence, the four must be sorcerers. Within a short while, another of her relatives fell ill and died in spite of all that could be done; this reduced her family to herself and her infant. On the day after the funeral, the four brothers said that they wanted to gather hemlock boughs and set off in a canoe up the other arm of the inlet for the purpose. They did not come back at night and the villagers assumed that they had been delayed and had camped. The bereaved woman, however, who had hidden herself below the village, saw the brothers paddle back around the

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

539
754

point and conceal their canoe beneath a bushy tree instead of landing at the village. More suspicious than ever, she followed the four and was able to keep in touch with them in spite of the necessity of carrying her baby. They went to the cemetery, placed the coffin on poles, and two of them carried it away with the others in close attendance.

The mother, still clutching her child, followed the brothers up the side of a steep mountain behind Kwatna. They avoided all trails and travelled in zigzags until they reached the base of a precipice where a tall tree was growing. The mother, who was not far behind, could see that its upper branches grew across to touch the cliff at a point where the mouth of a cave was visible. The coffin was placed on the ground, three of the brothers climbed the tree, and passed from it into the opening in the rock. From this they shoved out a plank to form a narrow bridge to the upper trunk, and dropped a long rope which the one below fastened around the coffin; then it was hauled up, the fourth brother climbed the tree and all disappeared from sight. The woman continued to remain in hiding, but before long her curiosity was piqued by seeing smoke drift out from the opening. She decided that she must see what was taking place, so she nursed her infant to keep it quiet, and then began the ascent. Without difficulty she reached a point from which she could peer within, and saw the four melting down the grease from the dismembered body of her kinsman. They were sorcerers without doubt, and she noted that they were preserving with care all the fat that exuded from the inside of the thighs. Each was wearing a mask, but she was able to recognize them by their figures.

When the poisonous decoction had been prepared, the sorcerers fell asleep, still wearing their masks.' Made bold by her longing for revenge, the woman crept across the plank without disturbing the sleepers. Cautiously she picked up the spoon which they had used for stirring the mixture, lifted a few drops in it and held it to the mouth of the one whom she recognized as the oldest brother. He did not stir. With a quick, firm pressure she stamped upon his stomach, causing him to wake and swallow with a gasp; the poison was so potent that he died without making a sound. She took another spoonful of the brew and gave it to the second sorcerer in the same way and with the same result, and in this way killed all four. Stopping only to fill a receptacle with the brew, the woman climbed down the tree and hurried back to Kwatna.

Instead of describing what she had seen and done, the woman determined to wipe out the relatives of the sorcerers. So she invited the whole village to a feast, allotting the proper place to each family. This whole procedure was unusual because she had killed no large game, but there is always a good deal of latitude allowed in such matters, particularly as everyone sympathized with the hostess on account of her many bereavements. Her only assistant was a woman who, like herself, had lost all her kinsmen. The food provided was hemlock-bark dipped in fish-oil, but the hostess contrived that every relative of the sorcerers should receive a portion dipped in poison instead. They all started to eat at the same time, and all fell dead simultaneously without a word. 534 754

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Instantly wild confusion broke out and the guests exclaimed that they were being served poison. Unperturbed, the woman explained everything; how she had first become suspicious, how she had followed the four brothers, and all that had resulted. A party set out at once under her guidance and found that everything she had said was true. In this way perished all the relatives of the sorcerers except one man who happened to be absent at the time. One of his descendants is now living in Bella Coola and is regarded with a certain amount of suspicion, although there is no evidence that he or any of his relatives have practised sorcery for generations.

A BELLA COOLA SORCERER

Since the introduction of muskets, there dwelt in the lower Bella Coola valley a shaman, Awaxaikxaixaix-ăk by name; he was a regular practitioner, able both to heal the sick or to cause death. When using his power beneficially, he shook a rattle containing a rock-crystal, but when he was requested to kill, he used one that appeared to be identical but contained human teeth and wolf fangs. In some unknown manner these were lost, which prevented him from slaying a man as requested by the chiefs of his village. One April day he mentioned his difficulty casually to a certain Tsika who surprised him by replying: [756]

"I can supply you with teeth and you will have greater power than ever."

The two were alone at the time and Tsika, having admitted that he was a sorcerer, suggested that they form a partnership. He must have felt confident that Awaxaikxaixaix-ăk would agree, as indeed he did gladly. Tsika explained that the necessary knowledge had been handed down in his family for generations, but that he had only recently begun to use it to avenge a slight at a feast of seals.

Next morning Tsika guided Awaxaikxaixaix-ăk up the mountain on the north side of the extreme head of North Bentinck Arm, just west of the Nechestucunnay River. Hunters frequently ranged over this area, but no one had ever seen a sorcerer's box there. Tsika led the way to a small rock shelter beneath which was concealed a chest about eight feet long. He kicked it four times with his left foot, and called out four times:

"Wake up!"

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

539
754

Triks then raised the cover, and his companion saw that it contained a number of separate compartments, formed by vertical strips criss-crossing within, and that the whole bottom was covered with a thick, black, oily liquid. On top of the cube-like divisions lay a badly decomposed corpse which Ăwaxaikaixaix-dis recognized as that of a youth who had disappeared from the village the previous July and who was thought to have been drowned. Triks explained the mechanism of the box: Each section was for a different disease, stomach trouble in one, heart failure in another, consumption in a third, sudden death in a fourth, and so on. Whenever he wanted to cause a specific disease, he would dip a personal possession of the victim's in the oil at the bottom of the proper compartment and leave it there. All that was then necessary to improve the patient's condition was to raise the article slightly in the liquid, whereas to lower it increased the force of the malady, and to leave it covered entirely caused death. It was generally known that such methods were used by sorcerers, but this was the first box that Ăwaxaikaixaix-dis had ever seen and he was keenly interested. He inquired the purpose of the boy's body, and Triks replied that he had killed him with the intention of taking his skin to use against the lad's relatives, but had been forced to carry away the whole body owing to the difficulty of removing the skin alone. Whenever he wanted to kill a person quietly and rapidly, it was only necessary to lay an article which had belonged to the victim on the back of the neck of the corpse. Death resulted immediately, since this was the spot where the spirit had resided during life. After answering his friend's questions, Triks fumbled around in the bottom of the box and drew forth a number of wolf teeth which he gave to the grateful Ăwaxaikaixaix-dis. Then the two went home to their respective villages, after promising each other mutual support and secrecy.

Although the two malefactors took every precaution not to be seen together too often, rumours began to circulate that they were partners, and that Triks was a sorcerer. There was no proof of this, but the suspected man became so unpopular that he was virtually expelled from his village. More angry than perturbed at this, he moved three miles up the valley to the town in which Ăwaxaikaixaix-dis was living. After waiting for a few weeks to allay suspicion, Triks determined to murder the chief who had been the prime mover in his expulsion, and sent his son to steal the victim's chamber-pot. His wife discovered the theft the same night and promptly roused the whole village, realizing the danger to her husband if it should fall into the hands of a sorcerer; diligent search was made, but of course the article could not be found, since the thief had taken it away to his new home. Triks placed the vessel

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)§948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

in a compartment of his box containing a bear's bladder tied into sections; this caused his enemy to suffer stricture and soon to die in agony. 539 754

Following the usual custom, the relatives of the dead man smeared their faces with ashes which they left in position for a year. The widow, who had loved her husband very dearly, allowed this indication of mourning to remain even longer than the customary period. On several occasions Triks made somewhat slighting remarks about her excessive grief, and when one of his sons also commented upon it, she became suspicious and told her relatives. One of them was a chief of the village where Triks was then living and where he was already regarded with distrust. This man visited the home of his bereaved kinswoman and called the chiefs of her village together to discuss the matter, and to inform them of the suspicions which his conduct had aroused in his new home. Three days later, Triks happened to come to the village and was at once summoned to the house where the chiefs had assembled to interrogate him. Triks sat on a box in the centre of the group and denied, slowly and positively, that he had any knowledge of sorcery, adding that his poverty confirmed his statement. At this moment Awaxilkxaixxaix-dis came rushing into the house, furiously brandishing a rifle, and exclaiming that it was scandalous the way in which unjust accusations were being levelled at Triks. One of the chiefs quietly slipped behind the shaman, knocked his fire-arm upwards so that it exploded harmlessly in the air, and threw him to the ground where he threatened him with a large knife.

"I will not brook any interference from you in this matter," he said.

This so frightened Awaxilkxaixxaix-dis that he blurted out that he knew Triks was a sorcerer and that he had seen his box containing a decayed human body. Triks was less excited than anyone else, and slipped out of the house in the confusion, merely pausing to ask:

"What are you going to do about it?"

He returned to his new village where, of course, the news soon followed of what had been discovered. The chiefs decided that he must be killed, and that the most convenient occasion would be at a feast of seals which was to take place in the near future. Triks accepted an invitation to this and was slain while he was busy handling his spoon. One of his sons was killed with him, another who escaped through a hole in the floor was slaughtered near the village. His two brothers were absent on a hunting expedition, but a party tracked them and slew them in their camp before they knew that their evil deeds had been found out. Triks's two daughters were allowed to live, but were given to a famous warrior who kept them practically as prisoners. Awaxilkxaixxaix-dis, who seems to have escaped all punishment for his share in the affair, guided a party to the sorcerer's box. It was found to be old and moss-covered, obviously 539 754 539 754

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

539 one used by some of Tcika's ancestors. It was brought to the ocean and 754 thrown in.

TABOOS

784 The Bella Coola regard as taboos those injunctions that are observed in the belief that their neglect would cause automatic punishment. The mechanism of enforcement is frequently not understood; it is enough to know that an unpleasant result would follow disobedience. Some taboos are in force at all times, others only during certain seasons of the year, and still others at critical periods of life. Since the psychology of such [789] beliefs is essentially magical rather than religious, they could justifiably be grouped at this point. Unfortunately, to do so would destroy the continuity of accounts of birth, adolescence, death, ceremonial chastity, and many other aspects of Bella Coola life subject to taboo. The injunctions enforced by the River Guardian, the restrictions observed by a girl after puberty, the continence required after different medicines, all are taboos, disregard of which brings certain punishment. These and many others have already been described in connection with the activities to which they pertain. It is doubtful whether the Bella Coola have a single word to describe taboos [783] in general, though they are all regarded as sxaiāx, that is, as something which is ceremonially unclean.

Scarcely to be distinguished from taboos are ceremonial errors, yen·imut or kān·imut. Failure to give presents to heralds when a seat breaks beneath a chief or a dancer stumbles, or unnecessary activity during the year's waiting for the fruition of supernatural good fortune are ritual mistakes of this type. Neglect of such regulations brings punishment, though of a lesser kind than the breaking of taboos. If the [688] error has been in connection with a ceremony, the offence can [203] be wiped out by presents to heralds, and the terms yen·imut and kān·imut are likewise applied to some of their prerogatives such as the ability to claim clothing during the marriage of a chief's child.

Most taboos and errors can best be described with other

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 688 Frequently the marshals and associated kukusiut depute others to act as their executioners. Sometimes a shaman who is also a kusiut is asked to slay the offender, or a kusiut in whose ancestral family a knowledge of means for secret murder has been handed down for generations may be called upon. The executioner is told that if he fails he will himself be killed. Although no Bella Coola would admit that a person so charged had committed murder by other than magical means, it appears highly probable that such was the case. It is believed that long ago the kukusiut were able to kill an offending uninitiated person by drawing forth his spirit, wrapping it in undyed cedar-bark and casting it into the fire. The victim would die within a short time. [761] [754]

*575 203 628 The desire to carry out kusiut ceremonials with proper dignity and ritual not only acts as a strong bond of union among members of the society in a single village, but between those in different towns and even in different tribes. When a marshal has struck a kusiut, the ceremony, whatever it may be, is at once stopped. Two kukusiut are sent off to bear the tidings to the nearest village up the valley, and two more to the one below. The messengers go beneath the house in which a dance is taking place and knock on the floor of the back-room. Someone presently hears them and a kusiut goes out to investigate. When the envoys have told their tale he returns, whispers to the singers, and the ceremony concludes for that night. As soon as the uninitiated, if any are present, have been ejected, the messengers enter with blankets almost covering their faces and seat themselves between the fire and the back-room where the senior members crowd around to listen. From this village two more kukusiut are despatched with the news which is thus transmitted with remarkable speed from end to end of the valley. When next the marshals are admonishing the kukusiut of their respective villages, they do not fail to draw attention to the way in which the law has been upheld. Conversely, if a marshal hears indirectly that there has been a flaw in the ritual of a neighbouring village,

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

spit upon his own hands and rubbed them over the patient's head, his 727 arms, his trunk, his legs, and finally his feet, as if massaging him. Xnutli's strength began to return at the first touch of Thunder's hands, and, 787 when the treatment was finished, he felt entirely rejuvenated. Thunder told him to overtake his friends and to massage them in the same way and they would be revived. He explained that they had been travelling in circles of ever-decreasing radius which was the reason that they had neither reached their destination nor recrossed their own tracks. He added that they must think constantly of their first objective, Ulkatcho, Nukätco in the Bella Coola language, and that at night Xnutli must sleep on the side of the five nearest that goal.

Soon afterwards the four wanderers were surprised to see a stalwart 727 man swinging along the trail behind them, and their amazement was intense when they realized that it was Xnutli whom they had left at the point of death. He bade three of his comrades hide, and massaged the fourth as Thunder had done to him; this restored his strength exactly as in his own case. The one so cured then concealed himself, while Xnutli treated another of his comrades, and finally the third and fourth. This was not the end of the assistance so obtained. Within a few minutes of their recovery, they found the trail they had so long been seeking and reached Ulkatcho before night, though under normal circumstances the same distance would have required four days of travel. There were several Bella Coola at the settlement who were overjoyed at the safety of those for whom all hope had long been abandoned. They rested for four days, then set out for home. Xnutli told his comrades to fix their minds upon their objective, and as a result they were able to make the journey with phenemonal rapidity.

Thunder had granted Xnutli the boon of uxlokwaladjut on this occa- 754 sion, and had promised that he would come to his help whenever called upon. Xnutli was a sorcerer, a profession which had been practised for [776] generations in his family, and he now performed more openly than ever, assured that Thunder would be able to protect him. The malefactor killed more and more people, until he became an object of universal hatred and fear. At last the principal chief of the village, confident in [689] the power which the giving of many potlatches had bestowed upon him, ordered an expert shot to slay Xnutli. The man so deputed had himself lost several relatives and gladly watched an opportunity. This came when the sorcerer was paddling across the Bella Coola near the old Hudson's Bay Company's post; he took careful aim from ambush, fired, and the evil man fell dead. A medicine can be made from the corpse of a murdered person, which, when used by the relatives, causes the killer's death. To prevent this, the executioner called his friends and they took

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Tsimshian NE15

B 754 the body to his own house, preparatory to burying it. It was April, but [776] as they were waiting, a violent thunderstorm blew up from the east, the only time that such had ever occurred at that season. Thunder had promised to come to Xnatli's aid, but the latter had died too suddenly to make any appeal; the supernatural one had just learnt of his pro-
B [789] tégé's death and had come rushing to his assistance. Realizing the danger, the executioner and his friends hastily buried the corpse, throwing over it a number of blood-stained cloths, and finally stamping down the earth. There was a furious hurricane; trees were uprooted, houses shook, the earth over the grave seethed as if in a whirlpool and chunks of it
B [789] were carried up into the air. Only the potency of the blood on the cloths prevented the return to life of Xnatli.[1]

This second unsuccessful attack on the Kitkatla so disheartened the B T 648 Bella Coola that they made no more raids on their northern foemen who, flushed with victory, became even bolder than before. As usual, the Kimsquit and Tál'io people suffered more than the inhabitants of the [721] main valley. On one of these forays, about 1855, the Kitkatla killed Łołxwelisel, a brother of Potlas, the leading chief of the Bella Coola at the [726] time. This was contrary to all the rules of warfare since he was a member of one of the leading families and the donor of many potlatches, a man [622] whose name was as well known as that of Potlas, Nuxáłpuxam of Fort Rupert, or Trúhsa himself. The fame of such chiefs was enough to protect them except during the actual heat of conflict, and the Bella Coola were justly angry.

A few years later a single canoe came paddling up North Bentinck
B T 648 Arm and was beached about half a mile from the head. Scouts investigated, and returned to Łomqo'ts with news that the occupants were Kitkatla, and that Trúhsa himself was among them. At once there was 728 heated discussion among the people of the lower valley. Many who had lost relatives in the protracted struggle wished to wipe out the party; others, to see what they wanted. A few daring individuals skulked
B T through the forest and fired on the visitors at long range; they were [726] answered, not with bullets, but by the four times holding aloft of a moose-skin, a sign of friendly intentions. If the strangers had fired on the scouts, a fight would have ensued, but this peaceful reception disarmed suspicion.

B [787]

[1] This tale is a curious illustration of the manner in which supernatural elements become woven into accounts which have an historical basis. It is to be assumed that the wanderers were in a suggestible state owing to privation, and readily believed that supernatural powers must have assisted them. Xnatli was feared as a sorcerer, and probably boasted of a visitation from Thunder during his wanderings. This was accepted and the incorporation of impossible incidents followed in due course.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

B C 648 726

the first time that two girls were missing. Then they set forth on the track of the Carriers. The raiders, knowing that their assault could not have been heard in any village, and unaware of the three young people hidden in the woods, took no precautions. The first night the pursuers reached the camp where the Carriers had built a long, narrow fire of some kind of wood which emitted no sparks, on either side of which they had placed a long tree-trunk on which to rest their feet as they dried their moccasins at the flames. One of the Bella Coola girls was placed near one end of the fire, the other at the other end on the opposite side. Neither could sleep, but kept watching silently in the hope of being able to escape. Towards dawn one of them was overjoyed to see a Bella Coola scout peering around a tree-trunk. He motioned her to keep silent and she nodded to show that she understood his signal; then he went away. He told his waiting companions how the Carriers were resting with their feet over logs beside the fire, and suggested that they prepare heavy clubs. Having done this, the Bella Coola stole up behind the drowsing enemy. Each selected a victim and broke his leg, or legs, with a crack of the club. Not one of the raiders escaped, the cripples being killed without difficulty. In some manner this event was made the theme of a tsaak song.

B C 648 721

The following unrelated incident is probably historically correct, in outline at least, since it is said to have taken place about 1860, and two of the participants were great-uncles of the man from whom the account was obtained.

One October a number of Carriers were staying at Nuxalst. Their chief was a certain Ṡmâlxem who was distantly related to the people of that village, though he had long since ceased to be regarded as anything but a Carrier. The river was running full and though there were many coho and dog salmon in it, they were difficult to catch on account of the roaring torrent. A Nuxalst man, Ṡpkwulîtel, had laid in an abundant store of fish for the winter, but his bad-tempered wife urged him to get her some fresh salmon and he ventured forth. A drifting log struck his canoe; he called out for help, but before it reached him, his craft capsized and he was drowned. Ṡpkwulîtel was a popular man and there was great grief at his untimely death.

B [556] 754

As was so often the case, jealousy was rife in Nuxalst, where a certain Nûxâl had become wealthy. He was a good carpenter, and his riches had been amassed as rewards for making hasîlat masks, but of course such payments had been made in secret and many people wondered how he had acquired his fortune. This was enough to cause a certain amount of suspicion, and a rival determined to take advantage of it. This man approached Ṡmâlxem and said that he believed Nûxâl was responsible

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

for Ẓalwalist's death, that he was sure the wealthy man was really a sorcerer, and had used some evil means to cause the fisherman's drowning. Ẓämälxem was distantly related to the dead man and, thus incited, determined to kill Nänätl in revenge. That evening, as he was lying playing with his grandchild, the Carrier chief entered his house and thrust a musket against the unsuspecting man's chest. Nänätl quickly knocked down the muzzle so that the bullet, instead of killing him, merely passed through the fleshy part of his hips. Ẓämälxem made no attempt to run away. In such cases it rests with the relatives of the injured man whether or not to take revenge, and they usually avoid beginning a vendetta unless virtually driven to it. News of the assault spread down the valley, and two of Nänätl's nephews, Ṭsä·kmai and Oḏmikuṃẋ, went up to investigate. They were both men of considerable influence in the community, both validated warriors who had taken prominent parts in the unsuccessful attack on Kitkatla a few years before. Realizing that their uncle was not seriously wounded, the two brothers carried him to their canoe, intending to take him home and to disregard the assault.

During this time, the evil Nusḏalst man had been working on Ẓämälxem's fears by telling him that Nänätl was certain to kill him by magical means, until he decided that he could escape only by murdering the wounded man. His followers learnt of this and tried to dissuade him, fearing the presence of the two famous warriors. As their canoe was going downstream, it was caught in an eddy and tipped so that one musket and both cartridge boards were lost. This seemed to Ẓämälxem the chance for which he had been waiting: he fired from the bank and Nänätl fell dead, much to the consternation of his own followers as well as the Nusḏalst people.

If Ṭsä·kmai and Oḏmikuṃẋ had been ordinary men they would probably have fled downstream but, being duly validated men of valour, this course never occurred to them.[14] Oḏmikuṃẋ, who had one charge left in his musket, consulted his brother as to their course of action.

"Nänätl is dead," his brother replied. "It is probably time for us to die as well. You had better shoot."

Meanwhile Ẓämälxem had remained on the bank, laughing at the two warriors. Oḏmikuṃẋ told him to be silent, then fired, instantly killing his uncle's murderer. The Carriers began to run to and fro on the shore, whence they could hear the two brothers talking to each other:

"Let us not think of escaping," said one. "We have displayed our characters today. If we are to die, let us die."

---

[14] The man from whom this account was obtained mentioned as a matter of course that confirmed warriors could never run away; when questioned further, he emphasized that the public validation of bravery made it utterly impossible for them to flee from danger.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

The other agreed, so they paddled in and landed at the bottom of the village, heedless of the fact that it was full of Carriers. The Nusdalst people seem to have remained passive, but the angry Carriers came rushing forth and Odmikmx spoke proudly to them: B C 648 726

"You would be dead as your chief if we had not lost our weapons."

The two brothers walked slowly up the long sidewalk of the village, while the Carriers skulked around, uttering threats, casting stones and shooting arrows. Some of the latter stuck in their backs, but long previously both Tsā·kmai and Odmikmx had eaten part of a sisiutl which had rendered their bodies impervious to such wounds. Arrived at the upper end of the village, they stopped and waited, making no attempt to defend themselves, until they were killed. At intervals throughout the day the Carriers treated the two bodies with ignominy, now thrusting spears into them, now beating them, and all this time not a single Bella Coola dared even to protest, so much were they filled with fear of the Carriers who, when roused as they then were, fight like mad dogs. In the late afternoon one of the women thrust a knife into the eyes of the fallen warriors. Even this insult did not rouse the Nusdalst people themselves, but Winās, one of their slaves, felt called upon to take action. Before being captured, he had been a person of importance in his own home and the Bella Coola had allowed him to become a leading member of the kusiut society; in the course of time he had become entirely reconciled to his fate, and even thought as a Bella Coola which gave him the necessary assurance to address the Carriers. B C 648 727 B [567]

"Wa, wa," he said. "See the breadth of the sky.[15] I have never seen, nor have I even heard of such a thing as you have done today. Truly you have wiped your feet on all that is sacred and powerful."

This speech for the first time brought the enormity of their offence home to the Carriers. The actual taking of life did not affright them, but in their excitement they had overlooked what was to Winās the most obvious sin: they had passed and repassed on the sidewalk outside a house where a kusiut dance was taking place. Thus reminded of the danger to which they had exposed themselves, the Carriers withdrew. B [688]

Next day the Nusdalst people buried the four victims. Qāmālxem had been a mighty chief and, being distantly related, they would normally have given him an elaborate funeral, but now they acted as if dazed and unaware of his prowess. A man who owned a powerful medicine put some of it in the eyes of the two who had been mutilated by the Carrier woman; as the bodies began to decompose, those who had killed them began to suffer from eye-trouble, and the woman became blind. Believing that their sin had caused their misfortunes, the Carriers fled home. B [754]

[15] To call attention in this way to the breadth of the universe carries with it the implication that it will fall to crush those who have broken a sacred law. B [784 195]

3: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1925
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

SYMPATHETIC MAGIC AND WITCHCRAFT AMONG THE BELLACOOLA

By HARLAN I. SMITH

177 754 789 [997] [658] [464]

MANY OF the Bellacoola Indians today believe in sympathetic magic and witchcraft, after over a hundred years of contact with white men. Most of them live within hearing of the bells of the mission church, and the government school. Not a few of the men take logging contracts; some of them build and operate motor boats; many of them join the fishing fleets of the salmon canneries; most of the women work in the canneries; and all deal at the white men's stores.

101 131 [161]

The Bellacoola lived at the heads of the long inlets half way up the Pacific Coast of Canada and in the tributary Bella Coola valley. Now, numbering perhaps two hundred and fifty, they, with the exception of a few families, are concentrated on one reservation at the mouth of the Bella Coola river. The Bella Coola valley has been called the Norway of Canada. This was where Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the first white man to cross Canada overland, reached the sea.

105

Aboriginally, the Bellacoola were of the North Pacific Coast culture of America, which is characterized by the extensive use of red cedar and sea products, particularly salmon, the making of graceful, sea-going canoes, each hewn from a single cedar, the erection of large rectangular houses made of cedar planks, with carved house posts and totem poles, lack of pottery, and expertness in carpenter work, carving, and painting. This culture belongs to the barefoot area, but the Bellacoolas wore moccasins to a certain extent. The art of the area was that best known from the paintings and carvings of the totem poles, largely of conventionalized animal forms. The life centred around a very highly developed social organization, an extensive and powerful financial system, and property rights to names, rituals and honors. The Bellacoola language is one of the Salish linguistic stock. They

3: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1925
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

105

are apparently more recent comers to the coast than their neighbors and have not fully adopted this coast culture.

The following examples of sympathetic magic and witchcraft, collected during 1920 to 1923 among the Bellacoola, illustrate the extent of their belief in this direction. 114 121

Most of this information was given me by the late Captain Schooner, born about 1848, and Joshua Moody, born about 1868, both apparently full-blood Bellacoola Indians. Neither of them spoke English and both gave me the data in Chinook jargon, which I have endeavored to interpret and arrange in logical order, but have tried to render in as nearly as possible the Indian mode of thought, feeling and expression. Schooner was a pagan gentleman. Joshua has great knowledge of plants and animals, and is a Bellacoola scientist, but his great ambition and jealousy, combined with his disloyalty in giving up his own people's customs and adopting a very thin veneer of Christianity, color his statements relating to beliefs, although his plant and animal data have always withstood cross examination and comparison with the data supplied by other Indians. Alec Davis and Mrs. Willie Mack told of the toad. They do not talk English and spoke to me in Chinook jargon. Only the accounts about the grizzly bear skin and the bracelet of beaver skin, which were given me by Mrs. Stoessiger, were told in English. 115 [191] [191]

The material was not given as accounts of magic or witchcraft, but rather as part of the data regarding the properties of plants and animals of which I was endeavoring to collect as complete information as possible. 114 121

Joshua, who is even younger than Captain Schooner, remembers the time when Mr. John Clayton was the only white man living in the Bella Coola valley, and when they saw only one other white man every year or two. Consequently these men remember the old Bellacoola beliefs before they were much, if at all, affected by European ideas. 114 115

It will be noticed that magic among the Bellacoola is considered of use both for beneficial and injurious purposes, and that the materials giving effect to it are of both plant and animal origin. 789 754

3: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1925
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

754 The beneficial purposes include: making a child grow up to 789 be a good dancer, industrious, a swift berry picker, or a strong 856 man; curing lung trouble; making the river erode where wanted; and two ways of stopping rain. The injurious purposes include: two ways of making a person grow up to be a thief; the causing of craziness and quarrelsomeness and the three ways of causing death.

754 The materials and actions used include: ashes of aspen leaves;
789 a dead toad, used with hair, with a red cedar bark face wiper,
824 and with lost pieces of thimble berry shoots which were acciden-825 tally dropped while being eaten; ashes of a yellow jacket's nest; a living raven with phlegm; beaver paws, in two instances; a skin bracelet from a beaver's foreleg; a dead wood-rat; a dead mouse; a grizzly bear's skin; a living red squirrel with a bit of apron fringe; setting fire to a wood-rat's house; and poking an ant hill.

789 To make a person a good dancer the ashes of the burned leaves 856 of the aspen or trembling poplar were said to be useful, but 824 Joshua said this may have been a joke. The Bellacoola Indians
535 say the leaves dance. They never say that they tremble. When a baby was born, if the parents talked about it and the father desired that the baby grow up to be a good dancer, the mother or father got the leaves, burned them and put the ashes on the baby's hands, knees and elbows. When telling of this Joshua held his hands with the finger tips up and moved them as the Bellacoola do in dancing. Both rich and poor men danced.

789 A baby girl would grow up to be industrious, it was believed,
825 if the warm limbs of a recently dead beaver were applied to her.
856 The Bellacoola apparently observed the great industry of the beaver.

To make a baby girl grow up to be a fast berry-picking woman, the ring of skin from between two cuts around a beaver's foreleg was put on her wrist and was left on until it wore off.

To make a boy grow up to be a strong man, a skin of the grizzly bear, was thrown over him, generally by his father.

755 For phlegm on the lungs, more permanent than a simple cold, 825 the patient expectorated in something and some one secretly mixed the fresh phlegm with salmon eggs and put the mixture

3: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1925
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

out for the ravens to eat. This was done four times, and if a raven ate it, the patient recovered, according to Captain Schooner's belief. As the call of the raven sounds somewhat like a person affected with phlegm in the throat, this may be a case of sympathetic magic, at any rate it is one of witchcraft. 755 825 [754]

To make the river erode at a certain place in order to break a log jam, a beaver's foot was buried in each of several spots in the place. 789 825

A continuous rain would cease, and the sun would come out, it was said, if the people set fire to a wood-rat's house.

When it rained too much the Bellacoola Indians poked down an ant hill and said, "Give us warm sunshine." They believed this would bring results, but now that Joshua is a Christian he says he does not believe it and says it is useless play talk.

Bad boys or girls, but not adults, would take a dead mouse, warm it over a fire, and rub the warmed mouse on the hands of a baby. This made the baby steal when it grew up. The so-called stealing habits of the mouse were supposed to be transferred to the child. 754 856 825

The still warm body of a freshly killed wood-rat was used in the same way to make a baby, boy or girl, "crazy," and grow up to be a constant thief. The notorious habits of the wood-rat, as well as those of the mouse, were evidently well recognized by the Bellacoola.

To make people crazy, the red squirrel had to be properly used by a shaman and then it possessed strong power. One woman who had been made crazy in this way died in 1887. She did not like the shaman and he did not like her. He stole her apron. She was sorry. He took it into the forest and performed witchcraft because he wanted to spoil her life by making her crazy. He caught a red squirrel alive, possibly in a little basket. He had a box called a "bad box," in which he kept his things of evil power. He put some of the fringe of her apron around the red squirrel and let it run far away. The woman then became crazy and sometimes fell down, but part of the time she seemed well. My Indian informant, Joshua, had seen her. This example of sympathetic 754 756 825

3: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1925
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

754 magic probably originated from observing the many very erratic 756 825 and apparently purposeless movements of the red squirrel.

When one wished to cause the child of one's enemy to grow 754 up to be a quarrelsome person, a yellow jacket's nest was burned
825 and the ashes were rubbed on the face, hands, and arms of the 856 child. When the child grew up, it was believed, he or she would fight with everyone. The yellow jacket's natural defense of it's nest is interpreted as quarrelsome, even by white people.

754 The toad was a powerful medicine for the bad box used in 825 witchcraft.

To make a man or woman die of craziness, one of the hairs of the person's head was put in the body cavity of a disemboweled toad.

[515 825] To make a person's face swell and superate until death came, the little pieces of softened red cedar bark used to clean the person's face were put in the body cavity of a disemboweled toad. The idea underlying this was probably the reproduction of the warts of the toad on the face of the person.

[824] To make a person die, a piece of the young shoot of a thimble berry, lost by that person while eating, was put in the mouth of a toad. Death was supposed to take place in half an hour.

754 One very old man, Judas by name, boasts of having killed seven people by means of his bad box used in witchcraft, especially of having caused the death of Mr. John Clayton, who was the first white man to remain long in this area, having kept the Hudson's Bay store at Bella Coola, and later a store of his own, but who died far away from Bella Coola in 1909.

Mrs. Samuel King who died in 1922 was said to have been poisoned by Willie Mack. Her father, Captain Schooner, was said to have stated that Willie would die in July on the anniversary of her death. Willie Mack died in the summer of 1923. Captain Schooner died a few days later. He was said to understand malevolent witchcraft thoroughly. It was said that people often cut off the collars of Willie Mack's shirts. Willie Mack's father was too great a chief so that people were ashamed, and consequently killed Willie by means of witchcraft with something in a bad box.

3: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1925
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

754

Charlie West, a Carrier Indian from Ulkatcho, believed that Mrs. Samuel King had been killed by Willie Mack's witchcraft. Alexander Cleleman, a Bellacoola Indian, believed that Willie Mack had been killed by Captain Schooner's witchcraft in revenge for his daughter's death, and that Captain Schooner died of witchcraft on the part of Willie Mack.

That Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the first white man to visit the Bellacoola, performed acts of witchcraft on the beach, was strongly asserted by Joshua, who would not believe me that Mackenzie was probable taking observations, determining his geographical position.

NATIONAL MUSEUM OF CANADA, OTTAWA.

4: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1925
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

B 825 757 by some old Bellacoola men to be good for sores, but my informant did not believe it.

C 825 Among the Ulkatcho it is numerous, but was not used, not even as a medicine.

B 825 A bumble-bee, identified as Bombus appositus Cresson, by Dr. H. J. Franklin, among the Bellacoola, was called Tikquanats or the large Skotl, Skotl being the name of three kinds of insects, a bumble-bee, a yellow jacket, and a hornet. It was not taken nor used, and was said to do no harm to people. My informant did not know whether it had a house or not. Neither did he know that it made honey until told so by white men. They say the bee took one of the prickers of the swamp gooseberry for a stinger, but my informant said he did not believe this. He thought it had a sting in its mouth, not in its tail, until I showed him. The Bellacoola have a story that a being considered by a little girl to be a man, but by an elder sister to be a bumble-bee, was once seen coming from the noonday sun. The little girl became blind, B [773] but her eyes appeared to be all right. Many thought she was made blind by too much sunlight when she looked at the man who was a bumble-bee.

C 825 926 Among the Ulkatcho, this bumble-bee was called Whultocho, Whulto being the name of a yellow jacket, and cho meaning large. Whus or Whis means pricker. The bumble-bee was not used as fish bait.

B 825 An insect, probably the hornet, is called Slow lowsil, by the Bellacoola, who say it has a little white on the tail and makes a small nest in a tree in July.

The yellow jacket among the Bellacoola was called Quolalaits (Cloiaclaylaits) (Cloiaclaylaits skotl) while all three kinds of insects, the bumble-bee, the yellow jacket and the hornet, were called Skotl. The yellow jacket was known to make a nest. The nest was used in sympathetic magic or witchcraft as follows: When one wished to cause the child of one's enemy to grow up to B be a quarrelsome person, the nest of the yellow-jacket was burned [754] and the ashes rubbed on the child. When the child grew up he or she would fight with everyone.

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

By laying their hands on the nape of a person they are able to tell whether his soul is present or whether it has left the body. If the soul should become weak they are able to restore it to its former vigour. If a person swoons it is believed that his soul has flown away without breaking its shell. The shaman hears its buzzing wings, which give a sound like those of a mosquito. He may catch and replace it in the nape of its owner. If the soul leaves the body without breaking its shell the owner becomes crazy. 774 756 [828] [753] [828]

The art of shamanism is bestowed by Sûq. It is impossible to obtain it by means of fasting and praying, as is the case among the neighbouring tribes, but it is a free gift from the deity. A person who is to become a shaman will fall sick, and, during his illness, Sûq will give him a song which must be kept a deep secret. After this he is able to cure diseases. If a person falsely pretends to have received the gift of shamanism, and tries to suck out diseases from a patient, he will fall sick himself. 756 [776]

When asked more closely about the curious difference between this method of obtaining the power and that of the neighbouring tribes my informant said: 'When an Awiky'ô'noq wishes to become a shaman he may go to the mountain where the deity of their shamans resides (probably Ma'tem) who will initiate him. No Bilqula can obtain the art in such a way.' [171]

Sickness is caused by a disease entering the body or by witchcraft (see p. 417). The shaman is able to extract the disease by sucking. A peculiar method of witchcraft, somewhat similar to the 'ek'a' of the Kwakiutl (see Sixth Report of the Committee, p. 612), was described to me as follows: The person who wants to bewitch his enemy endeavours to obtain some of his old clothing, portions soaked by perspiration being considered especially effective. After it is obtained a wolf is killed, and the clothing is put into its mouth, which is then tied up. Then the wolf is placed in a box. This procedure is called amk. Sometimes the clothing or some hair is inclosed in the bone of a wolf or of a dead person. No shaman can counteract these charms. 753 755 754 [826]

If a person has been murdered, and a string is tied firmly around the neck of the corpse, the murderer's neck will become diseased and he will be unable to breathe and will die. If sand is strewn in the corpse's eyes and the lids closed over it the murderer will die. If a person has been killed with a knife or arrow, or another weapon, to which some of his blood adheres, the latter is brought into contact with a wolf's head, dog's hair, or anything else that is bad, and then thrown into the fire or put into a frog's or snake's mouth; then the murderer will die. 682 754 [825]

I add here a few current beliefs:— 827

Sneezing indicates that people are talking about one.

Slight ringing of the ears indicates rain, loud ringing good weather.

Twitching of the muscles of the left side of the body is unlucky; of the right side lucky. Twitching of the skin under the eyes indicates that one will cry. [777]

If a dog dreams and howls in its sleep its owner will die. 825

The breaking of a box without an apparent cause is unlucky. 763 777

WAR.

When a war party was organized the warriors did not paint their faces, but they put on headbands of white cedar-bark and strewed their 726 714

8:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1897
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575 to him and takes him up to the sun, where he is initiated. Early one [785] morning he returns, and is heard outside the houses. He has lost all
[787] his hair, which, it is believed, has been torn out by the strong breeze blowing in the higher regions. He is quite naked, and bites everyone [52] whom he can lay hold of. If he can not catch anyone he will bite his own arm. It is believed that he has lost his soul, which fled from the [774] body when the spirit came to him. Therefore the shamans must try [756] for four days to recapture his soul. The night after they have recovered it the xlaxō'la dances, clothed in a bearskin and wearing a large [292] head ring, heavy bracelets and anklets, all made of red cedar bark.
[301] Sometimes he appears wearing the mask of the S'a'lpsta (fig. 200), the spirit which initiated him. This mask corresponds exactly to that [532] of BaxbakuālanaXsī'wasē of the Kwakiutl. Some xlaxō'la do not [171] bite people, but merely devour raw salmon or tear dogs to pieces and [266] devour them. Those who bite people will also devour corpses. The xlaxō'la has to observe a number of regulations.
[525] For four years after his initiation he must not [834] gamble. He must stay away from his wife for one year, but this period is being reduced to one month. For two or three months he must not leave his house.

Fig. 200.
MASK OF THE S'A'LPSTA.
Bellacoola.
Cat. No. 18668, U. S. N. M.
Collected by F. Boas.

The ō'lex (the laugher) and the dā'tia (the thrower) do not go into the woods to be initiated, but both must fast three days before their first dance. The ō'lex "makes fun of everything" and scratches people with his nails. The dā'tia carries stones and sticks and breaks household goods and canoes. If he has destroyed some object during the day, he pays for it at night when he dances. The ō'lex and the dā'tia, after they have danced, must stay in their houses for one month.

575 If a person transgresses the laws of the kō'sint, for instance, when 638 the xlaxō'la gambles, or when a man performs a dance to which he has no right, also when a person derides the ceremonies or makes a mistake in dancing, his punishment is death. The chiefs assemble in [592] council and the offender is called before the court. After his offense has been proved, he is asked whether he is willing to suffer the penalty of death. If he is not willing and one of his relatives is found willing 575 to take the penalty on himself, the guilty party is spared and the sub-
688 stitute killed in his stead. The execution of the judgment is intrusted
754 to the shaman, who bewitches the condemned person by throwing dis-
756 ease into him or by poisoning him in some other (supernatural?) way. The object thrown by the shaman is a shell, bone, or finger nail, around

8:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1897
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575
688
754
756
575
532
796

the middle of which objects a human hair is tied. If this object strikes the offender, he will fall sick. Blood is believed to collect in his stomach, and if it so happens that he vomits this blood, and with it the disease-producing object, he will recover, and is not molested any further. The masks (not the whistles and other ornaments) used in the kū'nut are burnt immediately at the close of each dancing season. Novices must wear a necklace of red cedar bark over their blankets for a whole year. The masks used in the dances represent mythical personages, and the dances are pantomimic representations of myths. Among others, the thunder bird and his servant, ALXULĀ'TENUM (who wears a mask with red and blue stripes over the whole face from the right-hand upper side to the left-hand lower side, and carries a staff with red and blue spiral lines), appear in the dances. Prominent masks are also Xē'mtsica and his brothers and his sisters; Masmasalā'nix and his fellows, the raven and the nuxxē'mta, and many others.[1]

Fig. 381.
HEADDRESS OF GALA'.
Haida.
Cat. No. [illegible], U. S. N. M. Collected by J. G. Swan.

000

THE TSIMSHIAN, NĪSQA', HAIDA, AND TLINGIT.

The tribes of this group learned the ceremonial avowedly from the Hē'iltsuq. Although I have not witnessed any part of their ceremonials, the descriptions which I received bring out with sufficient clearness its similarities to the winter ceremonial of the Kwakiutl. The ceremonials seem to be almost identical among all these tribes. It is most complete among the southwestern Tsimshian tribes, particularly the G-itxā'LA, but has been adopted by all the tribes of the coast. It is said that it reached the Haida not more than a hundred years ago.

I will tell here what I learned from the Nisqa'. They have six societies, which rank in the following order: The ēmhalai't, mē'LA', ītLA'm, ōsala', nanēstā't, hōnana'L, the last being the highest. The ēmhalai't is really not confined to the winter ceremonial, but is obtained when a person acquires the first guardian spirit of his clan and performs the ceremony belonging to this event. The tradition of the origin of these ceremonies localizes the events at Bellabella, and it

[1] See "Indianische Sagen von der Nord-Pacifischen Küste Amerikas," page 311, by F. Boas.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

and leapt away apparently uninjured. The Bella Coola say that yearling goats have very strong spirits (I, p. 94) which make possible such actions.

Though generally callous with regard to the sufferings of animals, the Bella Coola are usually careful not to kill more than they need; and knowledge of the supernatural power possessed by animals sometimes leads men to treat them with great consideration. For example, if a bull-head is caught in an olachen net in the river, the fisherman throws it back into the water, saying:

"I have saved you; please do the same for me."

The following incident, believed without question by the Bella Coola, shows the manner in which bull-heads help those who have often befriended them. About 1880 a Kimsquit fisherman, Ăltakăn·i, fell into a rapids where he was in great danger of drowning. A bull-head, seeing his plight and mindful of former help, increased his size and shoved Ăltakăn·i ashore with its nose.

"I have saved you, mortal," said the bull-head, as he did so.

The ability to increase in size is not restricted to fish, but is shared by small mammals and reptiles. Lizards, for instance, four feet in length, are said to live permanently in a pond about seven miles below Kimsquit; they are termed qwalăs.

Toads, too, can aid mortals. If a man see a snake devouring one of them he will, if he is wise, kill the snake and say to the toad:

"Please help me when I am in difficulties."

A toad never forgets its obligations and if that man should fall into a river when the toad is near, the latter will grow large enough to drag him forth.

Snakes are regarded with aversion and disgust. This may be in part due to the belief that they cook for Ăllăt·iaiitl (I, p. 49), but more because these reptiles enter the stomachs of human beings. The Bella Coola believe that snakes are the offspring of a supernatural Mother of Snakes, a mythical being of dread powers. The following story illustrates their beliefs

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

concerning the danger of near approach to this creature: 539

Ḱwilais was a man of mixed lineage, Kimsquit and Ṗa·s, near Newitte. With several companions he was gathering berries when he stepped into a hole and felt numerous tiny creatures crawling over his legs. Looking down, he saw that they were small snakes, that had just been hatched from a Mother of Snakes. He fled, terrified, pursued by the reptiles, which he managed to keep off to some extent by brushing behind him a branch of spiny swamp gooseberry, a known deterrent. When he had out-distanced the snakes he called his companions, told them of his adventure, and returned home. There he repeated the tale. Though Ḱwilais did not know it, many of the snakes had succeeded in entering his stomach. Presently he began to swell; his body became larger and larger until he was in danger of bursting. The reptiles within were breeding rapidly. Luckily, one of his fellow villagers knew the proper remedy. A raised bed was made for the sufferer about five feet from the ground where Ḱwilais stretched himself on a number of thorny branches, while his friends built a fire of devil's club and swamp gooseberry twigs so that he was fumigated in the smoke. Then, to give greater potency, they cast on the flames soiled clothing and pounded cedar-bark pads stained with menstrual blood; even this was of no avail, so finally a woman squeezed out into a vessel some of her menstrual blood which Ḱwilais drank. This killed the snakes. The patient began to vomit, emitting a mass of wriggling serpents, and at once began to grow thinner, soon regaining his normal condition. Had he not been able to eject the reptiles, he would have died.

776 825 755 [789] [753] [841]

Ḱwilais was not the only one to have this unpleasant experience. Many others have suffered in the same way, but in no case has anyone been able to feel the snakes at the actual place or time of entry.

The beliefs of the Bella Coola concerning the power possessed by animals are clearly shown by their attitude with regard to killing them. Man is immortal, so are animals. Ałquntām decreed that beasts and birds should serve as food for mankind, but it is only their clothing, their worthless "blanket of flesh," as the Bella Coola express it, which they give to hunters. In the autumn leaves appear to die, but every spring they are reborn. Similarly, when an animal is slain, it merely discards its visible self while its spirit[m] ascends

825 775 224 [774]

[m] Xemtsedz, see vol. I, p. 94.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

years ago a chief, when hunting, sat down to rest. While he 774
sat a slide plunged down the mountain-side and swept away the ground where he would have been if he had not stopped. The Bella Coola know that such a fortunate escape is no accident, as foolish white men believe, but is the result of an active spirit. Sometimes it can convey only symbolic hints of what is to happen. An old Kimsquit man told how his lower eyelids once became sore and his stomach began to heave. This [827] occurs with sobbing, so he knew that ill-fortune was before [787] him and was not surprised at the death of his son. A thoughtful person pays great attention to indications such as these, knowing that his spirit is always striving to pierce the future and obtain information for him, however indefinite. The importance of the supernatural to the Bella Coola can be judged from the fact that they attribute every action and thought to an element of this nature.

Mentality, sik, though caused by the spirit, is somewhat 774
vaguely regarded as a separate entity. It comprises two parts, 828 one constantly urging to good deeds, particularly to activity in ritual matters, the other to evil. No one knows the appearance, if any, of human mentality. Some of the thoughtful older men hazard the opinion that every tree has mentality, whereas others say that it has a spirit. In former times especially, as one was falling, the cutters could occasionally see a dark object somewhat resembling an otter flash away and disappear. Not until then was the tree actually dead. Even the old people do not profess to know anything definite about mentality, which is important only as an attribute of the spirit. In indefinite 774 association with it, too, is breath, sininits, provided by Ałquntām [761] for everyone at birth. The word signifies more than [827] the material act of breathing, it denotes the actual physical state of being alive, a condition "lent" by Ałquntām to mortals. The connection of these two elements with the spirit is unequivocal, though their exact relationship is indefinite.

If the spirit moves far from its proper position at the back [753] of the neck, the owner falls ill; if it leaves him, his condition [755]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

774 becomes critical. Only a shaman (I, p. 539) can return one, and 755 if he fails death always results. In some cases a spirit leaves [753] its owner without apparent reason; he becomes insane, tries to eat dirt, and his relatives realize at once what is the matter.
[756] They summon a shaman who takes off his cape, hangs it like a pouch on his stick, and points it in all directions as he sings his shaman's song. Finally he locates what is missing, and traps it in his cloak, which he places around the sick man. This restores the element and the sufferer recovers immediately. Another method is for the shaman to press the back of the patient's neck, and by blowing and spitting cause the wandering spirit to return. Either cure must be performed by a shaman because of the supernatural power required.

774 Spirits can be extracted in various ways. Shamans can draw one forth by sucking at the back of the neck between their cupped hands; in former times, some were so powerful that they could extract them by their mere presence. During 774 kusiut dances (II, chap. 1), the uninitiated are told that if they
575 enter the house where a ceremony is taking place, or even pass
[535] on the sidewalk outside the door, their spirits will be drawn from them by the power within and attracted to the dancer or to the sacred platform on which he is concealed. Many
[178] stories are told of this, which were firmly believed by the uninitiated until the last few years. Members of the society claim that their great power acts as a magnet to the spirits of all but their associates, except children in arms; the latter can be taken by their mothers into the house, because their supernatural elements have not developed sufficient strength to 774 leave their bodies. A person may also lose his spirit through a sudden shock. If two people meet unexpectedly in the forest and one of them shouts loudly at the other, even if only in fun, the spasmodic contraction of the muscles is enough to expel it.
[761] The person to whom this happens falls down as if dead, and [756] though he soon recovers, his spirit has left him, and if it is not brought back by a shaman he dies a lingering death.

775 At death, the spirit permanently leaves the body. In some

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

below. These are termed tally posts.[11] Each remained upright as long as the individual to whom it referred was alive, but fell at his death. Since that time, whenever Ałquntäm lends to a mortal sininits, the undefined power that causes life, his supernatural artisans erect in the land above a tally post for the new-born infant, marked with the bird or animal used by an ancestor. As long as this remains upright and straight, firmly fixed to the ground, its owner continues to be strong and prosperous, and has success in all his undertakings; if it becomes loose, or is crooked, he ceases to succeed. Prosperity does not depend upon the activities of an individual, but upon his supernatural possessions, spirit, tally post, and a third to be described later. If the tally post tilts far from the perpendicular, its owner becomes ill, and can be cured only by straightening it. In some cases Ałquntäm is kind enough to do this if placated by prayer and ceremonial chastity (I, p. 110), and in olden days, shamans were occasionally able to penetrate to the land above for this purpose. Even when a post was reached, they were sometimes unable to set it upright, though they could always estimate the length of a man's life from its angle of inclination. In one of the kusiut dances, the performer pretends to have the ability to go aloft and the uninitiated are deceived by the erection of a tall ladder up which he climbs and disappears (II, p. 202). On his return, he reports the condition of the tally posts of various people. This performance serves to remind both members of the society and uninitiated of the existence of these supernatural elements, and of the dependence of individuals on them for success in life. In spite of this ritual, actual knowledge of the powers and functions of tally posts has been derived only from the first Bella Coola who, created in the land above, were acquainted with the mysteries of life and transmitted such lore to their descendants. One old man expressed the opinion

[11] Łnałłnałts. One of the names of Nusmłt-a, Nusłnałłnałts, refers to these, meaning, "The Place of the Tally Posts." Łnałłnałts and łnałłnałts are closely associated; sometimes the latter is pronounced łnałłnałts, although this may be an error in recording.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

773 Shamans achieve much of their success through their ability 777 to put their wash-basins, both tangible (I, p. 560) and immaterial, in tune with Ālquntäm's in the land above. One method
823 of treating a patient is by washing, with the idea that the water 756 and vessel used have potency through association with those [755] in the upper world. It is believed that in the distant past, shamans were even able to carry their patients to the land above and wash them in Ālquntäm's own basin. Such feats [551] are perpetuated in certain shamans' names, such as Ālpälxeloslaix.

773 It may be said in conclusion that although the Bella Coola 777 have indefinite ideas concerning the exact form and functions of this last element, there is a firm belief that an individual's fortune in life depends upon the activity of spirit, tally post, and wash-basin. With regard to supernatural elements as a whole, it is clear that in spite of somewhat conflicting beliefs concerning the precise functions of each, they play an important part in the life of every Bella Coola.

Means of Propitiation

782 Some of the methods employed by the Bella Coola to gain the favour of the supernatural have already been mentioned, but the subject is sufficiently important to warrant a separate section. In view of the omnipresence of supernatural beings and powers, and their influence on the lives of mortals, it is not surprising that the propitiation of them is a vital factor in human life. The chief means are prayer, sacrifice, and the observance of ceremonial chastity.

PRAYER

[776] Prayers are regularly addressed to Ālquntäm who, in this connection, is known as Mınakais or Tätä, both meaning, "Father." A wise man or woman desiring success in hunting, in love affairs, in the acquisition of wealth, or in any activity whatsoever, is accustomed to ask Mınakais to grant his desire. No ritual is required. The petitioner merely seeks a lonely

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Ceremonial chastity is considered almost a necessity to hunters, and in former years a man would rarely, if ever, set out to seek game without fortifying himself by at least several days of continence followed by washing. In the few cases known of a female assuming the clothing and activities of a male, she has been forced to hire a man to sleep with her on the proper nights before starting to hunt. But hunters are by no means the only ones to observe ceremonial chastity. If a man wants to build a salmon-weir, it is by this means that he makes himself strong enough to succeed; if he plays cards, good fortune is sought in the same fashion. The guests at a potlatch observe ceremonial chastity so that their host may not forget them in his distribution of presents, the host, that his guests may arrive on time. The kusiut dancer thus fortifies himself for the performance of a dangerous ritual. In this way a man experiences dreams foretelling the future. In every desire or activity of life, ceremonial chastity is a potent means of success, not infallible, usually combined with prayer and in many cases with sacrifice, but a background and accompaniment to every means of propitiation. If a man has conspicuous ill-luck, it is because he has failed to observe ceremonial chastity; if he succeeds, it is because he has done so. At the present time there is living in the Bella Coola valley an old white man who for years has ranged the mountains in search of gold; he has been unsuccessful, and the Bella Coola believe that he will never succeed until he observes ceremonial chastity.

The strength which a man may acquire through the practice of this rite is almost limitless. A man may be ailing on account of the leaning of his tally post, but, if he energetically and faithfully observes chastity, it will become straightened, whether automatically or through the agency of Ałquntärv is uncertain. After the termination of a long period of continence, a man's spirit is so strong that his friends place their hands on the back of his neck in order to absorb some of the power radiating from his spirit. Ancient myths record how the mere force engendered in a man's body by lengthy abstin-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*556 773 flesh cut from the body is fastened to the point of the spear, making it so potent that when next the chief lunges at a salmon he transfixes it and brings it ashore. He warms the fish at a fire and then pounds it on a stone until it becomes a copper.

No Bella Coola has visited this distant river for many generations and the belief concerning the manufacture of taitaimx appears to have been handed down from dim antiquity. Coppers of this kind are said to have been considered much more valuable than the usual łälia, but were always uncommon. In addition to their ordinary uses, they had a certain curative value. If the owner of one was ill, he used to clean it [755] with a rough stone and water; then he would drink four cupfuls of the liquid which contained minute fragments of metal. In almost every case a speedy recovery followed. In all other respects łälia or taitaimx could be used indiscriminately.

Łälia are likewise said to have a supernatural origin. When found in the forest, they are due to the supernatural salmon-[776] like being, sisiutl, having changed itself into one. None has been found in recent years because the sisiutl have moved away owing to their dislike of the smell of human footsteps and the taint of smoke.

These stories serve to emphasize the complete ignorance of [325] the Bella Coola concerning the methods of manufacturing coppers. It is possible that long ago they were able to make their own by pounding the native metal, but if so it is surprising that some traditions to this effect were not preserved. On the other hand, there is little reason to doubt their use of [177] coppers, obtained from the northern tribes, antedating the coming of the whites. All informants agreed on this point, and the frequent references to coppers in mythology likewise point to considerable age. In many of the ancestral myths there are accounts of the obtaining of coppers by some of the [551] first people, and many ancestral names, both of men and women, are derived from them.

[237] The Bella Coola attribute the value of coppers to the fact

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

CAUSES OF DEATH

761 The Bella Coola know that sickness, accident, wilful murder, old age and a host of other factors may at any time terminate a man's life, but they consider that any one of these direct causes is possible only in conjunction with an indirect reason of a religious or supernatural nature; in the last analysis they attribute death to supernatural, not to natural causes. [773] As described in a previous chapter, an ancient myth attributes the origin of death to the stupidity of Raven, but this belief, even if its historical accuracy is accepted, belongs to the realm of philosophy and ancient history rather than to everyday life. 761 When a canoe is capsized on the ocean and its occupants are drowned, —the Bella Coola do not consider a drowning a mere 776 accident—it is because Q̓omoqwa was hungry and desired human flesh. This indirect reason is quite as important as the direct one. So, too, the death of a man beneath a falling tree or a land-side is no accident; Sä·lma caused the tree to crash to earth or the slide to roll downwards. Most individuals believe that this supernatural being is responsible when an animal kills a hunter. He delights in death and always sits on [756] a coffin before it is taken to the grave, although none but shamans can see him. Any supernatural being can cause death, but it must not be imagined that the Bella Coola go through life in a state of constant fear; death may vanquish them in the forests, but the probabilities are against it. Nor does 753 sickness appear to them as a natural phenomenon. Its cause is either the intrusion of some foreign object into the body, or the weakness of one of the patient's supernatural elements. The only remedy in the latter case is an appeal to the super- [755] natural, sometimes through the medium of a shaman, whereas a foreign object in the body can often be extracted by a skilled [754] practitioner. A disease of this type is often brought on by the machinations of a sorcerer, and if death results it is attributed 761 to the potency of his charms, not to a natural ailment. Even [775] ghosts are able to cause death. In war, one man may be able [726]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

tries to speak to living relatives, but his whistling language is 775
unintelligible and frightens the hearer. Ghosts dislike urine, and the only means known to keep them away from a house is [789]
to sprinkle this liquid outside the door, a common Bella Coola custom. There is no actual danger in hearing a ghost, and 761
little even in seeing one, provided the observer does not relate 775
his experience, but should he try to do so, something happens to his mouth as if an invisible hand had been clamped over it 753 to prevent his words issuing forth. He can neither eat nor drink and soon dies.[46] It is possible that other beings are responsible for this same affliction, but as no sufferer has ever been able to explain the cause of his ailment, no one knows.
The most dangerous ghost is that of a person who, buried [764]
without a nose-ring, is unable to disintegrate into his elements.
The sight of such an apparition causes almost immediate death through contraction and closing of the mouth.

An unpleasant habit of ghosts is the throwing of stones at 775
the living. This is done partly from a love of mischief, and partly to remind their relatives of their needs. An old Kimsquit man described how, when encamped on King Island, he had almost been struck by a stone which seemed to fall from a tree. He realized that it must have been thrown by a ghost, [753]
and his opinion was confirmed when he found he could not speak. He instantly built a fire and cast on it both food and [755] clothing as offerings to the dead, which had the effect of loosening his mouth. Pondering on the reason, he remembered that one of his relatives had died not far away, and that he had failed to give him any crumbs for a long time. In this case, as in many others, the stone was visible, though the thrower
remained invisible.

Even near approach to ghosts is sometimes dangerous. The same man related how, when hunting, he heard what he thought was the note of a water ouzel, and passed by heedlessly. In a few minutes he thought he heard the cackling of geese, but the sound, instead of continuing to come from a pond a few hun-

[46]The disease attributed to the actions of ghosts may be lock-jaw. [164]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

775 dred yards away, rapidly drew near the hunter along the trail. He raised his musket and stepped aside, but though the sound went past him down the path, he could see nothing. Terrified, he realized that he had been near two ghosts, and rushed back [756] to the village. A shaman was called who informed him that he had met his dead father's sister and another relative, both of whom were hungry. The hunter, too weak from fright to help himself, watched the shaman light a fire and throw on it [755] a considerable amount of food and goods. Finally, he ripped the hunter's shirt from his back and threw it into the flames. Consequently, no harm resulted from this experience.

Ghosts, like all other supernatural beings, can, of course, control their powers so that their appearance does not injure a beholder. A few years before 1922 a certain Qoxolän·i, whose ancestral name was Lo·qwa·t, was encamped at Saskwanuts on the Labouchere Channel side of King Island. At dusk a woman came to his fire and proceeded to warm her cape. He recognized from her green face that she must be a ghost and boldly asked her what she wanted.

"I have been searching for mussels," she replied, "but without success."

In an instant she vanished and Qoxolän·i experienced neither good nor evil from this apparition. The Bella Coola say that this being may not have been a ghost as he had thought, [776] but was perhaps one of the under-sea dwellers who have somewhat the same appearance.

Since ghosts, like other supernatural beings, are believed to possess both wisdom and power, it might be thought that they would be invoked frequently. Instead, death has altered their character to such an extent that they are avoided and 756 kept at a distance. The only time that an appeal is made to 775 a ghost is when a young person dies without apparent reason and the survivors wish to learn the cause. The body is buried 787 with a long cord consisting of alternate strands of dyed and [766] undyed cedar-bark projecting from its mouth and stretching to the surface. The relative desiring information summons to his house several shamans whose powers have been obtained

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

"I am Ȧnolxʷmdimut," she said. "Everyone calls on me to visit the sick, and henceforth they will likewise seek you and your basin." 756* 787*

Something entered his stomach, causing it to heave violently, and he felt that the sickness had left him. He sent for the singers and repeated to them the words that Ṫłitcäplilän·a had chanted; these formed the text of the shaman's song which he used on future occasions. While giving them to the singers, he endeavoured to dance, but was too feeble to do more than weakly shake his hands. From that time on, Ȧnolxʷmdimut was able to cure the sick.

This last account is typical. Ṫłitcäplilän·a appears, inserts something into the body of the patient to cure him, sings one or more songs, gives the sufferer a name, and then vanishes. [553] The curing power thus bestowed remains within the person benefited; it is this that enables him to heal others if Ṫłitcäplilän·a has so decided. In such cases, there is mention of a "basin" in the song, and the one who has just recovered will be able to treat others, especially those suffering from the same [755] malady as himself. The reference to a basin is because such utensils are used during treatments. To the Bella Coola a shaman is one who has had such an experience and has publicly claimed it, whether or not he can cure the sick.

Ṫłitcäplilän·a is known by many names, in accordance with [776] her ability to treat many diseases, and the designation she bestows depends upon the malady cured. [553] The following are some of the names received from her by shamans.

Sexsexqwalxelaoslaix, "The Strengthener of the Breath." [551] This name was given to a person who was cured when he found breathing very difficult. The text of his song was:

"Ṫłitcäplilän·a gave me (the name) Sexsexqwalxelaoslaix with a small object to aid the breathing of the very sick." [533]

Tämtämslo·psta. This has the same significance as the last. [551]

Nexnäx·mälosaix, "The Dancer Near the Fire."

Ȧnolxʷmdimut, "The Dancer Who Makes Noise Only with

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 756 His Body." A shaman with this name does not use a rattle
* 787 when curing.

Ánuxelnmut, "Quivering To and Fro." This refers to the [551] movements of a shaman when he dances for curative purposes.

[755] Qpänpänliktnmlaix, "The Revolver." This is derived from qpänliktnm, to revolve sunwise, and as this is done for curative purposes, the name really signifies, "The One Who Restores to Strength."

It is believed that Ťłitcäplilän·a often uses her own discretion about visiting the sick, but that sometimes a number of the supernatural beings confer as to whether an ailing person should be helped, and if so request her to visit him. Sometimes [761] the patient is so sick that an enormous amount of power must be inserted to help him, and he dies from its receipt. In such cases he is revived by Ánunitsektnm, a male being whose sole function is to restore those whom Ťłitcäplilän·a has slain. This return to life has frequently occurred when relatives have been mourning the death of the patient, who is presently able to recount all that he has seen. Sometimes Ťłitcäplilän·a, instead of herself bestowing power upon a sick person, carries him[1] away to a locality in which a supernatural being was petrified in the beginning of time.

* 756 Although it is Ťłitcäplilän·a who most frequently cures a 776 sick person, there are many instances of other supernatural
* 787 beings having done so. Little seems to be known of these, except that they have been recorded as appearing to give a patient their name and to cure him of his malady. So far as could be ascertained, they are thought of only in connection with apparitions to the sick and, since in function they exactly resemble Ťłitcäplilän·a, and as it is she who is most commonly spoken of, it is possible, or even probable, that these are actually the same being under other names. The following beings are of this type.

[1] The Bella Coola do not theorize as to the part of the person thus transported; if questioned, they conclude that it must be the spirit.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

that he is a shaman, and his future status depends on his success in curing those who appeal to him. If the man decides not to make use of his experience, he must not mention the name of his apparition, as to do so would not only prevent further benefits, but would cause the return of the disease from which he had been suffering. Some shamans have waited until they have received three or four separate visitations, acquiring a name at each; and a Bella Bella man was known to have had ten. Whether or not it is wise at once to display shaman's power is a matter on which there is no general agreement. On the one hand by long, and perhaps fruitless, waiting, a man postpones the social esteem which would have been his if he had at once displayed his prowess, gambling with his chances of receiving still greater gifts. While awaiting further visitations, a man may be able to make use of the power already received, although he cannot do so formally as an accredited shaman. Thus one man, who long ago was visited by a supernatural being, but has made no public claim of his apparition, is able to cure stomach-ache among his own grandchildren by massaging the stomach as if to force something from it, and then puffing this something, four times, from his spread hands. Still hoping for power, he declined to say by which supernatural being he had been visited.

The following account was obtained from one of the few old Bella Coola who claim to have had shamanistic experiences. It describes what is done when the patient decides not to wait for further revelations:

When comparatively young, the informant slept one night in the forest with a companion. On awakening the following morning, they found a trail of dried blood leading to their blankets. They examined themselves and found no wound, so concluded that the blood could not be their own, and, therefore, was a mystery, over which they worried for a few days but then forgot. About a week later, the narrator of the incident dreamed that a strange creature came to him; he did not know what it was, but it terrified him. A few minutes later

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The Curing of the Sick 755 ● 756 *

When a person is ill one of his relatives comes to request a shaman to cure him.

"I will help the mortal," answers the shaman, as though he were himself a supernatural being.

Indeed he considers himself to be removed from the ranks of ordinary mortals, and refers to the being from whom he has received his power as "comrade." No mention of recompense is made, but the shaman understands that if he succeeds he will be rewarded. Donning his collar of alternate rows of dyed and undyed cedar-bark, he proceeds to the patient's house, usually followed by some of the singers, as well as by anyone else who is interested. He throws himself down beside, or on, the sick person and begins to feel for the sickness. Particularly in the case of stomach or chest trouble this is a difficult matter. The practitioner kneads the flesh, pounds the patient, leaps on him, and pummels him until a spectator wonders that the sufferer survives. The aim throughout is to bring the disease, pictured as a foreign object having material form, towards the surface whence it can be extracted in one of the following ways. [753]

(1) Some shamans of long ago were the possessors of life-sticks, and could cure merely by touching the patient with the life-giving end.

(2) In a simple illness the shaman is able to cure by his power alone. After locating the seat of the disease he casts himself on the patient, with head pressed close to the spot where he has located the trouble, and growls and grunts with half-closed lips, ejecting a flow of saliva over the sick person. By so doing he inserts his own power into the sufferer, who at once begins to imitate the chattering and to shake his hands. Then the shaman proceeds to recall this power to himself by scooping it up with half-cupped hands. Endowed as he is, the sickness is harmless to him. No instance is known of a shaman having failed to recall his power, but, theoretically, if he did

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

● 755 not do so, he would cease to be a shaman, and the ability would
*756 pass to the cured person.

(3) In more difficult cases the shaman uses his basin and seeks assistance from others by a frenzied beating of sticks. He sends some young man out to fill the receptacle at the river, sets it near the patient, and throws water over him as he kneads in the manner already described. While this is going on, and 533 it is often a lengthy performance, another shaman, or someone 535 accustomed to lead the singers, ranges the bystanders into two 755 rows, facing each other between the door and the central fire. Each is provided with a beating stick such as the singers use, and a sounding-board is placed before each row. The clever dancer who has been commissioned to lead the orchestra of stick-beaters stands near the door and the musicians take their time from his movements. First he slowly raises both arms and all beat time softly, then, as he lifts his arms higher, the noise increases, and he sways from side to side as if carried away by the music; as he does so the men towards whom he leans intensify their beating, while those on the other side decrease. Back and forth he sways followed by the beating; nearing the climax he treads mincingly, whereat the noise rises to thunder-pitch, then jumps twice, and as he strikes the ground the drums beat and all the sticks come down with a final ear-splitting crash. Throughout the whole the women drone i……. This elaborate beating of time is repeated four times, on each occasion concluding with the double jump which calls forth the double thunder of drums and sticks.

755 Meanwhile the functioning shaman is gurgling and chat-
*756 tering through half-closed lips, and at intervals the leader, or any stick-beater, shouts hoip, a call which is supposed to soothe the supernatural beings. The din is tremendous. No explanation could be found of the meaning of this noise.

"It has always been done," say the Bella Coola, and they theorize no further.

At last the shaman rises from the sick person, holding his hands carefully cupped together as if he held something within

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

them that might escape. It is the sickness! The din increases; the leader works himself into a frenzy with his rapid gyrations, then he stills the noise as the shaman goes to the door. In dead silence, the more striking in contrast to the previous tumult, he partly opens his hands and puffs against them, as if blowing something out of the door, at the same time calling out, hoip. Again the beating of sticks breaks out, again it is stilled, and again the shaman blows forth the sickness. This is done four times. The shaman uses his own discretion whether to send the sickness through the door or the smoke-vent. 755 756 [535]

A variant of this method is for the functioning shaman to dance during the beating of sticks, before throwing himself on the patient. With chattering teeth and shaking rattle, he revolves sunwise, his free arm bent at the elbow so that his wrist, which he shakes freely, is close to his chin; at intervals he calls out, snuaixwa. It is a serious and important proceeding to the Bella Coola, and the effects are considered nullified if a dog barks during the stick-beating. [535]

(4) Some powerful shamans cure by the use of dyed and undyed cedar-bark. A roll made of these two substances is placed among glowing embers until it is itself afire, when the shaman puts it in his mouth. After dancing for some time to the accompaniment of frenzied stick-beating, he hauls forth the bark, still burning, and again puts it in the fire. This is done four times. Then he thrusts the burning bark into the patient's mouth, and leaves it there for some time before pulling it forth. This, too, is repeated four times. When finally drawn forth, it has attracted the sickness, which can then be thrown away by the throwing away of the bark. It seems clear that this must be done by conjuring, but the writer was unable to learn the method employed, and was repeatedly assured that no subterfuge was used. [824] [535]

(5) One illness is caused by a person carelessly stepping on a dead salmon, such as dot the banks of the rivers in the autumn. The fish, indignant, injects a sickness into the offender. [753] [825]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

755 offender. A shaman is able to diagnose the malady, and when 756 he has pulled it forth in the manner previously described, he [825] ties it up in a bundle of four pieces of dyed, and four of undyed, cedar-bark, sprinkles eagle down over the whole, and throws it into the river. This not only causes the sickness to return whence it has come, but placates the salmon who are glad to receive the beautiful cedar-bark.

755 (6) Another method is by making a present to Ťlitcăp-
756 lilăn·a. The shaman prepares four collars of hemlock twigs, 782 wrapped around with alternate bands of dyed and undyed cedar-bark, and with numerous cross-pieces of dyed cedar-bark. When these are ready, all assemble to witness the curing, and to assist the practitioner by beating sticks. He first sets four basins, one at each corner of the fire, and then proceeds to pull it apart, leaving a glowing expanse of embers in the centre. The shaman throws on this bed pieces of dyed and undyed cedar-bark, as well as eagle down, and [789] walks through, between the two halves of the separated fire. Several men stated that they had seen this done, but none could give any information as to the method. If actually carried out, the way in which the fire was prevented from burning the shaman and the highly inflammable bark and eagle down has been lost.

The shaman himself now guides the beating of sticks. When the tumult has reached its height he goes to the patient and places over his head one of the collars, passing it right down over his body, breaking the cross strings of dyed cedar-bark as he does so. The patient rises and the shaman picks up the collar from beneath his feet; his body has thus passed entirely through it. The sick man then revolves once, sunwise, while the shaman carries the collar once, sunwise, around the fire. He then stills the beating of sticks, which has been going on throughout, and casts the circlet on the fire. The same procedure is repeated with the three remaining collars. It is believed that these offerings reach Ťlitcăplilăn·a who, pleased to receive such pretty objects, restores the sick, though she does not herself come to do so. 755 756 *

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The shaman now sends a young man out to fill his curing basin. When this is done, he carries it around the fire, once, sunwise, and sets it down beside the patient. The practitioner drinks from it, and casts some eagle down on the surface. If it revolves sunwise, it signifies that the patient will soon recover, and the shaman proceeds to wash him with the water; if it remains stationary or revolves in the opposite direction, it is an unfavourable sign, and he throws the water out of the door. More is then brought, and the procedure repeated until it revolves sunwise. Although no Bella Coola can state definitely how this is performed, the concensus of opinion is that it is done by twisting the box slightly. [782] 755 756 * 787

Shamans are not the only ones who make offerings to Ťlitcāplilān-a. It is generally known that she likes to receive things, so a sick person often throws on the fire a little grease, some of his own clothing, or other objects of small value. By so doing he hopes that she may appear, or that the sickness will vanish as the object is consumed in the flames. A person in good health sometimes makes like offerings, either on the central house fire or on one built behind the house, at the same time asking Ťlitcāplilān-a to help guard him. 755 782 751 782

(7) In recent years some shamans have been in the habit of displaying the sickness in visible form; this is said to have been a practice adopted from the Bella Bella. After throwing himself on top of the patient the shaman sucks violently, and produces such an object as a toad, a snail, or a stick of wood, which he claims to have been the cause of the malady. This has, of course, been concealed throughout in his mouth. This belief is fostered by the undoubted skill of some shamans in extracting such foreign substances as a salmon bone, wedged in a patient's throat, or a sliver. In such cases he first works with his fingers to force the object near the surface. It is believed that some shamans are so powerful they can draw forth foreign substances by the mere application of their stick 755 756 * [77]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

755 to the part affected. In such a case the object, a toad for
* 756 example, becomes visible at the end of the staff. Conjuring is employed to do this, and often a tuft of dyed cedar-bark is used, which makes the deception still easier. Shamans are very expert in such matters. It is said that when two rival shamans once disputed about their prowess, one of them cast his stick on the ground and it became a snake, whereupon the other did likewise; and his became a toad which hopped after the snake. The Bella Coola find biblical parallels for such [177] revelations of power in the transformation of Aaron's rod, and the appearance of fire on Mount Carmel.

Shamanistic Ceremonies

554 In addition to his professional abilities, a shaman has also
* 756 certain social prerogatives. As has been mentioned, many 787 shamans lack the power to cure, but they may have seen some feat during a dream, or during a visitation from Tlitcâplidn-a. It enhances a man's social prestige if he can graphically display whatever he has observed. It follows that the rites about to be described are often, perhaps usually, performed by a person unable to cure the sick, but it must be remembered that to the Bella Coola there is no social difference between a shaman who can cure with the aid of a basin, and one who lacks this power. Each has merely received a different gift from his supernatural benefactor. There seems little doubt that a man of imagina-
* 756 tive temperament frequently invents a feat of this type, or 787 rather that he ponders over one until he either dreams of it, or imagines himself to have done so. Certainly, after he has performed such a rite, he deludes himself into believing that he has had supernatural authorization for it. Conjuring feats performed long ago by shamans, feats practised by the members of other tribes, personal inventions, either actually or theoretically dreamed of, all these are among the sources from which shamanistic dances are derived. It follows that almost
* 756 anyone who has the necessary skill is able to perform, provided 556 that he has sufficient food to validate the ceremony. Thus this

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

it. The uninitiated are so steeped in the atmosphere of belief that any simple conjuring trick is sufficient to delude them. 781 789

Finally, the following account is here inserted, though the details of the performance could not be learnt.

The father of an elderly Bella Coola was once so sick that no one could help him. He had coughed up blood, eagle down had been heaped on his body, and hope had been abandoned. Then a sisiutl came to him, restoring his health and making him a very powerful shaman. His supernatural visitor had told him to employ his power beneficially, and had further instructed him in the use of a rod wherein it lay. Whenever this man danced, a stick, decorated with bands of cedar-bark wound spirally, was hung horizontally from the roof of his house. He carried one similarly embellished, but smaller, about two and a half feet long and three inches in diameter, having at one end a tuft of bark. During his dance, in which he sang of sisiutl, he went under the suspended stick, held the small one in his hand, blew on one end of it, then threw it up so that it struck the large hanging one. This was presumably done by the tuft of bark folding over and catching in some way. Again he danced and, when underneath where the two sticks were suspended, he jumped up, and caught the lower end of the smaller with his hands. This supported his weight, and he swung back and forth on it until he voluntarily released his grip and dropped. When next he danced at the same spot he held out one hand with palm uppermost beneath the smaller stick; the other was held in front of his mouth pointing towards the suspended one. He blew on the latter as if blowing dust from his hand to the point of contact of the two sticks, and the smaller dropped into his outstretched hand. 756* 789

By means of this stick the shaman could cure diseases. When told in what part of the body the pain was situated he pressed on that part with one end of his stick. Then he carried it to the fire and held in the smoke the end that had been in contact with the sickness. He puffed twice at it with his 755 756*

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

755 mouth, and the malady departed. It had been absorbed into the stick, and later driven from it by the shaman's breath.

* 756 789 This man made a great reputation for himself with his ability to hang from his small stick. On one occasion, after fishing on the lower Fraser River, he was encamped on the ocean beach near Seattle, where he had gone to pick hops. Four white men who had heard of his powers came to his tent for a demonstration. He put on his robes, took his small stick from his box, and used the ridge pole of his tent as the heavier horizontal one. The white men examined the small stick and found nothing peculiar about it. The man performed his dance, in the course of it throwing the small stick up against the ridge pole, where it remained suspended with the actor hanging from it. After releasing his hold, he struck the smaller stick a slight blow with his hand and it at once came away from the ridge pole.

* 756 787 As already mentioned, it is extremely difficult to obtain accounts of dreams which have served as sources for shamanistic performances. They are unconsciously embellished by the performer to such an extent that the ritual displayed has probably slight resemblance to the vision on which it is based.

The following, however, is an example of the type that could have served as theme. A man once dreamed that he saw Mount Nusqalst with its rocks adorned with handsome pictures. The other mountains of the valley were also decorated, but none of them was so fine. If he had had the desire and the necessary wealth he could have arranged with the carpenters to have the designs that he saw in his dream painted, and could have displayed them as a shaman's vision.

* 756 782 A shaman, particularly one who has received a vision from Tlicdplilên-o, and who has had marked success both in curing the sick and in giving conjuring exhibitions, is considered to be in peculiarly close association with supernatural beings. Accordingly, he is regarded as a fit person to ask their assistance, not that he has any means of gaining help that are not open to others, but merely that his greater acquaintance with them renders it more likely that they will grant his requests. Therefore, a shaman is usually called upon to perform the following rites: 756* 782

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

(1) Washing the mouth of a person who has died without voiding from his body the first salmon or olachen of the season (I, p. 436). [764]

(2) Asking assistance for the complicated rites of the potlatch (I, p. 192). [556]

(3) Request for assistance before starting on a journey, by puffing eagle down into the air (I, p. 106). [484]

(4) Request for aid by means of placing food on the water and blowing eagle down into the air at Mesatche Nose and Kwatna (I, p. 109).

In fact a supplication to any supernatural being can be made with greater prospect of success by a shaman than by any other person.

The Power of Shamans

As has been said, a shaman actually has power within himself, and this is so strong that it may be a source of danger to others. If a man should pass behind one so endowed when the latter is eating, his spirit would be drawn from his body into the shaman's mouth, which would close with a click, crushing the spirit and killing the man. This is quite involuntary on the part of the shaman. It happened more than once among the early inhabitants, and since that time people have been very careful not to pass behind an eating shaman; this taboo was still in force until about 1885. A shaman, too, is said to be able to recall a spirit which has left its body, and thus caused illness. It is believed by some that shamans can see the position of a person's tally post, and so judge the length of his life. These examples show the varying beliefs of different Bella Coola concerning the powers of shamans. 756* [761] [264] [178] [755]

But the force within the shaman is really more dangerous to its possessor than to others. As certain "unclean" objects are able to subdue supernatural beings, so do these same ob- 756* 783 841

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*756 783 841 jects have power over shamans. A shaman must never sleep beside his wife during her menses, must never eat food prepared by a menstruating woman, by one who has recently washed a new-born infant, by a girl during the period of seclusion following puberty, or by a widow or widower during the year that follows the death of his partner. If a shaman's nose bleeds when he is dancing it is because a menstruating woman is present in the house; he at once asks the offender to withdraw, after which the bleeding stops. Moreover, he must [755] [785] never cure a woman during her periods. A wise shaman practises ceremonial chastity frequently. In view of the lack of cleanliness ascribed to menstrual blood, it is perhaps surprising that a woman can become a shaman while still of child-bearing age. This is rare, and only occurs when a woman is the last survivor of a family. The Bella Coola themselves consider it to be peculiar, only explicable on the ground that anything is possible to the supernatural beings, even the disregarding of feminine "uncleanness." Usually, female shamans are past the age of child-bearing; if not, they observe absolute chastity.

*756 761 Even inadvertent breaking of one of these rules causes death. This is not regarded as a punishment inflicted by Thitcäplilän-a; it is merely the inevitable consequence of the supernatural power within the shaman having come in contact with what is not clean. As a shaman is considered to be immune against all ordinary ailments, his death is always attributed to the breaking of a taboo. Frequently the death of a shaman is accompanied by some convulsion of nature. One female shaman, for example, told the people of her village to keep their children within doors, since a supernatural being was coming for her. Soon it became dark; there were four loud claps of thunder, at the fourth of which she fell dead.

539 The following was related as an instance of the danger to *756 a shaman of coming in contact with an unclean woman.

[783] [841] [787] The son of the first man to come to earth at Nulleax was, like his father, named *Dudzsong*ʷ. One April he and his wife went upstream to Xwantlo, a place in the country of the Carriers where milk-weed is plen-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

shaman from the dead once visited the land of ghosts and learnt their needs. They informed him that food and clothing thrown on the ground did not reach them, and that in order to do so it must be cast on the fire. Instead of journeying to the land of the dead some shamans receive their powers from ghosts who ascend to this earth, as the following account describes.

Within the lifetime of an elderly Bella Coola informant, a certain woman, Sikwalxwlelx by name, left her house one evening for a few minutes. When she came back she was crazy. Her face was green, her mouth and face distorted and twisted, she could only whistle when she tried to talk, and kept endeavouring to walk on her hands. Taking her blankets, she went through the motions of washing them, but instead of using water, she dragged them to and fro through the ashes of the central fire, until, utterly exhausted, she lay down. By these symptoms it was recognized that a ghost had stricken her with madness, and several shamans of the dead were called upon for help. For a long time their efforts were fruitless. Then one of them obtained some stained menstrual pads. While another conducted the frantic beating of sticks, the leading practitioner waved one of the pads through the smoke of the central fire and laid it, with hemlock bark and dyed cedar-bark, on the patient's face. After leaving it there a few moments, he took it off and, while the beating of sticks was stilled, threw it out the door. When this had been done four times the woman was restored to sanity. Later on she said she had seen the ghost of a certain Tcixwotl, a man recently deceased, Emerging from her trance she found herself in her house surrounded by numerous people and the shaman working over her. If he had not been able to cure her, she would have died; in fact, it was impossible to discover whether the Bella Coola regarded this woman as having been cured of an illness, or as having been restored from the dead.

Sikwalxwlelx called for the singers to whom she sang four songs, relating what she had seen. They described how she stood by a fire in the land below, where the sun travelled from west to east, and where everything differed from this earth, though reminiscent of it. The singers learnt the songs, and it was to their music that the woman danced on later occasions. She was able ever afterwards not only to cure maladies caused by ghosts but to talk with them. For this purpose she was in the habit of lying down at night in the graveyard, looking down into the land of the dead which was open to her, and conversing with the inhabitants in a strange whistling language which the living could hear, but could not

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 756 called out to him, and then remembered no more. It was 775 obvious that she had seen a ghost.

[787] It is over diseases caused by ghosts that a shaman from the dead has power. If a person picks up and eats any morsels
753 which he has dropped he will usually suffer, because, though
* 756 he thinks the crumbs have fallen, they have really been pulled
775 from his hands by a hungry ghost, who thus showed his desire for food. By picking up and eating the fragments, the man
[264] thwarts a dead person who retaliates by forcing some sickness into him. Ghosts may visit this land of the living and ask their relatives for food or clothing, but mortals, unable to hear the speech of the dead, are unaware of the requests of their deceased relatives, and so do not answer them. The irritated ghosts respond by causing sickness. In such cases a shaman
● 755 from the dead is able to suck out the cause of the ill, and some-
* 756 times to display it as a bone, twig, or other small object and at the same time to tell the sufferer what it was that his relatives desired. Like ordinary shamans, a shaman from the dead uses his own discretion whether or not to employ the violent beating of sticks, and like his fellow-practitioner re-[465] ceives payment from those whom he has helped. There are no fixed charges, but a successful shaman is always wealthy.

* 756 The intimate contact of ghosts with shamans has already 787 been mentioned in connection with the ability of the latter to learn from the ghost of a murdered person whom he believes 694 to be his slayer.

There is one method of sacrificial curing practised by 755 shamans from the dead alone. If the sickness refuses to yield
* 756 to ordinary methods, the practitioner makes ten cedar-bark 782 vessels, fills these with grease and places them near the fire, one between it and the door, one on the inner side, and four on either side of it, parallel to the side walls of the house. By each vessel are placed two small wooden figures, roughly carved to represent men, and decorated with dyed and undyed cedar-bark. After endeavouring to suck forth the disease, with or without the assistance of the frenzied beating of sticks, the

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

 756 *

shaman pours the grease on the central fire, and throws on it 755 ● also the figures and some dried salmon. Thus propitiated, it 782 is believed that the dead will be more likely to allow the sickness to be sucked forth.

Shamans from the dead perform conjuring feats and 756 * dramatic performances of the same type as ordinary shamans. 556 Until he gives his first dance a newly created shaman is known as a lsux, the same word that is used for a kusiut initiate, and [575] during this period he wears the shaman's collar of intertwined dyed and undyed cedar-bark. If he is wealthy and influential, a shaman will repeat his dance every fourth year. Such a per- [796] formance can be held at any season, although the usual time is after the kusiut ceremonies. The dramatic representations are of scenes witnessed in the land below, though sometimes they are done in a reverse manner, following the practice of the dead in doing things strangely. Thus one shaman reported that the ghosts wore very long blankets, but when he danced he wore one that came only to his hips. The method of singing is the same as that employed by ordinary shamans, but one whose [535] power is derived from the dead dances with head bent downwards, his free hand pointing to the ground with first finger extended. Also his cry of "xwai, xwai, xwai," uttered at intervals with a deep cadence, differs from that used by ordinary shamans. A dance always terminates with the distribution of food to validate the ceremony.

Like ordinary shamans, those from the dead cannot trans- 756 * mit their power. At death their songs too are lost, unless they 533 choose to give them to a friend who is also a shaman from the [428] dead. This is obviously contrary to the theoretical belief that all songs have been obtained during revelations, but is not at all contrary to the Bella Coola practice of having the singers assist the visionaries in "remembering" their visions.

The following tale, although drawn from the distant past, 539 is a typical illustration of one of the many ways in which 756 *
shamanistic power is received from the dead.[8] 775

[8] A few stories of similar type have been included in vol. I, chap. VIII to explain the life of the dead, and others are grouped together in the next chapter.

782
778
* 787
[251]

About half a mile from the glacier there is a large rock shelter where mountain goat hunters are wont to smoke their meat. They are always careful to take with them dyed and undyed cedar-bark and eagle down, knowing that they may encounter the supernatural. Sometimes they hear the voice of uxxekam, a deep, long drawn-out hum, m·····. If this sound is repeated four times it is a happy augury, but if heard only once it presages ill fortune. In either case some member of the party, one who is ceremonially clean and is brave, blackens his face, puts on a collar of dyed cedar-bark, covered with eagle down, steps outside, and says in effect:

"Hail! Petrified One. In the beginning you came down from Ałquntäm, from all that was wonderful and powerful. You have not changed, hence we mortals can still hear your voice. Please, may it be well with us. There is none other like you."

If the supplicant is ceremonially clean the mountain will answer hi·····, four times, and there will be heard what sounds like a great landslide. Then the petitioner takes some small portions of meat, some dyed and some undyed cedar-bark, and eagle down and throws them on the fire.

"Please accept, Oh Kusiaot" (Powerful One), he says.

Thus propitiated, uxxekam grants them success in hunting.

778 (13) Spipixlnän·i: On the south side of the Dean River about one mile from its mouth. Here, in the beginning of time, Raven cast his war-knife, spla, which was turned to stone and can still be seen. Its power has likewise become localized at this point.

(14) In the beginning of time Mount Swaky, near the Dean River, was a man who was turned to stone. Across the river is his wife, Ałsalnexkł, whose ancestral name is Kamilkän, likewise petrified.

[755]
[785]

In most of these places[1] a sick person can receive assistance, if he is willing to risk the consequent dangers. The first essential is that he be in a "clean" condition by the observance of

[1 [i.e. - certain spots where power is localized - see cat. 116, pp 594-600 for their location - ANALYST]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

ceremonial chastity. This state is pleasing to supernatural beings, who otherwise are likely to punish one trespassing on their haunts. The Bella Coola have not clearly formulated their beliefs with regard to these places, consequently the experiences of one individual are usually quite different from those of another, a circumstance regarded as quite natural on the assumption that the supernatural beings are able to manifest themselves in many ways. 755 778 [785]

Sk̓ɛxłekwailx̣ and the Hot Springs on Labouchere Channel are the places that figure most commonly in mythology. At the former is Sk̓ɛxłekwailx̣'s chamber-vessel, a pool always full of clear water though not fed by any spring. If a person suffering from the virulent skin disease known as łokılx̣ swims in it, drinks some of the water, and then vomits, he will recover.

Not only the pond itself, but the whole neighbourhood, is the seat of mysterious power, as the following tale describes. 755

Near the western end of the pool there is a rock from which long ago three men dived and failed to return. A sick man decided to do the same and leapt in, feet first, wearing around his chest some dyed cedar-bark. He plunged through the water and found that he was standing on the roof of a house; he walked around it, then returned to the surface, and back to his starting point. He dived three times more, and when he emerged for the fourth time his sickness had left him. He returned to Bella Coola and told of his experience. Since that time sick people have been carried to the pool, and have dived in from the same rock, always feet first, and always wearing dyed cedar-bark. All are able to feel the roof of the house, and are cured by the immersion. 778 539

The trail used by the Carrier Indians when raiding the coastal tribes passed by this lake, and on one occasion the Bella Coola, bent on retaliation, used the same path and paused to rest on the shore. They all bathed in the pool and asked help from the power there localized, then as they lay on the grass drying their long hair in the sunshine, a house emerged. Slowly it floated upwards, filling the whole area formerly occu- 778 787* 539

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

778 pied by the water, and came to rest when it had risen to the
* 787 usual height of a house. As each of the spectators gazed upon it he saw within that on which his own mind was centred. As 539 it were in perspective he visualized his whole life, both past and future. One man saw the slaying of an enemy, another a potlatch with himself in the role of donor, another his children, and a sensual individual saw a man and woman in the sexual act. To each it appeared that the house contained only one image. Then slowly the house sank into the depths. The party went on and had great success, killing their enemies, who were powerless before them, without the loss of a single Bella [755] Coola. It was this house which the sick people felt with their feet; the sight of it had given the warriors phenomenal ability.

778 Another seat of power is near the western end of the lake
* 787 where the trail passes between two piles of dark red rocks that rise to a height of three or four feet. Each is roughly squared like a brick with dimensions of approximately 8 by 6 by 6 inches. The heaps are not regular, and yet form a distinct cairn. If a passer-by wishes to ascertain the length of his life, he takes a stick and shoves out one of the stones, which rolls far down the hillside; if he can do so without disturbing the rest, he will have long life, but should fate decree for him a short one, the whole pile falls in disorder. Another sign of long life is when the mass sways back and forth, emitting a squeaking sound like the leather in a new shoe, as he endeavours to poke out one of the rocks of which it is composed. On the traveller's return from the interior the heap has always assumed its original shape, though no one has ever seen one of the stones being picked up by human agency.

778 Sick people also derive benefit from immersion in the Hot [755] Springs on Labouchere Channel. The following account was obtained from a man who himself underwent treatment there.

539 When a young man he had been initiated into the kusiut 778 society as a Breaker (II, p. 123) and as such wore a bear-skin cloak. His relatives were wealthy and advised him to keep his robe, saying that they would make it possible for him to

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

dance again in eight years. Four years later, one of his fellow- 778 villagers offered him five skins for the one which he had used, 539
and, when this was declined, the number was raised to ten, then to fifteen, and finally to twenty new bear-skins. As there was no particular value in the mantle itself, the owner became suspicious and asked advice from his mother who admonished him not to sell, in view of the time when he would want it. Accordingly, he did not accept the offer, but when it was increased to twenty-five skins he did so. He did not know that [754]
the purchaser's desire for it was to enable him to injure the seller by magic through the acquisition of this personal possession.

The sale took place in April, and the following December 778
the former owner became crippled with a disease which so 755 ● weakened his back that he could hardly raise himself from the ground. When the sickness had lasted for one year, his 539 friends carried him away to the Hot Springs on Labouchere 787 * Channel.

It was known that if a patient were left night and day in the spring, scrubbing himself with hemlock boughs, he often was given such power by a supernatural being that, like a shaman of old, he could kill or cure by means of a stick. Many of this man's relatives had been killed by rivals envious of their success in giving potlatches, so it was feared that he might wish to retaliate if he gained too much power. To prevent this, he was removed from the spring at night. On the first day as he lay on a mat in the warm water, there appeared on a flat stone a diminutive man, about two feet tall, resembling a Bella Coola except for a short tail. It was probably a tläqmä·ks, [776] such as his first ancestor had obtained (I, p. 688). The little creature ran around the stone; when it returned to the starting point it stopped and was joined by a second one of the same kind. The two circled the stone three times, on each occasion stopping at the starting point; they then vanished. The next day while the patient lay in the stream he heard from within the mountain four beats of a drum and a sound as if a large number of people were talking and calling together, though he

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

778 could not distinguish any actual words. This ceased, to be 755 followed by the hissing sound of escaping steam; the water
539 became so unbearably hot that, crippled though he was, he
* 787 managed to crawl out. His courage soon revived, so, wrapping his head in his blanket, he returned to the spring. The water was still unpleasantly hot on his body and legs, but the covering protected his head. The same phenomenon occurred on the two following days. Four days later he was well enough to walk and was brought home. During his treatment he saw supernatural beings, and is still hoping for a further revelation that will make him a shaman. He believes that this would have been granted to him if his friends had allowed him to remain in the spring overnight.

755 During the four days of his immersion he ate nothing, and his only nourishment was a little mountain goat grease which he did not swallow but kept in the right side of his mouth. After each bath he scrubbed himself with hemlock boughs. As in all
[785] such cases, for one year he observed continence and refrained
[761] from eating unsmoked salmon. Failure to observe these taboos would have caused his death.[16]

755 According to another account the creature that visits a patient lying in the Hot Springs is a bābınk'. As already de-776 scribed, it is a hairless animal, about as large as a small moose, with legs so short that its belly almost scrapes the ground, no tail, and a large head with glass-like eyes. The whole appearance suggests an enormous walking snake. This animal approaches the sick person, as he lies on a flat stone[17] in the spring, and takes a bite from wherever the sickness is situated. No wound can afterwards be seen, but the ailment is carried away with the biting. If the patient should lack courage and endeavour to escape he would soon die.

776 Others of these animals of the same or similar variety have been observed about forty miles up the Bella Coola valley.

[16]See vol. I, p. 609 for further results of this treatment.
[17]There are two of these, one used by men and one by women.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Between 1890 and 1900 two more were seen near Double Mountain. The last Bella Coola to see these animals left Stuix one morning armed with a light shot-gun. He followed the trail to the interior and was crossing the bare mountain, Kotınk', about forty-eight miles from the sea, when he decided to turn aside to shoot some of the ducks which breed in great quantities on the small lakes near the top of the mountain. As he stalked through the grass he heard a rustling, and crawled so that he could get a better view of the place whence it came. He saw two babınk' which were catching ducks with their long tongues by shooting them out from their mouths. After watching them for some time the man returned to the camp without disturbing them. This man has only recently died. In former times they were more common, but one was seen not many years ago by a Carrier Indian. 776 787 * 539

According to other informants, no one knows what supernatural visitor comes to the spring, since it always appears at night, and any one who is rash enough to look at it dies immediately. A bold patient lies still, with eyes closed, while he is massaged back to health. 778 [755]

Another man, while fishing for one of the canneries, had been in the habit of landing at the Hot Springs to get hot water for his tea. He drew it from a small trickle which emerged from a rock near at hand. On one occasion the flow stopped when he put his pot beneath, but recommenced on his withdrawing it. Thinking this a mere accident, he reinserted the vessel only to have the water cease again. When this had happened four times, he realized that the cessation had been intended by some supernatural power. 778 539

"Hail! Powerful One," he called out. "I understand you now."

He knew that it must be some creature within the rock that had stopped the flow, not wishing it to be so used, and since then he has obtained his water elsewhere.

Leaving these tales of the past, which stress the supernatural, and passing from the experiences of men of sensitive, imaginative disposition, it is possible to describe the methods commonly employed by the Bella Coola when wishing to take advantage of the curative properties of these localities. In cases of serious illness it is common for a sufferer to make the rounds of all five places located on the ocean. This was done, for example, by the father of an informant who had seen what he took to be a spring salmon in an inland stream where no ocean salmon should have been. He was foolish enough to leap in to catch the fish, which was really a sisiutl, and as it 778 755 787 * [539]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

778 rushed past him it brushed his legs. From its malign touch 755 they became as if tied together at the knees, so that he could hardly walk. When all other cures failed he bathed in all the
* [787] healing places on the coast, and was cured by the time he had returned to Bella Coola.

[785] Before embarking on such an expedition, a sufferer must observe continence for at least three months, and continue this after his return, otherwise he will die. It is wise to start at Snuwals, on South Bentinck Arm, proceeding from there down South Bentinck Arm, across Labouchere Channel, and towards Kimsquit, since in this way the patient travels sunwise, increasing the potency of his efforts.

At Snuwals there is a ledge of rock that projects out over the water; the sick person dives through a hole into the fiord. From this point he proceeds to Nukilä·xta, on the east side of South Bentinck Arm, about half a mile above the Hot Springs. This is the place of the giant, many-coloured spider, turned to stone. Among its legs there are numerous holes in which the patient lays a stick and pieces of his clothing, taken from the part of the body affected, saying as he does so:

"Please, Powerful One, help me to return to strength."

The third place of curing is the Hot Springs on South Bentinck Arm, Ixpe·xam. Here the patient lies in the hot water and leaves portions of his worn clothing as some sort of vague offering to the being there. The Bella Coola have no clear conception as to why the scraps should be left; apparently they have never considered whether it was actually of service to the being. At the present time it appears to be only a ritual handed down from great antiquity.

Leaving South Bentinck Arm the patient proceeds to the Hot Springs on Labouchere Channel, the characteristics of which have already been described. The final place visited is Anulxwam, on the west side of Dean Channel about nine miles below Kimsquit, where the ocean penetrates far under a ledge of rock. The sufferer is lowered through a vent about six feet in diameter until he stands on a boulder at the edge of the sea

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

in a kind of a cave. He here unties the rope, dives into the water and out through a narrow passage to the open fiord where he is picked up by a waiting canoe. 778 755

If he is to recover, he feels as he dives the scraping of some rough-skinned animal against his side. No one knows what this is, perhaps a fish about seventy yards in length which was seen near the place about 1905. If a person is too ill to make the dive unaided, a stick is forced through the entrance from the fiord, with a rope attached. The patient, who has been lowered to the ledge from the upper air, is then tied firmly to the stick and hauled out. Before leaving, shreds of his clothing are always left at the mouth of the cave in payment to its supernatural occupant for his assistance. [787] *

The method of curing at the spot, Ählssmos, differs from those previously described since it is only the man whose repository (II, p. 8) is there who is able to exercise the power. Patients whose flesh has become rotten are carried to the place and he scrubs their bodies, in the water, with various prickly bushes. This man is not a shaman, his power rests solely on the fact that this curing place is his repository. [756]

At uxwekam the virulent skin disease Hokulx can be cured.[17] This is caused by a morsel of cohoe salmon or fern root passing from the mouth up into the head, instead of down into the stomach. The Bella Coola have only slight knowledge of anatomy, and by "head" probably mean the passage connecting mouth and nose. In this spot the food becomes a frog egg, hatches into a tadpole, and finally transforms into a frog. If a shaman is called on immediately, he can remove the frog by thrusting his finger up the nasal passage and banging down on the patient's head, but if he delays, the ears and nose become clogged, the hair falls, and the flesh on arms and body wastes away until the skin is shrivelled. Then the only hope is to visit uxwekam. [753] [826] [753] [756]

Friends of the sufferer carry him to the spot and place him in an ice cavern, roofed by the glacier itself, and then retire to

[17] In its earlier stages it can be treated elsewhere.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

778 the rock shelter half a mile away. Here he must lie alone, without food, for four days. If he is in a pure condition from ●755 the observance of chastity, he then feels the earth shake and * [787] hears a sound like a mighty landslide, though it is inaudible to those waiting in the cave. If the patient is frightened and tries to flee, he will die, but if he lies still he will be able to spit out the dead frog, or it will become so soft that it can drip from his nose. He then washes in the stream that flows through the ice-cavern, thus completing the cure. The malady [785] will return unless chastity is practised for one year.

756 Finally, in dreams a man is sometimes carried away to one or other of these curing places, or to several of them, and is * 787 there made a shaman. It will be noted that this method of acquiring the ability differs from those previously described, but his functions are the same as those whose power has been obtained in one of the usual ways.

Dreams

* 787 The last type of contact with the supernatural is by means of dreams. Psychologically, these are akin to visions; indeed, it is often impossible to learn whether the experiences described in an ancient story occurred during sleep or when awake. The [774] Bella Coola believe that dreams are caused by the spirit of the individual; they are, therefore, supernatural and worthy of attention, but in spite of this, it was difficult to obtain detailed accounts. The reason seems to lie in the intangibility of the experiences themselves. Unless one is sufficiently striking, it passes into oblivion as a fruitless manifestation of the workings of the spirit. Many of the visions seen in ancient times by those who had fasted or otherwise reached an emotional state, must have been dreams, but they have ceased to be recognized as such in the course of generations. The Bella Coola of today [159] state emphatically that they receive warning of future events during sleep, but the only individual from whom it was possible to obtain coherent descriptions was the elderly man previously described as X (I, p. 515).

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

In his younger days X was somewhat wild, taking his full share in the frivolities of the village, and having a fondness for wine which he brewed himself. On one occasion he prepared a barrel of the mixture, half of which he promptly consumed with the aid of a few friends, then, semi-intoxicated, he fell asleep. He dreamt that there came to him what must have been a male being, although all that was visible was the lower half of his body, which was gleaming white. The apparition seized X by the nape of the neck, lifted him from the floor, and carried him across the house to the barrel of wine, revolving sunwise on himself the while. 159 787* [273]

"You made this fearful stuff," said his supernatural visitor. "It will make your life dirty, as dirty as this."

Still turning sunwise on himself, with these words he carried X to the doorstep and held him suspended, face downwards over it. Everyone who enters must tread there, so that it is recognized as being the dirtiest part of the house, and X had no doubt about the meaning of the apparition's remark. This experience was so vivid and impressive that X asserted he immediately became a Christian and abandoned his evil ways. At the present time he is one of the few Bella Coola not addicted to home-brew. [797] [273]

A few years later the same being came a second time. X had been ill for a number of months with a sickness caused, so he believed, by a sorcerer. His friends had carried him to bathe in the Hot Springs and the treatment helped his condition considerably, but a little later he suffered a relapse, and was so wretched that he told his mother he would die presently. The same night he was visited by his apparition, but this time he could see the whole body; it was a man with large, powerful frame and a face so white that he could not bear to look at it. The figure was clad in undyed cedar-bark, and X immediately realized that he would recover, though he knew he would not be granted the same power as if the clothing had been of dyed cedar-bark such as is worn by supernatural shamans. The dream-man told X that he had come to him because of the clean condition he had attained by washing in the Hot Springs, followed by continence, and warned him that he must continue this for a year from the time of his immersion or he would die, but that if he obeyed this injunction he would recover. His visitor, who was, of course, a supernatural being, took X under one arm and carried him far to the south, where he washed him in a hot spring at the base of a steep mountain. Then he vanished; X arose and prepared to make his way home, but, lo, he was there already. Rationalizing later, X concluded that his body must have remained in his house, and that it was either his spirit or his life that had been carried away. [755]

As X lay asleep the next night, the same being came to him and

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

ling X, the monster carried away the girl. X watched and knew that it must have taken her life; so it transpired, for in the morning she was found dead. The black being did not reappear the following night. 159 787 *

X soon became fat and well, to the surprise of all, and many of the chiefs asked him to give a shaman's dance. He declined, not having received name, instructions, song, or tangible object from the white, supernatural being who had befriended him. He did not even know his benefactor's name. [756]

At intervals during his life-time, X has seen the white supernatural being and, more rarely, the black one in his dreams. The most vivid occasion was when he heard a sound in the attic of his house and climbed up outside to investigate. The ladder broke, precipitating him through an unglazed window into the loft with a broken leg. All night he lay there in agony, and it was not until the next day that his friends were able to lower him in a sling and take him to Lomqo·ts en route to the hospital at Bella Bella. Their departure was delayed by a storm and as X lay suffering he told his wife that it would have been better if he had broken his neck instead of his leg. That night, while half-asleep, the world again became open to him and he saw the black creature come bounding along the trail towards him; it entered the house, jumped around him, and finally leapt into his body. He called to his wife to burn dried salmon beneath his bed to expel the evil monster; this had the desired effect though he did not see its actual departure. The next night the white apparition came to him, telling him that he had erred seriously in wishing for death, that one should accept what was in store for one and not oppose Ăłquntăm's wishes. The being went on to say that it was wicked to prepare too far in advance, and intimated that X's misfortune was the result of having made ready tools for clearing an unnecessary tract of land.[19] [755]

The white being has even appeared during his waking hours. On one occasion he felt it coming when he was in the mission-house, where the missionary was writing a letter for him. Although still invisible, X knew what was approaching and tried to close the door but he was helpless. In came the apparition, at sight of whom X swayed so violently that the missionary asked what was the matter. It went away again in a moment, leaving X shaken and bathed in perspiration. [797]

The experiences just described lie on the border-line between dream and vision. X has frequently seen the apparition

[19] This occurred during the first war, and X remembered having heard that the Germans had laid up stores of munitions. He concluded that this must be evil and that they would fail accordingly. He repeated this statement on many occasions and claims to have foretold the result of the war from his vision.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*539 *787 777

mātsqus lying on the stones at the bottom of the river. Realizing his danger, he swiftly hurled the pole on to the shore beneath a huge cedar where no rain could penetrate. Here it remained for twenty or thirty years until it had become covered with moss.

One day two sisters chanced to pass that way and the younger wished to gather some of the moss, but the elder, who apparently surmised with what the pole had been in contact, was afraid and tried to dissuade her. The heedless girl picked some of the moss, and threw it towards her elder sister, saying:

"Pshaw! It is nothing."

The moss struck her, and the older girl, now thoroughly frightened, was determined that if any ill results were to follow, her younger sister should likewise suffer from them. So she, too, gathered some of the moss and threw it on the first picker. Nothing happened until they had gone home and drawn near to the fire when both began to swell. They told what had befallen them, but it was too late to apply any remedy and both continued to expand until their stomachs burst and they died."

THE Mātsqus THAT WAS CAUGHT IN A NET

Between 1860 and 1870, a young man, related to the Bella Coola from whom this account was obtained, was netting salmon near Tsmusil. He had caught all that he needed but decided to make one more haul. As he did so, he saw in the water a giant toad with enormous shining eyes and white feet. It was a mātsqus. The beast entered the net which sank under its weight. The terrified fisherman plucked up enough courage to haul in his net, and found that the toad had turned to a stone, the surface of which was smeared with grease. He placed it on top of his salmon and went home to summon the people of his own and neighbouring villages to view the wonder. There were ancient traditions about such beasts having been caught in nets, but this was the first time that such a marvel had ever been seen by any of the eager crowd that thronged the bank. A very old man, well-informed in such matters, now appeared and warned the people to keep away from the space between the stone and the river. No sooner had they obeyed than the whole bank caved in, carrying into the water, canoes, the pile of freshly landed salmon, and the mysterious stone. The old man had heard of a similar occurrence, and his knowledge saved the lives of the onlookers.

[753 755]

"The usual explanation given for the bursting of the stomach is that some of the fire from the monster has entered the victim's body, and there increased on coming close to a blaze. A remedy in the early stages of swelling is said to be the eating of an unsmoked mallard duck.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

757 the science of medicine. The Bella Coola are familiar with 789 many acts which cause definite results. To place a new-born girl in contact with the representation of a beautiful woman
[856] so that she may grow up to be like her, seems false science,
[752] magic, to the white man; whereas the application of splints and gum to a fractured limb is a medical treatment, crude perhaps, but definitely scientific. The two are identical to the Bella Coola. They do not ask why or how a result follows, they merely know that it does. Such lore has been handed down from time immemorial; it is steeped in the sanctity of antiquity and hallowed by the knowledge that their ancestors have done the same for generations. All such acts may be described as "medicines," for so they appear to those who practise them. To separate them into magical and scientific categories would misrepresent the native point of view; the only division that can be made is between those that cause, and those that prevent or cure. Even in this there is some overlap. A medicine that cures a child from crying likewise causes him to be placid and amiable; so, too, medicines of a preventive nature comprise elements of both types. The principle governing most of these is sympathetic magic, a concept which, if put in words to the Bella Coola, would be regarded as logical and scientific. The second important class of medi-
[755] cines consists of objects, either herbal or derived from the human body, which are believed to have such abundant power that they are effective against ailments of supernatural origin, or against supernatural beings themselves. Some of these have already been mentioned in connection with the attitude of the Bella Coola towards these beings of the earth, sky, and water.

754 Most curative medicines are used by the practitioner on himself; most causative, on someone else. The latter are either
755 social or anti-social, depending upon whether the result is 789 benevolent or malevolent. Shamans frequently use magical means in curing the sick and are highly regarded by the community, but medicines of the same kind may be used to kill

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

and those who have knowledge of them are sorcerers. Even a man of this kind is not outside the pale of society unless he practises indiscriminately; members of the kusiut society, for example, frequently employ one to kill an individual who has offended against their regulations (I, p. 740). A man is regarded as a sorcerer not on account of his knowledge but on account of the ends to which he applies it.

Closely related to, if not identical with, the belief that certain consequences follow certain acts, is the conviction that the infraction of ritual prohibitions brings disaster. There are many such taboos, for so they may be called. Though most important at the critical periods of life, puberty, pregnancy, while observing ceremonial chastity, and so forth, there are many which must be obeyed at all times.

Restrictions pertaining to the river and regulations at birth and death have already been described. Like magical acts, these often verge on the religious owing to the belief that disregard of such supernatural things. In the world, however, it seems as if most infractions bring their own punishment without intervention of higher powers, a concept which throws taboos into the category of magic rather than of religion, with the ever-present proviso that the two cannot be separated entirely from one another. With them may be associated a number of ritual acts connected with fishing and hunting in which, though the element of propitiation is not absent, it is satisfied by the performance of definite rites. Finally, there have been included in this chapter a number of unimportant beliefs, the psychology of which cannot be analysed.

What is the basis of these rites defined as Medicine, Magic, and Taboo? As already described, the Bella Coola either do not explain their origin and function, or merely state that Alqantin is responsible, as he is for every activity of life. This is unsatisfactory because many which, viewed scientifically, have neither curative nor causative power, produce the desired end. A child who has been "made" a carpenter during infancy, usually grows up to be proficient in that profession; the person

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NE4 Bellacoola NE4

has gone contrary to something about which there has been universal agreement for generations. 771 754

To understand Bella Coola medicines it is, therefore, necessary to regard them as concepts deep rooted in tribal history, and made potent by the suggestibility of those who practise them. This can be most clearly illustrated with regard to those effecting death, but is equally true with regard to all medicines, whether curative or causative. 121 [784] [755]

There remain for consideration the sociological aspects of medicines. Knowledge of most remedies has been handed down for generations as the property of ancestral families. Some are acquainted with one or two "cures," some with many, and some with none at all. The name of the discoverer of a particular medicine is usually lost in antiquity, though it is often attributed to someone described in the family's myth. Like other possessions based on mythology, a remedy of this type [614] [illegible] belongs. If it is observed that a certain individual is using one of these successfully, others will ask him to apply it for them. Payment is always expected, but the sum varies enormously, depending upon the efficacy of the remedy, the difficulty of operation, the generosity of the person benefited, and so many diverse factors that no general conclusions can be made. A patient may observe the details of the treatment, but unless he is entitled to it, he would never dream of using it himself. This is due not only to honesty, but to the conviction that only a person with the inherited right to a certain cure can perform it successfully. Rarely, such knowledge is sold or given away outright, but, like other possessions of an ancestral family, this usually leads to friction and jealousy on the part of those overlooked. Some of the simple herbal remedies are common knowledge and are used by all, since remembrance of their ownership, if it ever existed, has been lost. At the present time it is difficult to learn details of proprietorship of some medicines, but these are indicated wherever possible. 424 795 757 [465] [614] [426]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

of fur. Even at the present time, the death of a new-born child is usually attributed to omission of this precaution. 843 825

A Kimsquit man mentioned that he had once shot a marten during his wife's pregnancy, and had failed to preserve a piece of the skin. The bullet had passed through the head, making a hole in the cheek-bone beneath the eye. He thought no more of the incident until after the birth of a daughter with a blemish on her cheek in the same place as the wound on the marten's. The spot grew bigger, and the flesh began to mortify until the infant died a few weeks later. Her face resembled that of the animal and he is convinced that his loss was caused, in some way, by the marten. 789 [761]

To Cure Indigestion

Kill a raven, cut out a morsel of flesh from beneath its left wing, and then remove the heart. Place both in the infant's mouth and leave them there until wet with saliva. Replace them in the bird's body and tie a strip of dyed cedar-bark around its neck. Carry the carcass to some lonely spot in the mountains and hide it beneath a jutting rock where no water can penetrate. This cures the child. If, however, anyone should find the raven's body before the flesh has decayed, the patient would die. 955 [761]

This remedy, widely employed for small children, was used with success by an informant for his young daughter. It is not sufficiently potent for adults.

To Cure Crying

The Bella Coola consider that crying is not only unpleasant, but actively displeasing to the supernatural beings who permit it at death alone. Consequently, the persistent wailing of a child is likely to cause the death of a relative in order that the tears shed may have justification. Many stories illustrate this theme; in fact, to cry for no real reason is practically taboo. A mother quiets a fretting child by saying: 827 865 761 [784] [861]

"Do you want your father and me to die?"

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

757 For Head-ache

Tie around the forehead a piece of dyed cedar-bark, undyed cedar-bark, or other similar material. No herbal remedy is known.

For Eye Trouble

Moisten the finger with saliva and rub the eyes with it.

For Baldness (two means)

(1) Boil cottonwood buds in water, causing the gum to exude. Skim this from the surface, mix with fresh olachen grease or oil obtained from sockeye salmon, and rub on the scalp.

(2) Rub on the scalp oil from olachen, dog-fish, or any kind of salmon. The best is grease from the liver (?) of a dog-fish, obtained by hanging the organ before a fire and collecting the drops which exude.

For Skin Irritation

Rub dog-fish liver oil on the rash or itching part.

755 828 For Excessive Dreaming and Nightmares (two means)

(1) Burn dried salmon beneath the bed of the person afflicted.

(2) Lie in a canoe which has been chiselled out to the right thickness but has not been widened and hardened by smoke. A mat is laid across for this purpose and the smoke directed beneath, thoroughly fumigating anyone lying within. An informant was so treated as a young man when he was greatly troubled by nightmares in which he used to see a huge head which so terrified him that he would leave his bed to rush around the house shrieking and tearing his hair. This medicine cured his trouble.

757 For Canker

Pound up a snail and rub on the sore spot within the mouth.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

For Cold 757

Snuff dried urine such as is found around the rims of unemptied chamber pots. Kāmai·ts taught the ancestors of the Bella Coola that this was good for colds. [773]

For Sore Throat

Boil cottonwood buds in dog-fish oil and drink about a teaspoonful of the decoction at intervals until cured. Dog-fish oil, being a necessary ingredient in many medicines, is always kept on hand for emergencies.

For Coughing

Boil roots of false hellebore in water and drink the decoction freely. It is so poisonous that the patient usually falls to the ground, spitting blood. Coughing is one of the many ailments cured by this plant.

Another remedy is used for a person whose cough causes him to spit frequently. A friend collects some of the fresh expectoration, mixes it with salmon roe, and places it where ravens are accustomed to feed. This is done four times and the patient is cured if the birds devour the mixture. 755

For Whooping-Cough

Boil cottonwood buds in water with the fat of any animal and drink frequently. 757

For Sores and Boils

Warm dried urine and rub on the part affected. Like the remedy for colds, it was Kāmai·ts who taught this to the ancestors of the Bella Coola. Gum or tobacco is sometimes added to the urine, and applied like a poultice. [773]

For Boils (two means)

(1) Heat human excrement thoroughly and apply to the boil, tying it in position with cloth. At intervals, add more, without removing the bottom layer and leave in position for

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

757 throw it in through the smoke-vent. He cuts the roots into thin slices which are boiled in water for four days. The patient drinks several cupfuls of the decoction which never fail to benefit him.

[776] [773] The basis of this medicine is the belief, already described, that when a sisiutl swims through a pond it frequently sheds some of its scales which become water-lilies. They are, therefore, potent in themselves and are of greatest benefit to one who has practised ceremonial chastity. The patient must observe several taboos for forty days after treatment: He must hold no sexual intercourse; must eat neither salmon nor meat that has not been smoked; must eat nothing cooked either by a menstruating woman or by one who has lost her husband within a year; and must not approach a girl during the year following puberty. The breaking of one of these taboos causes [761] his death, and the man who has administered the medicine watches the conduct of his patient with great care.

755 For Debility (two means)

(1) Drink strong, stale urine, mixed with red rock-paint ground fine.

Knowledge of this medicine has been handed down for [424] generations in certain familes. It is said to be most unpleasant to take.

(2) The following medicine, said to be the most potent known to the Bella Coola, is used for a person who has long been feeble, especially if he has been spitting blood. It is the [424] property of several ancestral families, and must be administered by an elderly male member of one of them.

The owner of the remedy obtains a dry, clean skull, places within it a little water which he brings to a boil with hot pebbles and adds a small quantity of mountain goat marrow. The patient is given a dry stick, about three feet in length, from which the pith has been extracted to make a tube. With this he sucks four times, swallowing a little of the decoction, while the practitioner says to the skull:

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

"Please remedy the invalid." 755

This is virtually a prayer, addressed to the deceased owner of the skull, and accordingly verges on appeal to the dead. None the less, there is no concept of active supplication to any individual ghost, but rather of acquiring aid by the use of a supernatural object.

For one year after this treatment, sexual intercourse is forbidden to both practitioner and patient. The latter, though not the former, dies if either fails to observe this taboo. The use of an old man to apply the medicine is to lessen danger from this source. The owner of this remedy is always liberally rewarded and some old men carefully preserve a skull under a rock-ledge in order to be ready if called upon. [785] [761]

For Smallpox

Pick up a toad, and tear off its head with the teeth, swallowing some of the blood. 757

This is an ancient remedy for some other ailment which was tried as a last resort during the smallpox epidemic. One man who succeeded in practising it on four successive days was cured of the dread disease.

For Consumption

Boil leaves and stems of a certain fleshy plant (not identified) in water and drink the decoction. The potency of the medicine increases accordingly to the number of plants used.

This medicine was a Nootka Indian's hereditary cure for a cough which was found to be effective for consumption as well. The malady was so prevalent on the coast in the last century that it seemed as if the inhabitants were doomed; this remedy was allegedly discovered at that time and knowledge of it spread rapidly from tribe to tribe, saving the lives of hundreds. The Bella Coola recognize that this was a private medicine, but have ceased to regard it as such and have no hesitation in applying it whenever required. [177] [164]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

755 For Insanity

177 The Bella Coola have no medicine for this disease, although they are familiar with one used by the Kwakiutl, which was applied not long ago to a Rivers Inlet youth by two old women, one from Newitte and the other from Djoldäunx. They exhumed a recently buried corpse, took a small piece of skin from the left side of the base of the neck, left this for twenty-four hours in a small stream, and then allowed it to steep for another twenty-four hours in a cup filled with water. This liquid was drunk by the patient who immediately recovered his sanity. He was next given water in which had been boiled needles from the yellow cedar; this strengthened him and prevented a relapse. The patient, now cured, observed continence for a year; failure to obey this injunction would have caused his death.

[785] [761]

The Bella Coola assume that this remedy is the property of Kwakiutl ancestral families who alone are entitled to use it. The practitioners are always suitably recompensed and do not undertake the treatment except at the request of one of the patient's relatives. Kwakjutl experts have been brought to Bella Coola several times within recent years to cure cases of insanity, but great secrecy is maintained concerning the methods employed. They are considered to be effective, in proof of which the attention of the writer was directed to two sane men who were said to have been raving lunatics before undergoing a Kwakiutl treatment. It is probable that the individuals had been subject to periodic fits of insanity and that a temporary improvement was regarded as a definite cure.

757 For Venereal Disease (four means)

(1) Boil scrapings of false hellebore roots in water for a long time and drink the decoction. If it is too strong, add more water.

(2) Pound sks'tcalx, a kind of fungus, in water and drink the brew.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

that the proximity of such intensely human articles is enough 789
to counteract and render powerless anything of a superhuman nature. Likewise, when a certain woman came in contact [755]
with the War-Party of the Tides and began to exhibit symptoms of insanity, she was cured by drinking water in which other women had squeezed out their menstrual pads. Another defence is the burning of dried salmon, fumigation from which [828]
is particularly effective for one who suffers from nightmares.
Other remedies already mentioned are to cut the right leg and smear a bullet with the resultant blood in order to kill a smnıq, and to lacerate the inside of the mouth and spit to withstand
a capsizing mountain.

The medicine most commonly taken is false hellebore, the 224
use of which was learnt by some ancient shaman. At dusk a 789 hunter should eat a small twig of it, raw; it draws from his stomach everything injurious, particularly women's hairs,
which are abhorred by animals, and ensures him success on the morrow. If he takes too much of it, he becomes ill and [752] must swallow the antidote, mountain goat grease or marrow.
He should also carry twigs of the plant with him, ready either to swallow or throw in the direction of any dreaded supernatural being whom he may encounter. Eagle down and dried salmon roe are sometimes similarly used.

The powers of a person who has obtained supernatural 756
ability, whether or not he is a shaman, can be destroyed by 789 similar means. For example, a lad treated so that he understands the speech of ravens, will lose his ability if he eats food cooked or prepared by a menstruating woman, by one who has lost her husband within the last year, or if he passes through the hole in the floor used by an adolescent girl. The last Bella Coola with this skill was deafened to the meaning of the birds' croaking by lying near his sister one night for warmth, since her mere proximity was enough to nullify his power. This 789 aspect of medicine merges with taboos. So, too, the power of an object can be destroyed by washing; an instance of this in

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

789 regard to two figurines prepared to cause love has been described.

755 In addition to these non-specialized medicines, the Bella Coola are acquainted with remedies for several specific ailments caused by supernatural beings. One of these, to cure a person in whose head a toad was formed, has already been described.

To Prevent Blindness

[753] Loss of sight is caused by a bat flying into a man's face, or by a raven's dropping falling upon him as he looks upward. [825] After either accident, rub a feather from any bird in a raven's liver and draw it across the eyes. The person practising this [785] cure must remain continent for one year or blindness will result.

To Prevent Paralysis of the Leg

If a man puts his foot in a hole so that he stumbles and falls, he will lose the use of that leg unless he counteracts the danger by placing a small stick upright in the cavity. In the summer of 1922 the writer noticed an old Bella Coola, with whom he was walking in the woods, break off a branch about two feet in length and place it in a hole where he had stumbled. He could give no explanation for his act, except that failure would cause him to lose the use of that leg.

To Prevent Paralysis of the Feet

If a person should happen to set his bare feet upon a dead wolf, he will lose the use of his lower limbs. The antidote to this has been forgotten within recent years, and patients are merely treated by shamans.

755 To Prevent the Revenge of a Ghost

775 The ghost of a murdered person usually tries to avenge himself on his killer, who can protect himself by obtaining a small piece from the body or clothing of his victim, a tuft of hair, a shred of cloth, or even a piece of earth from above his

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

grave. When, presently, he feels sick and believes that the ghost has caused the malady, he throws the object he has obtained on a fire and allows the smoke to drift over his body. It is not known how this destroys the power of the dead victim. 755 775

At present (1922), in case of unexpected death in which murder is suspected, the relatives keep the body under lock and key and watch carefully to see whether anyone tries to gain access to it. To endeavour to do so would be considered proof of guilt. For the same reason, they may place boards over the grave and watch it for several weeks. As already described, a middle-aged woman died unexpectedly in 1922. Her father, believing that she had been murdered, expressed the opinion that a certain man was the criminal and that he would die within a year. He outlived this period by three weeks and it was generally agreed that the power of thought had been sufficient to cause the death. Apparently, the father shared this view and expected the ghost of the alleged murderer to be hostile, for he made two efforts to enter the shed where the body was lying, but the relatives of the deceased foiled him by locking all doors and windows. When he himself died a few weeks later, it was taken for granted that the ghost had exacted vengeance. [695]

To Cure a Malady Caused by a Sorcerer

The most complicated medicine about which information was obtained was one employed by an elderly Bella Coola who had incurred the enmity of a sorcerer. The latter had succeeded in breaking a triangular bone in the man's chest which would have caused his death if his mother had not consulted an old woman who knew the proper remedy for such an ailment. This knowledge had been handed down in her family for generations and she was rewarded lavishly for her services. It will be convenient to refer to the patient as X and the old woman who treated him as Y. 755 [424]

X's mother requested the services of Y who agreed to assist and called upon her husband to help her. They scoured the

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

755 forest until they found four spruce saplings growing fairly close to one another and forming a line from east to west. They split each of these, inserted a block to hold the two halves apart, and prevented the upper end of the cut from extending too far by wrapping around it branches of the tree itself, taking care only to bend, not to break these off. Then Y drew through each cleft stem as many of the prickly branches as possible, fastening them in position with their own twigs. Finally, she bound near the base of each sapling a long cord consisting of alternate strands of dyed and undyed cedar-bark. On the day that these preparations were completed, Y boiled in water a number of branches of devil's club, swamp gooseberry, and other prickly plants. Then she told X's mother that all was in readiness for the next day, but that her son must hold intercourse that night. X was unmarried at the time, but his mother obtained the services of a woman for him.

At dawn the next day, before any of his neighbours were awake, X went to the spot where the four saplings had been prepared. With him were his mother and Y, who first washed him with the water in which the thorny branches had been boiled, then gave him his instructions: He was to force his way through the westernmost spruce, turn around on himself, sunwise, four times, pass to the next tree and repeat the same procedure; after this, he was to do the same at the third, and finally at the eastern sapling. With much difficulty, X pushed through the cleft stem, where the tied branches tore his flesh like needles, and rotated himself as he had been directed to do. Without waiting for Y, he acted similarly at the three other trees. As soon as X had passed through the first trunk, Y carefully pulled out the branches from the hole, knocked away the block that held the two sections apart, and loosened the long bough which had been wrapped around the top of the opening. When the sapling had sprung back to normal, she wound the long cedar-bark cord around the trunk, clockwise, so that it would knit together. The old woman followed X to each tree so that there was little indication of anything unusual having taken place when she had finished. Then the three went home, Y telling X that he must remain continent until she told him to do otherwise.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

755

Three days later, Y told X's mother that her son would have to sleep that night with another woman whose services were obtained as before. This intercourse was on the fourth night after the first one. Meanwhile, Y and her husband had located and prepared another set of spruce saplings to which X was taken the following dawn. The same ritual was carried out without variation. Four nights later, he slept with another woman and passed through a third line of trees; four nights after that, the same procedure was repeated. Being unmarried, X required the services of four different women although if he had had a wife, she would have sufficed.

During the four days after the fourth set of trees had been used, Y collected, drop by drop, hemlock gum which had exuded from holes made by a small woodpecker.[5] X's mother accompanied the practitioner and heard her say something to the gum but could not understand what it was; X does not know whether the words were in a strange language or merely mumbled. Y also rifled a coffin to obtain the same bone as the one of X's which had been broken. X's mother was again present and heard Y speaking unintelligibly for some time as she cautiously opened the box, taking care to raise the farther side of the lid. The bone was covered with the hemlock gum and Y bound it, like a poultice, on X's chest on the fourth day after he had passed through the fourth set of saplings. It was left in position for four days, then thrown away as useless; it had "become nothing" for the malady and was consequently valueless. With its removal, the pain vanished. Y told X that he would have a long life, since no evil could harm him henceforth, but added that he would never be wealthy. X mentioned that both predictions have come to pass.

If the application of the gum had not been successful, Y would have waited for four days more and then given X a drink

[5] Tipout; the species could not be identified.

755 of water in which had been boiled eight splinters from a coffin. She would have obtained two from each side, and two from each end, in each case inserting the point of a crooked knife to pry loose a fragment of the wood, and then pulling it off in the same direction as the sun travels. It would have been immaterial from which aspect the first had been taken, but Y would have been careful to move around the coffin from east to south to west to north, corresponding to the course of the sun.

It is believed that no one has now the ability to use this cure.

Sorcerers

754 Among the causative medicines of which knowledge has [424] been handed down in various families for generations are secret means of killing. Every sorcerer must have such a possession, but he is not so branded unless he begins to exercise his powers for anti-social purposes. For example, if it be known that a [575] certain individual is able to cause death, the members of the kusiut society are eager to admit him to their group, so that his ability will be at their disposal to punish anyone who breaks their regulations. Likewise, if a chief decides that a certain [622] man should die, the power of his thoughts may suffice to cause the death, but the desired end will be effected more certainly by requesting aid from the owner of a means of killing. Such [756] an individual is frequently a shaman who is only too glad of an opportunity to exhibit his powers. The following methods of execution are said to have been employed socially, that is, with the connivance or at the request of chiefs or the members of the kusiut society:

(1) The executioner scratches for four successive nights on the door of the victim's house. If the latter suspects what is to take place, he may endeavour to escape by remaining awake which renders the scratching powerless. It is said that no one has been able to remain sleepless for more than three nights which gives the killer his opportunity.

It is believed that if a non-
*575 initiate pass between the central fire and the raised platform
774 behind it, where the dancer is usually concealed, his spirit will 755 be attracted to this material object. Even though the performer is in another house at the time, he at once senses what [784] has happened and asks who has lost his spirit. The guilty
[626] person, believing that he will die unless it is returned to him, always admits what he has done. The dancer, accompanied by several attendant kukusiut, proceeds to the raised platform, presses his cupped hands four times against it, and by sucking with his mouth pretends to draw forth the spirit. But since the dancer has a direct call (II, p. 6) from his supernatural patron (II, p. 6), he cannot come in contact with the uninitiated without danger to the latter, so he transfers the supernatural element to the leg of another kusiut, who is not dancing at the time, by pressing four times. This assistant then returns it to the owner by kneading it four times into the back of his neck.
[626] The reckless uninitiated person suffers no harm, but is more careful in future.

[784] Another belief is that if a non-member even walks close to [626] the doorway of the house during the four days, or more, that a dance is taking place, his spirit is attracted to the dancer, wherever he may be at the moment. Consequently the uninitiated use the beach path instead of the sidewalk. Accounts differ as to what results from the transgression. According to [778] one, the dancer falls down as if dead, due to the contact between something non-sacred and the power with which he is imbued. It is at once recognized what has happened and any kusiut can draw forth the spirit by placing his two hands, shaped like a cup, against the dancer and sucking violently. While so doing he calls hoip loudly and any kukusiut present beat time furiously. As soon as the alien spirit has been removed, the dancer recovers. Still holding his hands cupped together, the extractor now proceeds to the house of the non-member and returns the latter's spirit by kneading it into the back of his neck. If this were not done, the loser would soon [784] become mad, try to eat dirt, and die. According to another

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

informant, the entry of a strange spirit into his body does not inconvenience the dancer, although he senses its presence, and asks who will pay for its return. Unless the owner at once steps forward to claim his property and promises to pay, his spirit is thrown into the fire and he dies. The kukusiut sometimes tell an uninitiated person that his spirit has been attracted from him, thereby terrifying him so greatly that he appeals to a shaman to recover it for him. The expert greases his hands, warms them at a fire, and pretends to pluck something from the kusiut which he inserts into the loser's neck. 575* 774 755● [784]

In view of the firm conviction that the spirit is essential to an individual's welfare, it is not surprising that this belief should awe the uninitiated and fill them with profound respect for the kukusiut. The diversity in the details of procedure proves that the practice has not become standardized; those who are not members of the society believe and do not test the claims. 575* 774 626

Another source of strength claimed by the kukusiut is ability to witness and imitate the dances of the supernatural beings held in Nusmät·a prior to the entry of Älquntäm. As already described, it is believed that a supernatural element from every living creature upon earth ascends at this time but, in a way that is not fully understood, only those belonging to kukusiut can take part in the ceremonies. Is it strange, therefore, that members of the society are regarded with awe by their less fortunate fellows? Presents are given after every dance in Nusmät·a and the supernatural elements receive their due share. When, however, Älquntäm enters, he is so big and so hot that almost all who have assembled rush forth furiously, and in the crush at the narrow doorway disaster overtakes many of the visiting human representatives. Some drop their gifts, and their owners will be unfortunate; others fall, and their owners cannot survive until the next ceremonial season. This same fate may befall even those who are not members of the kusiut society, but they do not have the ability to appreciate what has happened. 575* 787 776 796 777 761

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 of the darker hue of the inner part of the wood. His nose and *796 forehead are wrinkled as if in deep thought. Masks of many other supernatural beings and animals have been made, in-532 cluding two which are reserved for kusiotem dances alone. The first of these is X's patron, Kulslkäkmidjut, who is capable of having his stomach cut. A face mask is made for him of the usual human type, and in addition a wooden stomach with a slit which can be moved by strings to display entrails painted on a frame beneath. The second distinctive mask is that of [776] Oqolikts Älquntäm, the herald of Älquntäm. Above his mask is fastened a bird, made of wood, the wings of which can be made to flap by pulling on a cord which runs down under the wearer's blanket. He carries a staff, decorated with alternate spiral bands of dyed and undyed cedar-bark and crowned with another wooden bird likewise provided with flapping wings.
By the time the masks have been adjusted it is quite dark.

*575 The uninitiated, listening from their houses, hear first the *796 frantic, but measured, beating of sticks that always accom-[755] panies a curing ceremony. Then Oqolikts leaves X's house, followed by all the kukusiut who have danced the same year and accordingly wear dyed cedar-bark collars, and many others as well. The party goes to the bottom house of the village where Oqolikts pounds on the floor with his staff and cries out:

Xwo . . . .

The kusiut chosen to wear this mask is one who has powerful lungs. The heralds, always in attendance, echo his words and explain to the wondering uninitiated who their supernatural visitor is, and that this is the way he summons the supernatural beings to the dances in the land above. Oqolikts causes the wings of his birds to flap, the party moves to the next house, and thence in succession to every one in the village before returning to X's. After a short delay the uninitiated hear another crash of the frenzied beating of sticks, and again Oqolikts parades to every house in the village. On this, his second round, his announcement is:

"I act as herald; prepare to come."

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 natural, any of them can act in this capacity, though it is *796 usually added that the animal in question is the one resident 776 in the land above. One patron of this type is the ordinary 825 river bull-head. It is said that long ago this fish wanted to [773] follow his friends, the salmon, to the ocean, but was persuaded to remain in the river to act as nurse to their children in his house, the river bottom. Early in the world's history he objected to people exposing his dwelling, that is, pulling up the [821] stones from the river-bed where he was wont to lie, and showed [226] his resentment by sending a very cold wind. Ever since that time boys are not allowed to fish for bull-heads in winter. As far as could be learnt, this dance has no special features.

THE DANCE OF THE SUPERNATURAL HERRING-HEAD

One of the supernatural beings living in the land above who is patron for a certain kusiut is the head of a female herring. Little is known of this being, even her appearance is subject to [532] doubt. For the nebusam of her protégé, a number of masks representing herring, as well as human-like beings, are prepared. When the uninitiated are present, one of the disguised figures calls to his fellows to bring their nets and capture the fish.

THE DANCE OF THE SUPERNATURAL DOG SALMON

Another fish dwelling in the land above is Dakdakänus, the supernatural dog salmon. He is patron of some kusiut but the ritual of the dance, known as osnäxmuṇaix, was not obtained. The similarity between Dakdakänus and Dakdakänmem, those who await Noäkynm, appears merely to be an accidental re-[192] semblance in terminology, dependent upon a stem meaning "to come," or "coming." The significance of this in connection with the supernatural dog salmon could not be ascertained.

*575
*796 776
184
[755]

THE DANCE OF Ämoqltaikila

In Kimsquit it is believed that Änoᵊlikwolsaix has a husband, Ämoqltaikila, who is patron for several kusiut dancers. His function is to restore to life any uninitiated who chance to stumble upon a repository and are stricken down by his wife. Like a shaman, he does this by blowing violently upon the back of the victim's neck and calling out, hoip. From constant repetition his mouth has become large and round. When displayed on nebusam, the mask representing Almoqltaikila is painted black and has bulging, blown-out cheeks, and a round protruding mouth as if in the act of blowing. Neither the dance nor belief in this figure appear to occur in Bella Coola itself.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575* 796* 776 184 [755] [532]

THE DANCE OF THE SUPERNATURAL BARK-BEATER

In the land above there lives a supernatural woman who spends all her time in pounding cedar-bark such as is used, either dyed or undyed, for ceremonial objects of different kinds. Her name is Spikpiknm di Sinxälstla and she is patron for various kukusiut. On the nebusam of her Kimsquit protégés she appears as a masked figure engaged in her usual occupation and makes a circuit of the house while a salmon is displayed. The relationship between this being and the salmon is problematical, and it is uncertain whether or not the same rite is practised in Bella Coola.

[532]

THE DANCE OF THE SUPERNATURAL AWAKENER

Every morning in Nusqulxwaista the woman Spaixpaxnumän·a goes around waking up the supernatural beings. She is patron for several kusiut dancers. On the nebusam of her protégé, a masked figure representing the Awakener goes to every house in the village and pounds on the doors, but does not enter, to the relief of the uninitiated who have sought refuge within the bed-rooms.

575* 796* 776 [532]

THE DANCE OF DAWN

Not only must the supernatural beings be aroused in the morning, but every day the Sun himself must be requested to appear; this is done by the beings known as Xemxemtnum, who are patrons for several kukusiut. On nebusam they appear and Ano°likwolsaix explains to the uninitiated who they are and

[821]

C Wastl-ḱwuinuḱlis	yas Ḱislaxnalalḱwalas	ḱistlḱwustlis
I stand upon	what gave me power as a shaman(f)	when it stood up

sewtz-amaw-a-tz-ual;
in the centre of a place of petrified power(i).

(a) This was the woman's Łaxlat designation; her shaman's name has been forgotten.

(b) Recorded as song VII D 56, National Museum of Canada; quartet, Reuben Schooner, leader, Jim Pollard, prompter and announcer, assisted by Tal'o Charlie and Steamboat Annie.

(c) That is: The sky moved up and down. Grandiloquent phrases of this kind are frequent in songs used by shamans.

(d) Refers to the supernatural beings.

(e) Ḱimoxmile is said to be the word for salmon in the language of the supernatural beings; it is used by mortals in the rites following the taking of the first spring salmon. The shaman has received some of her power from a fish.

(f) Refers to the supernatural beings.

(g) Reference to the wash-basin shows that the shaman had power to heal the sick.

(h) The meaning is obscure. Apparently the shaman had been carried away by Thiexplitsw-a and treated by immersion in a basin in which eagle down was deposited.

(i) This refers to the supernatural beings, Łxamlxtsem, the [illegible] mortals killed by the receipt of too much power from Thiexplitsw-a. It is clear that this fate befell the shaman.

(j) The woman is said to have received power from several sources, salmon, ghosts, and Thiexplitsw-a herself. It is impossible to state which of her supernatural patrons is referred to in this subdivision.

(k) The woman must have been taken to one of the spots where cures could be effected by the power of a supernatural being petrified there.

Song Used by Nuxtz-mālsair(a), a Kimsquit Man(b)

A Ämtqawiqunuxal;	wa-ixtāldumxal;	aiakuxiaat
Look at the teeming supernatural beings above(c), not one is my equal(d),		wise one(e)!

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

B Suxpalqhtaiyam'xal	stuatqustumulxual;	aiakuxiaat
You must sometimes waken at night to meditate on what I am bringing your mouth(f),		wise one!

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

C Sutmyalsuḱlal	stāuadhtkramxadja	aiakuxiaat
You must sometimes use your wash-basin(g),		wise one!

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

Ałkhu: Village at Salmon House, on the upper Dean River.
ałkma: Position between two fires.
ałtut: 1—Raised bed behind the fire used by a person seeking power, or by one who has been in contact with the supernatural.
2—Waterfall.[1] [823]
ałmaiu: To teach.
ałmaiuxmbit': Hereditary lore handed down secretly in a family. [424] Ałpinkt: One of Raven's Crow sisters.
ałpuma: Sunset song in slow time. [583]
ałxłła: 1—Box, ałxłaiu; hence, seat.
3—One of the nights of a potlatch, probably that on which a representation of the deceased appears.
ałma: Rocky Mountain jay. [825]
ałpawał: Carved house post.
Ałsałxałł: Wife of Snałq; both were changed to stone in the beginning of time.
ałsałxałł: That part of a house between fire and doorway.
Ałsłwinłuiu: Expedition of the supernatural being Wiwaiu against berries and fish.
Ałsnawu: Snauu's fish-dam in the beginning of time; the name has since been used by his descendants.
ałsnałxałł: Chief's house; a railway; or several orchestras. [601]
ałq": Scale. [825]
ałxmałum: Steeping in medicinal smoke as a curative measure.
ałłaqałp: Fir. [755]
Ałłał-łałał: Evil male supernatural being.
ałma: 1—Death, not anthropomorphized. [824]
2—Dead.
ałmał": Kingfisher. [825]
ałł: Fish-hook.
Ałłkum, "They of the Huge Jaws": Supernatural beings resident in the land above. [227]
ałłmas: Kwiał spy.
ałłqałł: plural, łałłqałł; vocative plural, łałłqłaił:
1—Person who has not given a potlatch, a commoner.
2—Ancestral name of a Kimsquit woman.
Ałłł: enemy village.
Ałpł: Snauu man mentioned in an ancient story.
ałpu łaułłał, "He Urinates Over Himself." The implication is that this is an indication of misfortune, hence the word really means omen. It is the Kimsquit variant of ałaułłał. [787] ałaułłał: Omen of death.
Ałpu-i, "Occupied Mound": 1—Village at Kwafna.
2—Artificial mound at Tałła.
3—Village on the Kimsquit River.
4—Island near Ocean Falls.
Ałpu-i nuu Wawałuła, "Place of Dogs": Locality near Ocean Falls where the dogs came to earth in the beginning of time.
ałpuu-i: Varied thrush. [825]

[1] The latter is a favourite place for obtaining power, the probable reason for the identity of the two terms.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

1924

sla'ā': Devil's-club.
sla'ōstmaxlis: To lament ceremonially, the term used to describe the reason for a memorial potlatch. [824] [965] Slamī, "Ashes": Ancestral name created for a Swalē'ī chief about 1910.
slamuk: Supernatural creature dwelling in water.
slay: Anus.
slāmm: Splinters projecting upwards from the hole of a broken tree-trunk. [824]
Slamalymta-a: One of the first women to settle at Swalē'ī in the beginning of time.
Slaqa: Chief of the spring salmon.
slaxōmkun: Narrow strips of goat skin with wool attached, distributed at marriage. [515]
sleāsis: Mergansers. [825] slakmadjat, "The Opening": Ceremony when the first public presents are given to the family of a future wife, following the announcement of betrothal. [584]
sli: To cure, especially with the aid of a frozzled beating of sticks. [481] Slimusīnī: Snuc man mentioned in an ancient story.
slimp, "Come To!": Call of invitation to a hamat dance in the upper Bella Coola valley.
sliwata: Cloud.
slome: Thick hide, either of moose or caribou. [825] slomu: Semi-circular knife used by women for cutting salmon. [412]
slomoix, slomoxl, or slōmdjat: 1—Frozzled beating of sticks for curing purposes, especially when the patient is a member of a secret society. [755]
2—Final hamat rite at end of the ceremonial season.
slomix: To cure by means of the frozzled pounding of sticks.
Slomī, "The Charred Portion of a Half-Consumed Log": o'ulā name obtained in the beginning of time.
Slomstaā: House used by a group of first settlers near Snuc in the beginning of time.
Slomsdīx-a: Daughter of the first settlers at Nusqulā in the beginning of time.
sla'nuk: Fungus. [824]
slōmstqata: 1—Box made of strands of cedar-bark. [415]
2—Ancient name of a small hand-drum.
slop: Ceremonial designs executed on the exterior front wall of a house.
slokā': Rose.
Slōlīmm-a: Kwakiutl name of a Kitamaat man.
slot: Wasp. [825]
Slolomnamx: Rock on shore of North Bentinck Arm where war trophies were washed. [727] Slpaslāsī: Name of house brought down by first settlers at Slōlīmī in the beginning of time; the term was also applied by them to one of their female relatives.
slsī, sneātsa, sluxī: Parent-in-law or child-in-law. [601] sltlāp: Suitable place in the river for setting checkers nets.
sltlu: Game played with throwing stones.
slualsīs: Synonym for yaxwma, the tangible or intangible prerogative possessed by some hamatsa in addition to a dance rite. [824]
slusualāsīs: River sculpin. [825]

3: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1925
NEA Bellacoola NEA

759 The homicidal purposes include: making a child grow up to 789 be a good dancer, industrious, a swift berry picker, or a strong 856 man; causing long trouble; making the river souls where wanted; and two ways of stopping rain. The injurious purposes include:
two ways of making a person grow up to be a thief; the causing of cruelness and quarrelsomeness and the three ways of causing death.

759 The materials and actions used include: ashes of aspen leaves;
789 a dead toad, used with hair, with a red cedar bark face wiper,
815 and with hair pieces of thimble berry shoots which were accidentally dropped while being eaten; ashes of a yellow jacket's nest;
825 a living raven with phlegm; beaver paws, in two instances; a skin bracelet from a beaver's leading; a dead wood-rat; a dead woman; a grizzly bear's skin; a living owl squirted with a bit of spruce bringe; setting fire to a wood-rat's house; and poking an ant hill.

789 To make a person a good dancer the ashes of the burned leaves 856 of the aspen or trembling poplar were said to be useful, but 829 Jackson said this may have been a joke. The Bellacoola Indians
836 say the leaves dance. They never say that they tremble. When a baby was born, if the parents talked about it and the father desired that the baby grow up to be a good dancer, the mother or father got the leaves, burned them and put the ashes on the baby's hands, knees and elbows. When talking of this Jackson held his hands with the finger tips up and moved them as the Bellacoola do in dancing. Both rich and poor were dancers.

789 A baby girl would grow up to be industrious, it was believed,
815 if the warm limbs of a recently dead beaver were applied to her.
824 The Bellacoola apparently observed the great industry of the beaver.

To make a baby girl grow up to be a fast berry-picking woman, the ring of skin from between two cuts around a beaver's leading was put on her wrist and was left on until it were off.

To make a boy grow up to be a strong man, a skin of the grizzly bear, was thrown over him, generally by his father.

● 755 For phlegm on the lungs, more permanent than a simple cold, 825 the patient experimented in something and some one secretly mixed the fresh phlegm with salmon eggs and put the mixture

In Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1925
NEA Bellacoola NEA

755
815

out for the ravens to eat. This was done four times, and if a raven ate it, the patient recovered, according to Captain Schooner's belief. As the call of the raven sounds somewhat like a person affected with phlegm in the throat, this may be a case of sympathetic magic, at any rate it is one of witchcraft.

[754]

To make the river erode at a certain place in order to break a log jam, a beaver's foot was buried in each of several spots in the place.

755
815

A continuous rain would cease, and the sun would come out, it was said, if the people set fire to a wood-rat's house.

When it rained too much the Bellacoola Indians poked down an ant hill and said, "Give us warm sunshine." They believed this would bring results, but now that Joshua is a Christian he says he does not believe it and says it is useless play talk.

Bad boys or girls, but not adults, would take a dead mouse, warm it over a fire, and rub the warmed mouse on the hands of a baby. This made the baby steal when it grew up. The so-called stealing habits of the mouse were supposed to be transferred to the child.

754
856
815

The still warm body of a freshly killed wood-rat was used in the same way to make a baby, boy or girl, "crazy," and grow up to be a constant thief. The notorious habits of the wood-rat, as well as those of the mouse, were evidently well recognized by the Bellacoola.

To make people crazy, the red squirrel had to be properly used by a shaman and then it possessed strong power. One woman who had been made crazy in this way died in 1897. She did not like the shaman and he did not like her. He stole her spoon. She was crazy. He took it into the forest and performed witchcraft because he wanted to spoil her life by making her crazy. He caught a red squirrel alive, possibly in a little basket. He had a box called a "bad box," in which he kept his things of evil power. He put some of the fringe of her spoon around the red squirrel and let it run far away. The woman then became crazy and sometimes fell down, but part of the time she seemed well. My Indian informant, Joshua, had seen her. This example of sympathetic

754
756
815

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NE5 Bellacoola NE5
Cottier NE7
Turnham NE16

ARISTOLOCHIACEAE, BIRTHWORT FAMILY

Asarum cordatum Lindl., Wild Ginger

Bella Coola: Boiled, and the decoction taken internally for pain in the stomach, but not for diarrhoea or vomiting.

Boiled, and applied externally for headache, intestinal pains, and pain in the knees.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

POLYGONACEAE, BUCKWHEAT FAMILY

Rumex occidentalis Wats., Western Dock

Bella Coola: Roots roasted for a short time in a hole in the earth among the ashes of a fire, covered with earth, smashed, and applied in quantity as a poultice for boils. Both leaves and roots used, according to another informant, and the poultice applied to wounds as well as boils.

Leaves used for a sweat bath for pains similar to rheumatism all over the body. Stones were heated, a little cold sand spread over them, and leaves spread on the sand; or else the leaves were spread on hot ashes. The patient sat or lay naked directly on the leaves, and was covered with blankets. Western Nettle (Urtica Lyallii Wats.), small branches of black cottonwood (Populus trichocarpa T. and G.) with the leaves on them, or the small kelp found on rocks were sometimes used when leaves of the western dock could not be obtained.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

LORANTHACEAE, MISTLETOE FAMILY

Arceuthobium americanum Nutt., Small Mistletoe

Bella Coola: Boiled, and decoction taken as a potent medicine for hemorrhage of the lungs.

Southern Carrier: Boiled, and decoction taken freely for hemorrhage from the mouth, tuberculosis of the lungs, and consumption.

NYMPHACEAE, WATER-LILY FAMILY

Nymphaea polysepala (Engelm.) Greene, Yellow Pond-Lily

Bella Coola, old medicine: Used in a magical way for pain in all parts of the body. A root in many cases as large as a man's leg was cut free from the bed of a pool with a hardwood pole sharpened like a shovel. A hollow was made in it, water placed in the rootpocket, and hot stones added. The stones were changed four times, after which the patient drank one or two cupfuls of the water. He repeated the dose each day for four days. To be effective the root had to be thrown back into the water, not on the ground.

Present medicine: Root boiled twelve hours, and decoction taken internally for pain in any part of the body, such as "consumption", rheumatism, heart disease, and gonorrhoea. Considered good for the blood. Not used as a diuretic, or for diarrhoea, constipation, or vomiting.

Gitksan: Infusion of sweetings of roasted root (or according to another informant, boots of root, boiled) taken internally for hemorrhage of the lungs and as a contraceptive.

6:Boas E-5 [1886-ca. 1890]1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

By laying their hands on the nape of a person they are able to tell whether his soul is present or whether it has left the body. If the soul should become weak they are able to restore it to its former vigour. If a person swooms it is believed that his soul has flown away without breaking its shell. The shaman hears its buzzing wings, which give a sound like those of a mosquito. He may catch and replace it in the nape of its owner. If the soul leaves the body without breaking its shell the owner becomes crazy.

The art of shamanism is bestowed by Snq. It is impossible to obtain it by means of fasting and praying, as is the case among the neighbouring tribes, but it is a free gift from the deity. A person who is to become a shaman will fall sick, and, during his illness, Snq will give him a song which must be kept a deep secret. After this he is able to cure diseases. If a person falsely pretends to have received the gift of shamanism, and tries to suck out diseases from a patient, he will fall sick himself.

When asked more closely about the curious difference between this method of obtaining the power and that of the neighbouring tribes my informant said: 'When an Awiky'i'ang wishes to become a shaman he may go to the mountain where the deity of their shamans resides (probably Sk'ium) who will initiate him. No Bilqula can obtain the art in such a way.'

Sickness is caused by a disease entering the body or by witchcraft (see p. 417). The shaman is able to extract the disease by sucking. A peculiar method of witchcraft, somewhat similar to the 'sk'a' of the Kwakiutl (see Sixth Report of the Committee, p. 61B), was described to me as follows: The person who wants to bewitch his enemy endeavours to obtain some of his old clothing, portions soaked by perspiration being considered especially effective. After it is obtained a wolf is killed, and the clothing is put into its mouth, which is then tied up. Then the wolf is placed in a box. This procedure is called sinck. Sometimes the clothing or some hair is inclosed in the bone of a wolf or of a dead person. No shaman can counteract these charms.

If a person has been murdered, and a string is tied firmly around the neck of the corpse, the murderer's neck will become diseased and he will be unable to breathe and will die. If sand is strewn in the corpse's eyes and the lids closed over it the murderer will die. If a person has been killed with a knife or arrow, or another weapon, in which some of his blood adheres, the latter is brought into contact with a wolf's head, dog's hair, or anything else that is hot, and then thrown into the fire or put into a frog's or snake's mouth; then the murderer will die.

I add here a few current beliefs:—

Sneezing indicates that people are talking about one.

Slight singing of the ears indicates rain, loud singing good weather.

Twitching of the muscles of the left side of the body is unlucky; of the right side lucky. Twitching of the skin under the eyes indicates that one will cry.

If a dog dreams and howls in its sleep its owner will die.

The breaking of a box without an apparent cause is unlucky.

Wars.

When a war party was organized the warriors did not paint their faces, but they put on headbands of white cedar-bark and adorned their

7:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1900 NE6 Bellacoola NE6

776 the House of Myths, but who has given up his place in favor of Sênx and Alk'unta'm. These two might be called the rulers of mankind. In most traditions they are described as trying to destroy man, notwithstanding the 773 fact that they are considered the creators of mankind. This peculiar charac-776 teristic of these deities is clearly brought out in the traditions recorded on pp. 78 ff. In one legend which I collected in 1890, Alk'unta'm's mother, Nûnusômik·ceqonx'm, is described as a Cannibal, who inserts her long snout in the ears of man, and sucks out his brain. Eventually she was transformed into the mosquito.[1] I did not hear her mentioned as one of the deities residing in the House of Myths. According to the same tradition, the salmon were obtained by a man who gambled with Alk'unta'm, the stake being the salmon. Alk'unta'm lost, and the man took the salmon down [828] from heaven. Another legend of the origin of the salmon is recorded on p. 38, where it is told how the birds obtained the salmon. According to still another tradition (p. 94), the Raven obtained the salmon by marrying a salmon girl.
In the tradition quoted above, Alk'unta'm also gives to man the power to cure [755] disease by means of the water of life, which the shaman sprinkles on the sick person.

776 A number of inferior deities live in the House of Myths. They might be called the assistants of the principal deities. In order to understand their [772] functions, it is necessary to state that the deities residing in the House of Myths have particular charge of the religious winter ceremonial of the [196] Bella Coola which is called kû'siut, and which corresponds to the ts'êtsa'eqa of the Kwakiutl. I have described this ceremonial, and its importance in [575] the social life of the Kwakiutl, in another paper.[2] The kû'siut is of equal importance to an understanding of the social life and mythology of the Bella Coola. It is sufficient to say at this place that the ceremonials performed during the kû'siut are mostly dramatic representations of myths [532] referring to the various deities, particularly to those of the House of Myths:
therefore masks representing these deities are used in the ceremonials.
Plates VII to XII[3] show a series of these masks. Figs. 1, 2, and 4 (Plate VII) are Sênx, Alk'unta'm, and Snêlk'ulx·a'ls. The functions of many of the 575 inferior deities seem to refer solely to the kû'siut. These deities and their 776 functions are as follows: Sîx·sek·tisî'x· (Plate VII, Fig. 6) ordains the death of man and animals. According to one statement that I received, there are four deities of this name in the House of Myths. It is his particular duty to kill those who transgress the laws of the kû'siut. This deity is mentioned by Jacobsen, who calls him Sek-selk Kalsi.[4] Nsnsî'seq'als (Plate VII, Fig. 7), or the Sscnc'iq of the House of Myths, sits by himself in one

[113]

[1] Verhandlungen der Berliner Gesellschaft für Anthropologie, Ethnologie und Urgeschichte, 1891, p. 1[illegible].
[2] Report of the U. S. National Museum, 1895, pp. 311-738.
[3] Drawings by Mr. Rudolph Weber.
[4] Verhandlungen der Berliner Gesellschaft für Anthropologie, Ethnologie und Urgeschichte, 1891, p. 3[illegible].

7:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1900 NE6 Bellacoola NE6

539 He walked on, and after a while he noticed a man sitting at a distance.
756 Then he hid the switch under his arm. When he came near, he saw that 776 the man wore a large green nose-ring. He hit it with his switch, and threw it to the right-hand side. Then the man said, "You have attained me as your supernatural helper. Your name shall be S'a'tema [from 'a'tema,' 'dead']. Many people have seen me, but nobody has done what you did. If you had not struck my nose-ornament, you would have died on seeing me. You shall have the power to heal the sick by the touch of your hands. Whenever a person dies and is put into a box, after the box has been placed in the burial-ground, go there. You will find me sitting on the coffin. If then you knock the nose-ring from out of my nose, I shall leave, and the dead will revive. He will break the box, and will arise."

Then the young man felt very glad. He returned to the village, and by following the instructions of the spirit he resuscitated the dead. He was given many blankets, and the men whom he had resuscitated gave him their daughters in marriage.

756 Other shamans are initiated by L'etsa'aplèLana. The same man who 776 gave me the record of his supposed visit to the country of the ghosts (see p. 38) told me that at another time he saw L'etsa'aplèLana flying in the air outside of his house. She wore a ring of red cedar-bark around her neck. She was turning round all the time. Songs were coming from all parts of her body. Although she did not open her mouth, it sounded as though a great many people were singing. She gave him a song, or, as the narrator expressed it, "she threw a song into his body." At that time he was sick, suffering from a wound in his leg inflicted by an axe. He said four days after meeting the spirit he was able to walk, and since that time she has assisted him in curing diseases.

The s'siut is another helper of the shaman, and the means of curing disease (see p. 18). It appears that it obtains its supernatural power from the fact that it lives in the water in which the supreme deity washes her face. When a person sees a s'siut, he should throw sand on it, by which means he will be able to catch it. Its skin is so hard that it cannot be pierced with a spear or knife. The person who catches it should not try to cut it with his knife, but should stretch his hand backward, and then he will find the leaf of a holly, which is the only thing that can cut its skin. He should not touch the s'siut with his hands, but hold it with hemlock twigs. He should wrap it in white cedar-bark and tie it up in his blanket. If it is not thus tied up, it will disappear. It must not be taken into the [755] house, but should be placed in a small box and hidden under stones, or buried in a hole under the root of a tree. It is a most potent means of curing disease. Sick people will buy small pieces of the s'siut, for which they pay high prices. The piece is thrown into water, in which it is kept for four days. Then the water is used for washing the body. If a healthy person uses this water, he will live to an old age. Sick persons chew the white cedar-bark in which it is wrapped up, in order to regain health. They must not swallow the cedar-bark, but only the saliva that gathers in their mouths. A person who has chewed the cedar-bark becomes invulnerable. The eye of the st'siut, is described as about a foot in diameter, and as transparent as rock crystal. 756 776 [755]

7:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1900 NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Toa'lat.'it is the spirit who protects the mountain-goat hunter. He himself is invisible; but great hunters sometimes see his hat, his moccasins, or his mountain staff moving about. The following tradition describes some of his characteristics:— 776 539

The Raven and the Lynx lived in one house, each occupying one side. Early in the morning the Raven went out to catch salmon with the harpoon. He was very successful, and carried the fish home. Toa'lat.'it watched the Raven, who, when he arrived at the house, roasted his salmon. The children of the Lynx were sitting near by, and looking at the Raven while he was roasting the fish. They wished to participate in the meal, but he did not give them anything. Then the children were very sad. Now the Lynx made up his mind to make arrows and to go hunting mountain-goat. He went out and cut some wood for his arrows; then he told his wife to make a quiver, which he called Ta'ô'lapala. She did so, and wove a quiver of cedar-bark. The Lynx was quite impatient for the sun to rise, so eager was he to start hunting. Early in the morning he arose and ascended the mountain. When he reached the limit of the trees, he sat down on a flat rock and looked for goats. Then he saw the staff of a man who was coming down the mountain. He did not see the person himself. He thought, "Who is that? Who may be hunting here?" The stick approached him; and when it came near, he saw Toa'lat.'it, who wore a large hat. His hat was named Q!pôx (that means a "barren mountain-top"). Toa'lat.'it reached the Lynx, and sat down opposite him. Neither spoke a word. After a while Toa'lat.'it arose, took the arrows of the Lynx, and said, "How beautiful these arrows are!" He took up one after another until he had looked at all the four arrows of the Lynx. Then he asked, "Who made these arrows?" The Lynx did not reply. Toa'lat.'it asked again, "Who made these arrows?" Then Lynx replied, "Toa'lat.'it made my arrows." Then Toa'lat.'it was very much pleased, and said, "Is he the one who made your arrows?"—"Certainly!" replied Lynx. Then Toa'lat.'it took his arrows and threw one after another down the mountain, and said to the Lynx, "Now go down the mountain and look at your arrows. If you spoke the truth, every

1: McIlwraith NE6 Bellacoola NE6

● 756

/For information on shamanism and stories illustrating shamanism, see category 116, pp. 539-594, and pp. 661-692./

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

772 beneath the Bella Coola valley, and the land of the living 775 forms a dome over it corresponding to that of the sky over this world. But everything is reversed. A river flows in the land of ghosts, but it rises in the west instead of the east; when it is warm on this earth it is cold in the land below; when it is sunrise here, it is sunset there. Shamans are be-[756] lieved to have penetrated frequently to this land, and on information from them the Bella Coola base their beliefs.

772 There is another land beneath the ocean. In this live the fish and sea mammals in human form, as well as other beings to be described in the next section of this chapter. Like all [821] other worlds it has a sun above it,[2] and conditions are said to be similar to those existing on this earth. The Bella Coola are uncertain whether this undersea world is at the same level as the land of ghosts, and whether or not it extends beneath the rivers.

821 Although Bella Coola concepts regarding the sun and other heavenly bodies will require further consideration, it will be convenient at this point to describe them in outline. The sun is regarded as a heat-radiating ball of such intensity that a human being cannot approach it. Its path, as it crosses the land above, varies from day to day until it reaches its limits at the solstices. As it travels, it is accompanied by the droning [776] of two Aiiilāxa, supernatural feminine beings who remain continually, one in the east and one in the west. According to most informants, the ends of the sun's course, though fixed and invariable from year to year, are not marked by any vis-[776] ible means. Others state that at each limit there is the mouth of a snuuq, a mythological animal of enormous size.

The moon is thought likewise to travel[3] each day but is said to be very cold. Few stories are current concerning it, although the Bella Coola say that long ago a man tried to reach it, only to be driven back by the intense cold. A shaman
[756] who died not many years ago claimed to have received power [776] [2]One informant stated that our sun served that purpose.

[3]The Aiiilāxa drone as it travels, as they do for the sun.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

from the moon and stated that there were mountains and snow on it. It is commonly stated that the marks on the moon represent a man carrying a bucket. 821 [756]

The stars figure but slightly either in Bella Coola mythology or thought; it is not even known who made them. Two in the Great Bear constellation are called respectively Tpiksta and X̱inx̱ines, "Little Girls." A lone star in the same part of the sky, named A'lox, is said to be following the girls to the forest for illicit intercourse. [773]

Moon, stars, and above all the sun, were, and still are to a certain extent, used by the Bella Coola in computing the passage of time. There are no individuals with the definite prerogative of keeping count of time, but formerly wise old men used to do so.[4] Differences of opinion were the rule rather than the exception, a condition which often led to bitter disputes concerning the proper date for starting the winter ceremonials. Boas (p. 41) has recorded the Bella Coola calendar in greater detail than the present writer has been able to do. The making of calendrical observations is a lost art, and the following list of the months was all that could be learnt. It will be noted that these agree with Boas in regard to the months in the early part of the year, but not in those between the summer and winter solstices; no explanation is offered for this disparity. 805 821 [554] [578] [796] [114] [178] [114]

First moon after the summer solstice: Sikālamtak, which has the significance, "The Time for Sockeye Salmon to Ascend the River."

Second moon after the summer solstice: Sī'islalitl, "The Time for Eating Dog Salmon."

Third moon after the summer solstice: Sī'iswai·stl, "The Time for Eating Cohoe Salmon."

Fourth moon after the summer solstice: Siqālxam, "The Time for Gathering Fern Root," or Sidakaos di Ano'likwolsaix,

[4] A Kimsquit informant stated that there were professional calendrical experts in his home, when he was a young lad although members of the hamat society (II, chap. 1) sometimes attended to this matter. [575] [463]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

not systematized; if a man is asked about the powers or functions of a certain supernatural being, he will usually answer by recounting a story in which that being appears. What is known respecting many of the lesser supernatural beings depends upon information contained in stories, and as many of these are personal possessions, it follows that there is tremendous variation in individual knowledge. Psychologically, this is of little importance; there are enough supernatural beings for everyone to know some of them, and to expect to meet or hear them in the forests. To insert many of the stories contained in later chapters would break the sequence of description; all that is here attempted is to give a general summary, in a way foreign to Bella Coola thought. 771 776* [424] [184]

Supernatural beings are by no means all-powerful. It is true that they have miraculous powers and can work weal or woe to human beings who chance to come in contact with them, but likewise they may sometimes be overwhelmed by mortals armed with objects steeped in human essence, such as a blanket which has been worn until it is impregnated not only with the smell, but the physical being of its owner. In particular, shamans or other mortals of great strength have been able to conquer the supernatural ones. Consequently, it may be said that although supernatural beings live on a plane different from that of mortals, they are not omnipotent. Long, long ago, man was able to come in contact with them more frequently, but that golden age when the semi-mythical ancestors of the Bella Coola were living has long since passed away, though it is only within the last few years that such beings, particularly supernatural animals, have become comparatively rare. The Bella Coola give three main reasons for this: 776* [756] [773] 776* 178

(1) Supernatural animals do not like the sound of muskets and have moved far away.

(2) With increasing dependence on the canning industry, fewer hunters penetrate into their haunts in the distant parts of the mountains.

(3) The younger Bella Coola no longer take pains to purify themselves as a means of placating supernatural beings.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

over, he is aware that by certain means he may have good expectations of beseeching, cajoling, deceiving, or rendering powerless any supernatural beings whom he may meet. This attitude is typical; the Bella Coola by no means move in constant dread of the mysterious denizens of the forests, nor do they eagerly hope for their appearance; they have their likes and dislikes, their moments of weakness and of strength, their times of greatness and of pettiness, all to be considered with care and forethought. 781 776 *

One of the beings for whom the older people have a profound respect is Ṫlitcāplilān·a, a supernatural woman whose home is in Nusmāt·a, but who frequently visits this earth. She can be recognized by her snout-like mouth and long, pendant breasts, but even when beyond the range of vision her proximity can be detected by her singing. Ṫlitcāplilān·a often takes pity on a person who is dangerously ill and visits him, not only curing the malady but bringing the sufferer a name and song. In many cases he is thus made a shaman with power to cure. At other times Ṫlitcāplilān·a bestows her favours on a person in good health, so that wise Bella Coola are always hoping to meet her. Such an experience is not without its dangers, for she is so powerful that nearness to her may be enough to cause death. The exploits of those who have come in contact with Ṫlitcāplilān·a belong to shamanism and will be reserved for vol. I, chap. IX. 776 * 787 [752]

Ṫlitcāplilān·a, though her great power inspires fear, usually behaves in a kindly manner to mortals, who accordingly welcome her. But it is quite otherwise with Snaiarmax, whose coming almost invariably brings death.[11] He is a black-faced being of repulsive appearance and sensual nature, whose chief function is to seduce women. For this purpose he often skulks near a village at night, and assumes the voice and appearance of a girl's lover to lure her into the forest. Fearlessly she goes with him, but if she allows his approaches, a hemorrhage results and she soon dies. There is said to be no limit to the number 776 * 761

[11] Cf. Boas, p. 42.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 776 761 of his disguises. For example, he once appeared at New Westminster in the form of a handsome white man; a Bella Coola girl yielded to his pleadings, but as soon as he had left her, she began to bleed and died.[11] He is so evil that shamans [756] can rarely cure anyone visited by him. Sxaiaxwax usually carries a stick which he need only to point at a woman to cause her death.

Nor are men exempt from Sxaiaxwax's visitations. Sometimes he sneaks up behind a man and seizes his arms, so that he cannot see who has gripped him. He is soon released but no matter how quickly he turns around can never see his captor. Presently he begins to bleed from mouth and nose and death follows. Sxaiaxwax may become visible under such conditions. One old man stated that his son had once been playing outside the village at Kimsquit when he rushed into the house weeping and saying that he had been seized by a black-faced man. In a few minutes his nose began to bleed so that his father knew it was Sxaiaxwax who had visited him. Nothing was of any avail and the lad died. His approach is usually heralded by a series of grunting, explosive puffs, like those of a big bear rising sulkily. If, warned by the sound, the hearer turn sharply, he can escape danger. An informant described how, when camped on Labouchere Channel, he had once gone to the river for water with two companions, a man and a woman. They all heard these gasping puffs and turned, but he alone had jumped from the path quickly enough. The other two began to pant like Sxaiaxwax himself; blood gushed from their mouths and genital organs and they soon died.

Like other supernatural beings, Sxaiaxwax has his limitations. Though he comes to this earth he can travel only on fixed paths, invisible to mortals. If either a man or a woman is unfortunate enough to fall asleep on one of these tracks, it is

[11] A curious blending of aboriginal and white man's belief was recorded in connection with this incident. It is said that as the girl's suitor left her, carrying his hat in his hand, she saw two horns rising from his forehead and realized that her lover had been Sxaiaxwax. [177]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

easy for Sxaiaxwax to gain control over them, and the sleeper wakes to find that he has been bleeding profusely and death is inevitable. This occurred to a man whose experiences are described in vol. I, chap. IX. 776* [761]

Although Sxaiaxwax is usually a curse to mortals, he can also do good. Occasionally he makes a man a shaman, and in many cases he helps a woman in childbirth. Such beneficent acts are not sufficient to counterbalance his evil deeds, and he remains one of the most dreaded of Bella Coola supernatural beings, a monster whose machinations make camping in a strange place a dangerous undertaking, and who is as likely to strike down rich or poor, young or old. [756] [844] [484]

Less feared than Sxaiaxwax, because he appears less frequently, is Allät·iaistl. The Bella Coola speak of this being with trepidation, but little definite information could be obtained concerning him. He has human form and sometimes comes at dusk to cause death by carrying away a man's spirit.[11] The home of this creature appears to be beneath the earth rather than in Nusmät·a. [761] [774]

A third dreaded being who, like the two preceding, usually lives on this earth and only visits in Nusmät·a, is Sä·lma, "The Death Dealer." He, too, appears in human form and can be distinguished by the nose-ring which he always wears. Sudden death in the forest is always attributed to "The Death Dealer." If a man is engulfed by a slide, or killed by a falling tree, it is because this malevolent being has entered the slide or tree. Some Bella Coola say that he is responsible for animals who kill hunters. He rarely carries out his designs with the aid of sickness, nor is death by drowning often attributed to him, but for all other fatal disasters he must take the blame. While a corpse is resting in a coffin awaiting burial, Sä·lma invariably sits on the cover, though none can see him. Instances are known in which even this monster has acted in a kindly manner. 776* 761

The supernatural beings thus far described are usually 776*

[11] See vol. I, pp. 94-7.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

including the dreaded point, Mesatche Nose, in human form. As each came in, water swirled in and the canoe was tossed as if in a whirlpool; if it had capsized the occupants would have been devoured, but on each occasion one of the hunters threw a morsel of false hellebore on the surface, which stilled the waves. At last Ḷomoqwa and his friends admitted defeat, granted the four fishermen the powers of shamans, and gave them certain prerogatives. 539 776*

Though Ḷomoqwa is usually unkind to mortals, and is correspondingly feared, instances are known in which he has bestowed shamanistic powers for no apparent reason. The Bella Coola say that the Bella Bella know more about Ḷomoqwa than they do, since he is essentially an ocean being and the Bella Bella are ocean people. It is possible that the Bella Coola concepts of this supernatural personage are entirely of Bella Bella origin. This supposition is strengthened by the fact that Ḷomoqwa seldom appears in connection with the kusiut society, but frequently with the ɪsaak society, many of the rites of which came from Bella Bella. [756] 177 776* [575]

Since human beings can travel on the sea only by means of canoes, it is not surprising that the Bella Coola think of supernatural beings as doing likewise. Their beliefs include at least three huge canoes, manned by supernatural beings. The most important is that of Nəẽkynum,[18] the name of its captain, whose crew consists of a number of supernatural birds and the hermaphrodite. Every year they come from the lands of the salmon and the berries, in the far west beyond the sea, and bear these to the coast of British Columbia. This belief, which runs counter to the conviction that Ałqantəm caused the animals and plants to grow, is merely one of the many inconsistencies of Bella Coola theology. Nəẽkynum comes every autumn on his way to attend the gathering of the supernatural beings in the land above, and his arrival in the Bella Coola River marks the commencement of the kusiut dances. He is one of the most important of kusiut patrons and his powers and functions are described in the chapter devoted to that 773 776* [575]

[18] Cf. Boas, p. 68.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

subject. He does not often appear to mankind, though every Bella Coola knows of his existence.

Another supernatural craft is that of Winwina.[11] It, too, brings salmon and berries from their home in the extreme west. Knowledge of this canoe is limited to certain families who own stories connected with it, and it likewise serves as patron for kusiut dancers. Although both Noākynum and Winwina can easily destroy human beings, they usually pay no attention to them, and have even been known to bestow supernatural power. Winwina will be described in greater detail in connection with kusiut dances.

The third canoe is termed Winās di Sā-lldjo-ts, "The War-Party of the Tide," or Winās di Qala, "The War-Party of the Ocean." Its home is among small islands in the ocean. It is a large canoe, manned by invisible submarine beings, who are able to drive it at tremendous speed wherever they wish. The members of the crew are not in themselves dangerous, but the craft is greatly feared because it always transports Sxlo-sf. This supernatural creature is about the size of a seal, brown in colour, and of jelly-like substance; it lies in the boat immediately aft of the place from which water is bailed and constantly rolls to and fro, like an animated mass of repulsive jelly. Poison is constantly spreading from Sxlo-sf, and anyone placed in the canoe soon becomes weak, begins to shake like Sxlo-sf, and presently dies. This canoe is a source of danger to those with whom it may come in contact, and an even greater peril indirectly. The poison emanating from Sxlo-sf kills clams and mussels in the vicinity and renders them unfit for food. In some cases they die at once, with open shells, and anyone finding them knows what has happened and does not eat them, but in other cases they live for a considerable period though saturated with the venom. If anyone eats these shellfish, he becomes flabby and jelly-like, and soon dies, unless a powerful shaman can conquer the poison. Sometimes when a party is encamped on the shore

[11] Cf. Boas, p. 38.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

775 walk backwards, or on their heads. Mortals sometimes see ghosts, but the apparition seals their lips so that they cannot [761] recount their experiences. Death invariably follows. Shamans [756] and other mortals endowed with great powers have been able to penetrate to the realm below, and the knowledge of conditions there has been derived from their accounts. Food is scarce in that land and ghosts are often driven up to earth to 264 search for it. Even a small morsel is enough to satisfy their 775 hunger, so that mortals throw fragments on the fire for the benefit of their dead relatives. If a person drop a crumb it is because a ghost has hooked it away from his hand; no wise Bella Coola ever picks up such a morsel, knowing that to do so would offend the hungry spectre. Deceased beings are 775 generally feared, although instances are known in which they have shown kindness, particularly to their relatives. Like so [575] many supernatural beings, they figure most prominently as patrons of kwiut dancers (see vol. II, chap. 1). Further information concerning them is contained in the description of life after death.

776 Not even a complete list of beings would exhaust the 177 beliefs of the Bella Coola concerning the supernatural, since any unexpected visitation is attributed by them to this source. For example, when Mackenzie appeared, the first white man with whom the Bella Coola had come in contact, they thought that he must be from another world. Some thought him a dead man returned to life, and others considered him a supernatural visitor from above who had fallen down to earth, as did their first ancestors. The latter view prevailed, and it was ultimately decided that he must be Qomcus, a supernatural being resident aloft of whom little was known. This name was applied to him, and it has since been given to all white men.[19]

[19]Although it was in 1793 that Mackenzie passed down the Bella Coola valley, a number of stories of that event were still remembered in 1923. What most impressed the Bella Coola was his ability to make fire quickly. One man, now living, stated that he had heard from his mother that her father had spoken with him. Traditions of this type are valuable as reflecting the interests of a people, but their historical accuracy may well be doubted. One Kitamaat man, for example, ltMcIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948

NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 776 825 [773] forefathers of the Bella Coola had the ability to talk with animals and birds. The men of today, who realize that such intercourse is not now possible, assume that they have degenerated from the golden age of their first ancestors. On the other hand, they see no reason to believe that beasts have undergone a similar change, and take it for granted that they have continued in the supernatural, or semi-supernatural state in which they were created by Alqantām. It is true that man is stronger than most animals, but that does not affect the attitude with which the latter are regarded, for supernatural and powerful are not synonymous terms. Alqantām decreed that they should serve as food for mankind, and they have since obeyed his command, but the Bella Coola do not consider themselves undisputed lords of creation. They fear snuix, snuuq, and other creatures of great power, but they know how to avoid them; similarly, deer and mountain goats fear men, but they are not entirely defenceless, because their speed and agility give them advantages corresponding to those of men in combat with beasts stronger than themselves. All living creatures use the weapons with which they are equipped. For example, when a mountain goat eludes a hunter by scaling a precipice too steep for its pursuer, the latter considers it has escaped through supernatural climbing ability; whereas the goat has merely used the power granted by Alqantām. Likewise, when a snuix or a snuuq is outwitted by the use of soiled [789] clothing or smoked salmon roe, the means, unnatural to it, are natural to the human being employing them. Men and animals alike regard each other's weapons as supernatural.

In consequence of these beliefs, the attitude of the Bella Coola towards animals is fundamentally different from that of white men. They regard them as possessing human mentality, and even the ability to assume human form if they so desire. In fact, they believe that animals merely appear to them in the shape of beasts, but can change to human, or other form and behave accordingly whenever they wish to do [756] so. The degeneration of mankind has made it impossible for men to see these transformed beings habitually, but even now, or at any rate until a few years ago, shamans were able to lift the intervening veil. From accounts given by those who have had such experience, the Bella Coola believe that Alquntam gave to birds and animals, as well as to humans, the boon of fire, and it is only the unworthiness of men that makes them unable to see the smoke rising from the houses of different creatures. In former times, fortunate hunters were able to do so, and consequently had phenomenal success. The smoke that ascends from the fires of different animals corresponds in colour to that of its owner; a mountain goat's is white, a beaver's, black, a squirrel's, red, a wolf's, gray, and so on. When a goat stamps the earth on a mountain, it rings hollow, as indeed it is to those animals, for their home is within; and when a hunter loses his quarry entirely, it is because the latter has entered its house. Shamans are sometimes able to hear the gatherings of animals under the peaks. Like human beings, they dance to the accompaniment of music, and in all respects behave like them. They have their times of joy and sorrow, of success and failure. When ill they are cured by their own shamans, grizzly bear, snang, and wolverine; these three also dance to welcome the dead. All animals and birds are like brothers, able to converse with each other and living harmoniously together in that other part of their life which only shamans have seen. Porcupine is the oldest, and a hunter always tries to kill one before passing to more important prey. The animals know about the actions of human beings and show their aversion to certain habits by refusing to allow themselves to be seen by anyone practising them. For example, they do not like people to drink water in which dog salmon have been soaked, and no hunter would dream of partaking of that food. Bella Coola mythology is full of accounts of human beings who, with supernatural aid, were able to penetrate to the homes of animals. Tales of this type would be unintelligible without understanding the attitude of the people to the animal and bird kingdoms.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

776 825 [756] [773] [823] [756] [224] [784] [224] [773] [538]

Lillooet E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NRS Bellacoola NRS

[774] of thought, of success and failure and of life itself, to powers of another sphere. Their ideas are not clearly crystallized on this subject, but in the following section an attempt has been made to give a fair picture, gleaned from many informants, of the supernatural parts of the human body.

THE STUFF

The most important part of the human body is the nuxwlmulc, spirit. This is small, but of great power, since it belongs to the world of the supernatural; in fact, the spirit of a man is not mortal, but sint. Everyone, man or woman, rich or poor, chief or slave, has one; without it, life would be impossible. When a child is born, his parents supply him with food and care, and Alpentsim provides the even more necessary invisible elements, including the spirit. It resides in the back of the neck and resembles a thin bone shaped like a maple-leaf. Salmon have similar ones, but with them the bone is visible, whereas only shamans can see it in human beings. The spirit in a new-born infant is weak and powerless, but it increases in strength with the body. If a man prospers in his ventures and has success in life, it is due, not to his own efforts, but to the activity of his spirit. When a man acquires wealth with little labour, he knows that his spirit has been constantly travelling at the back of his neck; when he is unfortunate, that it has become inert or sluggish. It is the cause of dreams, which are desired as means of foretelling the future. Some Bella Coola believe that in sleep it leaves the body and travels, unrestrained by any barrier, to the scene of the dreams; others, that it causes the images to appear. During waking hours the spirit [illegible] every thought, no matter how trifling. When a man remembers that he left his fire with insufficient fuel and hurries home to rectify the omission, it is this element which has brought the need to his mind; when he thinks of a distant place, his spirit is responsible for the thought and some men even believe that it has travelled there. Sometimes an active one can give warning, as in the following instance. A few

[756] [554] [761] [728]

1:36:Decorah E-5 (552-624) 1948
NER Deliverable NER

774 becomes critical. Only a shaman (I, p. 138) can return one, and 775 if he fails death always results. In some cases a spirit leaves
[759] its owner without apparent reason; he becomes insane, tries [760] to eat dirt, and his relatives realize at once what is the matter.
They summon a shaman who takes off his cape, hangs it like a pouch on his stick, and points it in all directions as he sings his shaman's song. Finally he learns what is missing, and steps it in his cloak, which he places around the sick man.
This restores the element and the sufferer recovers immediately. Another method is for the shaman to press the back of the patient's neck, and by blowing and spitting cause the wandering spirit to return. Either cure must be performed by a shaman because of the supernatural power required.

774 Spirits can be extracted in various ways. Shamans can draw one forth by sucking at the back of the neck between their cupped hands; in former times, some were so powerful that they could extract them by their mere presence. During 774 Secret dances (II, chap. i), the uninitiated are told that if they 575 enter the house where a ceremony is taking place, or even pass [559] on the sidewalk outside the door, their spirits will be drawn from them by the power within and extracted to the dancer or to the sacred platform on which he is concealed. Many [778] stories are told of this, which were firmly believed by the uninitiated until the last few years. Members of the society claim that their great power acts as a magnet to the spirits of all but their associates, except children in arms; the latter can be taken by their mothers into the house, because their supernatural elements have not developed sufficient strength to 774 leave their bodies. A person may also lose his spirit through a sudden shock. If two people meet unexpectedly in the forest and one of them shouts loudly at the other, even if only in fun, the spasmodic contraction of the muscles is enough to expel it.
[761] The person to whom this happens falls down as if dead, and [762] though he soon recovers, his spirit has left him, and if it is not brought back by a shaman he dies a lingering death.

775 At death, the spirit permanently leaves the body. In some that tally posts have mortality, and suggested that it might be done which around the gathering of the supernatural beings at the winter solstice instead of an element from the human body itself.

One elderly Bella Coola, of philosophical temperament, described pentlacate in terms far removed from the accounts of tally posts. According to him, every individual receives this supernatural possession at birth, and it remains with him, in close association with his body, throughout life. It stays in front of his face, invisible, yet having substance, and constantly shaking from side to side. If a man fails to receive a present at a potlatch, it is because his pentlacate has ceased to move. When stationary it is not transparent, and not only hides its owner from the donor's sight, but acts as a barrier to his thoughts. The same man stated that this element can leave the body, can be seen by shamans, and that it is the one which ascends at the winter solstice to Nuxmalx. At death it is believed to accompany the spirit and the life to the land above.

There seems no reason to doubt that the concept of tally posts is an ancient belief. Nor does the application of the term pentlacate to another immaterial possession of quite another type destroy this probability. It must be remembered that within the last eighty years the Bella Coola have suffered not only from the vermilion epidemic caused by the coming of the white man, but have been reduced to a mere fraction of their former numerical strength by various epidemics. These factors have led to the partial forgetting of ancient beliefs, with consequent confusion. It is probable that the use of the same term for the tally post, intimately connected with an individual's life although situated in the land above, and the an invisible and intangible possession which goes in front of him, is due to this recent decay of ancient convictions. If this be true, it merely means that in former times the Bella Coola had yet another supernatural element to govern and influence their lives.

[778] Shamans achieve much of their success through their ability [779] to put their wash-basins, both tangible (I, p. 384) and immaterial, in tune with Alquntim's in the land above. One method [780] of curing a patient is by washing, with the idea that the water [781] and vessel used have potency through association with those [782] in the upper world. It is believed that in the distant past, [783] shamans were even able to carry their patients to the land above and wash them in Alquntim's own basin. Such feats [784] are perpetuated in certain shamans' names, such as Alqalqalaskin.

[785] It may be said in conclusion that although the Bella Coola have indefinite ideas concerning the exact form and functions [786] of this last element, there is a firm belief that an individual's fortune in life depends upon the activity of spirit, tally post, and wash-basin. With regard to supernatural elements as a whole, it is clear that in spite of somewhat conflicting beliefs concerning the precise functions of each, they play an important part in the life of every Bella Coola.

Means of Persuasion

[787] Some of the methods employed by the Bella Coola to gain the favour of the supernatural have already been mentioned, but the subject is sufficiently important to warrant a separate section. In view of the omnipresence of supernatural beings and powers, and their influence on the lives of mortals, it is not surprising that the propitiation of them is a vital factor in human life. The chief means are prayer, sacrifice, and the observance of ceremonial chastity.

Prayer

[788] Prayers are regularly addressed to Alquntim who, in this connection, is known as Mosakait or Tlitl, both meaning, "Father." A man or woman desiring success in hunting, in love affairs, in the acquisition of wealth, or in any activity whatsoever, is accustomed to ask Mosakait to grant his desire. No ritual is required. The petitioner merely makes a lonely

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

next day the weather was fine. This particular method of praying had been learnt by one of his ancestors in the beginning of time, and was afterwards transmitted in his family. With the coming of the white man and consequent decay of customs, it has not been exercised since the death of the grandfather of the man from whom the information was obtained.

SACRIFICE

It might be expected that a clear division should be made between the subjects of prayer and sacrifice, but in practice they merge into one another. A mountain goat hunter, when camped near a glacier which he knows to be the haunt of some dreaded supernatural being, asks help from him. He wears dyed and undyed cedar-bark decorations to make his request more ceremonious, and after the prayer throws them into the fire, saying:

"Please accept these, supernatural one," thus making an offering to supplement his verbal petition.

If he is even more cautious, or eager not to offend any supernatural being in the vicinity, he throws on the fire tufts of cedar-bark, eagle down, and scraps of food as well. Whether or not the objects thus destroyed by the flames reach the being to whom the request has been made, is a matter upon which the Bella Coola do not theorize; but the generosity and self-denial of the donor is appreciated, and a favour is often granted in return. A man who frequently hears in his dreams the voice of some supernatural being, knows that it is taking an interest in his doings and endeavours to propitiate it, by placing on a fire tithes of any food he has obtained, saying at the same time:

"W'ai, wai, wai," "More, more, more," that is, "May I receive more of the same."

A foolish person fails to show his appreciation of favours received, but a wise man never forgets to do so.

Likewise a person is careful to propitiate supernatural powers when in peril. Both at Kwatna and at Masstche Nose,

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

the point between Labouchere Channel and Bentinck Arm, there is danger from treacherous currents, so, when a shaman passes either of these places, he lays some food on the water and puffs eagle down into the air as he asks for help. If no shaman is in the canoe, this is done by the captain. 782 [133] [502] [756]

The being to whom offerings are most commonly made is Thiténlilén-a, the supernatural woman who cures the sick and gives power to shamans. Whenever a hunter kills an edible animal in the forest, he cuts off four pieces of flesh and throws them into his fire to gain her goodwill. Long, long ago, Thiténlilén-a appeared to a hunter, seized some of his quarry, and told him of her wishes with regard to presents; these have since been obeyed by wise people. Similarly, the relatives of a man absent in the mountains or at sea throw scraps of food on the fire and ask the protection of Thiténlilén-a for the one in danger. In this case, it is clear that objects thrown into flames are received and appreciated by Thiténlilén-a. [776] [224] [779]

Mouakait, although usually propitiated by prayer, is also given presents. Frequently, when a man is praying, he accompanies his words by blowing up into the air small particles of eagle down. Prayers in connection with the departure of war or hunting expeditions have already been mentioned, but before starting on any journey by canoe, the captain is careful to pray and to throw upon the water four pieces of red, and four of yellow cedar-bark. The blowing upwards of eagle down is a common accompaniment to all kinds of prayers, but, if none is available, cedar-bark can be used equally satisfactorily. If possible, this is cast on the surface of water, otherwise into a fire, as a request is being made. The Bella Coola do not believe that such presents are actually used and considered valuable by Mouakait, but they emphasize and accompany the vocal prayer, and demonstrate the petitioner's sincerity. [776] [484] [824] [825]

Ghosts, on the other hand, depend almost entirely on presents given them by mortals, since food is not abundant in the land below. The relatives of a dead person always throw 775 782

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

775 small particles of food on a fire; these become large when they 782 reach the land below and nourish the ghosts. An individual making an offering of this kind says:

"Awtáldimut ásqas," "This is to make straight your road, beloved one."

[752] The needs and desires of ghosts have been made known to mortals through visits paid by shamans to the land below, and by the coming of ghosts to this world. It is, therefore, realized that food placed on the ground does not reach the [372] land below, but that morsels thrown on a fire sink through into the abode of ghosts. Offerings to the dead are not made [953] with the hope of receiving favours from them, but rather to provide beloved relatives with necessary food and to prevent them from showing displeasure by causing stomach-aches and other ailments.

782 Other instances, both of prayer and of sacrifice, will be recorded in connection with various myths. The salient feature is that the Bella Coola are able to gain, by such means, the favour of supernatural beings, a factor which plays an important part in their daily life. In addition, they have a [719] large number of practices based on sympathetic magic. No absolutely rigid boundary line can be drawn between the latter and religion proper, but there is a fairly clear division between rites such as those just described, in which propitiation is the important element, and others in which the desired end follows the mere performance of a certain act. Customs of this last type will be reserved for later consideration (vol. I, chap. xi).

THE OBSERVANCE OF CEREMONIAL CHASTITY

784 In addition to prayer and sacrifice, the Bella Coola have 785 yet another means of obtaining the goodwill of supernatural beings, and at the same time of strengthening their own supernatural attributes so that good fortune is likely to occur. This is by the practice of sustin, ceremonial chastity, of which the basis is that a man must not hold intercourse except after certain periods of continence. To understand this, it is neces-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

551 with it some definite prerogative of a dance or other function, 421 but all are transmissible, and at the owner's death these may fall to different relatives. A name may pass from man to woman, or vice versa, in some cases with a minor alteration. The only non-inheritable appellations are those obtained by [956] shamans as a result of their supernatural experiences.

551 Not only did each group of first settlers bring with them a 773 number of designations from above, but they also created a 553 number on this earth and bestowed them on their children, and on the children of their sisters or brothers, in whom they felt an almost parental interest. To mark the dignity of the names, all present at the ceremony of bestowal received gifts from the creator of the name, the person who called them together for the rite. The importance of the individual depended largely upon the value of the goods distributed with respect to his name, a concept which will be elaborated in the following chapter. The descendants of these first people likewise created new designations and established their dignity by distributing presents, a practice which still continues. It follows that any complete origin myth should include a large number of names, those brought down from the land above[1] and also those created by the powerful first people on this earth itself.[2] Both types of cognomens will be referred to henceforth as "ancestral names," no distinction being made between those actually brought from above and those made on earth. This is in accordance with Bella Coola usage.

553 Soon after the birth of a child his father, uncle, or other near relative,[3] either on the paternal or maternal side, calls the members of the village together to bestow a name on the infant. The one selected must be embodied in the origin myth of one or other of the parents, and must be one not then in use by any other member of the ancestral family. A relative may give the

[1] Such a name is a nuxlin ahamana, or "Purified Name."
[2] Such a name is a nuxmalt ahamana, or "Earth-Made Name."
[3] The most careful investigation failed to show that it was hereditary on any particular relative.

553
* 556 A man may receive so many prerogatives with regard to house
425 painting that he has to continue the designs on the sides of his
[604] dwelling, or he may receive so many figures for a totem-pole
[599] that he can erect one of composite pattern. X may acquire prerogatives not only from his father-in-law, but from his mother-in-law, and if he is the husband of several wives, the family of each may contribute something. If, for some inexplicable reason, X is not given any prerogative from the family of his wife, he uses one of his own ancestral myths with the names belonging thereto. A man who gives many potlatches can choose to validate numerous family names for himself, or to concentrate on one alone, elevating it to a position of great importance. But any names he validates must belong to his [615] family; it is contrary to custom for a Bella Coola to steal a name to which he has no right.

*556 At this, or some other suitable time, X prays for assistance
782 in the complicated rites that are to follow. Taking four pieces of pounded and dyed cedar-bark, and four pieces of undyed bark, he places on each a small quantity of food and throws the eight into the fire. Likewise he may throw in four small pieces of any kind of goods. As he does so he appeals to the supreme god:

"Please strengthen my spirit for the many duties which are before me."

Instead of praying himself, X may ask a shaman to do so [756] for him, in the belief that the latter's supplication will be more efficacious.

* 556 The necessity for supernatural assistance lies in the fact
581 that any serious error or disaster in the performance of potlatch
621 rites calls for necessary punishment, since X has allowed ceremonial sacred knowledge to reach the uninitiated. In such a case the duty of meting out a penalty falls upon the members of a foreign tribe. Nothing is said at the time, but the departing guests take away with them information of what has happened. Great latitude is allowed as to who shall be the chastisers. The guests may be related to X and the members

1:McDowalth E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

further conceptions by wriggling her body on her haunches immediately after the deliver of a child. 842

To the Bella Coola religious concepts of birth are as important as the physiological aspects. The blood discharged at birth, and the mother from whom it has come, is xwaiāx, a word difficult to translate. It is applied to a person or thing which is taboo, and combine the significance of "uncanny," "abhorred," "to be avoided," "feared"; perhaps "unclean," in the biblical sense, is the best synonym. Essentially human, this blood is not only potent against supernatural beings, but is dangerous to men as well. For this reason a mother must never be delivered within a house. The smell of the unclean blood might kill all residents within, or at least prevent them receiving payments of any kind. Supernatural beings and inherent supernatural powers are alike repelled by it. 826 844 783

A recent mother is taboo and must exercise due precautions to prevent her baneful influence from affecting her associates, but this power is most strongly present in one who has borne twins. Even younger people sophisticated in most matters, shudder when speaking of twins; fortunately, double births are not common. They are attributed to the entry of a salmon into the body, so that a twin is half-salmon, half-human. Occasionally a woman who is pregnant with twins discovers her condition in a dream and avoids the perils of a multiple birth by calling upon a shaman to remove the spirit from one foetus so that the infant will be born dead and deformed. If this is not done, the two infants arrive in due course, to the horror and grief of parents and relatives. Though abhorred, no case is known of the killing of a twin at birth. 845 [825] [787] [756] [847]

Instead of the two children being brought back to the village, word is sent to the father who must join his wife in the temporary shelter in the woods where delivery took place. For one year, they must not return home, and during this period must eat no salmon. Four times during the year they must shift from one shelter to another, each built on the bank of a small creek. The mother can draw water from this stream

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

CAUSES OF DEATH

761 The Bella Coola know that sickness, accident, wilful murder, old age, and a host of other factors may at any time terminate a man's life, but they consider that any one of these direct causes is possible only in conjunction with an indirect reason of a religious or supernatural nature; in the last analysis they attribute death to supernatural, not to natural causes. [773] As described in a previous chapter, an ancient myth attributes the origin of death to the stupidity of Raven, but this belief, even if its historical accuracy is accepted, belongs to the realm of philosophy and ancient history rather than to everyday life. 761 When a canoe is capsized on the ocean and its occupants are drowned,—the Bella Coola do not consider a drowning a mere 776 accident—it is because Xemqwa was hungry and desired human flesh. This indirect reason is quite as important as the direct one. So, too, the death of a man beneath a falling tree or a land-slide is no accident; Sē'lma caused the tree to crash to earth or the slide to roll downwards. Most individuals believe that this supernatural being is responsible when an animal kills a hunter. He delights in death and always sits on [756] a coffin before it is taken to the grave, although none but shamans can see him. Any supernatural being can cause death, but it must not be imagined that the Bella Coola go through life in a state of constant fear; death may vanquish them in the forests, but the probabilities are against it. 753 Nor does sickness appear to them as a natural phenomenon. Its cause is either the intrusion of some foreign object into the body, or the weakness of one of the patient's supernatural elements. The only remedy in the latter case is an appeal to the super- [755] natural, sometimes through the medium of a shaman, whereas a foreign object in the body can often be extracted by a skilled [754] practitioner. A disease of this type is often brought on by the machinations of a sorcerer, and if death results it is attributed 761 to the potency of his charms, not to a natural ailment. Even [775] ghosts are able to cause death. In war, one man may be able [726]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

to kill an enemy, but his success is accredited to his supernatural possessions which have given him skill as a warrior rather than to his own ability. 761 726

It is felt that no ordinary explanation is sufficient to account for the death of a great chief. No matter what may have been the actual cause, it is always said that the supernatural Carpenters, who in the beginning of time created mankind, came down and "seized" or "called back" the deceased, thinking him too good for this world. It is believed that these beings are keen hunters, and that Ałquntáw allows them to pursue influential people. This sentiment is always expressed in mourning songs for a dead chief, but although accepted as a matter of fact, it is little more than a formalized belief which serves to comfort the mourners. The infraction of a taboo is another reason frequently given for a chief's death. It is said that there was a loud crash and the earth shook before the death of Pałku; he became ill immediately, and his stomach began to swell. The stricken chief said that Sonq' itself had fallen upon him, but the common belief was that he had erred in some ritual act. At any rate, he died within a few hours. 761 622 [773] [538]

RITES FOLLOWING DEATH

News of a critical illness spreads rapidly through the village and the house in which the sufferer is lying becomes a rendezvous for friends asking about his condition. Failure to do so would be considered ungracious, with the result that there is such a constant coming and going that rest is denied the sick person. Shamans are called upon to practise their powers in a noisy manner, and female relatives weep and wail. The din is indescribable. 963 [956]

When the patient shows no further indication of life, the shamans cease, but the women redouble their cries. Relatives, friends, and sympathizers all crowd into the house and begin to weep, often adding verbal lamentations. The progress of the news from house to house can be traced by the wailings. Mean- 964 day after the funeral, the relatives of the dead person burn the remainder of his property, which passes through the earth to the ghost for whom it is intended. Ghost-singers have taken their places and begin to beat out music, and presently the recently deceased appears, stepping backwards from the back-room in time to the beating of sticks. He is at once surrounded by his fellows, each anxious to learn the latest news of relatives still alive. This dance is really to welcome the new arrival, and takes place irrespective of his rank. After it has been held, it is hopeless to attempt to rescue a dead person, although that has been done several times during the four days immediately succeeding death.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Only shamans are able to peer down into the land of the dead, though stories are told of inadvertent visits to it in relatively recent times. Human beings are prevented from visiting their dead relatives, but the latter, being supernatural, can come to the earth at will. They are always dreaded, and anyone who hears their whistling or their tongueless chatter cowers in his house, and hopes they will pass by. Shamans can understand their speech and to them the dead explain their mission. If the relations of a dead person have failed to burn all his personal possessions, he returns to earth to inform them, through a shaman, of the omission. The house is scoured for anything left and it is burnt at once near the grave, though no one knows how a ghost would punish failure to give him his property. Thoughtful people, remembering the scarcity of food in the land below, frequently give presents to their dead relatives by casting small morsels of food on the side of the central fire nearest the front door, beneath which is a passage to the lower regions. The food becomes magnified as it falls down this, so that even small fragments are sufficient to feed many hungry ghosts. Since the introduction of metal stoves, it has become customary to throw food into a fire kindled for the purpose in the cemetery; the most suitable time is at dusk, although people are always afraid that spectres may be prowling around at that hour. If sufficient presents are not given to a ghost, he informs a shaman of the fact and the latter notifies the relatives of the deceased. If no shaman is convenient, the shade does not hesitate to help himself. Invisible, and armed with a barbed hook, he approaches a person who is eating and pulls away a crumb which falls to the earth. Should the eater stoop to pick this up, the ghost, robbed of his booty, beats the offender with his hook, causing toothache or sometimes a sharp pain in the head or stomach. Other ailments are caused by the ghosts hitting with invisible stones those who have offended them. Consequently, no one picks up a crumb which has fallen, since it is impossible to know whether it has been an accident or a seizure. Another indication of a ghost's hunger is loss of a tooth. The loser should throw it on a fire with an invitation to the dead to accept his offering.

The barrier between ghosts and human beings is considered to be little more than a wall of smoke, just too dense for ordinary eyes to penetrate. In early times intercommunication between the denizens of the two worlds was so easy that a dying mother was once allowed to send her dead child on earth. Unfortunately, the woman's mother one day insisted on holding her grandchild, unaware that he was a ghost. Shocked at his appearance, the old woman dropped the child, much to the anger of the dead people.* Ever since that time it has been impossible for human beings to see and talk with their deceased kinsmen. Like so many Bella Coola stories, it is doubtful whether this one is regarded as more than an item of ancient history; it is considered to be a fact, but it is not one that enters into the daily thoughts of the people.

Ghosts frequently come to their old homes at night where dogs can see them. If one of these animals begins to bark and gazes fixedly at a spot where nothing is to be seen, it is because a wraith is standing there and the dog's owner hopes that it will remain invisible. It is true that some individuals have received shamanistic power from a ghost, but more often a visitation is disastrous and to be avoided. A dead person often

*This story is recorded in detail here (I, p. 99).

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacola NE6

[175] dred yards away, rapidly drew near the hunter along the trail. He raised his musket and stepped aside, but though the sound went past him down the path, he could see nothing. Terrified, he realized that he had been near two ghosts, and rushed back [154] to the village. A shaman was called who informed him that he had met his dead father's sister and another relative, both of whom were hungry. The hunter, too weak from fright to help himself, watched the shaman light a fire and throw on it [155] a considerable amount of food and goods. Finally, he ripped the hunter's shirt from his back and threw it into the flames. Consequently, no harm resulted from this experience.

Ghosts, like all other supernatural beings, can, of course, control their powers so that their appearance does not injure a beholder. A few years before 1922 a certain Ienlāu-i, whose ancestral name was Lo-gwa-i, was encamped at Tsēkwanats on the Lebouchere Channel side of King Island. At dusk a woman came to his fire and proceeded to warm her [illegible]. He recognized from her green face that she must be a [illegible] and boldly asked her what she wanted.

"I have been searching for months," she replied, "but without success."

In an instant she vanished and [illegible] experienced neither good nor evil from this apparition. The Bella Coola say [176] that this being may not have been a ghost as I had thought, but was perhaps one of the under-sea dwellers to have somewhat the same appearance.

Since ghosts, like other supernatural beings, are believed to possess both wisdom and power, it might be thought that they would be invoked frequently. Instead, death has altered their character to such an extent that they are avoided and [177] kept at a distance. The only time that an appeal is made to [178] a ghost is when a young person dies without apparent reason and the survivors wish to leave the house. The body is buried [179] with a long cord consisting of alternate strands of dyed and undyed cedar-bark projecting from its mouth and stretching [180] to the surface. The relative desiring information summons to his house several shamans whose powers have been obtained from ghosts, and for four days feeds them lavishly. On the fifth morning they proceed to the grave, accompanied by kinsmen of the deceased, and pound on the ground with sticks, asking the dead person whether or not he had been murdered, and if so, the name of the murderer. It is said that in former times the voice of the deceased could always be plainly heard giving the desired information. This ceremony has not been carried out for many years, and exact details are not known by any of the living Bella Coola. It seems clear that ventriloquism must have been employed, requiring active deception on the part of the shamans. 756 775 787 [198]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

It was difficult to ascertain to what extent shamans believed in their own powers to understand the speech of ghosts. There is no doubt that the Bella Coola are easily influenced by suggestion, and if an individual is told that he has received help from a ghost, it is not difficult for him to believe that such has been the case. Further, his fellows are convinced of his powers, a circumstance which does not fail to affect him. It may be stated definitely that in many cases shamans have some confidence in their own powers, although they do not hesitate to use deception to increase their prestige. This point will be considered in greater detail in the following chapter.

ACCOUNTS OF EXPERIENCES WITH GHOSTS

Much of the information concerning ghosts is contained in stories which have been handed down for generations and which are regarded as historical records. Some of these must be deferred to the chapters on folk-lore and shamanism, but the following are sufficient to explain the source of many Bella Coola beliefs on this subject.[*] 539 775

A Rescue from Ghosts

Long, long ago, there lived a little girl who used to cry incessantly. One evening when she was disturbing the whole household by weeping, her father said angrily to her:

[*] These stories have been included at this point as specific illustrations of the type of legend upon which generalized beliefs depend.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

though they may be to the white man. It is hoped that the preceding illustrations, drawn from recent times, will explain the mental attitude of the Bella Coola better than incidents from folk-lore of the distant past. 787 *

Disregarding thoughts which, since they are caused by the spiritual elements of the human body, are ever present, relations with the supernatural may be divided into the following categories: [828] [774]

(1) Appearance of supernatural beings from which neither good nor bad results follow. Strictly speaking, every fleeting sight of a supernatural being belongs to this category, but it will be convenient to describe only experiences of a peculiar kind, such as the Bella Coola call qaw-ahklemadjulaic. Usually manifestations of the supernatural have certain effects; consequently, there are relatively few incidents of this kind recorded.

(2) Supernatural aid vouchsafed to a man or a woman in distress. There are many tales illustrating this, which are told and retold to the children. In most cases the assistance is given to one who has undeservedly, according to Bella Coola concepts, fallen into misfortune.

(3) Supernatural good luck. This may be obtained by anyone, and consists of the acquisition of a supernatural object to attract, not only fish and animals, as if it were a potent bait, but money and goods as well. [777] [224] [222]

(4) Acquisition of ahlkanaiaic power, with or without the ability to cure the sick. This may be received from one of two sources: [756]

(a) Thinkplilts a or some other supernatural being.

(b) Ghosts, which are likewise supernatural. [775]

(5) Obtaining prophetic powers direct from the supreme god. There are few instances of this, and none that is ascribed to a remote period. It is possible that all examples of this kind can be attributed to indirect Christian influence. [777]

(6) Obtaining power from a supernatural being localized in a particular spot. This usually takes the form of succour when [756]

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

sick, and gives the person securing it ability to treat the same disease in others.

(7) Dreams, especially those in which supernatural apparitions visit the sleeper.

Sterile Apparitions[§]

The most common sterile apparitions are those of a stone giving birth to a smaller stone, a tree falling almost to earth, then righting itself, or the sight of some enormous monster. Such an experience may come to anyone, and no one can tell what it may portend. The following examples will illustrate this kind of phenomenon. In accordance with Bella Coola usage, these are recorded as if actual facts.

Between 1890 and 1900 a number of men were paddling home to Bella Coola one fine October day when, as they were passing beneath some precipitous rocks to the west of Kwatna Inlet, they saw a giant, as big as a medium-sized tree, come leaping down into the sea. They could not see his face, which was turned in the opposite direction, but as he sprang they noticed that his hands were shaking like a dancer's. He struck the water with a tremendous splash, hurling the spray a distance of a hundred yards, and nearly swamping the canoe. They realized that the being must be a cwaxy, since it is well known that these creatures migrate to the mountain lakes for the summer and return to the ocean in the autumn.

Since there is a tendency for supernatural apparitions to appear in close succession, the paddlers were little surprised next day, as they passed near some flat rocks where seals were wont to sun themselves, to see a number of these animals come hurtling down from among the trees on the slope of a near-by mountain. The last to appear was as big as a grizzly bear. Undoubtedly the creatures were supernatural beasts that had assumed the form of seals. It had been a fine, clear day, but as soon as they had taken to the water such a severe storm arose that the canoe was almost engulfed.

§ [i.e. - appearances of supernatural beings from which neither good nor bad results follow. - See cat. #6, p. 517 - Analyst]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

in a kind of a cave. He here unties the rope, dives into the water and out through a narrow passage to the open fiord where he is picked up by a waiting canoe. 778 755

If he is to recover, he feels as he dives the scraping of some rough-skinned animal against his side. No one knows what this is, perhaps a fish about seventy yards in length which was seen near the place about 1905. If a person is too ill to make the dive unaided, a stick is forced through the entrance from the fiord, with a rope attached. The patient, who has been lowered to the ledge from the upper air, is then tied firmly to the stick and hauled out. Before leaving, shreds of his clothing are always left at the mouth of the cave in payment to its supernatural occupant for his assistance. [787]

The method of curing at the spot, Ellxwas, differs from those previously described since it is only the man whose repository (II, p. 8) is there who is able to exercise the power. Patients whose flesh has become rotten are carried to the place and he scrubs their bodies, in the water, with various prickly bushes. This man is not a shaman, his power rests solely on the fact that this curing place is his repository. [756]

At xepdum the virulent skin disease Ilokly can be cured.* This is caused by a morsel of cohoe salmon or fern root passing from the mouth up into the head, instead of down into the stomach. The Bella Coola have only slight knowledge of anatomy, and by "head" probably mean the passage connecting mouth and nose. In this spot the food becomes a frog egg, hatches into a tadpole, and finally transforms into a frog. If a shaman is called on immediately, he can remove the frog by thrusting his finger up the nasal passage and hanging down on the patient's head, but if he delays, the ears and nose become clogged, the hair falls, and the flesh on arms and body wastes away until the skin is shrivelled. Then the only hope is to visit xepdum. [753] [754] [753] [756]

Friends of the sufferer carry him to the spot and place him in an ice cavern, roofed by the glacier itself, and then retire to

*In its earlier stages it can be treated elsewhere.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

the rock shelter half a mile away. Here he must lie alone, without food, for four days. If he is in a pure condition from the observance of chastity, he then feels the earth shake and hears a sound like a mighty landslide, though it is inaudible to those waiting in the cave. If the patient is frightened and tries to flee, he will die, but if he lies still he will be able to spit out the dead frog, or it will become so soft that it can drip from his nose. He then washes in the stream that flows through the ice-cavern, thus completing the cure. The malady will return unless chastity is practised for one year.

Finally, in dreams a man is sometimes carried away to one or other of these curing places, or to several of them, and is there made a shaman. It will be noted that this method of acquiring the ability differs from those previously described, but his functions are the same as those whose power has been obtained in one of the usual ways.

Dreams

The last type of contact with the supernatural is by means of dreams. Psychologically, these are akin to visions; indeed, it is often impossible to learn whether the experiences described in an ancient story occurred during sleep or when awake. The Bella Coola believe that dreams are caused by the spirit of the individual; they are, therefore, supernatural and worthy of attention, but in spite of this, it was difficult to obtain detailed accounts. The reason seems to lie in the intangibility of the experiences themselves. Unless one is sufficiently striking, it passes into oblivion as a fruitless manifestation of the workings of the spirit. Many of the visions seen in ancient times by those who had fasted or otherwise reached an emotional state, must have been dreams, but they have ceased to be recognized as such in the course of generations. The Bella Coola of today state emphatically that they receive warning of future events during sleep, but the only individual from whom it was possible to obtain coherent descriptions was the elderly man previously described as X (I, p. 515).

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

ling X, the monster carried away the girl. X watched and knew that it must have taken her life; so it transpired, for in the morning she was found dead. The black being did not reappear the following night.

X soon became fat and well, to the surprise of all, and many of the chiefs asked him to give a shaman's dance. He declined, not having received name, instructions, song, or tangible object from the white, supernatural being who had befriended him. He did not even know his benefactor's name.

At intervals during his life-time, X has seen the white supernatural being and, more rarely, the black one in his dreams. The most vivid occasion was when he heard a sound in the attic of his house and climbed up outside to investigate. The ladder broke, precipitating him through an unglazed window into the loft with a broken leg. All night he lay there in agony, and it was not until the next day that his friends were able to lower him in a sling and take him to Kimsquit en route to the hospital at Bella Bella. Their departure was delayed by a storm and as X lay suffering he told his wife that it would have been better if he had broken his neck instead of his leg. That night, while half-asleep, the world again became open to him and he saw the black creature come bounding along the trail towards him; it entered the house, jumped around him, and finally leapt into his body. He called to his wife to burn dried salmon beneath his bed to expel the evil monster; this had the desired effect though he did not see its actual departure. The next night the white apparition came to him, telling him that he had erred seriously in wishing for death, that one should accept what was in store for one and not oppose Ałqanem's wishes. The being went on to say that it was wicked to prepare too far in advance, and intimated that X's misfortune was the result of having made ready tools for clearing an unnecessary tract of land.[19]

The white being has even appeared during his waking hours. On one occasion he felt it coming when he was in the mission-house, where the missionary was writing a letter for him. Although still invisible, X knew what was approaching and tried to close the door but he was helpless. In came the apparition, at sight of whom X swayed so violently that the missionary asked what was the matter. It went away again in a moment, leaving X shaken and bathed in perspiration.

The experiences just described lie on the border-line between dream and vision. X has frequently seen the apparition

[19] This occurred during the first war, and X remembered having heard that the Germans had laid up stores of munitions. He concluded that this must be evil and that they would fall accordingly. He repeated this statement on many occasions and claims to have foretold the result of the war from his vision.

and that his mother stated that all her ancestors had done likewise.

Another instance of advice conveyed in this manner was told by a Kimsquit man who related that a number of years ago a pregnant woman had dreamed that Alquaxiw appeared to her and told her not to destroy what she would presently bear. In due course she was delivered, but the infant was a repulsive cripple, blind and deformed. Remembering the admonition, the mother refused to slay her child as many of her friends advised. Soon it was apparent that he was supernaturally endowed; as proof of this he repeated comments which had been made to his mother within a few minutes of his birth. As he grew older he developed shamanistic powers so that he was able to converse with the dead, the only instance known of this ability being granted from birth. He also had wonderful talent as a singer and, though he must have died about 1850, the Bella Coola still recount his skill in this respect. He would unquestionably have been killed but for his mother's warning.

Instead of imparting verbal information, dreams frequently foretell the future by means of images of events about to happen. For example, if a man dreams of owning large numbers of pelts, it signifies that he will have success in hunting, and he starts for his trap-line without delay. So, too, warnings are conveyed. A number of years ago a slave woman of Sowl, who was not a member of the Sacial society, dreamt that she saw herself bitten in many places and lying covered with blood. Within a few days she met a Cannibal dancer (II, p. 71), who was supposed to have vanished into the land shore; he killed her and lacerated her body, as she had seen. A Kimsquit man told of a similar instance that happened to a member of the party with which he had been hunting a number of years previously. One night he was wakened by one of his companions, Tsilin, calling out that he was afraid because he had dreamt that one side of their canoe was shattered. The hunters were impressed, because they knew he had long ob-

Libellus Dorsalis E-3 (1911-1914)1968
NEA Bellicosis NEA

several commercial chantry and was, therefore, in a good position to receive premonitions of this kind. The next day, as they were paddling down the river, they came upon some treacherous ice. Forewarned, they hastily abandoned their canoe, one side of which was soon broken in the way Tattle-tale described; if they had continued their journey they would certainly have been drowned.

The dreams thus far recorded have all been capable of simple explanation; in fact, their meaning is obvious, either visually or audibly. In addition, there are a number of types considered to be symbolic by the Bella Coola. There are no professional interpreters, but it is believed that in ancient times shamans learnt the significance of certain images and this knowledge has since been transmitted from generation to generation.

One type indicates a coming birth. If a woman dreams that she travels to some distant spot, under the ocean or into the mountains, and there takes something in her hand, it signifies that she will soon bear a male child; on the other hand, if she picks up some small object when gathering berries, a daughter will be born. A Kimsquit informant stated that before his birth, his mother dreamt that she had gone far under the mouth of the Dean River to the vicinity of Kimsquit's house, where she had taken up a child. From this she knew she was pregnant and he was born in due course. If the scene of the dream is in the mountains, it means that the child will be a good hunter; if under water, that he will be a successful fisherman, as is proved in this case. There is a vague belief that death takes place either near the spot where the mother received indication of conception, or that the life and spirit of the deceased visit the place before setting out on their journey back from generation to generation. The old man from whom this information was obtained expects to meet death by drowning, though he is himself uncertain whether his premonition is due to his mother's dream or to the fact that there has been a tendency for this to occur in his family.

a bull has been drowned in spite of efforts to rescue him, means that a beaver has been caught.

To dream of seeing a Sacred dancer in full costume means that a fisher, lynx, wolverine, mountain goat, wolf, or black bear has been caught.

To dream of fighting people, especially if arrows are used, means that a grizzly bear has been caught.

To dream of playing children means that deer will be seen the following day.

To dream of swimming means that an otter has been caught.

To dream of fondling a woman and playing with her breasts means that a marten has been caught.

Obscene dreams mean that squirrels or pack rats have been caught.

To dream of a woman with whom the hunter has held illicit intercourse means that absolutely nothing has been caught.

Until recent years these interpretations were believed without question and no hunter hesitated to examine his conscience for had received such indications of success. A hunter's wife likewise shared information of her husband's fortune in dreams.

All dreams cannot be considered. One man, for example, stated that in his sleep he had often seen a supernatural being enter his house, turn to the left, pick up one of the heavy floor boards and carry it around the fire as if it had been a tray. The apparition always told him to do likewise, but though he has tried repeatedly in his dreams, he has always found it too heavy. Such an image might serve a shaman as theme for a dramatic performance, though, of course, the element of carrying the slab would be lacking. Another dream experienced several times by the same man when ill is that of being carried with the speed of light to a flat land somewhat similar to this, but located on the top of a range of lofty mountains. It contains numerous grassy meadows studded with trees of which the

CHAPTER XI

MEDICINE, MAGIC, TABOO

Introductory — Concrete Medicine — Preventive and Curative Medicine — Incantations — Taboos — Ritual Acts — Miscellaneous Beliefs

INTRODUCTORY

THE beliefs described in the last chapter are essentially religious since they display an attitude of respect and often of propitiation to supernatural powers having greater strength than human beings. This is self-evident in the earlier sections and, though less noticeable, is present also in those concerning diseases since these now have themselves acquired utility placing them on a plane slightly removed from that of their fellows. Theoretically, it seems as if a clear division might be drawn between the concepts just recorded, and others of a magical nature in which, although the element of contact with the supernatural is present, yet the end desired is obtained by the mere performance of an action. To the Bella Coola there is a slight overlap between the two types. For example, the acquisition of an object from which supernatural good fortune may be secured is religious, but its use is virtually magical since once obtained, neither supplication nor further favours are necessary. Nevertheless, it is possible to separate most magical beliefs from most religious ones, though it must be emphasized that the cleavage is less distinct in the native than it appears to the white man.

If it is difficult to find a clear dividing line between religion and magic, it is impossible to draw one between the latter and

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

1:McDowell E-5 (1922-1924)968
NEA Bellevoole NEA

that the proximity of such intensely human articles is enough to counteract and render powerless anything of a superhuman nature. Likewise, when a certain woman came in contact with the War-Party of the Tides and began to exhibit symptoms of insanity, she was cured by drinking water in which other women had squeezed out their menstrual pads. Another defence is the burning of dried salmon, fumigation from which is particularly effective for one who suffers from nightmares. Other remedies already mentioned are to cut the right leg and smear a bullet with the resultant blood in order to kill a cuscus, and to lacerate the inside of the mouth and spit to withstand a capsizing mountain.

